The total exports of Calcutta amounted to Rs. 45,80,59,114 and the aggregate value of the imports was Rs. 27,44,43,275. Mr. Skrine as a Government official has not been able to explain the significance of these figures. It must be apparent to every one acquainted with even elementary principles of the economical science, that, during the last official year, Bengal alone gave more than eighteen crores of rupees to England without receiving any tangible returns. English publicists and statesmen, and some of our countrymen too, may rejoice at this "expansion of our foreign commerce" as they call it. Strictly speaking, it is no commerce at all. For true commerce involves giving as well as taking; whereas what is called the foreign commerce of India is mainly a gift by the people of India collectively to England. The individual sellers of Indian goods do no doubt get a fair price for what they sell. The figures quoted clearly show that the English merchants do not bring from their home a sufficient equivalent for what they buy and take away from India. In fact, to a great extent, the English merchants serve only as brokers and bankers to the Government. They act as the medium for the remittance of the tribute which India has to pay to England under the name of Home Charges. They advance the amount of this tribute to the Secretary of State and with the equivalent for the same re-ceived from the Indian Exchequer, they buy Indian goods making a profit by their sale in other parts of the world. The result is the same as if England took the amount of her Indian tribute in kind and sold the goods to the European markets. Such transaction certainly could not be called commerce, and there is no reason why that name should be given to the same kind of operation when it is carried on through a third party.

To come to details, Mr. Skrine takes a very hopeful view of our jute mills. He says :-

"The exports of Gunny Bog, have rapidly expanded during the last five years, reaching the highest figures yet tabulated in the past year, the increase in comparison with 1893-94 being 8 per

There were increased shipments to the United Kingdom, to the United States and to Australia, against decreases to Egypt, China (Hong-Kong), and the Straits Settlement.

The advance to the United Kingdom is a most satisfactory one, nowing that Calcutta-made Bags are continuing to find favour with the home consumers. It seems to be only a question of time for the Indian-made article to supplant the production of Dundec. These increased shipments were made in the face of a bad market and poor trade. Possibly the low rates of exchange have had some effect in producing these large shipments.

To Australia the increase was 39 per cent., due no doubt to the large Wool crop and the larger exports of Wheat of last year.

The increase in direct shipments to the United States is more than counterbalanced by the fall in those to Hong-Kong, most of the Bags sent to the latter being intended ultimately for San Francisco.

In contrast to conditions prevailing in Dundee, the Jute trade in Bengal has had a most satisfactory year, a large crop enabling very handsome profits to be made; and most of the mills have paid good dividends. Full time has been worked throughout the year, and efforts are being made to increase production by the introduction of the Electric Light to enable the mills to work all night. Extensions are also being carried out in many mills with the same

Times are at present good for Jule Mills, and proprietors are oparently anxious to take advantage of them. This is a very apparently anxious to take advantage of them. This is a very natural desire, but there is the danger of increasing the producnatural desire, out the is the danger of increasing the proceed the tion to such an extent that the supply will largely exceed the demand, and then will come a crash, unless old markets can be extended and new ones found. Some years ago such a state of affairs did occur; and the trade fell into a most unsatisfactory condition, from which it took some time to recover. It is to be hoped that the extensions now in progress will not cause history-to repeat

We may well wonder that Dundee has not followed in the wake of Manchester to advocate the imposition of excise duties on the Indian Mills and more stringent Factory law.

If left unhampered, our cotton mills might no doubt flourish in the same manner as the jute mills. We read in the report :-

"The Cotton trade in Lancashire during the past year was of an "The Cotton trade in Lancashire during the past year was of an unsatisfactory character both to spinners and manufacturers, but particularly to the former. With a large crop of American Cotton there was a constant fall in the price of the raw material throughout the year, of course resulting in lower prices of Turn. Oldham, the centre of the spinning industry, has been a great sufferer, and the returns of the Limited Liability Companies show losses on the working of the year. These have been so heavy that it is stated that many mill-owners would be glad to abandon the trade altogether, if they could find purchasers for their depreciated property."

The wisest course for the cotton lords of Manchester would be to give up their philanthropy and their new fangled Free Trade doctrine, and to remove their mills at once to India. Here, with cheap labour and cheap cotton, they are sure to make a profit. This ought to be obvious to them if they rightly understand the principles of Free Trade, With regard to the effect of the recent l'ariff Act on the transaction of the dealers in piece-goods, Mr. Skrine makes the following observations:

"In July and August, repeated rumours that import duties on "In July and August, repeated rumours that import duties on CAION Goods would be re-imposed at the beginning of the next financial year raised the feeling that it was quite possible such would be the case, with the result that, in the hope of getting their goods free of duty, importers and dealers ordered largely for delivery not later than the end of January 1895. The import duty was re-imposed on the 27th December 1894, and many of the goods previously ordered to avoid duty had to pay it. I am informed that on these transactions, consumers did not pay the duty, which was paid by the dealer on forward contract and by importers on unsold appeals, and on new contracts for the months Ianuary to March. By goods, and on new contracts for the months January to March. By this is meant, no doubt, that prices did not immediately rise in proportion to the duty, but that they have done or will ultimately to comment upon the evidence of the most respectable persons

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fall particulars, including many unsolicited testimomais and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

If the duty on cotton piece-goods had been levied at the beginning of the year, it would have brought a large amount of revenue to the Exchequer, and saved the merchants from the losses to which they have been subjected. The vacillating policy of Government has not, we fear, done any good to any of the parties concerned. It was simply a political concession to Manchester to make out a case of strong necessity.

In connection with the subjects under consideration, we cannot do without making some observations as to the importance of the diffusion of the knowledge of trade statistics and of the economical laws regarding the production, distribution and exchange of wealth. Such study is of great importance not only to persons connected with commercial business, but to almost all classes of people, especially to those who have any philanthropic zeal for the good of this country. In the absence of a thorough knowledge of the principles of the economical science, and of the present commercial relations of the different countries, trade naturally partakes of the nature of gambling and of leaps in the dark, which may lead an adventurer to a windfall of fortune or to the Insolvency Court. The same kind of ignorance often leads the best men of our country to rejoice at the expansion of India's foreign commerce, or to clamour for the reduction of the salt duty. When those who are supposed to be the most enlightened in the land are capable of taking such views, it is no wonder that the masses have misconceptions of a still more serious nature. In fact, the majority of our countrymen have a deep-rooted belief that our British masters have taken away from India all the gold and silver on which they could lay their hands, and that they have left to us instead only some pieces of paper in the shape of currency notes and Government Security bonds. The British Government has a far greater source of danger in such unfounded beliefs among the people of this country, than in the threatening attitude of the Russian Bear in the north-western frontier of India. And it is for this reason that we have repeatedly pointed to the necessity of imparting to the students of our schools and colleges a sound knowledge of Political Economy, and of the main facts and figures relating to the foreign commerce of the country. The study of Milton, Byron, Michael Madhu Sudan and Bankim has no doubt its advantages. But the student who has a sufficient knowledge of the languages in which their works are written may read them suo moto for the pleasure derivable from them, and it does not seem to be necessary to make them compulsory text books.

A VOICE FROM DINAJPORE.

TO THE EDITOR.

THE trial, under section 330 I. P. C., of Braja Rakhal Sanyal, a Sub-Inspector of Police, came to an end on the 3rd, resulting in the acquittal and discharge of the accused. The Crown was represented by Mr. Girth, Mr. Chowdhury, Baboos Ram Ratan Pattack, Prameshwar Dan, Rakhal Dass Sen, local pleaders, while the accused was defended by Mr. White, Baboos Madhab Chandra Chatterjee, Mon Mohan Ray, Lallit Chandra Sen and Prassana Kumar Bose. The case had been watched with interest by the outside public; the result has been a rude shock to them. The judgment of the Sessions Judge, Mr. R. R. Pope, is anything but satisfactory. This is the more so as he was pleased who were examined for the prosecution in the way which has greatly compromised their reputation in the estimation of their fellowmen. The prosecution had its origin in the theft of some gold ornaments off the person of a child of the Court Sub-Inspector Baboo Girish Chandra Dutta. On the 7th of March three menial servants of the local Zemindar, Ray Sahib, were arrested on suspicion and taken to the Police Station by the accused Inspector. With the help of two constables, who were also the accused in the present case, and after threatening them with punishment for theft should they refuse to give up the stolen property, he gave a sound beating to the two servants, named Jagabandhu and Sham, in the presence of Girish Bakshi, another servant of the said Zemindar, who had accompanied them to the thana. The absent Zemindar too had his share. The vilest abuse, which, to say the least, forms a part of the vocabulary of the native Bengal Police, was addressed quite gratuitously to Ray Radha Gobinda Ray Sahib, who was then at Monghyr. I blush to write the words; the witnesses to the abuse refused for "the sake of decency," to repeat them. To say that vulgar epithets were used, is to detract much from their offensiveness. The Sessions Judge is of opinion that Babu Kally Mohan Sen, a witness for the prose cution, "is the mainspring of the case," and, if I have properly understood the judgment, his son, a graduate of the Calcutta University, who, according to the Judge, expects to succeed his father as am-mooktear to the Ray Sahib, and his son-in-law, a practising pleader of the Judge's Court, a person well versed in Hindu Shastras, truthful, honest and independent, are all held by the Judge as severally and jointly contributing to the case for the prosecution. The Sessions Judge has gone the length of saying that the conduct of this latter witness, while under examination, gave the lie to his words. I profess my inability to realize the import of this stricture upon the witness, as I did not observe any peculiar expression in his countenance, nor did 1 find his demeanour betraying any hesitation or premeditation. These three were respectable witnesses, yet the Judge disbelieved them. The antecedents of the Sub-Inspector might fairly raise a presumption, that he might have, on this occasion, pursued the conduct alleged against him. While the respectability of the witnesses might plead against their joining in a conspiracy to humble the Inspector. It was attempted to elicit in his cross-examination that Kally Mohun San had a private grudge against the accused, but no evidence was given in that behalf. Two persons, who were selected as assessors, gave their verdict adverse to the defence the one entertained a legal doubt as to the complicity of the accused persons in the offence charged to them and the other believed that two of the accused were guilty, there being no evidence of any kind against the third.

The case will probably be taken up to a higher Court.

ONI PRESENT IN COURT.

Dinajpote, The 11th June, 1895.

A MUSSULMAN PROTEST.

A MUSSULMAN PROTEST.

A meeting of Musulmans now in London to protest against "the mischevous, unjust, and ill-advised attempt of the Arian namagitators to prejudic the mind of the British public against I dam and the Sublime Porte," was held at the Westminster Town Hall on May 15, under the auspices of the Anjuman-i Islim. The president of the society, Molvi Nasir Uddin Hossin, occupied the chair, and a large proportion of those present were Moham madens. The audience also included a number of ladies.

The Chauman said is Ledies and Gontlemen, I am not going to take up much of your time, but will merely say a few works. The Eastern Question has become accentuated and threttens a crisis.

It has always been the proud boast of Englishmen that they condemn no man without a fair and impartial hearing. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I for one rejoice to belong to this mighty empire whose kingdom is stretched from shore to shore. I approach this question is no crusading aspect, but, gentlemen, I do expect the same from our opponents. (Cheers.) How great then was my disappointment you can readily imagine when I heard the impatient denunciations of His Grace the Duke of Argyll. Here we have an eminent states-man who accuses Turkey of the vilest atrocities, and that, too, while the question is under investigation. (Cheers.) We have met here to cry out against this unrighteous haste and we are entitled to be heard. (Loud cheers.) In the burning plains of India Her Majesty's sway extends over nearly 70,000,000 Moslem souls. here to cry Shall you rashly arouse the religious animosities of such numbers as these? No, a thousand times no. Gentlemen, on declaring war the real and the avowed motives of the statesman are often as wide apart as the poles asunder. How often has the advancement of ivilisation simply been a mere excuse for the action of the How many crimes have been committed at the instigation of Russia, that enemy of liberty? (Cheers.) You are indeed playing into the hands of Russia to breathe these vile stories of reporters, put about to form an excuse for Russia to annex Armenia and to weaken Turkey in every way. Then, ladies and gentlemen, what will happen if Turkey be dismembered and all her brave Turkish and Kurdish soldiers enrolled under the arms of Russia and designed for the conquest of India? (Cheers.) But the whole story of the atrocities seems to have been exaggerated. Probably the troops of the Sultan have been called in order to quell a riot. But is the sacred home of our religion to be descerated on such a charge as that ? No, say rather that the Turks and the Armenians are living side by side in contentment and peace. (Loud cheers.) There is no necessity for a Jacob to drive the rude aggressors away. What are you going to do? Are you going to expel 6,000,000 Turks, and to leave the whole country for 1,000,000 Armenians? And how are you going to distinguish them? They are scattered all over the plains? You will have, in the words of Byron, to make a solitude and call it peace. (Cheers, You will say, let a governor be appointed with the sanction of the Powers, but is the arm of Islam to be foreshortened and to be left with a dubious Suzerainty? That is not justice, that is not international morality, that is not the good faith that ought to be observed by Princes and Powers. (Cheers.) We confidently believe in the of our Ulemas, and I for one do not believe that the delinquencies of the Turks are greater than those of the other Powers, and that such a step as our opponents suggest would but leave the fair fame of our daughters in the hands of the captors of Russia. (Cheers.) I protest with all the indignation in imy power, and I ask you to join with me in protesting against this unrighteous haste of the party politicians in accusing the soldiery of such atrocious barbarities. The stories of the Press have been overdone, and I doubt altogether the correspondence from witnesses at such a distance from Kars that no horse could cover the distance within the time alleged. (Cheers.) My triend, M. Ximenes, has avowed from his personal knowledge that the Armenians and I'urks are living happily together, and the Armenians being the commercial class they supply all the wants and necessities of the Turks. I must say in the end, what good purpose would it serve the Sublime Porte to inflict such barbarities on his subjects? (Cheers.) Has he not the policy not to attract the attention of Europe by misrule and misgovernment? (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, then I must ask my opponents to show the same respect that was shown by the draughtemen of that great charter-I mean Magna Charta---and not to condemn Turkey before the result of the International Enquiry is known to us. (Loud cheers.)
Till that time I shall continue to believe that Turkey dispenses her favours with equality, her laws with justice, and her administration with mercy. (Mr. Ghain: No; and loud cheers.)
Mr. M. A, Ghain, B. A., then moved the following resolution:—
"That this meeting of Mussulmans, representing the opinion

"That this meeting of Mussulmans, representing the opinion of all Mahomedans - of whom over 60,000,000 are Her Majesty's loyal subjects in India, protests against the indiscriminate and violent abuse of the Mahomedan religion and Mahomedan humanity, which marked the speeches at the Armenian meeting in St. James' Hall, on May 7th, and strongly protests against the crusade that is now being preached in England against Islam."

Mr. Ghain and the reason why they did not, like the Anglo-Armenian agitators, curse a large portion of their fellow beings was, perhaps, because they were not Christians. Their object was not to countenance any atrocities or misrule in Turkey, but to strengthen the arms of the true reformers of Turkey. (Cheers.) Mr. Gladstone, he said, that great ecclesiastical agitator---(cheers and laughter)---and inveterate fue of the Mahomedans, had committed several inconsistencies. While he avowed his desire to steer clear of any irresponsible testimony, he yet lends his name and support to the irresponsible and inaccurate testimony given in Mr. Green's book. Mr. Gladstone was simply playing into the hands of reckless and unscrupulous intriguers whose philanthropy is ever ready when it can serve their political purposes. (Cheers.)

Referring to the Duke of Argyll's speech, in which he said the war of 1876 arose out of the crimes of the Turks, Mr. Ghain pointed out that Lord Beaconsfield had said that the war was caused by the secret designs of Russia upon Turkey, and was instigated by the Bulgarian insurgents against Turkey. The Duke of Argyll, he said, would attribute all the sins of humanity to the Turks, and that the Turkish Government was so execrably bad that any rebellion against it was just and righteous. (Shame.) The speaker then went on to refute the statement of Canon McCall, and to denounce the language he used towards the Turkish nation, and concluded his address by a protest against the insult to Islam and the Mahommedans—(cheers)—and said that the British people must keep in view the interests of their vast Mahommedan populations in India, for a blow on their religion would surely recoil upon themselves. (Loud cheers.)

Moulvi Mohamed Ibrahim having seconded the resolution, the Chairman called upon Sir Ashmead Bartlett, M. P., to support

Sir Ashmead Bartlett (who was received with loud cheers), said :---Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I am not surprised at the indignation which is felt by Mahommedans at the character which the Anglo-Armenian agiration has assumed. The meeting at St. James' Hall made it too evident that the agitation has degenerated into an anti-Moslem crusade. (Cheers.) The most unlimited and indiscriminate abuse was there indulged in against the Sovereign, the army, and the people of the Ottoman Empire. (Hear, hear.) I should not like to repeat the disgraceful language that was used, and used without a shadow of authentic proof, against the Sultan of Turkey and the whole of the Turkish army. (Cheers.) In my opinion, however, the worst feature of this agitation lies in the fact that the same people consitute themselves the prosecutors, the witnesses, the jurors, and the judge in the trying of the charges that are so lavishly made against the Turkish Government. (Hear, hear.) At this moment a Commission --- and we have every reason to believe an efficient and trustworthy Commission --- is investigating with great thoroughness into the charges of massacre and outrages which have been circulated with regard to the Sasson district. (Cheers.) Attached to that Commission there are three European officials nominated by England, Russia, and France. The European officials nominated by England, Russia, and France. The Commission itself was appointed by the Sultan of his own motion directly he realised the gravity of the charges made. (Cheers.) Yet these reckless villifiers of Turkey and the Mohammedan faith have not the decency to wait until the Commission has reported. (Hear, hear.) They assume all the charges against Turkey to be true. (Cheers). They multiply and exaggerate tenfold the charges that exist, and they proceed deliberately to condemn the Government, the whole army, and the whole people for these charges which, even if true, could only involve the responsibility of a very small fragment of the Turkish army. (Hear, hear.) I am not here to palliate misdeeds or cruckies of any kind. (Cheers.) I believe that the Sultan himself will be most anxious and ready to punish any of his officers who may be, on authentic evidence, convicted of responsibility for such crimes as those that have been so widely charged against the Turkish troops. (Cheers.) Examination will, I believe, reduce the thousands alleged to have been killed to a few hundred, and the hideous outrages said to have been committed to some misdeeds of isolated troops, which all will deplore and hope to see punished if true. (Cheers.) I well remember the case of the so-called Bulgarian atrocities, how the action of the Turks was misrepresented, magnified, and calumniated in every way; how not one-twentieth part of the tales of outrage and massacre that were deliberately asserted to be true were ever proved; and how it was shown that the provocation came in the first place from the Bulgarian insurgents who had been stirred up by Russian money and Russian agents. These Bulgarian insurgents committed most horrible atrocities upon Mussulman women and children. (Hear, hear.) It was the right and knowledge of these crimes that drew reprisals, and even then to a very limited extent, upon the Christian Bulgarians of Roumelia, (Hear, hear.) No crimes were proved against the Turkish soldiery during the whole of the terrible war of race and creeds, in spite of the awful provocation which the Turks received from the bar-barities of the Russian and Bulgarian troops. (Cheers.) I made it my business at the time to go out to the countries where these crimes were said to have taken place to investigate so far as was possible their truth, and I came to the conclusion which every other impartial investigator came to that not one tithe of the charges brought against the Mussulmans at that time were true, and that no charges were substantiated against the regular soldiers of the Ottoman Empire. (Loud cheers.) A more gallant, resolute, well-disciplined, splendid body of men than the Ottoman regular army cannot be found among the armies of the whole world. (Loud cheers.) And that, gentlemen, is the testimony of every man who knows anything about them. Every British officer who has ever worked with them, every honest Correspondent who has ever gone with them, seen them fight, or followed in their track, has given the same evidence. Read what Mr. Archibald Forbes, the correspondent of the Daily News, a paper most bitterly hostile to Turkey and the Turks, read what he said in his articles written subsequent to the Russo-Turkish war of 1877 about the splendid behaviour of the Turkish regular soldiers. (Cheers.) Ah, gentlemen, what is the truth about the Bulgarian atrocities of 1876? Bulgaria was a peaceful and a flourishing country, more flourishing than many portions of the Christian-governed countries in Europe. Russian agents and Russian gold with great difficulty stirred up an insurrection in the southern portion of Bulgaria, on the high road of the Turkish Empire in Europe. The Bulgarian insurgents rose, and they committed horrible atrocities upon the Mussulman noncombatants, women and children, and it was in recaliation for these atrocities, which were witnessed by the Pomak Militia, these attractives, which were winnessed by the John that is the Mussulman-Bulgarians who were called out to repress the insurrection of the Bulgarian Christians that such evil deeds as at that time were committed, and these, as I evil deeds as at that time were committed and said, were exaggerated twenty to one hundredfold. Then over a million of the innocent Mussulman peasantry, most of them women and children, were driven from their homes, exposed to every extremity of outrage and slaughter, and to the severest to every extremity of outrage and slaughter, and to the severest trial of the elements. (Shame.) Happy those who perished of starvation and cold and escaped the barbarous inhumanity of their so-called Christian enemy. (Cheers.) Nearly half a million of innocent non-combatants, women and children, perished during, and in consequence of, that horrible war. I should have liked to have seen, or to see now, some of the indignation which has been so lavishly squandered on the alleged woes of the Armenian mountaincer, devoted to the sufferings of the Mussulman inhabitants of Turkey. (Cheers.) This gross exaggeration of the evil deeds of the Turk and Mussulman rouses my keenest indignation, and makes me ashamed of the injustice and the hypocrisy of men who call themselves Christians, and pretend to be the leaders of the Christan sentiment. (Loud cheers.) This matter has a very serious aspect for British interests. There are over sixty millions of the Queen's subjects in India---the bravest, most loyal, most stable porgueen's subjects in tinus.—the bravest, most loyal, most stable por-tion of our Indian fellow-subjects, who belong to the Mussulman fath. (Cheers.) There are thirty more millions of the Queen's subjects in different parts of the world of the same creed. What will these people say? What will our Mussulman allies like the Amir of Afghanistan say when they hear of this vengeful, unjust, and wicked crusade against Islam? (Cheers.) Our fanatical agita-tors are trying to make out that all Mahommedans, and that every Turk and every man who professes the Mahommedtors are trying to make out that all Mahommedaus, and that every Turk and every man who professes the Mahommedaus creed is necessarily barbarous, cruel, and backward. I hope I may say without offence to any gentleman of the Mahommedau faith here, that I believe in my own faith, that I believe in the Christian religion, and that because I believe in it I should like to see all men belong to the Christian religion. Cheers. But I would no more indee the Christian religion. religion. (Cheers.) But I would no more judge the Christian religion by the deeds of the inquisition of Torquemada 350 years ago---(cheers)---or by the intolerance of the Christian prelates who ournt Joan of Arc five centuries ago, than would I judge Mahommedans or the Mahommedan fairh by the ridiculous fables which are set about now by fanatical agitators like the Bishop of Hereford and Canon McCall. (Loud cheers.) What business has Mr. Gladstone and the Duke of Argyll to pose as the champions of the Christians and the reformers of Turkey. They were members of the Cabinet whose blindness and weakness caused the Crimean War. (Loud cheers.) They were in office for nearly twenty years after the Crimean War, with almost boundless powers. Why did they not do something, when they had the authority and the power, to enforce upon Furkey the reform which at this thirteenth hour they have discovered to be so necessary. (Cheers.) Blindly and recklessly our Government are plunging into the disasters so carefully prepared for them and for the British Empire. (Hear, hear.) They have alienated our own allies in Europe...the great peace league of Germany, Austria, and Italy. They have based their policy with regard to Turkey upon an alliance with our hereditary rivals and focs, France and Russia. (Hear, hear.) The British Government is being led by the nose to harrass and treat unjustly the Ottoman people by the very Powers that are now scheming and plotting against British interests in every quarter of the globe. (Cheers.) Was there ever such gross ineptitude as the globe. (Cheers.) Was there ever such gross ineptitude as that shown by Anglo-Armentan agitators and by the British Government, which is allowing the policy of a great country to be dictated by the ignorant and fanatical prejudices of a band of irresponsible crocheteers. Treat the Sultan and the Turks with fairness and with justice. It you think that they have done wrong, speak to them in the language of allies and of friends, and believe the Sultan and the Turks will only be too glad to take our advice. (Cheers.) But do not believe that the Turks and the fairs of foolish as to follow the advice of Great Britain and the see Great Britain led by the nose by powers that are not only the here litter foes of England and of English - lave seen these min string by the roadsil: feeling the poor title orphan children of the refugees who had come down to the Mahommedan faith. (Loud cheers.) I say that there never was such gross inaptitude shown by any Government as to allow the policy of our great country to be dictated by the ignorant and I also stated that as chief of the Stafford House Committee at fanatical prejudices of a band of irresponsible crocheteers. I have felt bound to speak as I have spoken to-night, because I believe that the alliance of Turkey will prove before long to be necessary for the maintenance of the greatness of our Importal power. (Covers) I believe that it is most inexpedient on our part to create a feeling in the minds of the 90,000,000 of Mahommedan subjects of the Queen that there is no truth, nor honour, nor justice for them in the British press or before British audiences. But I am actuated by higher motives even than these, which, though just mitives, may be discarded as motives of expediency. I am guided by the determination that, so far, at least, as my humble power goes, the same justice shall be mitted out to Mussulmans by Christians as is demanded by Christians from Mussulmans. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

Mrs. M. T. Keep, of New York, U.S.A., having addressed the meeting in support of the resolution, the latter was again read and carried unanimously.

Moulvi Syed Skerfuddin Ahmad then proposed the second resolution in the following terms : --

"That this meeting protests against the wholesde inputations of cruelty and inhumanity, and the insolent abuse, which have been levelled against the Sultan of Turkey, and the Turkish army, without any authentic evidence of their truth, and before the Commission appointed by the Sultan to investigate into the alleged atrocities carried on in the Sassun district, on which Commission there are three European members, has made its report."

He said that his responsibility in reading and moving this resolution lay in the fact that so tar only one side of this question had been put before the British public, (Cheers.) To an onlooker who knows nothing of the Eistern question it would seem that the Turks were actuated by a feeling to exterminate and annihilate the Armenians. This he said they denied in toto. We should bear in mind that when the Turks were in a position to annihilate their Christian subjects with impunity, and when Europe dated not raise its voice, whatever they did, they never thought of having recourse to any such measures. It is therefore an insult to common sense to suggest that they were actuated by such a spirit now that have enemies within and without. All the incriminating they have enemies within and without. In the intrinsicular articles which have so far appeared have emanated from Armenian sources, and the Turkish aspect of the question has never been put before the British public. (Cheers.) When this has been done, then will be the time to pronounce judgment. Agitators have been at work in Armenia, inciting the population Agitators have been at work in Armenia, inciting the population to rise; and rebellions are not put down with rose water; they must be put down by force. (Cheers.) He said that they here to-night represented no insignificant portion of the British Empire, and they had a right to raise their voice when they saw thousands of their dumb co-religionists unjustly treated, and their religion insulted at public meetings in England. Those who ery out about the duties of England to Armenia should not forget the duty they owe to their subjects in India. If injustice is those of Taylors that will have control local they in England. is done to Turkey they will henceforth lose all faith in England, and believe we are too much under the influence of the bigoted narrow-minded priests, whose chief aim is to keep Christendom always in hostility against the Mahommedan nations. (Cheers.)
Admiral of the Fleet, Sir J. Edmund Commercil, V.C., G.C.B., (who on rising was received with loud cheers), said:

Mr. Chairman, Lidies and Gentlemen, - There is one thing this meeting may be pretty well certain of, that, in consequence of Canon McCall's letter to the Times of the day before yesterday, it is not his intention immediately to hoist his flig in the Mediterraneau fleet, bombard Smyrna and the rest of Arabia, depose the Sultan, and become King of Armenia himself. He is going to put that off and become King of Armenia himself. He is going to put that on for a time. (Linghter.) As far back as the 13th December I wrote a letter to the Times, a letter which his been considerably criticised by many people, but I am happy to say from the letters which I have received, favourably criticised. This letter has excit. ed the anger of the Canon. I stated mere facts; I stated that I had had a great deal of experience --- practical experience, not theoretical---for thirty years in Turkev and in Asia Minor; that for over eight months out of that time I had been in the close t for over eight months out of that time I had been in the close to possible connection with a Furkish army of 30,000 men, and that I found them the most orderly, excellent, kindly, charitable people that I ever came across. (Loud cheers.) It has been described in one of these penny a-liners that Turkish soldiers were in the habit of carrying babies about on their bayonets. Well, gentlemen, I told Canon McCall, who no doubt had read the Tones (and inv letter was pretty well discussed), that I said in that letter that my experience was that in place of carrying babies about on their bayonets, that I had seen these poor fellows, who are very very hard Gallipoli, I had gone round the hospitals every day and had seen the poor wounded Turks, and to see those men, to see the look of gratitude which they had on their faces, to see them as you went round clasp your hand and make the salaam, and by every motion and every look of their eyes tell you that they blessed you for the kindness that you were doing for them. (Cheers.) This also en-raged Canon McCall---he did not like it at all. Well, now, gentlemen, I believe Canon McCall to be nothing more nor less than a rampaging political priest. (Loud cheers.) It is an old game he is carrying on, this abominable crusade against the Mussulmans and against their religion. (Hear, hear.) Now I like to be a little practical, I like to explain to you how these lies keep about. Now we are told there is a Mr. Green, who has published a book. I must tell you that about one-half of the book is taken up wholly and solely by extracts from the newspapers. Well, you know, it does not appear to me that that is quite the right way to make a book; I think if you take a cutting out of a newspaper you should put at the end of it, "The Times, 15th April," or "The Dady Telegraph, 16th March," that is my idea. (Hear, hear). Well, now, this is one of the things that he states in his book, page 21:---"The Fedik read the Sultan's firman for extermination, and then, he will be the states in the state of the things.

hanging the document on his breast, exhorted the soldiers not to be found wanting in their duty." Now, that is pretty explicit, is it not? Now, on the next page I suppose he must have forgotten it. This is what appears:—"And so ended the massacre, for the timely arrival of the Commander-in-Chief of the 4th Army Corps from Erzinghan saved a few of the prisoners' lives and prevented What I want to know the extermination of four more villages." is, how could he be there at the beginning of the massacre, read the Sultan's firman, and carry it on his breast if he did not arrive the Sultan's hrman, and carry it on his breast if he did not arrive at Sassun until all was over. Now, I could keep you till the middle of the night—which I have not intention of doing—if I read to you all the contradictory reports from this book of Mr. Green, and from the latest very gentlemanly production of Mr. Canon McCall. (Laughter.) Now he has published a book, in which he gave me three pages. Well, I think he must have been very any with me to have given me three pages out of a new year. very angry with me to have given me three pages out of a not very large book. (Laughter and cheers.) But I will tell you what he does. He tells you in the book that he does got dislike the Turks. that he does not dislike the Mahommedans, but in the preceding pages he dares to tell you the most filthy, monstrous accusations against the Turks. On what authority? On the authority of an against the Turks. On what authority? On the authority of an Englishman, but he does not give his name, and on the authority of a Turkish teacher. (Shame.) Well, we know perfectly well that Canon McCall had from first to last said that the Turk was not to be believed on his oath. Why then should this Turkish teacher he believed on his oath, when says something which is too horrible to mention? (Hear, hear.) But, gentlemen, all I can say is this; I should strongly advise Canon McCall to do as we do sometimes at sea, when a man makes use of foul language; we wash his mouth out with a basin of salt water. (Laughter and cheers.)
The gentleman who proposed this resolution made a statement which I can absolutely affirm is correct. I have been in Constanti nople a great many times in my life. I was there only a few months ago. I remained there for three weeks and determined to hand out to the best of my ability the truth of the statements. I went to a man whom Mr. Green calls in his book a man of great repute and who knows everything about this question. I said, "Mr. So-and-so (I could give you his name, but as I did not ask him whether I might quote him I will not do so. This gentleman had been there for 35 years, and he has been in Armenia and knows everything about Armenia) "will you tell me the facts of the case." He said, "Admiral, there would be no revolutionary work going on "" Oh, no," I said, "that is a little too much." "Yes," he said, "England." "Bur," I said, "that is a little too much." "Yes," he said, "England." "Bur," I said, "do you mean to tell me that that very respectable Society, the Anglo-Armenian Committee, is resolutionary? Why, I accused them of it the other day and they wrote me letters -- certainly they were all marked 'private' so that I could not publish them---declaring they were nothing of the kind," (Cheers and laughter.) He said, "Admiral, there are two revolutionary societies in England, one the Anglo-Armenian Society and the other the Armenian Patriotic Society. The Anglo-Armenian Society contains one or two names of gentlemen who are far above revolutionary measures, but they have got one or two black sheep on the committee, and these black sheep have been in communication from first to last with the other revolutionary societies, and are the persons who have been inciting these poor people to rebel." (Shame.) Well, the funny thing about the whole matter is that I think they must have discovered that lately, because I notice that on the Anglo-Armenian Committee one or two of these gentlemen have ceased to appear, and I have no doubt in my own mind that that society is an absolutely revolutionary society, like those at Tiflis, those at Varna, those at Athens, and those at Paris. (Hear, hear.) They have been inciting these poor wretches to rebel, and we know very well what it is when you begin to shoot troops down, when you begin to kill policemen who are sent to get the taxes, and there is hot blood caused, we do not know what may follow. (Hear, are doing so. Friend Peck.

hear.) That there may have been a good many men killed is very probable. I believe there have. I see in the papers to-day they have found those two pits at last. Anything more dreadful!
Why, gentlemen, the Turkish Government have never denied for one sir ngle moment that there were a certain number of men killed one single moment that there were a certain number of men artied in action. Well, when these men are killed, where on earth are you going to bury them unless they are put in pits? (Cheers.)

Well, now, I am not going to keep you any longer, but all I am going to say is this: for God's sake let the English people remember that one of the great attributes which we claim is justice. (Loud Cheers.) Justice for the Christian, justice for the Mahommcdan, justice for everybody, not only under our rule, but for whom we have any communication with. (Cheers.) We have no right whatever to express an opinion about these things until the Commission which was accepted by the English Government has reported. When that Commission has reported, when they have seen what has been done, when they point out the justification of what has been done, then, gentlemen, it is time for us to speak. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. A. M. K. Dehlvi had seconded the Resolution, which was now carried nem. con.

Mr. S. J. Meerza then moved the third resolution, as follows ;-"That this meeting protests against the gross injustice with which atrocious crimes charged against Mussulmans on mere hearsay evidence and wholly unproved, have been recklessly assumed to be true, while the greater misdeeds of Christian powers committed upon Mussulmans are passed over without condemnation or rebuke."

A gentleman of Liverpool seconded the resolution. that he tried to obtain a hearing at the meeting in St. James' Hall, but failed, supported it, and the resolution was carried unanimously,

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman and cheers for His Majesty the Sultan.

HE INVESTED ONLY 7/6.

THERE is a man who has spent the part twenty five years of his life exploring for gold and other innerals in Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, Ta-muna, and New Zadand. He has no combit picked in some innerey, yet he says that the investment of 7/6 brought him in bigger returns than any other he ever made,

Yet, hold on a minute. Don't let us jump to the conclusion that we can all get such out of the proceeds of 7/6 all we hear further from this financier. He has a humorous way of putting a serious thing, for which we should like him all the more. Some tolk have no idea that sound sense and genuine fun are two brothers, but they are all financier the same

Our friend's name is William Bromfield Peck, and he lives at Russell,

Our friend's name is William Bromfield Peck, and he lives at Russell, New Zeal and, a long wy off. He says it is a lovely country and mends to stay in it the balance of his days. As he landed in Australia, from England, in 1866, he has been there long enough to know what he is taking about. He advises persons of limited means who would like to become small landholders to emigrate to New Zealand.

Still, he reminds us that in the end we must pay for what we get "The calling of a prospector, for instance," said Mr. Peck, "is full of hard work. Besides, it entails rough living, such as salt junk, suddened damper, with rea in bucketfus. One must have the digestive capacity of an ostarch or an anaconda to stand that diet for long. It must therefore be taken as proof of the good machinery inside of my system, when I mention that I actually stood it for nearly twenty-five years.
"My punishment was delayed, you see, but it don't fail. At last the climax came, and I was prostrated with agonising pain in the stomich and all the other symptoms of a prefound derangement of all the digestive organs. I had to knock off work and the digestive organs. I had to knock off work and cease all exertion. I was imbined with disgust with all things minidane. I believe that dyspepsia is responsible for a large portion of the world's suicides!"

dyspeptial is responsible for a large for iton of the world's suicides?"

Mr. Peck's conjecture is exactly parallel with the fact as set forth in the official statistics of all civilised countries. No other disease so demonstries and depresses human nature. It attacks the secret strong-holds of the reason and drives people uisane; it stupelies the sensibilities; it turns men and women into selfish, useless, musances; it impels them to communications. All this in addition to their own desolation and suffering. Yes, Mr. Peck is quite right.

But to get back to what he says about himself. At the advice of a friend—Mr. W. Wilhams of this place. I began to take the far-famed Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. What result did it have? Pil tell you: It has transformed me from a prematurely old man into one quite regenerated.

egenerated.

Lam a rapid eater and can't break myself of the bad habit. Hence

"I am a rapid eater and can't break myself of the bad habit. Hence I make it a point to keep a bottle by me always and an occasional dose when necessary to set me right.

"I can safely assert that the investment of 7/6 in Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup was the best I ever made in all my chequered career You may depend that I prescribe this medicine to all and sundry people I come in contract with. Prior to using it I spen pounds at different times, but only got partial rehef. Syrup seems to make straight for the seat of the trouble. I pen these lines just to show other sufferers the way out. There are any number of respectable persons here who can attest the truth of what I have written.—Respectfully (Signed) WM. BROMFIELD PECK, Russell, Bay of Islands, New Zealand, July 2nd, 1802."

We don't call for witnesses. Mr. Peck's tale is farnkness and truth itself. We hold out our hand in greeting across the sea. Dyspepsis is a living death, and Mother Seigel gives new life. Millions sing that chorus. But he had better eat slower. Write again and tell us you itself

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA. LOAN NOTIFICATION.

The Commissioners of Calcutta are pre-I. The Commissioners of Calcilla are prepared, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council given under Section 404 of Act. II. (B. C.) of 1888, to open a Debenture Loan for Rs. 18,00,000 on the security of the rates, taxes and dues imposed and levied under the Calculta Municipal Consolidation Act. 1888. Act, 1888.

7000. The Debentures will have a currency of fifteen years from the 1st December, 1895, and will bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent.

of fifteen years from the 1st December, 1895, and will be an interest at the rate of 4 per cent. December of each year.

3. The form of the Debenture Bonds will be that given in the twelfth schedule of Act.

11. (B.C.) of 1888.

4. No Debenture Bonds will be issued for any sum less than Rs. 500, and above that amount Debentures will be issued only for complete sums of Rs. 100.

5. Tenders for the whole or any part of the above Loan of Rs. 18,00,000 will be received by the Secretary to the Corporation up to 2 o'clock P. M. of Friday, the 28th June, 1805.

6. Each tender must be made out in the form annexed to this Notification, and enclosed in a sealed cover addressed to the Secretary to the Corporation, and superscribed "Tender for Municipal Loan of 1895 96"

7. Each tender must be accompanied by Government promissory notes, Calcutta Municipal Debentures, currency notes or cheques for not less than 3 per cent, of the amount tendeted.

tendered.

8 When a tender is accepted, the deposit, 8. When a tender is accepted, the deposit, when made in currency notes, or cheques, will be held as a payment in part of the amount tendered, and will bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent, per annum from the date of acceptance of the tender, provided that the whole amount tendered is paid up in the manner hereinafter prescribed; but no debentue will issue for the sum so deposited so long as the entire amount of the tender is not paid.

9. The deposits on tenders which may not an on interest three payme a amiliaration sits. If an allotment after being made is not taken up, and the full amount allotted is not paid as hereinafter prescribed, the deposit will be furfeited.

be forfeited.

be forfeited.

10. The rate at which a tender is made must be specified in rupees, or rupees and amas: a tender in which the rate is not so specified will be rejected as noll and void.

11 The rates stated in a tender must not contain any fraction of an ama. If a rate containing fraction of an ama is inserted in any tender, such fraction will be struck out, and the tender treated as if the rate did not contain such fraction of an ama.

any tender, such fraction will be struck out, and the tender treated as if the rate did not contain such fraction of an anna.

12. The amount of the accented tenders must be paid into the Bank of Bengal in the fall wing Instalments.

Che child be the Ifts It laly.

Do by the Islah September

Patters whose tenders are accepted will have the option of paying all of any of the instalments before the dises specified above, and will receive interest from the date of such payment.

13. Anticipation interest will be paid on all instalments from the ease of such payment.

14. In the case of two or more tenders at the same rate a pio rata allorment will be made (if the tenders are accepted), but no allorment will be issued if the amount distributable on any tender is less than Rs. 500

15. A minimum having been previously fixed, tenders will be opened by the Loan Committee of the Commissioners at 2-30 P. M., on Firday, the 28 h June, 1895, at the Municipal Office.

W. R. MACDONALD,

Secretary to the Corporation.

W. R. MACDONALD,

Secretary to the Corporation.

MUNICIPAL OFFICE.

Calcutta, 28th May, 1895.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR DEBENTURES

I hereby tender for Rs.
of the Municipal four (4) per cent. Debenture Laon for 1895 96, and agree to pay for the same subject to the conditions notified at the tate of Rupees annas for every Hundred Rupees allotted to me.

I enclose Government promissory notes, Calcutta Municipal Debentures, currency notes Calcutta Municipal or a cheque for Rs.
Signed

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence OF

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

BY F. H. SKRINE, cs.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia,

- 1. A portrait of the Doctor.
- 2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes
- 3. About 225 pages of original essays from his bullant pen.
- 4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE:

To registered subscribers paying in ... Rs. 5 advance To other subscribers and ordinary ... Rs. 6 purchasers ...

After paying the expenses of the publication posal of the family of the deceased man of Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Piess, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" will be communicated with. .

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,-

Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque has been remitted per--money order written Address.....

The

1805

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician-Surgeon, Acconchem, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the

SPECIFICS

SPECIFICS for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthusi, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities and indiseases brought on by irregularities and indiseases brought on by irregularities and indisease and irreduces, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

CAUTION!

It having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (viz, 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 annas or 18, 11/2d, and Rs, 2 or 26 9d) are clearly printed on the hid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Ceylon,

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCULTA.

NOTICE.-Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupce rates plus V P. P. Charges and Postages

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

By SARADA PRASAD BANERJEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS on

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE For 1895

Having the largest sale of all similar works,

ENGLISH PREPARATIORY COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES

This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th CLASSI INDIA READERS NO. 1

For 6th & 7th CLASSES

These books are a remarkably simple style

These books are a femalia objects style and quite suited to Indian students.

The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P. and Oudh, the Punjab, M. datas, Bonjay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Burma, mytted to the above publications of in que ments

To be had of
S. K. LAHIRI & Co.,
College Square, Calcutta.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF

Rs. 1. His Highness The Maharaja of Durbhanga K.C.I.K., 2. His Highness The Maharaja of Vizianagram, G.C.I.E., 3. His Highness the Maharaja of Vizianagram, G.C.I.E., 4. Managram, G.C.I.E., 5. Mis Highness the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad, Amurul Omra, G.C.I.E., 6. Mawab Bahadur of Coch Behar, G.C.I.E., 6. Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghani, 6. K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K. 6. Ashan Ulla, C.I.E., 7. Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur 500 8. Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur 500 9. Shams-ul Ulama Syed Ali Belgrami 500 10. Khan Bahadar Bhai Bahadudun, C.I.E., Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 300 11. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mostria Companya Bahadur 500 11. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mostria Companya Bahadur 510 12. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mostria Companya Bahadur 511 13. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mostria Companya Bahadur 511 14. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mostria Companya B
bhanga K.C.I.E., anagram, O.C.I.E.,
Moorshedabad, Amirul Omra, G.C. I.E. 800 4. His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh, G.C.S.I 500 5. His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur of Cooch Behar, G.C.I.E. 500 6. Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghani, K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K. Ashan Ulia, C.I.E 500 7. Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur 500 8. Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur 500 9. Shameul Ulama Syed Ali Belgrami 500 10. Khan Bahadar Bhai Bahadudin, C.I.E., Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 300 11. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mo-
G C.S.I 500 5. His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur of Cooch Behar, G.C.I.E 500 6. Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghani, K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K. Ashan Ulla, C.I.E 500 7. Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur 500 8. Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur 500 9. Shams-ul Ulama Syed Ah Belgrami 500 10. Khan Bahadar Bhai Bahadudun, C.I.E., Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadib 300 11. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mo-of Cooch Behar, G.C.I.R 500 6. Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghani, K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K. Ashan Ulla, C.I.R 500 7. Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur 500 8. Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur 500 9. Shame-ul Ulama Syrd Alı Belgrami 500 10. Khan Bahadar Bhai Bahadudun, C.I.R., Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadi 300 11. Maharaia Bahadur Sir Junafra Mo-Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghani, K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K. Ashan Ulla, C.I.R
Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 300
Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 300
Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 300
Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh 309 11. Maharaja Bahadur Sir Jotindra Mo-
12. Babu Iodu Lat Mullick 200
13. Messrs, Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. 200 14. Prince Wala Kadr Sved Hosein Ali
Mırza Bahadur 150 15. Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab
Syed Zamul Abdın Khan Bahadur
10. Kaja Peary Mohan Mookerjee, CS.I. 100
17. The Honble Mr. Justice Chaudra Madhab Ghose 100
18. Prince Mirza Sir Jahan Kadar Baha- dur, K.C.I.E., 100
19. The Hon'ble P. Playfair 100 20. Haji Kasim Ariff 100
21. Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir
H. Brackenbury, K.C.B, 100 22. Babu Jai Gobind Law 100 23. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Guru Das
Bannijee 50
25. Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt 50
Dittactire C.S.I 50
28. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve-
29. The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar
Khan Bahadur , 50 3e. The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta 50
31. Maharaja Dunga Charan Law, C.I.E., 50
32. Nawab Jahandar Meetza 50 33. Nawab Huzoor Muza 50
34. The Honble W. C. Bonnerjee 50 35. Nawab Syed Ameer Husen 50
37. Hakeem Gholam Raza Khan 50
38. J. G. Ritchie, Esq. a.s., 50
40. J. Rowe, Esq 32 41. Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Bahadur, 25
43 Kumar Dinendra Naram Roy 25
44 Babu rPashupatty Nath Bose 25 45. Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy 25
46 Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose 25 47. Raja Sir Sourindra Mohan Tagore,
C.I.E 25 48. Raya Jotindra Nath Chowdhury 25 49. Babu Rama Nath Ghose 25
49 Babu Rama Nath Ghose 25 50 Raja Sreenath Roy 25
51. Rai Sew Box Bogla Bahadar 25 52. R Belchambers, Esq 25
53. Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury 25
55. Babu Gopal Lal Seal 25
56. Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam 25 57. A. T. Apcar, Esq 25
58. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq CS 25 59. Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E., 25
60. Munshi Gholam Rasool 25
61. F. H. Skrine, Esq. C S., 25 62. The Hon'ble H. J S.Cotton C.S., C.S.I 20 63. Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah 20
64. Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry 20
66. Moulvi Imadd Ali 20
67. Rai Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar 20 68. D. Panioty, Esq 20
69. Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan 20 70. H. E. A Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-law 20
71. Moulvi Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed, Khan Bahadur 17.
72. T. Inglis, Esq., C.S 16

73.	A. H. Giles, Esq.			16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq., C		•••	16
	The Hamilton Marila			10
75.	The Hon'ble Moules	Sirajii	i isiain
	Khan	•••	•••	16
76	Moulvi Serajuddeen	•••	•••	15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,	•••	•••	15
78.	H. A. D. Phillips, Esq.	, C.S.		ΙÓ
79.	Baboo Kuan Chunder	Roy		10
80.				10
81.	Baboo Doyal Chand B	ose	•••	10
82.	" Madan Mohun I		•••	10
83.	" Kanai Lal Khai			10
84.	Moulvi Syud Akram H		•••	10
85.	Moulvi Aziz Ahmud			10
86,	Rai Kanyelal Dey Bah			10
		augut	•••
87.	H. Holmwood, Esq.	•••	•••	10
88.	Babu Hurry Mohun Cl		•••	10
89.	Baboo Chakkanlal Roy		•••	5
90.	,, Strodaprasad Gb	ose	•••	5
Sı	ibscriptions will be thai	ıkfully	received	by
	Honorary Joint Secretar			•
	RAJ KUMAR SARVADE		RAHADI	t D
	4, British Indian
	and A. F. M. ABDUR			,
			-at Law,
	*4 Talan

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

Guaranteed three Years.

WATCH. Rs.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest we. Runs more than 28 libours with one winding. Will last a life time, E isyly repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Crylon says:—It keeps solended time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamallee says:—I sold it for the strong of the says of the says of the says. The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time. Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro-cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro' cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 18-0. Mr. G. Smith, Silt Inspector from Sankuta, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid sliver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pie. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28 x Pie. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real slott gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed to be for a solid gold. No agents kept, men's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guran-teed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

CATARRH. Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

A MEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers and treatment and these Sufferers are not remarally aware that these diseases are containing or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the himing membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Miscroscopic research, however, has proved this to be a facet and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently curred by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most chronic form

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By 13-40-40-40, it has achieved paration has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate &

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER die

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

If paid in advance,
thy ... Rs. 12 of Politics. Literature.

Iralf-yearry	· · · ·	•••	"· 7
Quarterly	·	•••	4
Montaly			Ke, 1-
Single or sample	Сору	A	lns.F o-	8
If not	paid in ac	ivance,
Yearly '	•		Rs. 18
Half-yearly	• • •	•••	n. 10-	8
Quarterly	٠	•••	,, 6-	0
Monthly		•••	' ,, 2	4
Single or sample	Сору	•••	Ans. o.	12
No additional	cnarge for	postage	or peon

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 anias a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dutes Lane, Wellington Striet, Calcutta,

DROIT ET AVANT.

(PRINCE بئ PEASANT

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF LITERATURE POLITICS AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 681.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE RAJPUT LEGEND OF JAGDEV PARMAR. (FROM THE RAS MALA.)

BY A. ROGERS, BO.C.S.

(Concluded from page 290.)

" Oh, arbiters of Destiny !" then Jagdev cried ;

" To turn you from your mood is there no way, No sacrifice by which his precious life

May yet be rescued for his people's good?"

They answered : " If some other chief, whose rank

Is equal to the king's, would give his life

In place of his, then Sidh Raj would be saved."

" Let me then go," said Jagdev : " if my wife Give her consent, my life shall be for his."

Scornfully the Fates then answered: " Where the wife

Who for a king would make such sacrifice?"

But Jagdev went and the king followed close.

The tale was told to Virmati, who cried :

Oh! happy chance the gods to us afford

To prove a Rajput's fealty to his salt !

But there is one petition that I crave.

I can not live without thee. Let me, too,

For Sidh Raj Jesangh offer up my life!" But Jagdev said : " Our children who shall keep ?"

And Virmati said quickly: " Let us all Offer ourselves; this to the gods, no doubt,

Will be a far more pleasing sacrifice."

Taking their children by the hand, they went

Out to the Fates, and close behind the king Still followed wonderingly, although unseen.

Then Jagdev asked the Fates : " How many years

Will ye increase the king's life for my head?"

They answered : " Twelve." " There are here three lives,

Those of my wife and children, that should bear

An equal value with my own. For all

How many lives will ye vouchsafe the king?"

" For each twelve years," they auswered : " forty-eight."

After one last embrace Virmati gave

Her well-loved first-born to his sire, who struck

Off from its lovely form that tender head.

Then did the Chavati with streaming eyes

Offer the second to his father's sword.

But : "Hold ! Enough !" The Fates their mandate gave. "Your loyalty before man have ye shown,

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

And no more need the gods. The precious boon That ye demanded, Sidh Raj Jesangh's life, This, with thy children and thy wife, we grant, And to the king give eight and forty years To rule a happy and contented folk." Then tenderly they raised the offered child, And poured ambrosia on him and he lived. Then Virmati and Jagdev with their babes Went happy homewards. From behind the clouds The moon broke forth and lighted up their path, Smiling upon them, as the gods in Paradise Talked to each other of their noble deed. The king, too, sought his palace and his bed, And meditated farther trial of their faith. With morning's dawn came Jagdev to his watch, But not before those sluggards of the night, Who had not done their duty, had been asked Why had the women wailed and sung for joy. Lying they answered that one set of wives - Minered for a son by death just suntched away, And to the other set, who sang for joy, The gods had given a long-expected 'teir. Then turning round to Jagdev Sidh Raj asked What he had seen. He modestly replied : "It must be even as the chiefs have said." The king rejoined : " Nay, I have seen it all. Do thou now tell the file as it occurred," And Jagdev spoke once more : " It is enough. That all is known unto the king himself." Then Sidh Raj cried : " Brothers and nobles, hear, And in your hearts consider well the tale. The first watch of this day had seen my death ; The Fates of Delhi would have borne me eff, Had not this Rajput and his noble wife Offered their own and both their children's lives A sacrifice for me, to save my life. One of the children had been offered up To add on twelve years to my worthless life. But merciful the Fates restored it back. Well pleased to know a Rajput's zeal and faith. For each of four lives twelve years they bestow. These are the Rajputs at whose paltry pay Ye grumbled, casting on it longing eyes, Who when I hade you go forth and enquire What meant those cries unwonted that I heard, Cared not to leave your beds of ease, and brave Yourselves the dangers of the night and storm, And now have basely lied to hide your shame. What was there in the pay? Such service rare, Ten thousand had I given, and not two, Sufficient recompense had not received." Thenceforth on Jagdev Sidh Raj Jesangh looked As on his equal in the realm, and gave

One of his daughters to him as a wife.

And Virmati was quite content. She said It was becoming for a Rajput lord More than one wife to have upon the earth, That when they mounted on his funeral pyre, As Satis burning, he in Paradise Might be right royally attended, too. They lived at Pattan many happy years, And when the gods called Udyadit away, Jagdev succeeded him as king of Dhar.

-The Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review.

WEEKLYANA.

THE inhabitants of Dover will present the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava with a life-size portrait of himself to be painted by Prince Troubetzkov.

In London, out of 100 widowers who marry, twelve marry their house-

LAST year, the electors in the United Kingdom numbered 6,268,791. The last return just issued shows that there are 4,959,805 electors in England and Wales, 636,097 in Scotland, and 736,552 in Ireland, or a total of 6,332,454.

A SUICIDE in Birmingham justified his conduct thus; "I was not asked to come to this world, and I don't see why I should consult any one when or how I should leave it." The verdict on the death wassuicide while insane.

EARLY in this month, the Hungerford Parish Church joined as man and wife, James Thring Coxe, of Newton Lodge, verging upon eighty, and Radbourne, aged eighteen years. The wedding is reported, in the English papers, as of a remarkable character. It is, we suppose, because a man who has exceeded the allotted span of life, with one foot in his grave, leads to the altar a girl with the world before her. Yet the union was a matter of choice for both the parties. In a country where widow marriage is permitted, the case is not so hard for the girl, as we in this country may imagine.

IT was a wonder, indeed, which St. Louis witnessed, the wedding of Miss Pauline Devere, hailing from Chester, an animal trainer in Wombwell's Circus, and Harry Bishop, a cowboy, in the lions' cage, with six animals acting as bridesmands and best man. The report says that "Justice Zimmerman performed the ceremony, at the conclusion of which bride and groom emerged from the cage and received the hearty congratulations of the keepers and the curious crowd." The craving for the curious and the sensational supports the tiger or the hon tamer in his desperate profession. We hope the congratulations of the crowd were more substantial. The marriage, we take it, was a part of the performance of the company.

THE Lieutenant-Governor leaves Darjeeling for Calcutta on the 2nd July and arrives at Sealdah on Wednesday, the following day. He will be accompanied by only the Private Secretary, Captain Currie. Under the circumstances, it is needless to say that both the departure and arrival will be private. Two days after, on Situiday, the 6th July, there will be a sitting of the Bengal Legislative Council.

MR. David Robert Lyall, Member of the Board of Revenue, and Mr. James Austin Bourdillon, Officiating Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, have been re-appointed members of the Bengal Legislative Council. The appointments of Babu Surendranath Banerjee and Mr. John Gilham Womack are also gazetted.

MR. W. E Gordon Leith having taken leave, Mr. C. E. Gray, Barrister-at-Law, will act as Assistant Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Legislative Department.

THE Supreme Legislative Council has been summoned for Thursday, the 11th of July.

THE market rate of exchange for the 2nd quarter of 1895-96 has been fixed at 1s. 1-9/32d., the percentage of salary admissible on account | Courts.

of Exchange Compensation allowance in that quarter being Rs. 17-12-3 approximately.

THE dates of the 4th and 5th Criminal Sessions for the year 1895 are-Monday, the 26th August; and Wednesday, the 4th December.

SOME of the officers belonging to what was formerly termed the Uncovenanted Service have been made eligible for an additional pension of Rs. 1,000 a year, provided they shall have rendered not less than three years of effective service and shewn special energy and efficiency They are :-

Registration Department.—Inspectors General under Local Governments, but not under Chief Commissionerships.

Police Department.—Inspectors General under Local Governments

and Administrations.

and Administrations.

Jul Deput timent.—Inspectors General under Local Governments, but not under Chief Commissionerships.

Education Depat timent — Directors of Public Instruction under Local Governments and Administrations.

Account Depar timent — Comptroller and Auditor General. Accountant General. Deputy Comptroller and Auditors General. Assistant Secretary, Finance Department. Comptroller, India Treasuries.

Postal Department.—Director General of the Post Office. Deputy Director General of the Post Office.

Postal Department.—Director General of the Post Office. Deputy Director General of the Post Office. Postmaste General. Forest Department.—Inspector General of Forests. Geological Survey Department.—Director. Survey Department.—Surveyor General. Meteorological Department.—Meteorological Reporter to the Government.—Meteorological Reporter to the Government.—Meteorological Reporter to the Government.—Director Surveyor ent of India

Political Department - Officers of the rank of Resident in the graded list of the Political Department.

THE Home Department has issued for general information a Resolution on the subject of the confirmation of Officiating Cantonment Magistrates. We quote it entire :-

Magistrates. We quote it entire:—

"Officers holding the sole-charge Cantonment Magistracies entered in the list appended to the Resolution No. 9-Judicial 774-784, dated the 18th July 1894, were, by the orders contained in that Resolution, formed into an Imperial service under the Government of India. It is therefore necessary to lay down a definite rule regulating the confirmation of officers officiating in the Department.

2. The Governor General in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that the claims of Officiating Cantonment Magistrates to substantive appointments shall in future be considered by the Government of India in the order in which they entered the Department, irrespective of the Province in which they are serving or in which the vacancy occurs. In accordance with this ruling, when a vacancy takes place in consequence of the death, retirement, etc., of a sole-charge Cantonment Magistrate in one Province, the vacancy will be considered as a vacancy in the Department. The officer selected to fill such vacancy will ordinarily be the officer who has had the longest officiating service in the Department, irrespective of the Province in which he has been so officiating, provided that he is considered by the Local Government under which he is serving, and by the military authorities, to be deserving of confirmation. It will not, however, follow that he will be transferred to the particular cantonment in which the vacancy has occurred. The principle enunciated in the Resolution of the 18th July 1894, that local knowledge and experience should he made use of, as La as possible, will be kept in view, and, in puisuance of this principle, it may at any time be found necessary to place the cantonment vacated in the manner referred to in charge of an officiating officer having local experience. The distribution of the officers, permanent or Administration under which they are serving and, as was intimated in paragraph 5 of the Resolution of the 18th July 1894, the Government of tration under which they are serving and, as was intimated in paragraph 5 of the Resolution of the 18th July 1894, the Government of India will not make transfers from one Province to another without consulting the Local Governments concerned."

THE Bengal Government has revised the rules for the payment of the expenses of complainants and witnesses attending the criminal courts. For such purpose, Natives are divided into three classes-ordinary labouring class, natives of higher rank in life, and natives of superior rank. Their diet allowances are fixed at two annas, four annas, and up to Rs. 3 per diem respectively. The rates of travelling allowance are-third class, intermediate class, and second class railway fares. If there is a distinction among the Natives, there is none among Europeans, who are all equal and equal to Natives of higher rank in life.

MR. R. L. Upton has been permitted to resign the appointment of Solicitor to Government, Calcutta. Mr. W. K. Eddis succeeds him.

THE Governor-General in Council has declared that summonses issued by any Civil or Revenue Court in the Baroda State, may be sent to the Courts in British India and served as if they had been issued by such

ONE Deckaran, a bunnia of Jubbulpore, has been found, by the Deputy Commissioner, guilty of forging a bond of ten rupees, and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. In 1893, he was, for a similar offence, sent to juil for one year.

THE young Chief of Patna, in the Chhatisgarh Division of the Central Provinces, shot his young wife to death and then killed himself. He had been a student in the Rajkumar School and was only installed Maharaja in January last year.

NOTES & LEADERETTES.

OUR OWN NEWS,

8

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

LORD Rosebery has gone out and Lord Salisbury has come in. In the House of Commons, on June 21, during the debate on the Army Estimates, Mr. Brodrick moved an amendment protesting against the inadequacy of reserves of ainmunition. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Secretary of State for War, contested the remarks of the member for Guildford. On a division, the Government was defeated by seven votes, the figures being one hundred and thirty-two and one hundred and twenty-five. The result was received with the most profound astonishment even among the Opposition. Sir Charles Dilke, Colonel Nolan, and all the Unionists voted with the majority. A Cabinet Council assembled immediately. Another was held the next day in the morning, which, after occupying two and-a-half hours, was adjourned until the afternoon, when the sitting lasted another two hours. It is stated that as Mr. Campbell Bannerman maintained that reserves of ammunition were ample, he looked upon the result of the division as impugning his veracity.

In the House of Commons, on June 24, Sir William Harcourt, Chancellor of the Exchequer, made an official explanation. He declared that the Ministry entirely shared the responsibility of the attitude adopted by the Secretary of State for War, and the result of the division practically amounted to a vote of censure which compelled the Government to resign. Lord Rosebery made a similar statement in the House of Lords.

Lord Rosebery went to Windsor to place before Her Majesty the resignation of the Government, which was accepted. Lord Salisbury was summoned to form a Ministry. After conferring with his colleagues he proceeded again to Windsor, where in an audience with the Queen he formally accepted office, and kissed her Majesty's hand.

The following posts in the new Ministry have been filled as under:— Lord Salisbury, Premier and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Lord Hallbury, Lord High Chancellor.

The Duke of Devoushire, Lord President of the Council.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Mr. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury and Leader of the House of Commons.

Mr. Chamberlam, Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Mr. Henry Chaplin, President of the Local Government Board.

The Cabinet will comprise seventeen or eighteen persons. But it is all temporary. On the 27th, Lord Salisbury stated in the House of Lords that the policy of the Government was to dissolve Parliament at the earliest possible moment. He hoped the necessary business would be finished in time to dissolve on the 8th or 9th of July.

MR CHAMBERLAIN has issued his election address, in which he declares that the Unionists are absolutely agreed to discard the wild constitutional changes planned by the late Government, to devote their attention to constructive social reform and to safeguard the defensive resources of the Empire. The election addresses rendered necessary from those members who have accepted office in the new Ministry agree in deferring any exposition of policy until the general election.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

MR. Labouchere and the other Radicals who follow his leadership do not intend, they say, to offer any obstruction to the closing business of the Session, but only desire Parliament to be dissolved as promptly as possible.

THE Times points out that the Duke of Devoushire will have the special duty of presiding over the Committee of the National and Imperial Defence, combining both the Admiralty and the War Office now constituted for the first time.

A MANIFESTO has been issued by Mr. Justin McCarthy as leader of the anti-Parnellites pointing out that the worst enemies of Ireland have attained to power. The manifesto also appeals for funds to carry on a campaign at the approaching elections.

PRIOR to the vote on Mr. Brodrick's amendment, the Secretary of State for War announced that the Duke of Cambridge would resign the appointment of Commander-in-Chief on the 1st of October next. In the course of his speech Mr. Campbell-Bannerman highly eulogised the services of the Duke, and also declared that it was not proposed to abolish the office of Commander-in-Chief, but that the functions appertaining thereto would be greatly modified, and the post would only be tenable for a certain term of years. It has been decided that the new Commander-in-Chief, with the Adjutant-General, Quarter-master-General, Director of Arullery, and Inspector-General of Fortifications, shall form a Council, whose duty it will be to advise the Secretary of State for War on all matters relating to the Army.

SIR Arthur Habburton has been appointed premanent Under-Secretary of State for War in succession to Sir Ralph Thompson, who is retiring.

THE arrangements about the Russo-Chinese loan have collapsed. China objects to pledge her Customs revenue to Russia, as she fears that later on, on that security, a larger loan will be issued in all the markets of Europe and America.

A CONVENTION has been signed at Pekin, settling the boundaries and commercial relation between Yunan and Tonquin. One of the clauses permits the introduction of railways and telegraphs. The treaty concluded between France and China virtually supersedes the projected Buffer State in regard to Siam.

THE Porte is becoming greatly disquieted by the growing agitation in Macedonia in favour of the introduction of reforms stipulated for in the Treaty of Beilin. A Macedonian journal reports that a revolution has broken out at three points. The relations between Turkey and Bulgaria are strained, owing to the former warning the latter to abstain from taking part in the agitation in Macedonia.

A RESOLUTION was moved in the Italian Parliament by the Extreme Left for the approximent of a Committee of Inquiry to report on the conduct and acts of Signor Crisps, who made an eloquent speech in his defence, declaring that he would refuse to submit to any tribunal. The motion was rejected by a majority of 168 votes.

KABAREGA, a powerful Chief in Unyoro, continues to maintain a defiant attitude, and to threaten British posts. News has been received that severe fighting took place on March 3, in which Captain Dunning was killed and Major Cunningh in severely wounded. The latter, however, is recovering. The despatch does not state the result of the fighting.

THE Duke of Aosta was married to the Princess Helene of Orleans at Kingston in full French royal state. The spectacle was of a most brilliant description. Fifty English and Foreign Princes and Princesses were present at the ceremony. The town was fully decorated and was thronged with spectators.

THE programme of the National Liberal Federation includes Home Rule, the reform of the Lords, and the Welsh Disestablishment Bill. THE International Railway Congress was opened on Wednesday by the Prince of Wales.

THE Daily News states that Mr. Fowler had decided upon the evacuation of Chitral, but that owing to the change of Government a reversal of the policy is now possible.

It was a happy hit of the Municipal Loan Committee to fix the rate of interest of the new 18 lakhs loan at 4, instead of going down to 3½. The tenders at par and upwards amounted to Rs. 1,28 47,600. The lowest rate of render accepted was Rs. 106, the highest Rs. 111. Tenders at Rs. 106 t and upwards were accepted in full, while those at Rs. 106 will be distributed properties.

The question of a dnobikhana for Calcutta has been revived. On Thinsday, at the adjourned meeting of the Commissioners, a committee was appointed to draw up a scheme for the purpose. It is some time that the Commissioners, following Bombay, had decided to wash the clothes, as they remove the nightsoil. The total initial cost was estimated at Rs 66,000 and the working expenses at Rs, 6,300 per annum. The site was purchased for Rs, 30,000, and then the matter allowed to drop. There was a show of opposition from the suburban Commissioners, but the proposition was carried by a large majority. The recent prosecution of a dhobi for spreading infection seems to have spurred the Commissioners to the Resolution. The Dhobi nuisance is great, indeed. The Commissioners will deserve the thanks of the commitmity if they can remove the evil of a dilatory dhobi.

A COMMITTEE was also appointed to report on the dairies or places in which cows and buffatoes are kept within the town and suburbs, for the supply of milk. Towards the close of the discussion that followed the motion, the Chairman said that there were some six hundred cowsheds in Calcutta, few of which were licensed. Hundreds of cattle were sometimes huddled together in a place with hardly a standing space for them all. He knew of places where it was necessary to carry a lantern during the day not to distinguish between the good and the bad but to discover the very existence of the animals. True, the Municipal Act empowered him to close such places. But the power was not enforceable. It would not do to let loose a number of cattle on the streets. What was to be their ultimate destination? He had spoken to Mr. Pearson. If the Honorary Magistrates, like the Chief Magistrate, would heavily punish the keepers, the sheds would quickly improve. Supposing, Mr. Pearson sent all of them to jail, would the sheds be palaces? The law (Sec. 286) says all " stables and cow-houses, shall be under the survey and control of the Commissioners as regards their site, material, dimensions and construction, and shall be altered, supplied with water, connected with a sewer, paved, repaired, kept in proper order, stopped up, or demolished, at the costs and charges of the owner;" and if he "neglect, during eight days after notice in writing, to execute the work in the manner required by the Commissioners, the Commissioners may cause the work to be executed; and the expenses thereby incurred shall be paid by the owner." The Commissioners could not desire for more power. Yet the cowsheds are a disgrace to the town and a cruelty to the animals. Instead of exercising the power quoted, the Commissioners usually prosecute the men for keeping the sheds unclean. Even if they are heavily fined, they find it still profitable not to apply for licenses which are costly. Not that heavy fees are claimed, but the costs of improvement demanded are out of all proportion to the income derivable from the trade. Here hes the difficulty. If reforms at moderate outlay could be made, the sheds would have considerably improved by this time. At the present time, municipal prosecutions are confined chiefly to outlding without permission or not in accordance with sanctioned plan

WE were deeply grieved to learn of the death of Dewan Haridas Viharidas Desai. He will be best remembered in these Provinces and out of India as a member of the Royal Commission on Opium of 1893. He might, if he chose, have been more widely known and much earlier. But he hated notoriety. We wide of him only in February last, when on his retirement from the Dewanship of Junagad, he was presented with a khilat worth Rs. 25,000 and granted a monthly pension of Rs. 500.

Dewan Salieb Haridas is an inhabitant of Charutur in Guzerat. His home is at Nadiad, in Zilla Kaira. He is 55 years of age and will be best remembered by our readers as a member of the Opium Commission of 1893. Coming of a family above want, he was in no hurry to take to service. At the age of 32, he was Nawadish and afterwards auditor at Bhawnugger, where he remained for 5 years and four months. Next he was State Karbari at Wadhan for about the same period. Wakanir then wanted his services. The Raja was then just dead leaving a minor 3 or 4 years old. He stayed there as Manager for a year, when the Maharaja of Idar-a branch of the House of Jodhpur, otherwise known as Nani Marwar-attaining majority, appointed Mr. Haridas his Dewan. After a stay there of 14 months, he transferred his services to the Mahoniedan principality of Junagad, where he did excellent service for ten long years. A man of no ambition, strictly conscientious, and wishing to pass his latter years in the comforts of home, he took one year's leave preparatory to retirement. When that leave expired he tendered his resignation. It was not, however, accepted, and he was allowed another year's furlough. It was during this period that he joined the Royal Commission. While he was still enjoying his second leave, after the close of the work on the Commission, he was recalled to his duties in the Junagad Durbar, as the acting Dewan, whose services were lent by the British Government, too was recalled to join his permanent post in the British service. The Nawab pressed his Dewan to remain with him till such time as he could find a competent man. The Dewan Saheb, grateful for the consideration shewn him and full of sense of responsibility, had his leave cancelled and rejoined the post from which he has just retired with such honour and dignity. The provision made in his retirement is highly honourable to his master the Nawab.

Mr. Haridas Vibaridas Desai is a jewel of a man—simple and unassuming, with the instincts of patriarchal days, gentlemanly feelings, without the vices of Western education, pleasant and agreeable, with a fund of information to instruct and amuse. He may well be proud of having served his country well.'

The Dewan breathed his last early on the morning of Monday, the 17th June. He had just returned from a visit to Junagad, on the invitation of the Vizier Siheb, after a stay there of a fortnight. When he went to and came back from Junagad, he was quite hale and hearty, After a week, he had an attack of slight fever which he did not much mind. It continued for three days. On the fourth day, quite unexpectedly his temperature rose to 104°. Still he was the same jolly good soul that he always had been. On Sunday, he seemed to be well, for he could write to his distant friends. He was rash perhaps to take his bath that day. In the afternoon, the fever began to rise and rose to 107. Up to 6 P.M., he was perfectly conscious and wore his winning smile, replying to inquiries. Then he fell into a calmness which seemed to be sleep, but it was the sleep of death. In death, as in life, he was all peace. Heaven is assuredly his. In his last moments, he expressed no anxiety about himself or those near and dear to him He leaves behind him two daughters and two sons, the eider of the two last being only six years of age. He leaves them in no want and leaves for them a guardian, whom he had trained up, in his nephew Mi Giridherdas Mangaldas Desai. The death is a terrible blow to him He has all our sympathy in his great beceavement.

All Nadiad was in mourning on the 17th. All the schools were closed and business suspended.

BABOO Sitanath Das, of the Jan Bazar Mar family, died of fever, on the morning of Monday. He had taken an interest in the affairs of this city in the early days of the present elective municipality, and was returned a Commissioner. Latterly, with the partition, by her grandsons of the estates of the late Rain Rashmani, he devoted himself entirely to the improvement of his own estate, unmindful of the claims on him of friends and the public. He was, the famous Baboo Jadoo Natt Chowdry excepted, the best educated of the grandsons of the Ran who have inherited her estates.

NATIVE Bombay, assembled at Haji Omar Jamai's Locksley Hall has decided to send a letter of condolence to Mr. Vincent, the Polic Commissioner, on the death of his wife. We had expected Bomba; would do more for Mrs. Vincent. It is, however, not yet too late for the Deputy Commissioner to move at least his own men to comforward with a better appreciation of the virtues of the deceased law in the form of a permanent memorial.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE at Nuni-Tal is not safe as a Governor's residence should be. Ugly cracks and fissures having appeared, the house and hill were subjected to special examination. The first report, dated the 27th March, 1895, says :

"It is impossible to admit that the present state of the Government "It is impossible to admit that the present state of the Government House is satisfactory, or that from the point of view of entires stety it is suitable for occupation by the Head of the Local Government during a season of excessive rainfall. Without going so far as to say that there is probability of a disaster, the Committee are constained of express their opinion that in view of the constant settling and cracking which has been seen to happen every rainy season, and of the marked increase in the width and extent of the cracks during the goals season of 180.1 a serious acculent into a state of the cracks. the marked increase in the width and extent of the cracks during the past season of 1894, a serious accident may, at any time after the beginning of the ramy season, be brought about by some sudden structural fadure within the building itself. On this view of the question and with special reference to the point on which the opinion of the Committee was specially called for, viz. 4 whether the limit has been reached beyond which it would be foolish to remain, they consider that it would be advisable for the house to be vacated during the rams of 180c.

Another report was called for in April following. It is re-assuring "The Committee are of opinion that Government House is at present tructurally safe, and may continue to be occupied as a residence by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor."

Mr. R. D. Oldham, Superintendent, Geological Survey of India, takes a despondent view of the entire situation. He considers that "the site of Government House, apart from any question of the stapility of the structure, must already be regarded as unsafe during the rains." He thinks "it is not outside the bounds of possibility that with a full monsoon a slip may take place within the present year, and in any case movement is to be anticipated to an extent which would make the house undesirable if not unsafe, for its inhabitants."

In the Disapore punkah coolie case, the Magistrate committed Private George Howard, of the Manchester Regiment, to the Calcutta sessions, on charges of murder, and voluntarily causing grievous hurt by a dangerous weapon. He was tried by Mr. Justice Norris with a special jury. Mr. O'Kinealy, Standing Counsel, prosecuted. Messrs. C. F. Bairow and W. H. Knight defe nded the prisoner. After a trial of three days, the majority of the jury -eight to one-found Howard not guilty, and the Judge discharged him. The prisoner had voluntarily admitted to the Magistrate that "The punkah coolie was lying in the verandan with his head towards the swall. I kicked him on the head with my boots and went to the theatre at 9 20. I kicked him at 9 15; there was blood on my boots. I threw them away. No one saw me do it. I believe the man died from the kick. This I believe is the whole truth. I am making this statement of my own free will. I told Private Gardner and Private Donnerry immediately afterwards." The jury were probably swayed by, the medical evidence of the native Civil Surgeon who thought that the death could not be due to a kick from a heavy boot; the wound of which the cooke died must have been produced by a heavy must instrument such as the club produced in court. The defending counsel Mr. Burow tried to explain away the prisoner's brave and manny confession as too manly to shield a comrade. The counsel was not as manly. He would, in spite of his chent's confession, fasten the guilt of death on the comrade Donnelly. The confession uself, he argued, was not sufficient to base a decision of guilty upon in such a serious charge. The Judge left it to the jury to decide whether the prisoner had kicked a dead man as suggested by Mr-Barrow. It was entirely for them, he said, to say whether Howard's statement was true or not. If they believed that death was caused by the kick admitted by Howard, then they had no reasonable alternative but to find him guilty. He concluded by praying to God to guide the jury in coming to a right decision-The jury, as we have said, were not unanimous. The days are gone by when no verdict could be given effect to when the jurymen disagreed-The Judge evidently agreed with the majority and passed his order accordingly.

THE Sealds. Magistrate has had too much of the potate or plantain whisky. He especially sat early this morning for the last drop. He will unburthen himself on Tuesday.

THE Rai Buhadoor has not succeeded. The University has elected Mr. A. M. Bose as its representative to the Bengal Council. There was no other candidate.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, June 29, 1895

BUDDHA-HIS LIFE.

THE religion of Buddha was, if not the first, at least one of the earliest of the man-worshipping and morality-preaching faiths. The Vedic singers who preceded them never claimed to be superior to, or identical with, the gods of their pantheon. Their highest ambition was only to be recognised as men of extraordinary powers. Their religion offered chiefly tangible good service, and had not much to do with either the improvement or the corruption of morality. Their success in securing the reverence of men naturally led those who followed them to attempt higher altitudes. Buddha did not, like the later prophets, claim to be an incarnation or agent of the Most High. Ideas of that kind were perhaps unknown to him. At any rate, they did not originate with him. However, he tried to attain the same goal by a different route. He in a manner denied the existence of a Supreme Bramha, and spoke of the lesser gods of the Hindu pantheon as his inferiors. According to his elaboration of the Hindu doctrine of metampsychosis, the condition of a god is the highest stage which every sentient being is capable of attaining before becoming a Buddha or Bodhisatwa. In the Buddhistic scripture we read of a certain frog that, simply listening to Buddha's voice, while reciting the Law, was born as a god in the Trayastrinsa heaven. In some of Buddha's miracles, as for instance in the one relating to his descent from heaven to Sankisa, it is stated that the gods acted as his personal attendants. It is also related that they attended his preachings and reverenced him as a teacher. His policy with regard to the lesser deities of the Hindu pantheon was in fact the same as that of the British Government of the present day towards the Indian princes, and not that of Dilhousie. He did not, like some of the later prophets, aspire to the position of "a lonesome tower" in the midst of a level plain. His religion, therefore, must be said to be a form of Hinduism, and not wholly antagonistic to it.

Though the main facts about the personal history of Buddha are well known, yet it seems worthwhile to condense them that the reader may at once form his own idea of their value and bearing. Buddha was the son of a Kshatriya Chief named Suddhodana, who ruled over a small king-dom at the foot of the Himalay is, between the rivers Rapti and Rohini. The chief town of the State was Kapilavastu which has been identified with a village named Bhuila in the Basti District, about 25 miles to the north-east of Fyzibad, and 12 miles

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science

The Indian Association for the Oultivation of Science 210, Bow-Berar Street, Calcutta (Session 1805-96).

Lecture by Babu-R en Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Monday, the Lot Inst., at 4-15 P.M. Subject: Classification of Elements; on Fuedant to compounds; on Friday, the 5th Inst., at 4-15 P.M. Subject: Consideration of the Chandra compounds; on Friday, the 5th Inst., at 4-15 P.M. Subject: Profile of Hydrogen.

Lecture by Dr. Nitratan Suku, M.A., M.D., on Monday, the 1st Inst., at 6-10 R.P.M. Subject: Profile of Zeodogy—Frog. Zeology—Protozoa; on Friday, the 5th Inst., at 6-10 7 P.M. Subject Comment of Physiology—Wilk

Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjen, B.A. M.B., C.M., on Tuesday, the 2nd Inst., at 6-10-8 P.M. Subjects: Histology—"Endothelium" Physiology—"Circulation."

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology and Buology; Rs. 4 for charge for a single lecture is 2 Annas

Mahendra Lat Sircar, M.D.,

Honorary Secretary.

June 29, 1895.

to the north-west of the town of Basti. Buddha's mother, Mahamaya died on the seventh day after his birth. Although he was taken care of by his mother's sister, Maya alias Gautami Mahaprajapati, who was also one of his father's wives, his domestic life was, in all probability, not a very happy one. In his early years, he received some education under a teacher named Kaucika, and it was perhaps this teacher who awakened in his young mind that craving for the study of the Hindu philosophical systems which seemed to be very strong in his mind when he left his paternal roof. He married three wives, and, according to some accounts, was blessed with a child at the age of twenty-nine years. By other accounts his wife Yasodhara gave birth to Rahula long after his departure from home. In any case, with such intellectual and physical activity as he possessed, the monotony of home life proved extremely irksome to him. Possibly, the fact of his being motherless, and his father having other wives, made him miserable. That he was not a great favourite with the family, appears pretty clearly from the fact that, after his voluntary exile, his father did nothing whatever to bring him back. If, like the late Raja Pratapa Chand of Burdwan, Buddha wanted to test the affection of his father for a motherless child, he was doomed to a sad disappointment, though, for the good name of his father, or to uphold his own prophetic pretensions, he never expressed his feelings. What the real cause of Buddha's renunciation of home was, cannot possibly be known. But there cannot be much doubt that the stories in the Buddhistic scriptures are mere myths.

306

According to these legends, Buddha grew up to manhood without having any idea of death, disease, or the decay caused by old age. When in his twenty-ninth year he first saw a dead body, an old man and a diseased person, he was so impressed with the miseries of human life, as to determine at once to leave his home in the search after a remedy. The stories are very dramatic no doubt, but they cannot be taken to have any element of probability, consistently with what is known to all men as to the usual course of human affairs. Even supposing that Buddha's domestic life was a happy one, and that the only motive which led him to adopt the garb of a mendicant was his philauthropic zeal for the good of mankind, it does not seem reasonable that his determination was the result of a sudden impulse. Cases of renunciation like his are not of rare occurrence among Indian princes. In our own days, Lala Babu and Rajas Protap Chand and Ram Kant have perhaps made far greater sacrifices than the son of Sudhodana. In every case of Sanyas in high life in recent times, the determination is more or less known to have been caused by domestic unhappiness, or by the undue influence of some religious' teacher on the enthusiastic neophyte. It seems likely, that Buddha was influenced in the same way. At any rate, the steadiness which he evinced in the course of life that he adopted goes very far to show that his determination was not the result of a sudden impulse, but of long and careful deliberation. If he had been led by only an accidental flash of enthusiasm, his zeal would have cooled down as quickly, and he would have come back to his father within a few days. He had evidently gone through a long course of mental preparation, and the realities of a mendicant's life frightened him not.

After leaving home, Buddha repaired to Raj Griha, 1

the metropolis of the Magadha Empire. This act does not seem to be consistent with the view that it was only the miseries of the world that had led him to leave his paternal roof. Surely, he could have no reason whatever to suppose that Raj Griha was the place where the necessary remedy was obtainable. It is more probable that, like other men of ability and ambition, he was attracted to the metropolis of the Empire in the search after adventure. According to his biographers, soothsayers had predicted that he was to be either a mighty emperor or a Buddha. That may be taken to show what the goal of his ambition originally had been. Evidently, he saw no way to be an emperor, and adopted the safer but more ambitious career, by which he managed to have himself worshipped as a god by all classes, by princes as well as by peasants.

It is said that the princely mendicant of Kapilvastu had attracted the notice of King Bimbasara at the very first entrance into Raj Griha. That is not quite impossible. It seems more probable, however, that he became known to the King either through his preceptor Ram Putra Rudraka or through Amba Pali of Vaisali who was Bimbasara's mistress, and who subsequently became one of the leading Buddhistic nuns. Ram Putra Rudraka was one of the favoured Pandits of the Court of Bimbasara, and as such Pandits, when they visit the Kings who patronise them, are generally accompanied by their leading pupils, it was not unlikely that Buddha's first introduction to Bimbasara was as a pupil of the then great philosophical teacher of Raj Griha. Whatever the origin of the acquaintance may have been, the great prophet knew that to establish a high position in the country, or in the estimation of the King, by Sanskrit scholarship alone, was a very difficult task, and quite impossible during the lifetime of his preceptor. So, after passing some years at Raj Griha as a pupil and acquiring some reputation as a scholar of great promise, he retired to an adjoining forest on the banks of the river Niranjan, and for a time gave himself up to the practice of most severe austerities.

The discipline to which he was believed to be subjecting himself, raised him considerably in the veneration of the King and his people. Asceticism, though useful at starting of a religious career, cannot always be welcome to one with secular ambition. At any rate, after six years of self mortification, the "lion" of the Sakya race discovered that penances and fasts were not the road to heaven. His reputation for superior sanctity had been then completely established, and so he emerged from his seclusion giving out that he had discovered the true remedy for the miseries of the world. The panacea found was neit' er original, nor of any use for practical purposes. His doctrines were exactly the same as those of many orthodox Hindus, namely, that our miseries are caused by desires, and that, to get rid of the former we must learn to overcome the latter. Sir Monier Williams gives Buddha the credit of having had the power of presenting old ideas in new and more attractive garb. But the great anti-Brahmanical prophet adopted the ideas of Brahmanical philosophy without any modification. Cessation of desires was the panacea prescribed by both, as if it were possible for any human being to feel happy without food, drink, &c. A spiritual teacher may be believed to have the power of saving the soul from perdition after death. But so far as the miseries of this world are concerned, it is impossible to give either Buddha or any other prophet the credit of having given a satisfactory remedy.

However that may be, Buddha was so convinced of the value of his discovery, that he at first felt inclined to keep it to himself, without giving the benefit of it to the world. Even the gods were distressed at his determination. He was led to be more philanthropic only for the remonstrances of Brahma, the creating god of the Hindu Triad. Such tactics to heighten one's importance would, in secular spheres, hardly prove of any use even with the weakest of Indian princes. But the faith of men in saints and prophets is unbounded.

Buddha commenced preaching of the new faith at Benares. His first disciples were the five men who had been deputed by his father to attend him while studying at Raj Griha. They had waited on him also when practising austerities on the banks of the Niranjana. When he gave up asceticism, and became mindful of personal comforts, they left him and went to Benares, It is said that the cause of their leaving him was his abandonment of asceticism. The fact that they did not return to their native country but proceeded to Benares, points to the conclusion that they had been sent thither by Buddha to prepare the ground for him.

The sixth convert was a young man of Benares named Yasa. His father came next. While the neophyte was passing the night at the hermitage, his father searched for him in every part of the town. The son had left his slippers on the bank of the river Varuna, and the father was led to apprehend that he had been killed by some wild beast. When thus in a state of terrible anxiety, Buddha offered him the information he wanted on condition of his accepting the new faith, and he readily consented. Yasa himself became a Bhikshu while his father, mother and wife remained lay disciples. Fifty-four other men of Benares followed the example of Yasa, so that there were sixty Bhikshus in all at the end of the first year. Buddha deputed these, two by two, to preach the new faith in other parts of the country. He himself repaired to the vicinity of Gaya where he succeeded in converting the great Pandits of the place together with their pupils. The prophet had now a large number of followers, and was a person of such importance as to be invited by King Bimbasara to revisit Raj Griha. A large and commodious garden house called Venuvana or the Bamboo grove was given him for his residence. The King also suppli-ed everything that Buddha and his followers re-quired for creature comforts. Thus enabled to keep his followers well-housed and well-fed., Buddha was able to add to the number of his disciples every day. They spent nine months in preaching, and passed the three months of the rainy season in one of the monasteries that the king and the people had built for their accommodation.

Buddha passed the second year of his ministry in Raj Griha. It was then that Sudatta, a rich merchant of Sravasti, became his disciple, and invited him to the chief city of Kosala. Buddha suggested to him the building of a Vihara for his reception. Sudatta built the monastery of Jetavana. When Buddha arrived he was received with great honours, and a formal gift of the Jetavana was made to him. He passed the was or rainy season of the third year of his ministry in Sravasti. During his residence there king Prasunajit of Kosala was converted.

Shortly after his conversion, the king of Kosali sent a message to Suddhadana congratulating him for having such a great son as Buddha. Thereupon, the king of Kapilavastu sent several messengers to Buddha asking him to visit his parents and relatives. After avoiding compliance for a long time, Buddha at last consented on condition that he built a monastery for the holy order at Kapilavastu. Suddhadana agreed and built the vihara known as Nyagrodhavana or Banyan grove. When Buddha arrived at Kapilavastu his father and other relatives gave him a warm reception. They all embraced the faith, and a great many of them entered the monastic order. Some of these Sakya monks gave great trouble to Buddha afterwards.

One of the greatest innovations introduced by Buddha was the admission of women to the monastic order. According to the Hindu Shastras, the duties of a woman are—to be obedient to her husband in his lifetime, and to lead a chaste life after his death. From the Buddhistic histories it appears, that no teacher before Buddha had allowed women the privilege. Buddha himself had, it is said, some misgivings on the subject. It is represented that he regarded women with great distrust, and that he permitted them to become nuns for the sake of his favourite disciple Ananda who had pleaded their cause, and for meeting the wishes of his old maternal aunt and step mother, Mahaprajapati Gautami. At the Council held at Raj Griha after Buddha's death, his first locum tenens, Maha Kasyapa, severely censured Ananda for having women admitted to the holy order. When Mahaprajapati Gautami and her companions became nuns, Ananda's age could not have been more than five years. It is therefore difficult to see how he could be responsible for the part he is said to have played. The entreaties of Gautami Mahaprajapati, if the story be based upon truth, were certainly irresistible to Buddha. May it not be that he was led to admit women more for adding to the attractions of monastic life, than for obliging either Ananda or an aged aunt? Some of the rules laid down for the guidance of the Bhikshus lead to the same conclusion.

Buddha, like many other mendicants, was a great favourite with the softer sex. While yet engaged in meditations at Gaya, he went one day to a neighbouring village named Senika. The headman of the village had two unmarried daughters named Nanda and Nanda Bala. These ladies prepared rice pudding for Buddha and, after putting the same into his alms bowl, asked him to marry them. Their guest rejected their prayer. He visited them again when on his way from Benares to Raj Griha. On this occasion they were accepted as lay disciples. Another of his devoted female disciples was the lady of Vaisali called in the Buddhist annals "Visakha, the mother of Mrigadhara,"

The precise time when Amba Pali, the mistress of

The precise time when Amba Pali, the mistress of of Bimbasara, decided to follow Buddha, is not known. Most likely the acquaintance had begun when Buddha was a student at Raj Griha. At any rate, when he commenced to preach the new faith, Amba was enamoured of it; and he not only accepted the gift of a garden house made by her, but actually partook of her hospitality with all the monks accompanying him. The example thus set by the teacher was largely followed by the disciples.

After the conversion of the Sakya ladies, Buddha went to the town of Vaisali now identified with a village called Bisarah in the vicinity of Bakhra in the Muzafferpur district. Vaisali was a sort of free city governed by in leading residents called the Lichavis. At Vaisali Buddha vanquished in argument Purna Kacyap and many other philosophical teachers. After these feats, Buddha went to the Tryastrinsa heaven, and there preached his religion to his mother and a host of gods. During his absence, his disciples were oppressed with grief. After about three months, he came down to earth again by a vaidurya (lapis lazuli) staircase, the foot of which was fixed near an 'Udumbar tree in the town of Sankisya, near Kanouj.

A few years before Buddha's death, there was a great schism in his camp, headed by his cousin Deva Datta. He had been made to enter the holy order by a stratagem, and was never a very sincere follower of Buddha. As Buddha had the confidence of the old King Bimbasara, Deva Datta somehow managed to make himself a favourite with Ajatasatru, the heir-apparent. Ajatasatru brought about the death of his affectionate father in a very cruel manner. Deva Datta's attempts to put an end to the life of his great cousin were frustrated by miracles. After the death of Bimbasara, the inevitable reaction came in the mind of Ajatasatru. He was sorely oppressed with remorse, and through the influence of his step brother and physician, Jivaka Kumara Bhaud, he took steps to be re-conciled to Buddha. In Kosala also there was a revolution similar to that in Magadha. King Prasnajit's son, Virudhaka, was led by Ambarisha, a son of the royal chaplain, to dethrone his father, and to compel him to leave the kingdom. The Prime Minister of the State at first refused to help Virudhaka. But the ultimate success of the heir-apparent in attaining the object of his guilty ambition was mainly due to the co-operation of the Premier. After his dethronement, Prasnajit repaired to Raj Griha. But he died of hunger and thirst before Ajatasatru could do anything for his relief. The success of the revolution in Kosala was in all probability due to the support that Virudhaka received from the orthodox faction, and not to any schism among the followers of Buddha. At any rate, Virudhak, after ascending the throne of Kosala, never showed any sympathy for the new faith. On the contrary, he immediately declared war against the Sakyas of Kapilvastu, and very soon effected the complete destruction of the clan to which Buddha belonged.

After the conquest of Kapilavastu by Virudhaka, Buddha lived for sometime at Raj Griha. He had now wellnigh completed the usual span of human life. Feeling that his death must take place soon, he left Raj Griha for the Vrij country, where he intended to die. On his way he sojourned at Patali Putra for a a few days, and was there respectfully entertained by Varshakar, the Premier of Ajatasatru, who was then superintending the building of the future metropolis of Magadha,

Leaving Patali Putra, Buddha arrived at Vaisali and lived there for a few days in the gorden presented to him by Amba Pali. On this occasion, the prophet partook of the hospitality of the old courtezan. From Vaisali, Buddha went to a neighbouring town called Beluva, for the rains. A famine now broke out in the country, and as it therefore became impossible for his monks to get alms readily, he advised them to tide over the season of scarcity by living with their friends. That they were left to shift for themselves was perhaps due chiefly to the withdrawal of State since the accession of Virudhaka and Ajatasatru to the thrones of Kosala and Magadha respectively. Virudhaka hated the Buddhists bitterly, and Ajatasatru, though reconciled to Buddha latterly, was not always kindly disposed towards his followers.

The event in the life of a prophet which causes the greatest strain on the tactics of a believing biographer, is his death. For an exact idea of the manner in which the Buddhistic annalists acquitted themselves in this difficult task, the reader must refer to the original works. The biographers of Buddha sometimes state the facts without any kind of colouring. But it is not always so. For instance, in many places the favourite disciple Ananda is charged with the responsibility of his master's death, because of his not having asked him to prolong his life. When at Beluva, a dire illness befell Buddha, but he thought that it would not be right to pass away while the congregation of bhikshus was scattered. So he retained hold of his body until it had accomplished its task.

Divested of legendary colouring, the plain fact was that Buddha recovered from his illness at Beluva. After the rains, he went bak to Vaisali. Wishing to die at Kushinara, he left Vaisali. On his way he halted at various places. At Jalanuka, he was invited by one Kundu, a worker in metal, to partake of his hospitality. The host put some pork in Buddha's alms bowl, and that was the cause of the malady that brought about his death. His demise caused the earth to shake and thunderbolts to fall. His funeral was performed by the mallas of Kushinara, in accordance with the directions left by him and as stated in the following conversation:-

" Ananda. How then, Lord, must the Brahmans and householders who are believers, honour the Blessed One's remains? Buddha. Ananda, they must treat them as those of a king of Aranda. Lord, how do they treat the remains of a king of kings?

Buddba. Ananda, the body of a king of kings is wrapped in bands of cotton, and when it has thus been wrapped it is covered. bands of cotton, and when it has thus been wrapped it is covered with five hundred layers. After that it is put in an iron case filled with oil, and it is covered with a double cover of iron; then a funeral pile of all kinds of odoriferous woods is built, the remains are burnt and the fire is put out with milk. Then they put his bones in a golden casket and in the cross road they build a chairya over his remains, and with baldachins, flags and streamers. a change over his tentains, and with oaldachins, flags and streamers, perfumes, garlands, incense and sweet powders, with sounds of music, they honour, praise, venerate and revere him, and celebrate a feast in his honour. So, likewise, Ananda, must they treat the Tatthagata's remains."

the Tatthagata's remains."

These directions may be taken to show what kind of ambition lurked in the heart of the great mendicant. As instances of suicide in high life are not quite unknown, there are also many cases of men in affluent circumstances renouncing home, either from domestic unhappiness, or for love of adventure, or craving for variety, or for shaking off the trammels of royalty. Sanyas from such causes deserves no more admiration or honour than a felo de se. The prince who can be honour ed and adored as an ascetic, is he who sacrifices his personal comfort for the happiness of his subjects, and not he who abdicates his throne to sink into obscurity. A love of worldly comfort and wordly honour is inherent in our moral nature. Although a man may, a pareding his piety or for any other enuse, make a voluntary sacrifice of his we find him in retirement acquiring properties in and near Vrindaban, he cannot possibly claim credit for indifference to wordly greatness. The case was probably the same with Buddha. He gave up, it is true, the certain prospect of succeeding to the throne of his father. But every act done and every word uttered by him show that he was actuated by a deep-rooted ambition for a far higher position

THE TREATY OF PEACE BETWEEN CHINA AND JAPAN.

The Pekin and Tientsin Times publishes the full text of the treaty between China and Japan, made at Shimonoseki, Japan, April 17th, 1895.—Ratifications exchanged at Chefoo, China, May 8th, 1895. The text of the document is as tollows :--

His Majesty the Emperor of China and His Majesty the Empertor of Japan, desiring to restore the blessing of peace to their counries and subjects and to remove all cause for future complica-tions, have named as their Plenipotentiaries for the purpose of concluding a Treaty of Peace, that is to say:

His Majesty the Emperor of China, Li Hung-chang, Senior Tutor to the Her Apparent, Senior Grand Secretary of State, Minister Superintendent of Trade for the Northern Ports of China, Viceroy of the Province of Chihli and Earl of the First Rank; and Li Chingfong, Ex-Minister of the Diplomatic Service, of the Second Official Rank:

And his Majesty the Emperor of Japan Count Ito Hirobumi Junii, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of Paullownia, Minister President of State, and Viscount Mutsu Munemitsu, Junii, First Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs;

Who after having exchanged their Full Powers, which were found to be in good and proper form, have agreed to the following Articles:

AUTONOMY OF KORFA.

Article 1 .-- China recognises definitively the full and complete payment of tribute and the performance of ceremonies and formalities by Korea to China in derogation of such indepedence and autonomy shall wholly cease for the future.

Article 11.—China cedes to Japan in perpetuity and full sovereign the following territories together with all fortifications, arsenals and public property thereon :

CESSIONS ON THE MAINLAND.

(a)---The southern portion of the Province of Feng-Tien within following boundaries:

The line of demarcation begins at the mouth of the river Yalv and The line of demarcation begins at the mouth of the river Yalv and ascends that stream to the mouth of the river Anping; from thence the line runs to Feng Huang; from thence to Haicheng; from thence to Yingkow, forming a line which describes the southern portion of the territory. The places above named are included in the ceded territory. When the line reaches the river Liao at Yingkow, it follows the course of that stream to its mouth, where it remains the reaches the river Liao shall be relieved. The mid-channel of the river Liao shall be taken as the line of demarcation.

This cession also includes all islands appertaining or belonging to the Province of Feng-Tien situated in the eastern portion of the bay of Liaotung and in the northern part of the Yellow Sea.

(b). -The island of Formosa, together with all the islands appertaining or belonging to the said island of Formosa.

(c).—The Pescalores group, that is to say, all islands lying between the 119th and 120th degrees of longitude east of Greenwich and the 23rd and 24th degrees of north latitu le. DELIMITATION COMMISSION.

Article 111 .-- The alignments of the frontiers described in the preceding Article and shown on the annexed map shall be subject to the verification and demarcation on the spot, by a subject to the vermitation and consisting of two or more Joint Commission of Delimitation consisting of two or more Chinese and two or more Japanese Delegates to be appointed immediately after the exchange of the ratifications of this Act. case the boundaries laid down in this Act are found to be desective at any point, either on account of topography or in consideration of at any point, either on account or topography or in consideration of good administration, it shall also be the duty of the Delimitation Commission to rectify the same.

The Delimitation Commission will enter upon its duties as soon as possible and will bring its labours to a conclusion within the period of one year after appointment.

The alignments laid down in this Act shall, however, be maintained until the rectifications of the Delimitation Commission, if any, are made, shall have received the approval of the Governments of China and Japan.

CONDITIONS OF THE INDEMNITY. Article VI.--China agrees to pay Japan as a war indemnity the sum of 200,000,000 Kuping Taels. The said sum to be paid in eight instalments. The first instalment of 50, 000,000 Taels to be paid within six months, and the second instalment of 50,000,000 Tarls to be paid within twelve months after the exchange of the ratifications of this Act. The remaining sum to be paid in six equal annual installments as follows: The first of such equal annual in stalments to be paid within two years; the second within three years; the third within four years; the fourth within five years, the fifth within six years; and the sixth within seven after the exchange of the ratifications of this Act. Interest at the rate of 5 per cent, per annum shall begin to run on all unpaid portions of the said indemnity from the date the first instalment falls due.

China shall, however, have the right to pay by anticipation at any time any or all the said instalments. In case the whole amount of the said indemnity is paid within three years after the exchange of the ratifications of the present Act, all interest shall be waived, and the interest for two years and-a-half or for any less period if then already paid shall be included as a part of the principal amount of the indemnity.

Article V .-- The inhabitants of the territory ceded to Japan who wish to take up their residence outside the ceded districts shall be at liberty to sell their real property and retire.

For this purpose a period of two years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the present Act shall be granted. At the expiration of that period those of the inhabitants who shall not have left such territories shall, at the option of Japan, be deemed to be Japanese subjects.

Each of the two Governments shall immediately upon the ex-Commissioners to Formosa to effect a final transfer of that Province. and within the space of two months after the exchange of the ratifications of this Act such transfer shall be completed.

TREATIFS AND CONVENTIONS. Article VI .-- All treaties between China and Japan having come to an end in consequence of war, China engages immediately upon the exchange of the ratifications of this Act to appoint Plenipotentiaries to conclude, with the Japanese Plenipotentiaries, a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation and a Convention to regulate Frontier Intercourse and Trade. The Treaties, Conventions, and Regula-tions now subsisting between China and European Powers shall serve as a basis for the said Treaty and Convention between China and Japan. From the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this Act until the said Treaty and Convention are brought into actual operation, the Japanese Government, its officials, commerce, navigation, frontier intercourse and trade, industries, ships, and subjects shall, in every respect, be accorded by China most favoured nation treatment.

Cession of Towns and Ports.

China makes in addition the following concessions, to take effect six months after the date of the present Act :

1st .-- The following cities, towns, and ports, in addition to those already opened, shall be opened to the trade, residence, industries, and manufactures of Japanese subjects, under the same conditions and with the same privileges and facilities as exist at the present open cities, towns and ports of China.

1.—Shashih in the Province of Hupeh

2 .-- Chungking in the Province of Szechuan.

3.---Suchow in the Province of Kiang-Su.
4.---Hangchow in the Province of Chekiang.

The Japanese Government shall have the right to station Consuls at any or all of the above named places.

2nd.—Steam navigation for vessels under the Japanese flag for the conveyance of passengers and cargo shall be extended to the the conveyance of Following places:

1st.—On the Upper Yangtsze River, from Ichang to Chungking, 2nd.—On the Woosung River and the Canal, from Shanghai to Suchow and Hangchow. The rules and regulations which now outnow and Hangenow. The rules and regulations which how govern the navigation of the inland waters of China by foreign vessels shall, so far as applicable, be enforced in respect of the above-named routes, until new rules and regulations are conjointly agreed to.

3rd .-- Japanese subjects purchasing goods or produce in 310.---japanese subjects purchasing goods or produce in the interior of China or transporting imported merchandise into the interior of China shall have the right temporarily to rent or hire warehouses for the storage of the articles so purchased or transported, without the payment of any taxes or exactions what-

4th .--- Japanese subjects shall be free to engage in all kinds of manufacturing industries in all the open cities, towns, and ports of China, and shall be at liberty to import into China all kinds of machinery, paying only the stipulated import duties thereon.

All articles manufactured by Japanese subjects in China shall in respect of inland transit and internal taxes, duties, charges, and exactions of all kinds and also in respect of the warehousing and storage facilities in the interir of China, stand upon the same footing and enjoy the same privileges and exemptions as merchan-dise imported by Japanese subjects into China.

In the event additional rules and regulations are necessary in connection with these concessions they shall be embodied in the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation provided for by this Article.

WITHBRAWAL OF TROOPS.

Article VII.—Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding Article, the evacuation of China by the armies of Japan shall be completely effected within three months after the exchange of the ratifications of the present Act.

Article VIII.—As a guarantee of the faithful performance of the stipulations of this Act, China consents to the temporary occupation by the military forces of Japan of Weihaiwei in the Province of Shantung.

Upon the payment of the first two instalments of the war indemnity herein stipulated for and the exchange of the ratifications of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation, the said place shall be evacuated by the Japanese forces, provided the Chinese Government consents to pledge, under suitable and sufficient arrangements, the Customs Revenue of China as security for the payment of the principal and interest of the remaining instalments of said indemnity. In the event no such arrangements are concluded, such evacuation shall only take place upon the payment of the final instalment of shall only take place upon the payment of the final instalment of shall only take place upon the payment of the final instalment of

It is, however, expressly understood that no such evacuation shall take place until after the exchange of the ratifications of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation.

Article IX.--Immediately upon the exchange of the ratification of this Act, all prisoners of war then held shall be restored and China undertakes not to ill-treat or punish prisoners of war so restored to her by Japan.

China also engages to at once release all Japanese subjects accused of being military spies or charged with any other military offences. China further engages not to punish in any manner nor to allow to be punished those Chinese subjects who have in any manner been compromised in their relations with the Japanese army during the war.

Article X.--All offensive military operations shall cease upon the exchange of the ratifications of this Act.

Article XI .--- The present Act shall be ratified by their Majesties the Emperor of China and the Emperor of Japan and the ratifica-tions shall be exchanged at Chefoo on the 4th day of the 4th month of the 21st year of Kuang Hau corresponding to the 8th day of the 5th month of the 28th year of Meiji. (May 8th, 1895).

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same and have annexed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Shimonoscki in duplicate this 23rd day of the 3rd month

Done at Shimonoseki in duplicate this 23rd day of the 3rd month of the 21st year of Kuang Hsu, corresponding to the 17th day of the 4th month of the 28th year of Meiji. (April 17th, 1895.)

Li Hung-chang. (L.S.)

Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of China, Senior Tutor of the Heir Apparent, Senior Grand Secretary of State, Minister Superintendent of Trade for the Northern Ports of China, Viceroy of the Province of Chihili, and Earl of the First Rank.

Li Chino-Pong.

Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of China Re-

Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of China, Ex-Minister of the Diplomatic Service, of the Second Official Rank.

COUNT ITO HIROBUMI. (L.S.)

Junii, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of Paullownia, Minister

President of State, Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan.

Viscount Mursu Munemitsu. (L.S.)
Junii, First Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan.

SEPARATE ARTICLES. 1.--The Japanese Military Forces which are, under Article VIII of the Treaty of Peace signed this day, to temporarily occupy Weihaiwei, shall not exceed one Brigade and from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the said Treaty of Peace, China shall pay annually one fourth of the amount of the expenses of such temporary occupation, that is to say, at the rate of 300,000 Kuping Tacls per annum.

11.--The territory temporarily occupied at Weihaiwei shall comprise the Island of Linkung and a belt of land 5 Japanese ri wide along the entire coast line of the Bay of Weihaiwei.

No Chinese Troops shall be permitted to approach or occupy any places within a zone of 5 Japanese ri wide beyond the boundaries of the occupied territory.

111.- The Civil Administration of the occupied territory shall remain in the hands of the Chinese Authorities. But such Authorities shall at all times be obliged to conform to the orders which the Commander of the Japanese Army of Occupation may deem it necessary to give in the interests of the health, maintenance, safety, distribution, or discipline of the troops.

All military offences committed within the occupied territory shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Japanese Military

The foregoing separate Articles shall have the same force, value, and effect as if they had been word for word inserted in the Treaty of Peace signed this day.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same and have annexed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Shimonoseki, in duplicate, this 23rd day of the 3rd month of the 21st year of Kuang Hsu corresponding to the 17th day of the 4th month of the 28th year of Meiji. (April 17th,

[Signatures (4) and titles, same as in Treaty.]

[Signatures (4) and titles, same as in Treaty.]

Convention to Prolong armistrics.

The undersigned (here names and titles of the two Chinese Plenipotentiaries as in preamble of Treaty) Plenipotentiaries of his Majesty the Emperor of China, and (here names and titles of two Japanese Plenipotentiaries as in preamble of Treaty) Plenipotentiaries as in preamble of Treaty Plenipotentiaries of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, having concluded a Treaty of Peace have, in order to provide for the peaceful exchange of the ratifications of said Treaty, agreed upon and signed the following Articles: and signed the following Articles:

1 .-- The Convention of Armistice concluded on the 5th day of the 3rd month of the 21st year of Kuang Hsu, corresponding to the day of the 3rd month of 28th year of Meiji, is prolonged for the period of 21 days from this date.

11.—The Armistice which is prolonged by this Convention shall 11.—The Armstice which is prolonged by this Convention shall terminate, without notice on either side at midnight on the 14th day of the 4th month of the 21st year of Kuang Hsu, corresponding to the 8th day of the 5th month of the 28th day of Meiji. The rejection in the meantime, however, of the said Treaty of Peace by either High Contracting Party, shall have the effect of at once terminating this Armistice without previous notice.

In witness whereof the Plenipotentiaries of China and Japan have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals.

Done at Shimonoscki, this 23rd day of the 3rd month of the 21st year of Kuang Hsu, corresponding to the 17th day of the 4th month of the 28th year of Meiji. (April 17th, 1895). [Signatures (4) and titles, same as in Treaty]

HE INVESTED ONLY 7/6.

THERE is a man who has spent the part twenty-five years of his life exploring for gold and other minerals in Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, Ta-mania, and New Zealand. He has no doubt picked up some monee, yet he says that the investment of 7/6 brought him in bigger returns than any other he ever made.

Yet, hold on a minute. Don't let us jump to the conclusion that we can all get rich out of the pioceeds of 7/6 till we hear further from this financier. He has a humorous way of putting a serious thing, for which we should like him all the more. Some folk have no idea that sound sense and genuine fun are twin brothers, but they are all the same.

Our friend's name is William Bromfield Peck, and he lives at Russell, Our triend's name is William Bromfield Peck, and he lives at Russell, New Ze Jand, a long way off He says it is a lovely country and intends to stay in it the balance of his days. As he landed in Australia, from England, in 1866, he has been there long enough to know what he is talking about. He advises persons of limited means who would like to become small laudholders to emigrate to New Zealand.

he is talking about. He advises persons of limited means who would like to become small landholders to emigrate to New Zealand.

Still, he reminds us that in the end we must pay for what we get.

"The calling of a prospector, for instance," said Mr. Peck, "is full of hard work. Besides, it entails rough living, such as sail junk, soddened damper, with rea in bucketfus. One must have the digestive capacity of an ostrich or an anaconda to stand that diet for long. It must therefore be taken as proof of the good in chinery inside of my system, when I mention that I activally stood it for nearly twenty-five years.

"My punishment was delayed, you see, built didn't fail. At last the clim is came, and I was pro trated with agonising pain in the stom ich and all the other symptoms of a prifound derangement of all the digestive organs. I had to knock off work and crass an exertion. I was imbured with diggest with all things mundaine. I believe that dysperyia is responsible for a large position of the world's succides?"

Mr. Peck's conjecture is exactly parallel with the fact as set forth in the official stutistics of all civillised countries. No other disease so demardlises and depresses human mature. It attacks the secret strongholds of the reason and drives pople insane; it stupefies the sensibilities; if turns men and women into selfish, useless, missances; it impediation and suffring. Yes, Mr. Peck is quite right.

But to get back to what he says bout himself. At the advice of a friend—Mr. W. Williams of this place I began to take the far-famed Muther Seigel's Curative Syup. What result did it have? I'll tell you. It has transformed me from a prematurely old man into one guite generates.

"I am a rapid eater and can't break myself of the bad habit. Hence I make it point to keep a bottle by me always and an occasional dose when necessary to set me right.

"I am a rapid eater and can't break myself of the bid habit. Hence I make it a point to keep a bottle by me always and an occasional dose when necessary to set me right.

"I can safely assent that the investment of 7/6 in Mother Seigels. Curative Syrup was the best I ever made in all my chequered career. You may depend that I prescribe this medicine to all and sundry people I come in contract with. Prior to using it I spent pounds at different times, but only got partial relief. Syrup's some to make straight for the scat of the trouble. I pen these lines just to show other sufferes the way out. There are any number of respectable persons here who can attest the truth of what I have written.—Respectfully (Signed) WM. BROMFIELD PECK, Russell, Bay of Islands, New Zealand, July 2nd, 1802."

1802."
We don't call for witnesses. Mr. Peck's tale is farukness and truth itself. We hold out our hand in greeting across the sea. Dyspepsia is a living death, and Mother Seigel gives new life. Millions sing that chorus. But he had better eat slower. Wite again and tell us you are doing so. Friend Peck.

THE services of pensioned and discharged sepoys of the Native Army required for employment in civil capacities may be obtained on application to the Recruiting Officers in charge of the following districts:

Peshawar for Pathane Bound Cond.

rge- of the following districts: —

Peshawar for Pathans, Rawal Pindi for Puijabi Mahomedans, Aonitsar for Sikhs, Sialkot (Dharmsala) for Dogras, Delhi for Jats and Hindustani Mahomedans, Lacknow for Hindustani Hindus. All applications from employers should in-clude the particulars shown below :—

1.-Name of person or firm offering employment.

2.—Nature of, and place at which, employment is offered.

3.—Proposed pay and period for which employment is offered.

employment is offered.

Whether railway fare to place of employment will be paid or not.

Whether return railway fare will be paid in case of pensioner being discharged for no fault of his own, or after a definite period of service.

Class of men required (e.g.), Sikh, Pathan, Dogia, &c.

INDIAN MUSEUM.

The Museum will be opened for Native Laures with their female attendants every Thorsday between the hours of 12 noon and 5 P.M. from 16th May to 31st October; and between the hours of 12 noon and 4 P.M from 16th November to 31st January. The Ladies may be accompanied by boys under 5 years of any t age. A. R. S. Anderson, Surgeon Captain, Offg. Superintendent.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence OF

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," BY

F. H. SKRINE, CS.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia,

I. A portrait of the Doctor. 2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana.

3. About 225 pages of original essays from his brilliant pen.

4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE:

To registered subscribers paying in ... Rs. 5 advance To other subscribers and ordinary purchasers

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" will be communicated with.

will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,—

Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount,

cheque

has been remuted per-money orde

To be legibly (N.me
	Address
The	1895.

Lady Elliott Portrait Memorial Committee. W. O. Bell-Irving S. E. J. Clarke H. H. The Maharaja

Allan Arthur Hon, Justice Beverley Hon, C. E. Buckland W. D. Cruickshank Baron Gaerter Col. Hailes, 6th B. I. A. Macdonald David McLaren Morri-

I. O'B Saunders

Work.

J. Jouslam, E. F. Longley. C. Moore. Hon. P. Playfair. A.F.M. Abdui Rahman A. Simson.
J. O'B Saunders A. H. Wallis.

Maharaja Sii J. M. Tagore, K. C. S. I.
PRESIDENT—Allan Arthui.
HON TREASURER—J. O'B. Saunders.
HON. SECRETARY—David McLaren Mortison.

HON. SECRETARY—David McLaren Mortison. At the meeting of Committee held at the Chamber of Commerce on the 19th Jaouary, it was decided to have a picture of Lady Elliott painted, any surplus to go towards a personal present.

All subscriptions to be sent to the HON. TREASURER.

> 9, Hare Street, Calcutta.

THE WORKS OF DR JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE. Rs. As.

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption, Wills &c.* Price
"No student or practitioner should be without a copy of this GREAT 16 0 (Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas." Bengah translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshata.† Price ... 2 8

Bengah Translation of the Datakacchandrika.† Price 0 8
The Evidence Act with notes in Bengah.† Price 1 0
The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengah.† Price 4 0
Principles of Zemindari Management and Book-keeping in Bengah First Lessons in English for Bengah boys. Price ... 0 4
Bharat Sasan Pranali* ... 0 8

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5. CONTENTS

Historical Analysis of the evolution of Historical Analysis of the evolution of religious systems.

Definition of the term "religion."
The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new.
(a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tortoise, and a boat.
(b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the satrifice of animals, and the bunning of ghee or incense.
Xc. Xc. Xc. Xc.
The weapons offensive and defensive of religious teachers.
The power of fine words.
The art of becoming a prophet.
The rumulative effect of hardswearing for ages.

for ages.

Specimens of Puranised history.

Brahmunical and Christian priesteraft compared The autificial miseries of men caused by religion. Tyranny and taxation of religion.

Tyranny and taxation of religion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
The great prophets of the world and their doings.
Probable argum of the Science with the suggestion of the Science and their doings.

tneir doings.

Probable origin of the Saiva religion,
Tautric mysticism and abominations.

* To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., only.

† To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradham Agency, No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutat.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fourdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accouchem, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtainted a diploma at the find examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

country.

SPECIFICS
for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &r., including diseases brought on by inegularities and indiscretions of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases. counts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

CAUTION!

Ir having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fi and in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (viz, 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 annas or 15. 11/2d. and Rs, 2 or 2s. od.) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Cevlon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET CALCUIIA.

NOTICE -Should any difficulty be expenenced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee rates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

GENUINE HOMCEOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S Homeopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootoah Street Calcutta.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEP

	MEMORIAI, FUND.		-
ı.	His Highness The Maharaja of Du	r.	₹s.
2.		.2,	000
3.	Anagram, G.C.I.E.,	. r,	000
4.	Moorshedabad, Amirul Omra, G.C I I His Highness the Nawab of Junagadi	K	800
5 .			500
6.			500
٥.	K.C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur k	٤,	500
7. 8.	Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur Nawab Azam Yar Jung Bahadur Shams-ul Ulama Syed Alı Belgran		500
9. 10.	Shams-ul Ulama Syed Alı Belgran Khan Bahadar BhaiBahauddin, C.t.E		500
11.	Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh Maharaja Bahadur Sir Jotindra Mo	٠. :	ვთ
12.	han Tagore, K.C.S.I Babu Jodu Lai Mullick	:	250 200
13.	Messrs, Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosein A). :	200
15.	Muza Bahadur Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawa	1 b	150
- ,.	Sved Zamni Abdın Khan Bahadı	17	140
16. 17.	Feraz Jung Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee, C.S. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandr	1.	100
18.	Madhab Ghose Prince Mirza Sir Jahan Kadar Baha	••	100
19.	dur, K.C.I.K.,	••	100
20. 21.	Haji Kasım Arıff		100
22.	H. Brackenbury, K C.B.,	٠.	100
23.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Guru Da	 .s	50
24. 25.	The Honble Dr. Rash Behary Ghos Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt.	e	51
26.	Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Kha Bahadur, C.S.L.		50
27. 28.	Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna . The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve		50
29.	lyan The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabba		50
30.	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of		50
31. 32.	Calcutta		50 50
11.	Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Muza	••	50
34. 35.	The Hon'ble W. C. Bonnerjee .	••	50 50
30.	Syed Nurni Huda, Esq., C.S.,	••	50
37. 38.		••	50 50
39.	Sir Alexander Miller		50
49. 41.	Monivi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan B		32
42.	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy	••	25 25
43.	Vaniar Dananda, Mannin Dan	••	25
44. 45.			25 25
46. 47.	Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose Raja Sir Sonttudra Mohan Tagore		25
	C I.E		25
48. 49.		••	25
50.	Raja Sreenath Roy		25 25
51. 52.	R.i. Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar R. Belchambers, Esq		23
53.	Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhu	 iry	25 25
54.	Rui Budreedas Mukim Bahadur Babu Gopal Lal Seal		25
55. 56.	Moulvi Syad Abetus Salam		25 25
57. 58.	A. T. Apcar, Esq	•	25
59. 60.	Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E.,		25 25
60. 61.	Muushi Gholain Raspol		25 25
62.	F. H. Skime, Esq. CS., The Hea'ble P. J. S.Cotton CS., CS. Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah	i.	20
63. 64.	Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah Baboo Sarendi e Nath Pal Chowdry	•	20 20
65.	" Ankhoy Kumar Ghose "		20
66. 67.	Mouly, Imadd Ab Rai Shib Chunter Nundy Bahadar		20 20
68.	D. Panioty, Esq.		20
69. 70.	H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-la	n n	20 20
71.	D. Panioty, Esq. Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Kha H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-la Moulvi Syed Ashiuffuddin Ahmer Knao Bahadur	ı,
72.	T. Inglis, Esq., c.s	•	17. 16

73.	A. H. Giles, Eşq		16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq., C.S.		16
75	The Hon'ble Mouly, Sirajul	Islam
•	Khan	•••	16
76	Moulvi Serajuddeen	•••	15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,		15
78.	H. A. D. Phillips, Esq., C.S.		10
79.	Baboo Kiran Chunder Roy		10
8o.	E. N. Baker, Esq		10
81.	Baboo Doyal Chand Bose	•••	IC
82.	" Madan Mohun Bose		IC
83.	" Kanai Lal Khan •		IC
84.	Mouly: Synd Akram Hossain		10
85.	Moulvi Azız Ahmud		10
8ú.	Rai Kanyelal Dey Bahadoor		10
87.	H. Holmwood, Esq		10
88.	Babu Hurry Mohun Chunder		10
89.		•••
	Baboo Chakkanlal Roy	•••	5
90	" Sarodaprasad Ghose		5
- 51	thscriptions will be thankfully	received	by
the	Honorary Joint Secretaries,		-
	RAI KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHADI	JR.

RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI BAHADUI, 4, British Indian Street, Calcutta, and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMAN, ESQ., Barrister-atLaw, 16, Taitolla, Calcutta. "IMPROVED UNDAUNTED"

WATCH. Rs. Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, ickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNTnickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. × Dr. H. Muore of Royal Attillery from Poonamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Dunidum says;—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patra Opium for partment says:—The watch you sent me some

Rs. 20. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department says: "The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Rs. 1-8-0. Real
Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real
Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0.
Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector from Sankutin, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says: "For the first for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28. x Pte. H. C. Bishep of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real volid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

CATARRH. Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT. Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the tesult is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby a simple refundly has been formulated whereby to be distressing diseases are rapidly and permanguily cured by a few simple applications made at house by the patient once in two which. A pampliet explaining this new treatty at is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp, by A.

HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Broor St.
TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helolessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest regnedy or these complaints in their severest and most chronic form

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

RATES OF SUBSORIPTION.

If paid in advance,

	Hair-yearry	•••	•••	••	7
	Quarterly	•••	•••	,,	4
	Monthly			Ř÷.	1-8
	Single or sample	Copy	•••	Ans.	0-8
	If no	t paid in a	dvance.
	Yearly	•		Rs.	18
	Half-yearly	•••	•••	,,	10-8
	Quarterly	•••	449		6-0
ı	Monthly	•••	•••		2-4
١	Single or sample				0-12
ĺ	No additional	caarge ior	postage	or p	eon.

•••

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

REVIEW OF POLITICS LIFERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 682.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE DREAM OF ARGYLE.

The unfortunate Duke of Argyle, who shared the disastrous defeat of Monmouth, under James II, was found sleeping by the officers who time to lead him to the scaffold.

EARTHLY arms no more uphold him; On his prison's stony floor, Waiting death in calmest slumber, Rests the great Mac-Cullum More!

· And he dreams a dream of boyhood,
Of his dear-loved Argyleshπe,
Of his bold, heroic clansmen,
Of his plumed and plaided sire.

Once again, with pulses beating, Hears the wandering minstrel tell How Montrose, on Inversry, Thief-like from his mountains fell.

Now he stands, in plaid and bonnet, in the grim and sombre hall,
And again the ruddy firelight
Sees he on the armour fall.

Down the glen, beyond the castle,
Where the Linn's white waters shine,
He, the heir of haughty Argyle,
Meets young Effic of Loch Fine--

Effic, with her snooded tresses, And her timid eye of blue, At the gloaming, to her trysting, In the bracken valley true!

Now he hears a sad lamenting— Harpers for his mother mourn, As, with floating plume and pinion,? To the burial cairn she's borne.

Then, anon, his dreams are darker— Sounds of battle fill his ears, And the pibroch's mournful wailing For his father's fall he hears.

Wild Lochaber's mountain echdes
Wall in concert for the dead,
And Loch Awe's hoarse waters murmur
For the Campbell's glory fled.

Fierce and bold, the godless tyrants Trample the apostate land, While her poor and faithful remnants Wait for the Avenger's hand. Once again at Inverary, Years of weary exile o'er, Armed to lead his scattered clausmen, Stands the bold Mac-Cullium More!

Once again to battle calling,
Sound the war-pipes through the gien,
And the court-yard of Dunstaffinage
Rings with trend of armed men.

All is lost ! the godless triumph !
And the faithful ones and true,
From the scaffold and the prison,
Covenant with God anew.

On the darkness of his dreaming, Great and sudden glory shone; 'Over bonds and death victorious, Stands he by his Father's throne.

From the radiant host of martyrs,
Notes of joy and praise he hears,
Songs of his poor land's deliverance,
Sounding from the future years.

Lo! he wakes! but airs celestial
Bathe hun in immortal rest;
And he sees, with unsealed vision,
Scotland's cause with victory blest.

Shining hosts attend and guard him,
As he leaves his prison door;
And to death, as to a triumph,
Walks the great Mac-Cullum More!

E. H. W.

WEEKLYANA.

PARIS will celebrate the centenary of the discovery of lithography by an exhibition of the art. The show will be held under Government patronage and open on the 15th August.

PAPER has been put to many uses—noble and ignoble. In this cheap age, it plays many parts, and is constantly receiving attention from the ingenious. The lattest achievements are paper gloves and stockings. The latter bave been known for sometime. They are now much improved, being not thin, rotten things, but quite tough. You can have them for three-pence a pair.

THE Ordnance Surv., Map of England is near completion. For the last twenty years, they have been spending on it £200,000 a year. The lasest maps show every hedge, ditch, building and even every isolated tree.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

BEWARE of licking your envelope! An American died at Cleveland, Ohio, of blood-poisoning, caused by a slight cut on his tongue while licking the flap of an envelope. This is a warning also against many unclean acts of ordinary daily life.

At the annual meeting of the Newspaper Society held at the Salisbury Hotel, on the 8th May, there was a long discussion on the loss to the English Post Office from the reduced Press rates of telegraphy. The following resolution was ultimately arrived at nem con.

"That there is no good ground for allocating the alleged loss on the telegraph service to Press messages, and that any attempt to raise the charges for these messages would involve an act of injustice and a breach of faith between the Government and the Press which should be resisted in every way by the newspaper Press of the United Kingdom."

A HUNGARIAN compositor, named Kurnez, out of employ, applied to the head of the Atheneum Printing Works at Buda Pesth for assistance. While receiving it, he fired two shots at him from a revolver, wounded him mortally, and then blew out his own brains. No explanation is given of the mystery

PROFESSOR de Goeje is engaged on a new edition of Wright's Arabic Grammar. The Jaru left unfinished by the late Prof. William Wright will be completed by Prof. Sachau of Berlin,

In the Supreme Court of England, Jonas, a solicitor, sued Abrahams and others, proprietors and publishers of the Morning Advertiser, for damages for libel. The solicitor being bankiupt, a report of the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court appeared in the Advertiser. Closely following the report in that case, but without any distinguishing head line, there were published the proceedings in bankruptcy of a beershop keeper. The two reports thus seemed one. The propinquity of the publican was too much for the solicitor. He raged and threatened. The Advertiser made a correction and offered further explanation if required. The man of law was still inconsolable. He insisted that the confusion had injured him in his profession, and brought his action. The jury after the address of the defendants' counsel, stopped the case and returned a verdict for the defendants Another paper which had copied the Advirtiser was also proceeded against. The verdict in that case was also the same. We hope Jonas is now satisfied that he has established to the world that he is neither a publican nor a sinner.

If such derangement of epitaphs were actionable, many of the Indian journals would suffer every week and day.

THE Ceylon Patriot while correcting an error falls into another .-

"Under the heading 'A distinguished Jaffna Tamil' in the portion allotted to the news of the week in our last issue, Mr. C. W. Thamodarampillar, B. A., B. L., is said to have been raised to the rank of Ran Bahadur on the last Queen's Birthday. The title conferred on him by the Government of India is not Ran Bahadur, but Rao Bahadur, a higher distinction."

We know of no distinction, except the verbal, between the two titles. The Rat Bahadoor of Bengal is the Rao Bahadoor of Bombay and Madras The developing Burke of India, in his Peerage, brackets the two distinctions. We shall indeed be obliged for further light, Capital corrects " a misapprehension entertained by a contemporary regarding a recent suit, in which the Administrator-General was concerned" "The surt," it says, "was decided when Mr. Collis-Sandes was acting as Administrator-General, and it was entirely due to him that the appeal to the Privy Conneil was preferred, and the judgment of the Chief Justice maintained against those of his colleagues," In native society, the credit is given to the attorney, who was so sure of the incorrectness of the judgment of the High Court that he had offered to pay the expenses of the appeal to England and thereby, in a manner, forced the Administrator General to take the step.

THE Ceylon Retrenchment Commission reports on Exchange Compensation Allowance in these words ; -

"The Commission further recommends that all persons who join the "the Commission further recommends that all persons who join the Public Service in Ceylon after due consideration of this report, say from and after 1st July, 1895, should not be paid any allowance for the depreciation of the ruper of superior officers, or the 10 per cent, increase if in the Clerical and Subordinate branches of the Public Service.

The Commission, while fully acknowledging the hardship inflicted on the older officers by the fall in the value of silver measured in gold, which has taken place since they first joined the Public Service, sees no sufficient reason to contemplate any serious further fall in the future.

The Commission admits that at the present value of silver future officers in the Public Service will receive less remuneration than their predecessors in office, but the Commission observes that pars passu with the decrease in value of silver the number of duly qualified candidates for employment has augmented, and that for the ordinary demands of the Public Service (excluding specialists) the qualifications of candidates who joined not long before the recent grant of compensation were rather above than below the average hitherto obtained.

The same observation applies to the Clerical and Subordinate Service. The Commission is convinced that if this recommendation be carried out there will be no difficulty in recruiting suitable officers for the Public Service.

the Public Service.

As regards specialists, no rule need be laid down beforehand, because the Government has always to pay whatever may be the current market price for the services of a specialist whenever one is engaged. The anomaly of paying different rates to senior and jumor officers for similar work has been suffered in previous instances, and has caused far less practical difficulty than the payment of the compensation recently granted entails now."

They order this matter better in-the Island.

WE read in the Effective Advertiser : -

Wheread in the Effective Advertises:
"A trucycle has been brought out in Paris as a novel advertising agent. It prints any set word or design in bold characters on the street flags or pavement. A skilfal rider mounts the machine and in an incredibly short space of time 'advertises' the city from one end to the other. The back wheels of the trucycle have wide rims, which are shod with a tubber type that carries in relief the advertisement to be made known. Above the wheels are placed two ink rollers, which are fed automatically with ink through tubes, running to a reservoir on the top of the machine. The movement of the pedals actuates a smill blower which sends air into a tube placed in front of each of the motive wheels. By this contrivance any dirt or dust which might impain the legibility of the imprint is blown to one side, and a clean surface is sectived. A special arrangement enables the design on either wheel to be printed in different colours.'

We are affaid the walls of houses are no longer available. The

We are afraid the walls of houses are no longer available. The streets must supply the omission. But how long do the impressions made by the running wheels last or are visible?

Another advertising novelty is to be seen in Geneva. The Pall Mall Gazette writes :-

"A new and objectionable form of advertising has appeared at Geneva. It is called 'P affichage sublacustre,' and consists of advertisements which can be read several feet under water, the subject being painted in yellow letters on a black ground, and so placed that the words are magnified. It is at the Pont du Mont Blanc, in the crystal-clear waters of the Rhone, that this deformity is first to appear. Land and water will soon be equally disfigured everywhere. In the country the sky remains, but the New Titan, who is the biliposter, will manage somehow to scale the beavens."

Even the church-yard is not free :--

"In San Francisco, an enterprising citizen has already chosen his buital plot, and set up a handsome marble monument containing just the initials of his deceased wife and the announcement that the rest of the space is to let for advertisements."

In India, we have no such enterprise. Even advertising in proper place is little appreciated. But there is developing a trade in which one advertises himself under a false European name, usually a firm as a guarantee of respectability and security of honourable deal ing, offering to supply goods at a cheap rate and sending you none when the value is received. The advertiser is not the resident of the place whence the goods are offered. He may be living at Calcutta while his offices are supposed to be at Delhi, Allahabad, Lucknow or Benares. The Calcutta police has detected about fifty such bogus firms. But it does not appear that any steps have been taken to suppress or punish the fraud.

DURING the calendar year 1896 not more than 39,000 chests of Bengal Opium will be offered for sale, and not more than 3,250 chests in each month of the year. Of the quantity to be offered each month, not more than 1,625 chests will be Benares Opium, and not more than the same number Patna. No reduction will be made in the quantities without three months' privious notice.

Aniline dye (dry. is now assessable to duty ad valorem under No 12 of Schedule IV (Import Tariff). Henceforth, the tariff valuation will be Re 1-8 per th

DEAFNE'S. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Suging in Eats, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Attificial Ear-drams and similar appliances entirely supersect.—Actificial Ear-drams and Similar appliances entirely supersect.—Actification of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of the Property of Control of Cont

DURING June, 37.796 persons visited the Indian Museum. The natives of India numbered 28.939 male and 8.343 female. The European visitors were 407 male and 107 female. The Zoo is not so popular. But then there is an admission fee. In the Museum special days and hours have been set apart for zenana. Indies.

THE Hudson River between New York and Jersey City is to be bridged. The Secretary of War has approved the plan and authorized the commencement of the work. The cost is set down at 25,000,000 dols and the time required is 10 years. The bridge will span the river without support, being suspended from twelve cables. It is intended to carry six railway tracks. Between the preinhead lines on either shore there will be a clear opening of 3,110 feet, and the bridge at the centre will be 150 feet above high-water mark. The main towers will rise to a height of 587 feet.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

Transferred transferred to a second to the s

OUR OWN NEWS,

Sr.

THE WEEKS TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE Cabinet of Lord Salisbury's third Ministry is comprised of :--Lord Salisbury, Premier and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; Lord Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor;

The Duke of Devoushire, Lord President of the Council; Viscount Cross, Lord Privy Seal;

Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer;

Sir Mathew White Ridley, Secretary of State for the Home Department;

Mr. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies; Lord Lansdowne, Secretary of State for War;

Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India;

Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India; Lord Balfour of Burleigh, Chief Secretary for Scotland;

Mt. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty;

 $M_{\rm T},~{\rm Balfour},~{\rm First}~{\rm Loid}$ of the Treasury and Leader of the House of Commons ;

Earl Cadogan, Lord Lieutenant of Iteland;

Lord Ashbourne, Lord Chancellor of Ireland ,

Mt. C. T. Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade;

Sir Henry James, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster;

Mr. Henry Chaplin, President of the Local Government Board; The Hon. George Curzon Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

Mr. Hanbury, Financial Secretary to the Treasury;

Mr. Gerald Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland;

The Duke of Norfolk, Post Master General;

Sir John Gorst, Vice-President of the Committee of the Council;

Mr. William Macartney, Secretary to the Admiralty;

Mr. Austen Chamberlam, Civil Lord of the Admiralty;

Mr. Jesse Collings, Under-Secretary for the Home Department; Lord Selborne, Under-Secretary for the Colonies;

The Hon, William Brodrick, Under-Secretary of State for War;

Mr. Thomas Russell, Secretary to the Local Government Board;

The Earl of Latham, Lord Chamberlam;

Lord Pembroke, Lord Steward;

Earl Onslow, Under-Secretary of State for India.

In the House of Commons, on July 2, Mr. Bilfour, First Lord of the Treasury, in reply to a question, repeated the hope expressed by the Premier in the other House that the closing business of the Sessions would be completed in order to allow of Parliament being dissolved on Monday. In reply to a further question, he stated that the reserves of aumunition will be increased immediately. Votes on account of public services during the period occupied by the general elections were adopted without opposition. The Naval Works Bill passed its third reading.

SIR Michael Hicks-Beach, in a speech to his constituents at West Bristol on his reelection, said that the policy of the present Government was directly opposed to that of its predecessors, and would be mainly composed of constructive and social reforms. He also declared that the Excuequer would not be unheedful of the demands of the War Office.

THE Queen, in taking fuewell of Lud Rosebery on the final resignation of his office, conferred upon him the Order of the Thistle. The occasion has also been marked with other honours.—

Lords Houghton and Carrington have been created Easts.

Su Henry Loch, the Right Hon Herbert Guidner, Tues Prisident of the Board of Agriculture, Mr. Sydney Stern, member for Scommarket, and Mr. James Williamson, member for Laucaster, have been created Barrons Messrs, James Blyth, William Agnew, Captain H. Naylor Leyland, member for Colchester, and Mr. Beil, Lord Provost of Glasgow, have been created Baronets.

Messis, Aithur Arnold, Edward Gourley, member for Sunderland, Claience Smith, member for Hull, Cowasjee Jehangir Readymoney, and Mr. Low, Provost of Dundee, have been Knighted.

Sir Raiph Thompson, late Permanent Under-Secretary at the War Office, and Sir Bernhard Samuelson, member for Banbury, have been appointed members of the Privy Council.

Mr. Fowler, late Secretary of State for India, has been created Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India.

Mr. Campbell Bannerman, late Secretary of State for Wai, has been created Knight Grand Cross of the Bath.

Mr. R. Giffen, Board of Trade, Colonel Mijendie, and Mr. Alfred Milner have been created Knights Commander of the Bath.

Mr. De Bunsen, British Consul-General for Siam, Mr. Arthur Hardinge, British Diplomatic Agent at Zanzibar, and Captain Lugard have been created Companions of the Bath.

Colonel H. E. Colville, the Imperial Commissioner for Uganda, has been created Knight Commander of the Order of Saint Michael and Saint George.

PRINCE Nasrulla Khan dined with the Prince of Wales at Marlboro' House on June 29. On July 1, he, under the guardance of Sir Henry Fowler, visited the distinguished strangers' gallery of the House of Commons. The next day he again visited the Queen, proceeding to Windsor in full royal state. At the audience he presented to Her Majesty the gifts sent by the Auir. Owing to the visit of the Shahzada to London, a Baronetcy has been conferred on the Lord Mayor The recent marriage in the royal family witnessed no honour for the Sheriff of Calcutta who had richly deserved it. The omission is still uniectified.

A NEW Chinese loan of one million sterling, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent, per anaimi, issued in London, at the minimum price of 106, was covered ten times over. This loan is entirely distinct from that which is being negotiated at Paris under the guarantee of Russia, the terms whereof have been signed at Pekin.

THE death is announced of Professor Haxley, the celebrated writer on natural science.

THE Sultan has appointed Chakir Pasha Inspector of the Turkish Provinces in Asia. The nomination is regarded as a mere evasion of the demands of the Powers.

THE nephew of King Meneleck and other Envoys comprising the Abyssinian Embassy to the Emperor Nicholas, have been received with marked honours in Russia.

BULGARIA has demanded an explanation from the Porte concerning the orders to the Turkish Comman len at Advanagle to act on his own initiative on the Bulgarian frontier, and has also intimated to the Turkish Government that she will be obliged to adopt military measures on her own side. The Porte's reply is conciliatory

In the House of Lords, on July I, Lord Ripon's Bill to enable the Colonies to deal with questions reguiding the alteration of boundaries and annexations which now require a special act of Parliament, was read a second time.

THE Times, commenting on the divergence of views of experts on the question of Indian expenditure and the proportion that should be borne by the Home Exchequer, says that the British nation is convinced of two things; first, that the ultimate responsibility for the defence of the Indian Empire rests with Great Britain; secondly, that the responsibility for the solvency of India rests ultimately, if less directly, with Great Britain.

THE French attacked the Hova position at Beruzoka on the route to Antananarivo and captured two of the enemy's camps, together with a large quantity of stores. The Hovas were routed with heavy loss, but the casualties among the French troops were trifling.

SIR Henry Fowler had been to Windsor Castle on Thursday when he was inovested with the insignia of a Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India. At the same time, the Order of the Crown of India was conferred upon Lady Fowler.

MR. W. C. Bonnerjee, of the Calcutta Bar, now practising in the Privy Council, has been selected as the Radical candidate for Barrow-in-Furness at the forthcoming General Election. We wish him every success.

A SPORTING paper particularly made itself merry because the Viceroy did not ride at a particular parade. Lord Elgin, if he be no cricketeer like Lord Hirris, is for the sport nonetheless. He has joined the Indian movement for a testimonial to Dr. Grace.

THE Bengal High Court has its Mahomedan Judge. The N.-W. Provinces' had its. Bombay has now been allowed one. Syed Ameer Ali is reputed to be an author. Syed Mahomood began brilliantly and ended before his time as ingloriously. He has sunk from that high eminence into writing madayi-tarikh. The first had always set his heart upon the appointment and worked for it. The second had won the place by his talents. Mr. Budruddin Tyebji has been sought out. This is the second time that the post was offered him. He succeeds the barrister Judge Mr. Justice Bayley just retired. Mr. Tyebji richly deserves the elevation.

THE Moslem Chronicle and the Muhammadan Observer of last week concludes a leader on the late Moulvi Cheragh Ah, of Hyderabad, with the words.—

"The Hon'ble M1. Syed Mahmud, a personal friend of Moulvi Cherag Alt has given expression to his sad feeling, on the lamented death of his friend, in the following missa, the numerical value in oriental notation of which gives the date of his demise (1895)."

After a rule (in the printer's language) to mark the close of the article, there runs a line in Persian—" Haif cheraghi-ali az dunia nihan shūd," meaning, Alas I Ali's Lamp has disappeared from the world.

We will not say anything as to the literary conduct of the paper which allows the rule to precede the closing line, or the taste that dubbs a man Honourable when he has ceased to be so. We will only enquire—has the Persian line been properly characterized? Syed Mahimood has, indeed, caused disappointment to many. But has he so far forgotten houself as not to know what miora is? Or, is it the prig of the press of Indad Ali's Line who quotes him at second-hand through the Tahzibal Akhlaq of Alligarh, that must answer for the blunder? He poses as a scholar and belongs to a family of cultivating authors. His immediate progenitor has been made famous by an irregular combination of words attributed to nim,—a combination that has been of much use to Anglo-Indam writers while charging the people of India with want of independence and the desire to follow the beck of officials. The present descendant seems destined for immortality as well by extinguishing distinction between poetry and prose.

In the House of Commons, on June 11, Sir William Wedderburn enquired of the Secretary of State for India what extensions had been made of her Majestey's Indian possessions subsequent to the passing of the Act for the better government of India (1858); in what years were such extensions made; and what was the name and area of such extension. In reply, Mr. (since Sir Henry) Fowler named Uppur Burma with its area of about 83,500 square miles added in 1886. The next year the frontier districts of Pishin and Sibi with their dependencies, which had been under British administration under the Treaty of Gugadamuk since 1879, were incorporated with British India, Beside these, a considerable number of acquisition of territory including numerous exhanges with native Princes, had taken place in various ways since 1858, the area in most cases being comparatively small.

Replying to Mr. Keay, he could only say that in their dealings with Native States, as in other matters, the Government of India use their discretion whether or not the approval of the Secretary of State in Council before taking action. Further, that it was not for the public interest that the papers relating to the Bhurtpur succession should be laid on the table.

Lord Elgin is exceptionally fotunate. His immediate predecessors were not even privileged to publish reports of Commissions held in India without orders from Home. With greater and improved facilities of communication between India and England and greater interest taken in England in Indian affairs, the Viceroy of India has been reduced to an Agent for carrying out orders. He must even take orders for words to betweed on patticular occasions to recommend a policy to his legislative Council or in dispragment of it. We hinted at the time at the difficulty the present Viceroy had with the Home Government regarding the import duties on cotton.

The Secretary of State would not lay on the table the papers relating to Bhurtpore, because, as he said, they were of no public interest. The Fowler definition of the phrase must be very narrow indeed. In the same way, other Native Princes may be pursued out of their dominions, without the public of India or of England knowing anything about the cause, Maharaja Ram Sing may not be deserving of sympathy. He was discarded by his father. Maharaja Jaswant Sing, shortly before his death, had gone the length of addressing letters to the British Government to exclude him from succession. Yet Ram Sing was installed Maharaja within a formight of the late Chief's death. Those who were instrumental in bringing him to power have, like himself, either been sent away or deprived of power-for good or evil. The brave Martelli had recommended Ram Sing for the guddi. When on it, the Colonel discovered cause to report him. Colonel Trevor, the then Agent to the Governor General, came to Bhurtpur to enquire. Within a month, there was an entire change. The political quartered on Bhurtpur was transferred. Colonel Fraser who had replaced Colonel Martelli, has now gone on leave of six months, making over charge to Colonel Loch. Pandit Bishen Lal, the hero of the arama that is being enacted at Bhurtpur, has been divested of all source of influence. His relations and men have all ceased to hold any office. In March, the Maharaja removed himself to Muttra where he still is. He had wanted to go back to Bhurtpur. He was told that Mussooree would suit him better. The Maharaja shews no predilection for that place. There is boulversement in Bhurtpore, A new Dewan has been appointed from the Berar Commission.

The Pioneer had deported Maharaja Ram Sing to Meerut. The Calcutta papers have brought him down to Uttarpara. One of them is

"Rao Krishna Deo Saran Singh, the lately deposed Maharajah of Bhartpore, with his only son, aged about ten years, is at piesent sying at the Uttarparah Public Libray as guests of Babu Rash Behari Mukeiji. The Maharajah is a very quiet, unostentatious and kindhearted gentlemat. He is also an orthodox Hindu, and devotes the greater portion of his time to religious matters."

The Uttaipara Library is classic ground, for Dr. Hunter had lived there and Michael Datta, the Bengali poet. It has yet to be the fit residence of a Prince. Although not permitted to visit his dominions, Maharaja Ram Sing has not ceased to be the ruler of Bhurtpur. Nor is it to be supposed that the British Government which has the supervision of the State will tolerate the hospitality of an occuracy Bengal Zemindar for a ruling chief. The fact is, the guest at the Library is not Bhurtpur himself, but a descendant of the exited branch of the royal family. He is the grandson of Durjan Sal who had usurped the State during the rule of his younger cousin Maharaja Bulwant Sing, grandfather of the present Maharaja. Durjan, after the war which he had occasioned, was deported to Adahaoad. He was afterwards allowed to live, at Benares, where his family draw from the Bhurtpur Durbar, through the Commissioner of Benares as ex-officeo Agent to the Governor-General, a monthly subsistance allowance of Rs. 300.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonais and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westiminster, London, S. W.

THE LAW AND THE BUNNIAH.

In June last the Government of India sent a circular letter to the Local Governments asking for their opinions on the subject of the usury laws. The Government of the N.-W. Provinces accordsubjusted opinions from the Allahabad High Court and from Subordinate Judicial Officers. Among the mass of correspondence which this request elicited is an important Minute by the Chief MINUTE BY SIR JOHN EDGE.

I have read the letter No. 685 VII-654B of 1894, dated Naini Tal, the 9th July 1894, from the Secretary to Government, North-Western Provinces and Oudh, to the Registrar and the papers therein referred to.

2. I am decidedly of opinion that some alteration of the law in

2. I am decidedly of opinion that some alteration of the law in the directions suggested is necessary.

3. In order to avoid misconception I think it right to point out with reference to paragraph 36 of the Resolution by the Government of India, Hame Department, No. 17 Judicial, 1497-1502, dated the 20th November 1891, that the statement "the High Courts have held that Act XXVIII of 1855, which repealed the usury laws, did not affect the Hindu laws as to the rate of interest" is open to question, if by that statement it is intended to be understood that since the passing of act No. XXVIII of 1855 all the High Courts have applied the Hindu law as to the rate of interest High Courts have applied ting trained law as to the interest exceeding therein referred to, which I understand to be that interest exceeding the court of the cou therein referred to; which I understand to be that interest exceeding in amount the principal may not be demanded at any one time. I believe that that rule of Hindu law is applied by the High Court at Bombay in cases in which the parties to the contract are Hindus, whilst the High Court at Madras has held that the rule of Hindu law is not binding. I also believe that the Supreme Court at Calcutta for some time applied this rule

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science. 210, Bow-Bazar Street, Calcutta.

(Session 1895-96.)

The new Session of the Association commenced from 1st July, Lectures during the Session will be delivered in Physics, Chemistry, and Biology.

The Association has been affiliated to the Calcutta University up to and Biology.

The Association has been affiliated to the Calcutta University up to the First Examination in Aits. This step has been taken purely for the benefit of the students, who are to appear at that examination. The attendance at its lectures will now count, and students will have no excuse to neclect to avail themselves of these lectures which, from their thoroughly experimental character, will enable them not only to understand their dext-books, but to acquire such a mastery over methods and principles as to prepare them for making independent over methods and principles as to prepare them for making independent investigations.

It is needless to say that though the Institution for the present has been affiliated up to the F. A. standard only, the lectures will be such as to be fully useful to those who are preparing for the B. A.

examinations.

An examination, written and practical, in the subjects of Physi-

An examination, written and practical, in the subjects of Physics, Chemistry and Biology lectured upon at the Association, will be held after the session is over. Anyone, who has attended the lectures of the Association, will be admitted to this examination.

The Joindra Chandra book prize of Rs 20, founded by the Hon'ole Justice Gooron D iss B meijea, a silver medal by the Chatanya Library, and a silver medal by Babu Sarat Kumar Ghosal, will be awaided to candidates who will stand first, second, and third respectively at the examinations in Physics and Chemistry, provided that the number of marks obtained by each of them does not fall short of one-third of the full marks.

that the number of marks obtained by each of them does not fall short of one-third of the full marks.

Dr. Niliatan Sircar has very generously offered to give a microscope to the candidate who passes first in the examinations in Biology The Association will give a silver medal to the candidate who is second in these examinations.

Lecture by Bubu Rim Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Monday, the 8th Inst., at 4 15 P. M. Subject: Preparation and properties of Oxygen and Ozone; on Wednesday, the 10th Inst., at 4 15 P. M. Subject : Chemical composition of water and its Properties; on Find iv, the 12th Inst. at 4-15 P. M. Subject : Hydroxyl. Nitrogen and Atmospheric air.

Lecture by Dr. Nihatan Suku, MA, M.D., on Monday, the 8th Inst., at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects : Practical Zoology-Frog. Zoology-Protozoa ; on Friday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject : Chemical Physiology-Milk.

Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjee, BA., MB, C. M., on Tuesday, the 9th Inst., at 6 to 8 P. M Suojects : Histology-Endothelium. Physiology-Respiration.

Lecture by Babu Rujendia Nith Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, the 10th Inst., at 7 P.M. Subject: Matter, its constitution and general

Properties
Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 2 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAT. SIRCAR, M.D., Honorary Secretary.

of Hindu law, but that the High Court of Cilcutta has not applied that rule on the appellate side. In eight weits experience in this High Court I cannot call to my recollection at y case in which that rule of Hindu law has been held to apply on these Provinces, although several of the Judges during that period in this High Court, myself amongst the number, have wished that we could apply that rule. I believe that this High Court has never applied that rule of Hindu law.

4. With reference to the same paragraph 36 of the Resolution of the Government of India, Home Department, I think it right also to state that this High Court considers that when a rate of interest is stated in a bond signed by a defendant, a Judge 18, by reason of section 2 of Act N. XXVIII of 1855, bound to decree interest in accordance with the contract unless the contract is proved to have been an unconscionable one, or to be tainted with fraud, or to have been made by the defendant in ignorance of the true nature of the transaction, or in cases to which that doctrine applies, to have been obtained by undue influence. That also is, believe, the view of the law on that subject which now obtains in the High Court, Madras.

5. Cases have frequently come before me in which I strongly desired to give relief against high contractual interest, feeling that the contrctual rate of interest was exorbitant and crushing, which I was unable to do otherwise than make a decree according to the contract owing to the fact that nothing had been proved which would entitle a Court to interfere with the contract made by the parties to it. In many such cases nothing had even been pleaded which if proved would entitle a Court to grant relief against the

As I understand the law, a Judge is not, from the mere fact that the rate of interest contracted to be poid seems to him excessively high and crushing, to infer, without any proof of the circumstances under which the contract was made, that the rate of interest stipulated for in the contract was exorbitant in the sense of unreasonable, or that it would be equitable to grant relief.

Interest at the rate of 20 per cent, might be unreasonably high in a case in which the borrower gave good security for the loan, or his personal credit was good: whilst in another case in which the borrower had no security to give or could only give security which a prudent man would consider to be doubtful, hazardous or practically worthless, 40, 50, 60 or even 70 per cent. might not be an unreasonable rate of interest which a perfectly honest lender might stipulate tor, having regard to the risk he was running of losing abot only interest but principal.

Again a borrower might be under an urgent necessity, with which the lender was in no way concerned, for obtaining an immediate loan, and it might be in fact inconvenient for the lender to advance the money at the time, and consequently it might be reasonable for the lender to refuge to lend his money at an ordinary rate of interest.

What I desire to point out is that neither a Judge nor any one else could say that the agreed rate of interest was unconscionable, unless he had before him the circumstances under which the loan was applied for and made.

In my opinion it frequently happens that a borrower does not understand the true nature of the contract which he makes as to

- interest or thinks only of to-day and is heedless of the future.

 6. As I understand the law it is for the person who seeks to be relieved from the performance of his contract to make out a case for relief. I see however no good reason why the Legislature should not enact that in every case in which the rate of interest appears to a Judge to be lugh, or in which it is pleaded that the full consideration for the contract was not given, that the horrower did not understand the contract or was misled as to its nature or effect, the onus of proving that the contract was reasonable, that the consideration passed and that the transaction was legitimate, should be on the lender.
- I suggest that the Legislature should enact that when on a 7. I suggest that the Legislature should enact that when on a loan it is agreed that compound interest or any interest exceeding 12 per centum per annum shall be paid or allowed in account it shall be incumbent on the lender to prove that the contract was fair and reasonable, and that when the interest does not exceed 12 per centum per annum the Judge may, if he thinks fit, throw upon the lender the onus of proving that the contract was fair and reasonable, and that in all cases, whether the suit be for a simple money decree for the recovery of a debt or a suit under Chapter IV of Act No. IV of 1882, the Judge of first instance and every Court, including a Court of second appeal before which the suit comes in appeal, may require the lender to prove otherwise than by a written contract the amount of the consideration actually given, and that the contract was, under the circumstances of the case as they were known at the date of the loan, fair and reasonable, and that no Judge in any such case shall be bound to decree a greater sum for principal or for interest than is shown to be reasonable.

All the Judges of the Court, except Mr. Justice Aikman, concur entirely in the Chief Justice's Minute, and adopted it as an expression of their own victors. Mr. Aikman, while agreeing generally with the Chief Justice, recorded a Minute of his own.

The second secon MR. IUSTICE AIRMAN'S MINUTE.

I am strongly of opinion that some legislation is required to obviate the admitted evils which arise from the present state of things. Owing to the improvidence and ignorance of the bulk of the inhabitants, the country was not ripe for the well meant but mis-taken legislation of 1855, and will not be so, I icai, for many years

That legislation has already resulted in great political evils, and the sooner it is amended the better. The existence of a large body of once prosperous landowners and tenants who, if they have not lost their lands, are reduced to the position of bond-slaves to the hunniah, is a standing danger.

But the utility of the suggestions now made to improve this state of things appears to me questionable. All money-lenders are not village Shylocks. Many, I would say most of them, fulfil a very useful function in the existing state of society, and I much fear that if the proposals of the Government of India in their present form be adopted, a wide door will be opened to fraud on the part of borrowers, much harassing civil litigation will result, and credit will be shaken.

The suggested reforms of the law seem to me too vague. definite rules for the guidance of the Courts are required. My idea sentite rules for the guidance of the Courts are required. My idea is that it ought to be enacted that when the amount of interest sought to be recovered exceeds the principal, or when the rate of interest exceeds, say 24 per cent, per annum for simple bonds, and 12 per cent, for mortgage bonds, a Court may go behind the stricterms of the bond, and enquire whether there was any undue influence in the case. I do not think any amendment of the Evidence Act is required. As matters at present stand it is open to a detendant although he may have but by he has better a service. defendant, although he may have in the bond or before a registration officer admitted receipt of consideration passed.

I would invite attention to the observations of Mr. Nicholls Judge of Moradabad. Mr. Nicholls is not raising any theoretical objections, but is speaking from his experience as Manager of the extensive Awa Estates, and from what has come before me as a Civil Judge, I know he is right. It is not only the risk of losing his money altogether which makes a creditor ask high interest. The difficulty and expense of recovering it, even when he has got a difficulty and expense of recovering it, even when he has got a decree, are factors which must enter into his calculations. It was too much the custom formerly for Civil Courts to look on execution much the custom formerly for Civil Courts to look on execution business as a mere paretgon. I am glad that this spirit is now passing away, and Subordinate Courts are now devoting more time and care to the work of the execution department. But it is unquestionable that the charges at every stage of the execution proceedings are much too high when the amount to be recovered is small, and thus come to be either prohibitive, or are the last straw which breaks the back of the judgment-debtor. I am very strongly of opinion that the charges for issue of notices, proclamations, &c., require to be more graduated than they are at present. This would not require legislation, but I am firmly persuaded that if it were carried out it would have the ultimate effect of reducing the rate of interest.

I would invite attention to one other matter, though it is only indirectly connected with the usury question, and that is the advisability of placing greater restrictions on the transfer of land from the land-owning and land-cultivating classes. It is generally admitted that the provisions of sections 320 to 327 inclusive of the Code of Civil Procedure have not been found in practise at all adequate to effect the object with which they were enacted.

Last year this Court in a Full Bench decision to which I was a party held that a tenant with rights of occupancy is at liberty to mortgage his holding. This finding was inevitable as the law at present stands, but I would gladly see the law altered so as to forbid mortgages of such holdings, and place restrictions on their subletting.

The Registrar of the High Court, in forwarding these Minutes to Government, says :---

THE HIGH COURT'S OPINIONS

It is the opinion of the whole Court that interest in excess of principal should never be decreed (the damdopat rule), and that in applying that rule the principal from time to time advanced, whether under one bond or under bonds merged in a subsequent bond, should be ascertained separately from the interest, no matter whether or not it was agreed between the parties that interest should be treated as principal.

The Court believes that the custom of damdopat is known, and would commend itself, to the people; it would be no hardship to apply it to Hindus whose old custom it was; it would be no hardship to apply it to Muhammadans to whose religion it is contrary to lend money at interest.

The Judges are unanimously of opinion that where the interest is compound or exceeds 12 per centum per annum, either the law should make it incumbent on the lender to prove that the transaction was fair and reasonable, or the discretion of requiring such proof should be vested in the Judge, whether the borrower has raised the question or not.

THE N. W. P. GOVERNMENT'S SUMMING UP. In a letter to the Government of India, the Secretary to Government, North-West Provinces and Oudh, writes :---

As regards the question of legislation for the purpose of checking the exaction of exorbitant interests, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner cordially endorses the opinion of the majority of officers consulted, that section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855 requires modification in order to compel Courts to exercise discretion in awarding interest at the rate stipulated for in a contract which is such as to raise a reasonable suspicion of coercion, undue influence, fraud, or misrepresentation. He is not, however, prepared to agree with the majority of the Judges of the High Court in holding that in cases where interest is compound or exceeds 12 per cent, per annum, the Courts should further be called upon to presume, or at least to enquire suo motu into the existence of coercion, &c. It might lead to grave injustice to enforce a rule depending on a rate of interest which, though ordinarily suitable enough for mortgage bonds, might be inapplicable in the case of borrowers who have no security to offer and often very indifferent credit.

The proposed amendments to the Contract Act to provide that the taking an undue advantage of a debtor shall render an agreement voidable, appear desirable; and, as a consequence of the foregoing proposals, it would be necessary to add to the Evidence Act provisions empowering Courts to go behind a bond when its terms are exorbitant and unconscionable

Several officers, relying on the old rule of damdopat, suggest that Courts, besides being required to exercise discretion in the matter of awarding interest, should also be precluded from awarding of awarding interest, should also be precluded from awarding more than twice the amount of the original debt. This question is raised in the Bill to regulate the award of interest in suits for simple money debts and mortgage debts, on which the opinion of this Government is desired in letter No. 388, dated 13th March 1895, from the Legislative Department, and will be dealt with on receipt of the replies of the officers consulted. I am to suggest, for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council, that it would be convenient to dispose of this point at the same time as those dealt with in the foregoing paragraphs of this letter. foregoing paragraphs of this letter.

SEVEN POUNDS IN ONE WEEK.

NOT every man who is thin would thank you for fattening him. He doesn't want to be fat and for very good reasons. Unnecessary fat is a load to carry about : it interferes with a man's power to work, shortens his wind, and dulls his wits.

load to carry about; it interiers with a man a position of flesh is needed for his wind, and dutis his wirts.

Yet, on the other hand, a certain amount of flesh is needed for he dith and comfort. For example, A man five feet high should weight about 120lbs,; and man five feet six inches, 145lbs, 1; a man six feet, 178lbs. It is a regular ascending scale. The insurance companies allow a variation of 7 per cent, above or below it, and beyond those limits charge an extra premium. One shouldn't be much over or under his proper weight if he waits to be sound and hearty—and we all do want that.

want that.

Now we will tell you how Mr. Thomas Crosby, being under weight, gined seven pounds in a week. He had lost 1½ stone, which is too much off for a man who was never fleshier than he naturally ought to be. It was this way. He was right enough up to May, 1891. At that time he began to feel all and out of sorts. He had a naxy taste in his mouth—like rotten eggs, he says—and a thick, slimy stuff came on his guins and teeth. His appetite failed, and what he did eat was, as you might say, under compulsion; and right afterwards he would nave great pain in his stomach and chest. Planity, something was amises with him in that region. He was often dizzy, and cold chilis ran over him as though he were threatened with fever. Of course we should expect a man who is handled in this way to lose strength. In fact, he got so weak and nervous that he shook all over, and nis hands trembled as if a current of electricity were rinning through him.

over, and his hands trembled as if a current of electricity were innuing through him.

To use his own words: "I rapidly lost flesh, was 13/2 stone lighter, and could hardly walk about. Once my parents thought I was dying, and sent in haste for the doctor. I saw two doctors in Epworth and one at Haxey, but they were not able to help me. Our vicar, Rev. Mr. Overton, recommended me to the Lincoln Infirmary, where I attended for eight weeks as an outdoor patient, without benefit.

"Soon afterwards Mr. Sharp, a chemist, at Epworth, spoke to me of the virtues of a medicine known as Aother Seigel's Curative Syring. Being interested in what he said, Helt off trying other things and began taking this Syring. In a few days I felt better, and presently I gained seven pounds in a week. At that rate I soon got back to my work, and have had the best of health ever since. I tell these facts to everybody, and am perfectly withing they should be published. Yours truly (Signed), Toat CROSBY, Ferry Road, Epworth, via Doncaster, December 23rd, 1802."

After reading Mr. Crosby's story we scarcely need to ask why he lost flesh. The minute he stopped eating and digesting his usual allowance of food he began to fall away. Trees, they say, grow as much from the air by means of their leaves, as they do from the soil. But men don't. They've got to be built up through their stomachs. Indigestion and dyspepsia (Mr. Crosby's complaint) stops this process and poisons those who have it, besides. That accounts for all the painful and dangerous symptoms our friend speaks of. The doctors do what they can, but, unluckily, they don't possess the medicine that goes to the bottom of this disease and cures it. The temedy is Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, and nothing else, so far as we know. It restores digestion, and digestion covers the bones with fat enough for health and good looks.

THE services of pensioned and discharged sepoys of the Native Army required for employment in civil capacities may be obtained on application to the Rectuiting Officers in Charge of the following districts:

Peshawar for Pathans, Rawal Pindi for Pinji ibi Mahomedans, Amritar for Sikhs, Stalkot (Dharmsala) for Dogras, Delhi for Jits and Hindustain Mahomedans, Lucknow for Hindustain Ilindus. All applications from employers should inside the particulars shown below:

particulars shown below : 1 .- Name of person or firm offering em-

1.—Name of person or firm offering employment.
2.—Nature of, and place at which, employment is offered.
3.—Proposed pay and period for which employment is offered.
4.—Whether railway fare to place of employment will be paid or not.
5.—Whether return railway fare will be paid in case of pensioner being discharged for no fault of his own, or after a definite period of service.
6.—Class of men required (e.g.), Sikh, Pathan, Dogra, &c.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," BY

F H. SKRINE, CS

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia, 1. A portrait of the Doctor.

- 2 A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana.
- 3. About 225 pages of original essays from his brilliant pen.
- 4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE :

To registered subscribers paying in ... Rs. 5 ... advance To other subscribers and ordinary ... Rs. 6 ... purchasers ...

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,--Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque has been remitted permoney order

To be legibly (Name. written Address 1895. The

GENUINE HOMCEOPATHY.

A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S., Homæopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or daily at his residence, 20-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutta.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accountent, practises the Ayuredic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Philipso, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities and indisections of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Eles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE.

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of be without a copy of this GREAT

Work.
(Sd.) Nana Bhai Haiidis." Bengah translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mit ikshara † Pice ... 2 8 Bengah Translation of the Dattaka-

3. Bengali Translation of the Dittakachandrika † Price o 8
The Evidence Act with notes in Bengali, † Price ... I 0
The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengali, † Price ... 4 0
Principles of Zemindari Management and Book keeping in Bengali 0
Test Lessons in English for Bengali boys, Price o 4
Bharat Sasan Pranali* ... o 8

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

CONTENTS.

1. Historical Analysis of the evolution of religious systems.

Definition of the term "religion."

The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new.

(a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tor-appeared in the shape of a fish, a for-toise, and a bout (6) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the secrifice of anomals, and the huming of ghee or incense. &c. &c &c. &c. &c.

The weapons one sixe and determined in the grower of fine words.

The power of fine words.

The art of becoming a prophet.

The cumulative effect of hardswearing for ages.

Specimens of Puranised history Brahminical and Christian priestcraft

compared
The artificial miseries of men caused by rehgion.

Tyranny and taxation of rehgion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
The great prophets of the world and their doings.
Probable origin of the Saiva religion.
Tantic mysticism and abominations.

* To be had of Messts Thacker Spink & Co., only

+ To be had of Messrs Thacker Spink & 3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET, Co., and also at the Suradham Agency No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutta.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

 $\Lambda^{ ext{RE universally ads}}_{ ext{moves of the policy of the second s$ A mitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Bilions and Netvous Bilions and Netwons Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Sto-marh, Sick, Healtichs, Gudiness, Fulliess, Swelling after Meals, Diziness and Drow-smess Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Append Shutters of Appente Shortness of Appenie Snothess of Breath, Costiveness,

Scurvy, and Blotches on the Skin, Distribed Sleep, Frightful Dreams and all Nervous and Trembling Sensition, & The first dose will Steep, Figures Dreums and an extraction as Trembling Sensition, & The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one-box of these Pills, and they will be ac-knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off al No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beecham's no medicine to be found equal to Beecham's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use. For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

human machine

The Natives of India will find Beecham's The Natives of India will find Reecham's Pilis the finest medicine ever introduced to their notice; the European residents also will find them of great value for cooling the blood For throwing off fevers and preventing inflammations in hot climates, they stand without could a rival.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debi htated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the litated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the Beocham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy on Coughs in general, Asthma, Brombiel Affections, Houseness, Shottness of Breath, Fightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheeling, &c., these Pills standamivalled. Let any person give Breetnam's Cough Pills a trial, and the most violent Cough will in a short time be removed.

m a snort time be removed

Boecham's Tooth Paste

Will recommend itself being efficacions and economical it is packed in neit airtight collapsible Tubes.

NOTICE—6. Atherton & Co. will forwird on receipt of letter, samples at the following rates, size 9½% at 8 annas per look, 1-1½% look, 25, of size 2 rupees per box; Footh Paste 12 annas per Fuoe, these rates do not include the cost of postage which will be added to the amount. will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

CALCUTTAL.

NA	WAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTE	EF
	MEMORIAL FUND.
		Rs.
1.	His Highness The Maharaja of Dur- bhanga K.C.I.E.,2,	aaa
2.	His Highness The Maharata of Vizi-
3.	an igram, G.C.LE,	,000
	Moorshedabad, Amuul Omra, GCLE.	800
4.	His Highness the Nawao of Junagada, G C.S.I	500
5.	** **
6.	Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Gham,	500
	Achin Illia CLE	•
7.	Nawao Imad Jung Bahadur	500 500
8. 9.	Nawab Azam Yar Jung Bahadur Shams-ul Illama Sved Ala Belgrami	500 500
10.	Khan Bahadar Bhai Bihauddin, C I.E.,
31.	Kuan Bahadar BhaiB ihauddin, C.L.E., Vizier to the N. owab of Junagadh Miharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mo- hin Tagore, K.C. 1 Baou Jodu Lai Mullek	302
	h in Tagore, K C al	250
12. 13.	Baon Jodu Lai Mullick	200 200
14.	Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosem Ali
15.	Shuj ul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab	150
	Syea Zimin Abam Khan bahatan	140
16.		100
17.		100
18.	Prince Mirza Sir Jahan Kadar Baha-	100
10		100
20.	Haji Kasun Auff	100
21.	Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir II. Brackenbury, K.C.B.,	100
2 ?. 2 3.		100
-	Banerjee	50
24. 25.	The Honble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt	51
26.	Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan	50
27.	Bahadur, C.S.L Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna	50 50
28.	The Hon ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve-
29.	The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar	50
30.	Khan Bahadur Richan	50
	Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I.F., Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Mirza Nawab Huzoor Mirza Nawab Huzoor Mirza Nawab Syed Anner Husein Syed Ninul Huda, E.q., C.S., Hakerin Gholam Raza Khan L.G. Rutchie, E.S., C.S.	50
31. 32.	Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I.F., Nawab Jahandar Meerza	50 50
33.	Nawab Huzoor Muza	50
34. 35.	Nawab Syed Ameer Husem	50 50
35. 36.	Syed Nural Huda, Esq., Cs.,	50
37. 38.	J. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S.,	50 50
39. 40.	Sir Alexander Miller	50 32
41.	F. J. Rowe, Esq Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	-
42.	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy	25 25
43	Kumar Dinendra Narain Roy	25
44. 45.	Babu (Pashupatty Nath Bose Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose	25 25
46. 47.	Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose Raja Sir Sourindra Mohan Tagore,	25
	C.I.E Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury	25
48. 49.	Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury Babe una Nath Ghose	25 25
50.	Raja Sitenath Roy	25
51. 52.	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar R. Belch impers, Esq	25 25
53.	Ray Surp Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury	25
51. 55	Rabu Gopar La Seal	25 25
56. 57.	Monivi Sy of Abdus Salam	25
58.	II. Luttman Joanson, Esq. C.S.	25 25
59. 60.	Lord Wimam Beresford, K.C.I.E.,	25 25
61.	F. Il Skrine, Esq. C.S., The Hou'ble H. J. S. Cotto i C.S., C.S.I. Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah	25
62. 63.	Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah	20
64.	Baboo Suiendi i Nath Pal Chowdry	20
65. 66.	" Aukhoy Kumar Ghose Moulvi Imadd Ali	20 20
67. 68.	D Chib Chunder Mund., D.L. J
69.	Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan	20 20
70. 71.	D. Panioty, Esq Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-law Moulvi Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed, Khon Bahadur	20
,	Khan Bahadur	17.

72. T. Inghs, Esq., C.S.

73. A. H. Giles, Esq		16
74. F. F. Handley, Esq., C.S.	•••	16
75. The Hon'ble Mouly Strajul Isl	am
Khan		16
76 Moulyi Serajuddeen		15
77 Abul Hasan Reg		₹ 5
78 H. A. D. Philips, Esq., c.s.		10
70 II. A. D. Fillings, Esq., C.s.
79. Baboo Kuan Chunder Roy	•••	10
80. E. N. Baker, Esq	•••	10
81. Baboo Doyal Chand Bose	•••	10
82. " Madan Mohun Bose		10
83. "Kanai Lai Khan		10
84. Mouly: Synd Akram Hossain		10
85. Moulvi Aziz Ahmud		10
80. Rai Kanyelal Dey Bahadoor		10
87 H Holmwood, Esq		10
88 Baba Harry Mohan Chunder		10
89. Baboo Chakkanlal Roy		5
90. "Sarodaprasad Ghose		5
Subscriptions will be thankfully rece	ived
the Honorary Joint Secretaries,		•
RAI RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI BAI	2 4 DI	IT D
4, British Indian Street, Cale
and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMAN,	Esq.	•

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

Barrister -- at Law,

16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

Guaranteed three Years.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NE V STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, sping, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Crylon says:—It keeps solendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks, x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonmanallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regit from Domdum says:—I have sold a for Rs. 20. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department says:—The watch yon seut me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time. Jewelled Ring Ro. 1-8-0. Real Silver World Rs. 18 Real partment says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Ro. 1-8-0. Roal
Silver Watch Rs. 13. Roal
Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0.
Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Sit Inspector from Simkutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and tuby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, koyal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infurity from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Serge unter Rs. 28. Pte. H. C. Bishop of L.
F. L. Rigg from Kamptee says:—A Corporal serge aut for Rs. 28.× Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Rege from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold worth Rs. 30; I addes? Rs. 24; both with extra and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranceed to be of real soad gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.
WESTERN IMMA TRAINING CO.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

NEW HOME TREATMENT
Sufficies the not generally aware that these Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the liming membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HUTFON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada.

Becientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer and sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has ariven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gov

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITI LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHI SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remecon these complaints in their severest and mo chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limb is almost too remarkable for CREDENC Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single applic tion will refleve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rap and complete that it is universally recommend. ed as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let il result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Ph The Oriental baim is used by the best rusticals in the world in their practice. It here pronounced a blessing in thousands homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieve a wide-spiead popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at I Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPEH

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in advance

learly .		•••		k۵.	12
Half-vearly		•••	•••	••	7
Quarterry.	••	•••	•••	,,	4
Montais .	٠	•••		Κ÷	1.8
Single or s.	amplé	Copy	•••	Ans.	0-8
,	If no	t paid in ac	ivance.
Yearly			•••	R۶.	18
Haif-yeariy		•••	•••	,,	10-8
Quarterly		•••		11	ó-e
		•••	•••	••	2-4
Single or s	ample	Сору		Aus.	0-12
No agai	HOHAL	charge for	DOSLag	or D	eoı.

RATES OF ADVERTISE JENT

Adventisements (three columns to the page and too lines or 12 inches to the column are that ged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: Y, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

LITERATURE REVIEW O F POLITICS AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 683.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

COLUMBUS.

A Print after a Picture by Parmeggiano.

BY B. SIMMONS.

RISE, Victor, from the festive board Flush'd with triumphal wine, And, lifting high thy beaming sword, Fired by the flattering harper's chord,

Who hymns thee half divine, Vow at the glutted shope of Fate That dark-red brand to consecrate ! Long, dread, and doubtful was the fray That gives the stars thy name to-day. But all is over ; round thee now Fame shouts, spoil pours, and captives bow. No stormier joy can earth impart, Than thrills in lightning through thy heart.

11.

Gay Lover, with the soft guitar, Hie to the olive-woods afar. And to thy friend, the listening brook, Alone reveal that raptured look, The maid so long in secret loved-A parent's angry will removed ---This morning saw betrothed thine, That sire the pledge, consenting, blest, Life bright as motes in golden wine,

Is dancing in thy breast

ш.

Statesman astute, the final hour Arrives of long-contested power; Each crafty wile thine ends to aid, /Party and principle betray'd; The subtle speech, the plan profound, Pursued for years, success has crown'd; To-night the vote upon whose tongue, The nicely-poised division hung, Was thine-beneath that placid brow What feelings throb exulting now ! Thy rival falls ;-on grandem's base Go shake the nations in his place l

Fame, Love, Ambition ! what are ve. With all your wasting passions' war, To the great strife that, like a sea, O'erswept his soul tumultuously, Whose face gleams on me like a star-

A star that gleams through murky clouds-As here, by struggling crowds A spell 1 lotterer I stand, Before a print-shop in the Strand? What are your eager hopes and fears Whose minutes wither men like years-Your schemes defeated or fulfill'd, To the emotions dread that thrill'd His frame on that October night, When, watching by the lonely mast, He saw on shore the moving light, And felt, though darkness veil'd the sight,

The long-sought World was his at last?* V.

How Fancy's holdest glances fail Contemplating each hurrying mood Of thought that to that aspect pale

Sent up the heart's o'erboiling flood Through that vast vigil, while his eyes Watch'd till the slow reluctant skies Should kindle, and the vision dread, Of all his livelong years be read ! In youth, his faith-led spirit doom'd Still to be baffled and betray'd,

His manhood's vigorous noon consumed Ere power bestowe'd its niggard aid; That morn of summer, dawning grey, t

When from Huelva's humble bay, He full of hope, before the gale Turn'd on the hopeless world his sail, And stee:'d for seas untrack'd, unknown, And westward still sail'd on-sail'd on-Sail'd on till Ocean seem'd to be Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

^{*} October 11, 1492.—"As the evening darkened, Columbus took his station on the top of the castle or cabin, on the high poop of his vessel. However he might carry a cheeful and confident countenance during the day, it was to him a time of the most painful anxiety, and now, when he was wrapped from observation by the shades of night, he maintained an intense and uncentiting watch, ranging his eye along the dusky horizon in search of the most vague indications of land. Suddenly, about ten o'clock, he thought he beheld t light glimmering at a distance. Fearing that his eager hopes might deceive him, he called to Pedro Guiterrez, gentleman of the king's bedchamber, and inquired whether he saw a light in that direction; the latter replied in the affirmative. Columbus, yet doubtful whether it might not be some delusion of the fancy, called Roderigo Sanchez of Segovia, and made the same inquoy. By the time the latter had ascended the roundhouse, the light had disappeared. They saw it once or twice afterwards in sudden and passing gleams, as if it were a touch in the bark of a fisherman rising and ginking with the waves, or in the hand of some person on shore, borne up and down as he walked from house to house. So transient and uncertain were these gleams, this few attached any importance to them; Columbus, however, considered them as certain signs of land, and, moreover, that the land was inhabited."—Ivin's Columbus, vol. 1.

Y'It was on Friday, the 3d of Angust, 1302, early in the morning that Columbus set sail on his first voyage of discovery. He departed from the bar of Siltes, a small island in front of the town of Huelva, steering in a south-westerly direction," &c.—Ivving. He was about fifty-seven years old the year of the discovery. * October 11, 1492 .- " As the evening darkened, Columbus took his

All shoreless as Eternity. Till, from its long-loved star estranged, At last the constant needle changed, * And fierce amid his murmuring crew Prone terror into treason grew; While on his tortured spirit rose, More dire than portents, toils, or foes, The awaiting world's loud jeers and scorn Yell'd o'er his profitless return ;

No-none through that dark watch may trace The feelings wild beneath whose swell, As heaves the back the billows' race.

His being rose and fell! Yet over doubt, and pride, and pain, O'er all that flash'd through breast and brain, As with those grand, immortal eyes

He stood-his heart on fire to know When morning next illumed the skies.

What wonders in its light should glow-O'er all one thought must, in that hour, Have sway'd supreme -- Power, conscious Power---The lofty sense that truths conceived,

And born of his own starry mind. And foster'd into might, achieved

A new creation for mankind! And when from off that ocean calm

The Tropic's dusky curtain clear'd, And those green shores and banks of balm And rosy-tinted hills appear'd Silent and bright as Eden, ere Earth's breezes shook one blossom there-Against that hour's proud tumult weigh'd, Love, Fame, Ambition, how ye fade !

ıv.

Thou Luther of the darken'd Deep ! Nor less intrepid, too, than he Whose courage broke earth's bigot sleep Whilst thine unbarr'd the sea-Like his, 't was thy predestined fate

Against your grim benighted age, With all its fiends of Fear and Hate,

War, single-handed war, to wage, And live a conqueror, too, like him. I'll Times's expiring lights grow dim ! O, hero of my boyish heart ! Ere from thy pictured looks I part, My mind's maturer reverence now In thoughts of thankfulness would bow To the Omniscient Will that sent Thee forth, its chosen instrument, To teach us hope, when sin and care, And the vile sorlings that degrade Our dust, would bid us most despair--Hope, from each varied deed display'd Along thy bold and wondrous story, That shows how far one steadfast mind.

· Serene in suffering as in glory,

May go to deify our kind.

- Blackwood.

WEEKLYANA.

MIGHTIER than dynamite, as it should be according to its name, is "Jovene," the new explosive prepared at Washington, U.S. It explodes under water, does not kindle with a flime, and is comparatively cheap. It has, however, yet to be fully tested.

AT Christie's, on June 15, ninety-one pictures from the collection of James Price fetched 87,000/. The highest price obtained was 10,000 guineas for Gainsborough's portrait of Lady Mulgrave. It had been bought, in 1882, for 1,070 guineas. Six Turners brought in 22,450 guineas. W. Muller's "Carnarvon Castle" was purchased for 2,300 gumeas.

THE tablet in the precincts of the Gottingen University in honour of Prince Bismarck bears the simple inscription-" To the Great Chancellor .- Wilhelm II." This is an extraordinary departure from the pompous ways of the young Emperor. But it shews that he is not all froth.

THE Dominion Parliament has voted a grant of 25,000 dols to Lady Thompson, widow of the late Canadian Premier.

SIR Charles Elliott, accompanied by Colonel McArthur and Captain J. W. Currie, left for Chandbally on Wednesday. He will be back on Monday next. Lady Elliott leaves Darjeeling for Caicutta on that day.

THE last of the dacoit leaders in the Maingyan District of Burma, who defied the British in 1886, Bolf Cho, has been secured. He with his two sons are in custody.

ANTICIPATING the Long Vacation of the Allahabad High Court, Sir John Edge has left for England. Mr. Justice Knox officiates as Chief Justice.

THE Governor-General in Council has been pleased-

- (1) to remit the duty, payable on any policy of insurance against railway accidents valid for a single journey only when issued to a passenger travelling by the intermediate or the third class on any railway; and
- (2) to reduce to one anna the duty payable on any such policy when issued to a passenger travelling by the first or the second class on any

Are we to suppose that Government proposes to reduce railway accidents by encouraging life insurance? For the last four years, the number of accidents were seven for every 100,000 train-miles run. During 1894, the number of persons killed were 633 and injured 929.

UNDER the Cotton Duties Act (XVII of 1894), the Governor-General in Council has prohibited the payment of drawback on the exportation of yarn or cotton fabrics to-

- (1) the ports in the States of Travancore and Cochin,
- (2) the ports of His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda,
- (3) the ports of the Thakur of Bhavnagar,
- (4) the ports of the Nawab of Cambay,
- (5) the ports of the Nawab of Habsan.
- (6) the Portuguese-Indian port of Diu, and (7) the ports specified below in Kutch and Kathiawar :
- In Kutch-Jakhan, Koteshwar, Lakhpit, Mundra, Rohar, Tuna and
- Mandyı:

In Kathiawar-Beri, Bherai, Chorvad, Jafarabad, Jinjura, Joria, Kathivadar, Madhavpur, Mahuva, Mangrol, Miani, Navabander (under Junagadh), Navabander (under Nawanagar), Navibander, Pimpavao, Porbander, Satya, Sundrai, Sutrapara, Talaja, Veraval, and Wavanya.

WHILE the Madras city itself is without lights, the carriages on the Madras Railway are to be illuminated with gas. The plant for the purpose has arrived.

^{* &}quot; On the 13th September, in the evening, being about two hundred leagues from the island of Ferro, he, for the first time, noticed the variation of the needle, a phenomenon which had never before been remarked. Struck with the circumstance, he observed it attentively for three days, and found that the variation increased as he advanced. It soon attracted the attention of the pilots, and filled them with consternation. It seemed as if the very laws of nature were changing as they advanced and that they were entering another world subject to unknown influences."—Irving.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full prittedlars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Anral Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

A RUMOUR being circulated that cocoanut milk is more acceptable to the gods than the boune—that is according to religion—cocoanuts have an extensive sale at Bangalore. The "sell" cannot last long, But the difficulty has always existed of procuring the kind of milk and its preparation the ghi required for the wirship of the gods.

DURING the absence, on deputation to Madras and on privilege leave, of Brig ide-Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonel G. King, Surgeon-Captain D. Praio, Curator of the Herbarium, Royal Botanic Garden, Calcutta, acts in addition to his own duties, as Superintendent of the Royal Botanic Garden, Calcutta, and of Lloyd Botanic Garden, Darjeeling, and as Government Quinologist, Mr. J. A. Gammie superintending during the said period his own work of Deputy Superintendent of Government Cinchona Plantation.

THREE of the native Assistant Magistrates and Collectors, namely, Mr. Satyendranath Palit, Godda, Sonthal Parganas; Mr. Birendra Chandra Sen, Kushtia, Nadia; and Mr. Kiran Chandra De, Ranaghat, Nadia, have been vested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class.

MR. Croft of this city has been fined Rs. 800 for unlicensed manufacture and possession of weak whisky which does not sell. Mr. David, Manager of the Great Eastern Hotel, Rangoon, has been fined Rs. 600, for selling Perfection Whisky which was not Perfection, if not potato.

DR Gariansug, a Russian physician, considers the juice of raw cranberries, given freely, pure or diluted, with equal parts of water, an excellent means of relieving thirst and womiting in Asiatic cholera.

THE Arrya Mission Institution, Calcutta, has been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the F. A. standard. That shews an advance. Do the boys shew any improvement in manners?

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

PARLIAMENT was dissolved on Monday. It will meet, after the elections, on the 12th of August. Prior to the protogation, Lord Salisbury delivered a manifesto defending the House of Lords and declaring that the policy of Government would be to do the utmost to uningate the misery of the millions. Agriculture, he said, had suffered especially, but the reforms in taxation, facilities of transport, and the creation of small holdings would do much to relieve it. Moreover, the poor law required revision. The election seems to be a tame affair. Meetings are, indeed, being held daily in different parts of the country, and speeches made by candidates, but there is an absence of any excitement. One hundred and thirty-eight seats will be unopposed. The candidates will be divided simply into Unionists and Liberals, the more precise sub-division being reserved for the mush. Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India, has been returned for the Ealing Division of Middlesex, unopposed. The following Unionist Members have been re-elected in the same way, namely, Mr. Goschen for St. George's, Hanover Square; Mr. Myers for Winchester; Mr. Lyttleton for Warwick; Mr. Tardell for Paddington ; Mr. Barry for Windsor ; Mr. Hoare for Hampstead and Hanson and Mr. Gibbs for the City of London. Lord Charles Beresford is severely censured for persisting in contesting a seat for Central Birmingham against the Unionist candidate. The Liberal programme was sketched out by Lord Rosebery, who, speaking at a Liberal meeting in the Albert Hall, advocated continuity in the foreign affairs of the nation, and said that his policy was to withdraw the forces from Chitral as soon as the step could be taken with safety. With regard to the Armenian question he would insist upon due guarantees against the recurrence of the horrors committed by the Turks at Sassoon-In conclusion he reaffirmed the principle of Home Rule, but said that the question of the abolition of the House of Lords was at the root of all others. Mr. Chamberlain, speaking at Lambeth in support of

Mr. H. M. Stanley, the explorer, sketched the Government programe. He stated that it was their intention to assist friendly societies, to make provision for the aged poor, and to control the immigration of destinue aliens, and also the important of foreign prison-made goods, and to compensate injured working.

THE opening of the naval menœuvres has been postponed for one week to enable the crews to vote at the General Election.

A FURIOUS scene occurred at the Irish Convention held at Omigh between Mr. Tim Healy and Mr. John Dillon, the former reading a letter showing that the National Federation is unable to continue to subsidise the Home Rule campaign in Tyrone and Derry, which the English Liberals will henceforth undertake. Mr. Dillon retorted that Mr. Healy was a traitor for reading a private letter, and he repelled the charge of selling Ireland.

LORD Knutsford and Mr. Henry Matthews have been created viscounts, while Sir Henry James has been raised to the peerage. Sir Richard Webster has been appointed Attorney-General.

THE Italian Squadron, consisting of ten vessels commanded by the Duke of Genoa arrived at Portsmouth on July 9. The Duke and his officers were received by Admiral Earl Clauwilliam on board the Victory. The town was gaily decorated in honour of the occasion, and the Italians met with an extremely hearty reception.

NASRULLA KHAN, accompanied by Mr. Martin, starts for Paris on the 22nd, and will embark at Constantinople for India on the 20th September. He will hold a farewell reception at Dorchester House on the 18th instant, at which the Prince of Wares will be present.

THE Novoe Viennya says the visit of King Menelik's Envoys to St. Petersburg may influence Russian Oriental policy more than Nasiulla Khau's visit to London may affect the destines of Asia

THE latest advices from Abyssima state that King Menelik's attitude towards the Italians is becoming more markedly hostile, and that he has imprisoned Signor Capucci, an Italian Engineer, for communicating with General Baratteri.

IT is understood that the Russo-Chinese loan will be secured by the Chinese customs revenue, with priority of any future loans, Russia undertaking to pay the French financies who are finding the inoney, should China fail to do so. The Loan will not be redeemable for thirty-six years. The Journal de St. Petersburg, discussing the loan, disavows any wish for political advantage, ascribing it to Russia's desire to maintain friendly relations with her great neighbour. This assurance of the Russian journal is immediately followed by the English Standard, with a telegram from Beitin positively re-affirming that the extension of the Siberian railway through Manchuria his been definitely agreed upon. The exclusiveness of China is attacked from other quarters as well. A French commercial mission under official auspices starts in August next for Shanghai to thoroughly study the trade of China, and travel through China to Yunnan, where it with meet another mission from Tonquin.

THE railway between Pretoria and Delagoa Bay was opened on Tuesday with great ceremony, Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of the Cape, and Sir J. J. Hely Hutchinson, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Natal, and several Portuguese officers being present.

A fire broke out on the ship Cressington at Hamburg, and the cargo of jute has been much damaged. The ship, however, has only been slightly damaged.

ON July 9, two trains laden with pilgrims collided near Quebec. Twenty-five people were killed, and thirty injured.

LORD Harris, the late Governor of Bombay, has been appointed one of the Lords-in-waiting to Her Majesty the Queen.

A BULGARIAN deputation has arrived at St. Petersburg to lay a wreath on the tomb of the late Czir. M. Lobanoff received the deputation most cordially, and said that the restoration of regular relations with Russia rested with the Bulgarian people.

THERE was a renewal of the attack by the Opposition in the Italian Chamber, on Signor Crispi. After an eloquent speech from him in defence of his orders, the Chamber passed a vote of confidence, and approved the Decrees by a large majority.

THE cotton crop in eleven cotton. States of America is reported to be 82-5/16 per cent.

CAPTAIN Younghusband delivered a lecture on Chitral at the United Service Institute. Lord Roberts also addressed the meeting. He said that there was no necessity for annexing Chitral. It would, he said, suffice to make a road with fernes, over the Swit and Panjkora rivers, and when completed the route should be guarded by local levies. Such a plan would, he said, involve no exorbitant expenditure. But will it preserve the integrity of Chitral?

LORD Elgin's programme of next tout includes the Native States of Gwaltor, Bhopal, Indore, Hyderabad and Mysore. It is a big sweeping programme for so many first class States to be visited in one down journey. He leaves Sinda on the 24th October. From Mysore the Viceroy proceeds to Madias, whence he comes by sea to Calcutta in the middle of December.

A Gazette of India Extraordinary, dated Simla, Tuesday, July 9, announces the appointment of the Right Honorrable Henry Hartley Fowler, P.C., M.P., Litely Her. Mighesty's Principal Secretary of State for India, as an Extra Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Stat of India.

MAHARAJA Sir Luchmessur Singh Bahadur of Darbhanga will continue in the Bengal Legislative Council. He will now sit not as an elected but a nominated member. He succeeds Maharaja Sir Ravaneshwar Prasad Singh Bahadur of Gidhaur as representative of the great landlords of the Province.

THE high prospects of petroleum in Assam have not been realized. The boring operations of the Assam Railways and Trading Company at Mikum have been stopped since September last without satisfactory results. After an outlay of Rs. 5,57,533, only seven wells, or about half the number bored, at the Digbor field are yielding any oil. In the year ending 31st March 1895, the crude oil extracted was 156,717 gallous against 62,876 of the previous year. The oil is being used by the Company for lubricating and sold to the public for the same purpose and for painting and preservation of tumber and wood, &c.

On January 19, we commented rather sharply on the circular of the Inspector General of Registration, Bengal, directing that peons do not form part of an office establishment and requiring the rural subregistrars, who are paid by commissions on the registrations effected and allowances on the documents received by them, to strictly account for the money drawn on the list account. It is now our pleasing duty to announce that the objectionable circular has been withdrawn The present Inspector-General thinks "that rural sub-registrats are neither losers not gamers in the long run under the arrangement which gives them a fixed scale of allowance. Circular No. 42 of 1894 is accordingly cancelled." The withdrawing circular is numbered 17 of 1895. If the preceding orders of Khao Bahadur Delawar Hossem Ahmed are as sympathetic, or the subsequent ones leave the ill-paid fural sub-registrars undisturbed, he will have earned their thinks before he lays down his office. For the present order, they are groteful to him for no positive good done but for the evil averted. If he can improve their status, he will earn the thanks of the general community,

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Extedunis and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

SIR Charles Elliott has given an impetus to the Mahomedan Hostel in Calcutta which had been hanging fire or rather awaiting subscriptions. Without waiting till the last, he has given orders for its construction and sanctioned the Government grant of Rs. 50,000. We have received a communication on the subject. We have much pleasure in presenting the enlightened Mahomedan feeling on the subject of hoarding houses for boys.

Sir Charles Elliott has conferred a boon upon the Mahomedan community by sanctioning the Hostel in the vicinity of the Caclutta Medressa. Such a boarding house was a desideratum. Calcutta has many educational advantages. They are not all unmixed good. As in other large cities, the dangers are many that surround a young student without proper supervision and control. There was a time when many well-to-do Mahomedan gentlemen in and around Calcutta, according to the prevailing custom, used to maintain a number of poor students in their houses. The heads of such families would exercise some kind of supervision also and act the part of guardians. Old times are changed; old views of charity and liberality have taken a new direction. At the present day it will be difficult to find half a dozen houses where poor students have free lodging and mess (Jagir). Not to speak of strangers, few can afford to keep their relations in their houses and support them, or educate their children. The great misfortune of an Indian student is the home influence. Considering all the circumstance-, it cannot be said to be healthy. It is evident that in most houses there is want of discipline and proper supervision of health and habits of the boys. Then again the guardians are so much occupied with their profession or busness that they have no time to attend to their wards. Female influence is worse than anything. The ladies love their children indiscriminately and thus spoil the boys by granting them every license and showing them every indulgence. Grown up boys are also petted like young children. In well-regulated English homes, the model of discipline and good training, it is thought necessary to remove the boys at a certain age.

Why the result of our university education is so bad and disappointing? Why our students cannot turn out as brilliantly as educated Europeans? Why they look like so many discharged patients after their college career? Why are they wanting in strength of character, as of body? I attribute all these shortcomings to the absence of discipline of good boarding schools and colleges as we find in Europe. The sourier we can change the present system, the better for all concerned.

No amount of lecturing will remove the defects of character which cause much anxiety.

A student, who after passing his F. A. or B. A. examination does not know how to eat and dress and is a picture of ill-health and of all distempers arising from it, what can be expected of him? He would have been a different man and useful if he had the supervision of teachers who could set him personal examples and exercise on him lasting healthy influence.

The Mahomedan community ought to be indebted to the Lieutenant-Governor for the good done by him for their young men-They should liberally response to his call and make up the balance still wanting. They must realise the importance and advantages of hostels for their student population who require them most.

What a student can learn in years in his house he learns it in months in a boarding school with competent principals and super-intendents.

The conditions under which poor students are compelled to live at Patna, Calcutta and Dacca are fraught with danger to their physical and moral weifare. There are many who suffer seriously from the baneful influence of their questionable surroundings. It is too late when their guardians are informed of their having been plunged into troubles. These students are not properly housed and they get bad food, bad water, bad light, and bad association, the combined effect of which very often proves their ruin.

FOLLOWING the Mahomedan Literary Society which early enough saw the benefit of the Hostel, the National Mahomedan Society has voted a sum towards its construction. Their labours must not end there. The individual members must come forward each with his mite. The estimated cost of land and building is about a lakh of rupees. The subscriptions come up to only Rs. 19,000.

THE Calcutta Gizette, of July 10, announces that the services of Mr. C A. W. Fordyce, Deputy-Magistrate and Deputy-Collector, have been dispensed with by Government, with effect from the 15th March 1895 We publish, in mother column, the Resolution on the subject. Charles Appears Writt Firsty e was admitted into service on the 27th January 1887. He must have been considered then engible both on account of character and capabilities. It took eight long yours to discover that he was not deserving of the choice of Government. But for the Dacca pleaders he would have gone on piling up come from the vantage ground of his position in the service. All honour to them! Sir Charles Elliott too deserves commendation for the strong action he has taken. He gave Mr. Fordyce sufficient opportunity to clear himself, and finding him fail, the charges against him having been reported true, the Governor has not been slow to purge the subordinate executive service of the Furdyce foulness.

In connection with the knighthood conferred on Mr. J. Cowasjee Jehanger, the Times of India says that "It is understood, however, that m conferring a knighthood upon Mr. Jehangir regard has been had to the munificent benefactions bestowed upon Bombay by the late Sir Cowasjee Jehangir, who gave nearly fifteen lakhs for various public objects, and who shortly before his death, it was reported at the time, was recommended by the Government of Bombay for an even more distinguished mark of the favour of the Crown." The present honour, n also says, "has followed quickly upon the opening of the Readymoney wing of the Imperial Institute, which has been elected at a cost of two lakhs of rupees, the gift of Mr. Jehangir."

The present Sir Cowasjee Jehangii Readymoney is the adopted son and successor of the late Sir Cowasjee Jehangir Readymoney. In 1878, when noticing his death, elsewhere in another capacity, we wrote .--

'A great man, (as our readers are already aware) "the venerable philanthropist," "the Peabody of the Eist," Sir Cowasji Jehangir Readymoney, Knight, C. S. I., has passed away. In the following Gazette Extraordinary the Bombay Government thus regret his

"It is with deep regret that the Governor in Council has received intelligence of the death at an early hour this morning of Sir Cowasji Jehangir Readymoney, Kt., C. S. I.

"Remembering the munificent charities and benefactions with which Sir Cowasji's name has been connected during the past quarter of a century, the Government consider that this public recognition of his worth is pre-emmently called for.

" By his death the Government has lost one of its most loyal subjects, India a generous benefactor, and the Town and Island of Bombay one ofats most upright and independent citizens,"

Sir Cowasp's greatness lay in his benefactions for the relief of bom in suffering and human distress without distinction of creed it colour. His public charities amounted to eighteen lakhs and his private charities to four lakhs of Rupees. How he valued public -hannes the following characteristic letter will shew :--

" Bombay, 10th September, 1870.

To Su H B. E. Frere, G. C S. I., ate Governor of Bombay and now Member of India Council, London. My dear Sir.—I have pleasure to enclose you a bill for £1,000, osting me Rs. 10,726 at 11. 10½d sight drawn by Oriental Bank Corporation on Bank of England, and I have endoused to your good self, such please realize and pay to the Prussian and French authorities in my behalf—£500 to each of them for distribution among their rounded of the armies presently engaged in several battles in Europe. Though the occurrence took place in a foreign land at so great a betage. I could not obtain a peace to my mind ever since the feather. Inough the occurrence took place in a foreign land at so great a bistance, I could not obtain a peace to my mind ever since the fearful laughter and maining of human beings; now from this day I shall usfy myself that I served people in great distress with little money I susfy myself that I served people in great distress with little money I am spare to forward for the good of my co-creatures.

You must pardon the trouble I put you in, but you will forgive me then I say you were my good and honoured the Governor of Bombay Please inform the Secretary of State for India officially of the ed of one of her Indian subjects assisting England's neighbours in her distractions.

I remain, my dear Sir, yours sincerely, COWASJI JEHANGIR."

Out of respect to the memory of Sir Cowasji, many of the Parsi inps, schools, and places of business in Bombay, as well as the share Ear and Elphilstone College were closed on the day of his death. he Banks also suspended business the next day for one hour. In recognition of his greatness, had voted a statue and an address to Sir Cowasji. We are not told whether they intend to raise a monument to his memory after death. If they have exhausted the memorials to the great man whose statue already adorns the 'Sr Cowaspi Jehangh Hill of the University of Bombay," they may glorify his virtues in his adopted son and successor. Such a precedent was laid down by Sir Richard Temple at the distribution of Funine honours in Bengal. Titles in advance were gizetted for the heirs of benefactors and benefactresses of Bengal Fomme sufferers."

The honour for the sou comes too late, but after an expenditure in public of half the amount of the fither in private charity. The adoption of the father's name has been justified. It term one for the son to win the other title, or a baronetcy to perpetuate the name. We live in cheap times. If he only sticks to it and lives, he is sure to get it.

KHAJA SELIMULLA has given up the Government service the rules whereof had been relaxed to admit him. This is the second time that he throws up his appointment. Once he had overstayed his leave. But he was re-gazetted. This time, we believe, he has resigned deliberately. He has made his peace with his father, on whose bounty he means to throw himself, his two wives and about half a dozen of children. The Government pittance was not enough for so many in their position in society. Khajah Selim is only 26 years of age and is reported to be an angel of a man. We will be glad to hear that he is given his proper place in the new Nawabate of Dacca

THE Dacca Division has failed to elect its member for the Bengal Legislative Council Not that there were no candidates. The four District Boards had appointed four delegates and these four gentlemen had so evenly balanced then judgments that they could not come to a definite conclusion. Four names in two sets were proposed, and each time found equal supporters, there being a tie on both the occasions. There were thus four candidates, that is one for each delegate. Dacca is a go-ahead and intelligent division, and it is to be deplored that the first exercise of the franchise fails there. Under the rules, it is open to the Lieutenant Governor to make the nomination himself. But the power is not absolute. He is not precluded from giving the District Boards another opportunity of exercising the hard-earned privilege. When a person recommon led is not acceptable to the Lieutenant Governor, he is to order another election under the rules. Considering that it is the first occasion when the recommending delegates could not agree, the Local Government may, without any impropriety, rather with good grice, give a second chance. By their obstinacy the delegates have undoubtedly proved themselves unfit. But it is the rules more than the representatives that are to blame. A rule that lays down in even number without a second or casting vote is bad ab initio, and Government is responsible for it. If the delegates have proved perverse, let them be re-elected. Let it not be said of Dacca that it is not worthy of the privilege.

In making his own nomination, the Lieutenant Governor incurs a serious responsibility. For he must choose "a person belonging to the class which the body or association or group is deemed to represent." It is only when that body or group absolutely full that the right is to be taken from them and exercised on their behalf. It is competent to the Lieutenant Governor to reject as often as he pleases a recommendation. Why should ne then limit a hidy empowered by law to make the recommendation to one opportunity? If the four persons named at the meeting of the delegates are not acceptable to the Dacca people in general as represented by the nominees of the District Boards of the Division, there are others who may give their confidence. At any rate, let not the sins of their delegates be visited on the electing Boards.

POLICE reports and Government resolutions say that in Bengal, when the rice-crop fails, certain crimes, especially dacoity and tobbery, increase. A proportion seems to be muntained between increase of robbery and decrease in the production of the staple grain. The inference, therefore, is that robbery is directly induced by hunger. Climatic influences then, or the clouds, are responsible for the crime, do what the Police, which is otherwise highly efficient, might, Considering, however, the features of certain crimes and taking into 72 the good people of Bombay, in discharge of their duties and in account the national character of the people, we are unable to accept this fashionable explanation. The fact is, the existence of a criminal population in Bengal, as in other provinces of India, cannot be denied. For the most part the villages of Bengal are quite unprotected. The low-paid village chowkidars are an exceedingly worthless set of men. Insufficient as their number is, compared with the extent of their beats, it would be something if they were regular in their nightly rounds. Irregularity, however, is the rule with them. During the dark fortnight, they seldom go out, or if they leave their beds, it is for the shortest time possible. Robbers of kinds, from those who are content with things of little value temptingly exposed in unhedged gardens or unwilled houses, to those who make secret and burglatious entries into houses or invade them openly and in numbers, well or ill armed with offensive weapons, are free to ply their respective vocations without let or hindrance. The Bengali is generally timid. Surprised in the midst of his sleep by a number of armed men ready to treat him and his very roughly if he does not surrender his valuables, and well knowing that none of his neighbours would come forward with any assistance, he becomes utterly helpless add unresisting. It should be remembered, however, that they who commit dacoities are Bengalis. If convict returns be studied, these men will generally appear to belong to the lowest castes, such as Bagdis, Domes, Pods, Chandals, Teors, Kauras, with here and there a high caste individual who, without actually assisting the attacks on houses, keeps the gang together, directs its operations, disposes of the plunder and distributes the proceeds. The villagers know who amongst them live by stealing and dacoity Only they have not the courage to denounce them. If they do, there is no end of trouble for them. In the first place, enough evidence would be wanting. Then they would incur the penalty of having brought a serious charge against a subject who is entitled to all the protection that the law can afford. Listly, the denounced individual himself is sure to take vengeance. The safest course, therefore, of maintaining a thorough silence is adopted. The dacoits themselves very generally act with prudence. They commit their depredations in villages distant from their own, so that it is the interest of no body who knows them to utter even a breath of suspicion. The Thuggi Commission had acted on diffierent principles. Individuals who had no ostensible means of livelihood or who were denounced by half-a-dozen respectable neighbours as criminals were lodged in the goal. The result was most satisfactory. For some years after the Commission had closed its labours, the crime of dacoity and highway robbery and even petty thefts, were practically stamped out of the country. Property became safe. Those who through the leniency of neighbours were not incarceicated gave up their criminal practices and settled down either as peaceful cultivators or daylabourers or as chowkidars in private employ. Seeing that cases of daçoity occur in even the metropolitan districts of Bengal, the cry is general for a return to the days of the Thuggi Commission. Doubtless, some innocent men would suffer if general repute were to settle the question of gmit. But the percentage would be very large of real criminals being spotted and lodged in prison so that property would once more be safe in the mofussil. Vigorous measures are loudly called for,

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow-Bazar Street, Calcutta.

(Session 1805-06.)

Lecture by Babu R un Chandra Datta, F C.S., on Monday, the 15th St., at 4 P M Subject: Compounds of Nitrogen with Hydrogen inst., at 4 P.M. Subject: Compounds of Nitrogen with Hydrogen and Oxygen.

Lecture by Dr. Nitratan Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Monday, the 15th inst., at 6 to 8 P.M. Subjects. Practical Zoology—The Fowl. Zoology—Processor.

—Protezoa.

Lecture by Di. D. N. Chatterjee, BA., M.B., C.M., on Tuesday, the 16th inst., at 6 to 8 P. M. Suojects. Histology—Connective Tissue. Physiology—Respiration.

Lecture by Boon Rum Chandra Dutta, F.C.S., Wednesday, the 17th

Lecture by Boon Rim Chandra Dotta, FCS, Wednesday, the 17th inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Prepiration and Properties of Nitric acid.

Lecture by Babin Rajendri Nath Chatterjee, MA, on Wednesday, the 17th inst., at 7-30 P.M. Subject: Hydrostatics—Pascal's Law and the laws of pressure and equilibrium in liquids.

Lecture by Babin Rajendra Dotta, F.C.S., Friday, the 19th inst. at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Chlorine and its Compliand with Hydrogen.

Lecture by D. Nitratan Solkir, MA, M. D., Friday, the 19th inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject: Chemical Physiology—Milk.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 to Physiology—Milk.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 to Physiology—Milk.

General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 2 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAI. SIRCAR, M.D.

Honorary Secretary.

It will not do for the administration to sit with folded hands and say that it is the failure of the staple crop that is responsible for the increase of robbery.

THE little market town of Janai in Sub-division Serampore, is one of those few places within the metropolitan districts which is inhabited by a community owning social allegiance to Brahman chiefs. Ianai has a higher class English School which traces its origin to preuniversity days and which had the Hon'ble J. E. D. Bethune for its patron. That great educationist had honoured this village with two visits, wading on the first occasion through water and mire almost knee-deep and extending over a mile along a pathway branching off from the old Benares Road. In later times, Janua was visited, among others, by such persons connected with the Education Department as Dr. Monat, Mr. Sutcliffe, Mr. Grapel, the Rev. Dr. Kaye, Mr. Pratt, Mr. Woodrow, Mr. Atkinson, and Mr. George Smith (afterwards of the Friend of India), Mr. Sime, and Mr. Trafford of Serampore. Mr. Sutcliffe, in particular, was struck by the fact of the class-rolls of the school numbering none but Mookeriees and Baneriees and Chatteriees and Gangulies with a sprinkling of only Ghoses and Boses and Mitters and Dutts. The system of education followed in the Janai school and which gave it a disunctive feature before the influence of the Calcutta University brought all educational institutions in Bengal to a dead level, was the Training system inaugurated at Glasgow by Daivd Stowe. Its peculiarity consisted in the simultaneous training of the intellectual, the moral, and the physical powers of the boy. After the establishment of the Calcutta University and the high-pressure teaching it has brought in its train, the Janas-school lost its individuality though it maintained its ground tolerably well, measuring its efficiency by its success in the public examinations. Through causes that have no interest for the public a split arose in the managing committee, with the result that a new school was established at Payaragacha within half a mile. The Payaragacha school proved a vigourous youngster, for it's success in the University examinations was decidedly marked, considering the difficulties which it had to encounter. So far as strength of rolls, however, was concerned, both the schools suffered, for the school-going population of the neighbourhood is not large enough to support two rival institutions. After more than six years of separate existence, through the efforts of Babu Abinash Chandia Mookeijee of the well-known Mookeriee family of Janai, the new school has been amalgamated with the old one. The committee of management have been enlarged by the accession of many new members, and it is expected that the amalgamated school will once more take its proper position in the list of such institutions in the metropolitan District. Among other reforms the committee have announced the intention of admitting Mussalman children, of whom about a dozen are aiready on the rolls. There was a good gathering of the local gentry on the occasion and all the speakers who addressed the meeting cordially thanked Babu Abinash Chaudra for his unremitting labours, extending over a year, in bringing about so desniable a result. There can be no doubt that those well-to-do gentlemen of the neighbourhood who have removed their children from Janai to Calcutta will send them back to their own school. Many of these boys distinguish themselves highly in the University Examinations, credit being taken by those schools which send them up, although the Janai school has the honour of grounding their education.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, July 12, 1805

THE CHEAP DEFENCE OF THE NATION.

It is ten years that Captain Andrew Hearsey conceived his idea of a cheap Reserve for the Indian Army. The first occasion on which he spoke out was at the Reception given him by the India Club shortly after his prosecution, by Mr. Laidman, I.C.S., on a charge of defamation. It is a matter of history that that prosecution ended in a miserable fiasco. In replying to the kind sentiments expressed at the Reception, the Captain pointed out how useful the troops of the Native States could, under proper training, be made in the defence of the Indian Empire. He was cheered for the idea, and requested to publish his scheme.

When, in 1886, the Captain wrote his pamphlet on "Army Reorganization with special reference to the question of a Reserve for the Indian Army," the Indian Army had no reserve. Now it has a reserve of 75,000 men fully equal in every respect to the regular Native Infantry, which force, again, in time of need. could easily be raised to 3,50,000. The Reserves have already proved their fitness as soldiers in the recent Chitral campaign. The pamphlet was given a cold reception in India. The prejudice against the writer proved prejudicial to it. They kept a discreet silence over it, probably because,

1. The advice and recommendations had not been put forward by any of the heads of the Military, Political, or Financial Departments.

2. The recommendations had been put forward by a poor and retired officer.

Captain Hearsey was not, however, deterred by this show of neglect. He knew the strength of his cause. The pamphlet was largely circulated in the European countries. The press of France, Austria and Germany spoke favourably of the Captain's suggestions. Much amusement was caused in India by the first lines of an article in one of the French journals in which the writer confounded the Captain's place of residence in India, Mussoorce in the Himalayas, with Missuri in America.

Considering the egregious blunders Anglo-Indians make, this mistake of the French editor was pardonable.

The knowing Anglo-Indians in India, who, reflecting the policy of the Government of the day, would not see any good in the pamphlet, and who probably predicted a failure of the cause from the geographical ignorance of those who saw much in it, were disappointed. The notices in the Continental papers attracted the attention of the Secretary of State for India, who ordered copies of the pamphlet, and enquired of the Government of India as to the practicability of its recommendations. It is not to be supposed that the Indian press was entirely silent. Such of the editors to whom the name of the Captain is enough to rake up all bile and uncharitableness had denounced the scheme as chimerical.

Lord Dufferin was not a Viceroy to be scared away by interested denunciation or sounding phrases. Finding the suggestions valuable, he called for opinions, Before he laid down the reins of Government he had announced, at Patiala, in the cold weather of 1888, the acceptance of the offers of help from Native Princes and the organization of the Imperial Service Troops. General Sir George Greaves, subsequently Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, and Sir Herbert Macpherson, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, both personal friends of Captain Hearsey, were already familiar with his views. The first, when asked, thought very highly of the scheme, while the second said that there was a great deal in the suggestion. The pamphlet must have impressed the Duke of Connaught for he soon after supported the recommendation for the formation of a Military College for the better instruction of Native officers of the Indian Army.

True it is that Load Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, was about this time considering the question of a reserve for the Indian Army. But weak are cured of the desire itself. Not so the strong. A different from the Captain's. He had in view the reserve of the British Army in England, a system not suited to India, and which, if applied to India, would have considerably swelled the military budget which already swallows a large portion of the revenues. Finding the Hearsey scheme eminently practical, the Commander-in-Chief dropped his. He, moreover, from Rangoon where he was touring, sent to Captain Hearsey a complimentary letter of thanks for the pamphlet and, what was more, for the valuable suggestions it contained.

Besides the enrolment of the Feudatories' troops as a reserve, the pamphlet recommended the throwing open the military Order of the Victoria Cross to our sepoys. There was no reason why the Indian black soldiers' claim to this much valued decoration should not be recognized, when Germans, Frenchmen, Spaniards, Italians, Americans and all other nationalities serving in the British army or navy were free to win it.

It may fairly be said that the Government of India have benefitted much by Captain Hearsey's valuable advice and suggestions, not only politically but also financially. Yet, we regret to observe, that that Government have not so much or so little as thanked the Captain for what he has done for the Indian Empire. When he was not deemed worthy of even bare thanks, it was out of the question to find his name in the recent honours list as a kind of recognition of the strength he has added to the Empire—a force capable of immediate expansion. If the Captain had been a subject of any of the European Continental Powers, we make no doubt, he would have long reaped his reward. Any other but he would have been duly honoured. The Captain bears an odious name, and the Government of India are wise:

Now there was a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered a city, yet no man remembered the same poor man.

Then, said I, wisdom is better than strength; nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised and his words not heard,

The words of a wise man are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth fools.

Wisdom is better than weapons of war.

We may mention that the views of Captain Hearsey originally appeared in these columns on the 6th November, 1886, under the heading "The Cheap Defence of the Nation," with which also we head this article. The Captain has made a further suggestion, in a letter which will be found in our last issue. It requires careful consideration.

THE SENSITIVENESS OF POETS.

Love of fame is strong in every breast. The higher the sphere of life, the more ambitious the scheme for its gratification. It is, again, guilty or innocent, according to the character of that scheme. Genghiz Khan or Tamerlane, raising pyramids of human heads as trophies of every new conquest, acted as much from desire of fame as any other crowned head whose beneficence to mankind shines from the pages of history. Universal though the passion is, its gratification depends more on luck than wisdom and exertion. It has been said that if Casar and Cromwell had exchanged countries or ages, the one would have been a pious centurion and the other the sheriff of his county. The same cannot be said of poets. Horace, if born in England, would have sung as well in English as he has in Latin. Hatez, if born in India, would have produced as fine verses in Sanskrit as his own songs in Persian.

When luck proves adverse and the desire of same is not gratified, the disappointment acts differently on different minds. The the lines on which he meant to proceed were mountain current, opposed by a boulder, either washes it down or overleaps it in fury. Memorable were Distaeli's words upon the failure of his first speech in Parliament. He lived to make good his prediction. His success was complete and both Houses did afterwards listen to him with rapt attention. Poets are peculiarly sensitive. Every member of the brotherhood f thinks that he is deserving of applause for every trifle he puts forth. Contemporary readers are generally unwilling to acknowledge such pretensions. It is interesting to note the frame of mind of different poets of different climes and ages upon finding the world unwilling to endorse their own estimate of their genius. Some become so depressed as to absolutely give up courting the Muses. Some fret and fume, calling the world names. Some have been known to have burnt their writings in rage, resolved to deprive the world of their pleasure. Others, however, conscious of their own powers, have waited with unruffled minds, strong in the conviction that the time would come when their writings would be appreciated and their images placed in the temple of fame. They have even rebuked the world with grave dignity. We will first name Bhavabhuti. Finding himself neglected, and probably lashed by the critics of the day, the great Sanskrit dramatist, conscious of his genius, retaliated on those who disregarded or found fault with him. His vengeance was not characterised by the malice of a Pope or the audacity of a Dryden. It was not even a dignified prayer after Milton for a fit audience though few. It was a proud self-assertion of power, a withering contempt for his detractors, a calm expectation of appreciation by a kindred spirit born or to be born. It was no attempt to represent hostile critics or more favoured authors as princes of bores descring to rule a kingdom of dunces. Here is how the poet nobly rebuked an unappreciating world :---

Ye nama kechidiba nah prathayantyavajnam, Jananti te kimapi tan prati naisha yatnah; Utpatsyatesti mama kopi samanadharma, Kalobyam niravadbirvipula cha prithvi.

"Those men who express a disregard for us, know very little; this effort is not for them. There may arise in the future, or there may be at the present moment, some one with accomplishments equal to mine (and, therefore, capable of appreciating me), for time is eternal, and the world very wide."

In the entire range of literature, eastern or western, there is, perhaps, not another instance of similar pride and reliance on one's own merits, barring a very poor effort in an obscure quarter in consequence of which Bhavabhuti can no longer be said to enjoy the singular glory of having cherished such sentiments. It was reserved for the author, extensively unknown, of Bungadbipapardjaya to adopt the verses of the great Brahman poet on the reverse of his title-page.

The pride displayed by Bhavabhuti in his Uttara-charita was scarcely less audacious though it involved no rebuke to anybody. There he calls himself a Brahman whom the goddess of speech follows as an obedient wife. Kalidasa was cast in a different mould. That prince of dramatists, who has eclipsed the fame of all Indian poets before him or after, and who is inferior to no poet in at least the culling of all that is beautiful in nature, finding himself contemued, gently remonstrated with the world, only to teach not to reprove it for its folly. In the prologue of his Malazikágnimitra, he says:---

> Puránamityeva na sádhu sarvam, Nachápi kávyam navamityavadyam ; Santah parikshyanyatarad bhanjante, Mudah parapratyayancyabudhih.

" All that is old is not good; nor is a poem, that is new, faulty. The wise prefer this or that after adequate examination. The fool, however, suffers his understanding to be led by the beliefs of other people."

Entering the field of English literature, we notice the same regard of the world or the censures cast upon them. Disappointed of fame, though none so worthy of it as he, Milron spoke of fame as the last infirmity of noble mind. His prayer to the Muse for a fit audience though few, was prompted by his own gentle nature. The humility and modesty of Goldsmith was proverbial. Finding how contemporary poetry was looked upon in his day, he wrote in his Traveller of merit as "weeping unknown." Though he was greeted, on the publication of that poem, with a fair measure of praise, yet it was much less than what he had expected. Hence his fine apostrophe to Poetry at the conclusion of his Deserted Village. The sentiments were his, though the lines are believed to have been polished by his friend Johnson. It is an humble converse between the Muse and her votary, without abuse of any body in which the votary pours out his heart to the listening goddess. Cowper, too, had to complain of neglect. The poet of Onley was too shy to earn any sort of notoriety by those vulgar arts which are sometimes practised by even men of merit when the game is the acquisition of fame. He had praised Chatham. But Chatham did nothing for him. He was not at all sorry for the neglect of the great. This, however, 18 his reproof for those who were unwilling to judge of him by his merits, and who, in according praise, were led either by idleness, or by sound and fury, instead of sense.

Some to the fascination of a name Surrender judgment hoodwink'd. Some the style Infatuates, and through labyrinths and wilds Of error leads them, by a tune entranc'd. While sloth seduces more, too weak to bear The insupportable fatigue of thought; And swallowing therefore without pause of choice The total grist unsifted, husks and all.

Cowper has very successfully hit some of the weaknesses of humanity in this passage. Byron's was a keenly sensitive and rebellious nature. The child who could not bear the chidings of a mother was not likely to put up with the lash of the critic. Accordingly, when his juvenile poems were harshly reviewed in the great literary periodical of the day,---the notice was from the caustic pen of Brougham, -- the whole force of Byron's mind was roused. Without being at all depressed, he was filled with indignation, and the result was one of the keenest satires in the English language which the poet in after years wished to suppress.

THE FOR DYCE RESOLUTION.

Read,---Government Resolution No. 1989 J., dated 9th April Read, Government Resolution for the purpose of enquiry into a spointing a Commission for the purpose of enquiry into the purpose of enquiry into the purpose of commission which had been brought against Mr. C. A. charges of corruption which had been brought against Mr. C. A. W. Fordyce, Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Dacca.

The report of the Commissioners, Mr. C. W. Bolton and Babu

Peary Mohan Banerjee, dated 8th June 1895, together with record of evidence and miscellaneous papers submitted by them.

The Lieutenant-Governor has carefully considered the Report of the Commission which was appointed for the purpose of deciding on Mr. Fordyce's firness for retention in the public services. The on Mr. Fordyce's fitness for recention in the public services. In Procedure followed by the Commission, with the approval of Government, was first to enquire into specific charges of taking illegal gratifications, next to record evidence of general report in Dacca regarding Mr. Fordyce's conduct, and finally to examine generally his judicial work at Dacca.

2. Six cases of alleged corruption have been thoroughly enquired into: the evidence on both sides has seen fully taken down and a careful judicial finding has been recorded in each case by the Commission. The Lieutenant-Governor agrees that it was unnecessary to extend the enquiry to a larger number of cases. A single instance of corruption fully proved—such as the second case in which Thakur Das Banikya was concerned, a case of flagrant injustice, tyranny and extortion --- would have been sufficient to establish Mr. Fordyce's unfitness for the public service. The Commission have found that in all six cases the charge of corruption is distinctly proved. It is unnecessary to recite the facts which are set forth in detail in the report, but it is observed that in two cases money was taken from both the complainant and the accused, and in one case from a second batch of accused subsequently summoned : the six cases therefore resolve themselves into nine specific charges. Sir Charles Elliot has carefully examined the evidence and considervariety of sentiments with which poets have looked upon the dis- ed the judicial comments of the Commission thereon, and does not entertain the slightest doubt that on all the counts on which enquiry was made, Mr. Fordyce has been justly found guilty of bribery and corruption.

3. It is alleged by Mr. Fordyce that the pleaders and mukh-tears of Dacca have conspired to get up these charges against him. But this allegation is rejected by the Commission as absolutely untounded. No evidence of the existence of a vindictive motive for the action taken by the members of the Bar was adduced before the Commission. It is shown that many months before the pleaders and mukhtears submitted their memorial to Government, public attention had been drawn by the local press to the rumours circulating regarding Mr. Fordyce, and there is evidence that such rumours were current a few months after he joined at Dacca. Pleaders and mukhtears also deposed before the Commission that specific acts of corruption were brought to their notice from time to time by their clients. The Commission have placed in record in submitting their memorial to Government, that the pleaders were actuated solely and entirely by a desire to put an end to the grave scandal which they believed existed. They also declate that the principal witnesses before them gave their evidence naturally and truthfully, and that the cases appeared to have been laid before them in a thoroughly honest manner.

4. The evidence as to general report is based upon the state-ments of many of the chief residents of Dacca, including Nawab Khwaja Ahsanullah Bahadur, C. I. E, and several members of the District and municipal Boards, Honorary Magistrass and Zemindars one and all speak to the fact that a widespread rumour prevailed in Dacca that Mr. Fordyce took money from patties appearing before him, and few mentioned instances in which they were actually told of the payment of money by the persons from whom it was taken. The Commission remark: "There is thus no One of the was taken. The Commission remark: "Incre is ones no question whatsoever that Mr. Fordyce was generally believed in Dacca to be corrupt, and to be so, not rarely and occasionally, but constantly and systematically." The Leutenant-Governor agrees that it is in the highest degree improbable that such a belief should have been without any foundation, and considers that its existence raises a stong presumption of the truth of the specific charges of corruption.

The Commission have furnished, in the appendix to their report, particulars of 17 judicial records which were examined by them, with their remarks thereon, and Mr. Fordyce's explanations. In addition, they examined less minutely the record of all cases disposed of by Mr. Fordyce during his service in Dacca. They point out many irregularities and defects in procedure, and sum up this out many irregularities and delects in procedure, and sum aposition of their report by observing :--- On the whole we think that there is much in the records of Mr. Fordyce's cases generally, which tends to support the conclusion that he was systematically corrupt

- The Commission conclude their report with the following o. And Commission conclude their report with the following words: — "Having completed all sections of our report, we have now, in conclusion, to state our finding on the specific question referred to us, that is, whether Mi. Fordyce is or is not a fit person to be retained in Government service. After the opinions which we have expressed in reviewing the evidence on the specific charges of corruption preferred against Mr. Fordyce, our answer to that question is obvious. We are clearly of opinion that Mr. Fordyce is entirely unfit to be retained in public service. He has been proved to our satisfaction to have, with the assistance of his servant Rajab Ali, carried on a systematic course of extorting money by intimidation from parties concerned in criminal cases heard by him, and his further employment by the Government is impossible. We believe him to be possessed of fair ability, but we have also no doubt of his thorough want of principle. In view of the very serious nature of the conduct of which we have found him guilty, the question whether he should be criminally prosecuted may again suggest itself. Our opinion on this question has not been desired, but we venture to remark that the Government was, in our opinion. well advised not to institute a criminal prosecution, and that it will be wise to adhere to that decision. The direct evidence remains that of accomplices, or persons who may be held to be such, and there is not much corroborated evidence which would be admissible in a judicial trial.

 7. The Lieutenant-Governor has no hesitation in respect of the
- orden to be passed on this report. Such men as Mr. Fordyce are a conker in the Executive Branch of the Provincial service, and it is impossible to inflict any other punishment than dismissal. Lieutenant-Governor concurs with the verdict of the Commission that Mr. Fordyce is entirely unfit to be retained in the public service, and directs that he be dismissed from the employ of Government with effect from the date when he was placed under suspension.
- His Honour desires, in conclusion, to acknowledge the careful, exhaustive and thoroughly impartial manner in which the Commission have conducted their enquiry, and thanks the members,
 Mr. Bolton and Babu Peary Mohan Banerjee, for their complete

H. J. S. Cotton.
Chief Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal.

CONVENTION BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND AUSTRIA-HUNGARY FOR THE ESTABLISH-MENT OF INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT

Signed at Vienna, April 24th, 1893.
Ratifications exchanged at Vienna, April 24th, 1894.

[The Convention with the correspondence on the subject is published in the Gasette of India of July 6, 1895. By an Order in Council dated the 11th May, 1895, the Convention has been made applicable to India.]

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, etc., and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, etc., and Apostolic King of Hungary, animated with the desire to secure in the most complete manner, within their respective dominions, the rights of authors, or their legal representatives over their literary or artistic works, have resolved to conclude a Convention to that effect, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, etc., the Right Hosourable Sir Augustus Berkeley Paget, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, a Member of H'r Britannic Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraodinary and Plempotentiary to His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, etc., etc., etc.,

His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, etc., and Apostolic King of Hungary, the Count Gustave Kalnoky de Korospatak, Knight of the Golden Fleece, Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen, Knight of the Order of Leopold, His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty's Privy Councillor and Chamberlain, Minister of the Imperial House and of Foreign Affairs, General of Cavalry, etc., etc., etc.;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles :

ARTICLE I.

/ Authors of literary or artistic works and their legal representatives, including publishers, shall enjoy reciprocally, in the dominions of the High Contracting Parties, the advantages which are, or may be, granted by law therefor the protection of works of literature or art.

Consequently, authors of literary or artistic works which have been first published in the dominions of one of the High Contract-ing Parties, as well as their legal representatives, shall have in the dominions of the other High Contracting Party the same protection and the same legal remedy against all infringement of their rights as if the work had been first published in the country where the infringement may have taken place.

In the same manner, the authors of literary or artistic works and their legal representatives, who are subjects of one of the High Contracting Parties, or who reside within its dominions, shall in the dominions of the Contracting Party enjoy the same protection and the same legal remedies against all intringements of their rights as though they were subjects of or residents in the State in the infringement may have taken place.

These advantages shall only be reciprocally guaranteed to authors and their legil representatives when the work in question is also protected by the laws of the State where the work was first published, and the duration or protection in the other country shall not exceed that which is granted to authors, and their legal representatives in the country where the work was first published. ARTICLE II

The right of translation forming part of the copyright, the protection of the right of translation to assured under the conditions laid down by this Convention. If ten years after the expiry of the year in which a work to be proteted in Her Maj sty's dominious on the basis of this Convention has appeared, no translation in English has been published, the right of translating the work into English shall no longer within those dominions exclusively belong to the author.

In the case of a book published in numbers, the aforesaid period of ten years shall commence at the end of the year in which each number is published.

ARTICLI III.

Authorized translations are protected as original works. They consequently enjoy the full protection granted by this Convention against the unauthorized reproduction of original works.

It is understood that in the case of a work for which the translating right has fallen into the public domain, the translator cannot oppose the translation of the same work by other writers.

ARTICLE IV.

The expression "literary or artistic works" comprehends books, pamphies and all other writings; dramatic or diamatico-musical works, musicalicompositions, with or without words; works of design, painting, sculpture, and engraving, lithographs, illustrations, geographical charts, plus, sketches, and plastic works relating to geography, topography, architecture, or science in general; in fact, every production whatsoever in the literary, scientific, or artistic domain which can be published by any mode of impression or reproduction.

ARTICLE V.

In the British Empire, and in the Kingdoms and States represented in the Austrian Reichsrath, the enjoyment of the right by the present Convention is subject only to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the law of that State in which the work is first published; and no further formalities or conditions shall be required in the other country.

Consequently, it shall not be necessary that a work which has obtained legal protection in one country should be registered, or copies thereof deposited in the other country, in order that the remedies against infringement may be obtained which are granted in the other country to works first published there.

In the dominions of the Hungarian Crown the enjoyment of these rights is subject, however, to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the laws and regulations both of Great Britain and of Hungary.

ARTICLE VI.

In order that the authors of works protected by the present Conan order trac time authors of works protected as such, and be, consequently, admitted to institute proceedings in respect of the infringement of copyright before the Courts of the other State, it will suffice that their name be indicated on the work in the accustomed manner.

The Tribunals may, however, in cases of doubt, require the production of such further evidence as may be required by the laws of the respective countries.

For anonymous or pseudonymous works, the publisher whose name is indicated on the work is entitled to protect the rights belonging to the author. He is, without other proof, reputed the legal representative of the anonymous or pseudonymous author, until the latter or his legal representative has declared and proved his rights.

ARTICLE VII.
The provisions of the present Convention cannot in any way derogate from the right of each of the High Contracting Parties to control, or to prohibit by, measures of domestic legislation or police the circulation, representation, exhibition, or sale of any work or production. Bach of the High Contracting Parties reserves also its right to prohibit the importation into its own territory of works which, according to its internal Laws, or the stipulations of Treaties with other States, are or may be declared to be illicit reproductions.

ARTICLE VIII.

The provisions of the present Convention shall be applied to literature or artistic works produced prior to the date of its coming into effect, subject, however, to the limitations prescribed by the tollowing Regulations:

(a) In the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy-

Copies completed before the coming into force of the present Convention, the production of which has been hitherto allowed, can also be circulated in future.

In the same manner, appliances for the reproduction of works, such as stereotypes, wood-blocks, and engraved plates of every description, such as lithographers' stones, if their production has not hitherto been prohibited, may continue to be used during a period of four years from the coming into force of the present Convention.

The distribution of such copies, and the use of the said appliances, is, however, only permitted if an inventory of the said copies and appliances is taken by the Government in question, in consequence of an application of the interested party, within three months from the coming into force of the present Convention, and if these copies and appliances are marked with a special stamp.

Dramatic and dramatico-musical works, or musical compositions legally performed before the coming into force of the present Convention, can also be performed in the future.

(b) In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland—
The author and publisher of any literary or artistic work first produced before the date at which this Convention comes into effect shall be entitled to all legal remedies against infringement; provided that where any person has before the date of the publication of the Order in Council putting this Convention into effect, lawfully produced any work in the United Kingdom, any rights or interests arising from or in connection with such Production, which are subsisting and valuable at the said date, shall not be diminished or prejudiced.

ARTICLE IX.

The provisions of the present Convention shall apply to all the Colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, excepting to those hereinafter named, that is to say, except to---

India. The Dominion of Canada. Newfoundland. The Cape. New South Wales.

Victoria. Queensland. Tasmania, South Australia. Western Australia New Zealand.

Provided always that the provisions of the present Convention shall apply to any of the above-named Colonics or foreign possessions on whose behalf notice to that effect shall have been given by Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at the Court of His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present Convention. ARTICLE X.

The present Convention shall remain in force for ten years from the day on which the ratifications are exchanged; and in ease neither of the two High Contracting Parties shall have given notice twelve months before the expiration of the said period of ten years of their intention of terminating the present Convention, it shall remain in force until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given such

Her Britannic Majesty's Government shall also have the right to denounce the Convention in the same manner, on behalf of any of the Colonies or foreign possessions mentioned in Article IX, separately.

ARTICLE XI.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Vienna as soon as possible. shall be exchanged at Vienna as soon as possible. It shall come into effect ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the Laws of the High Contracting Parties res-

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Convention, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Vienna, the 24th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three.

(Signed) A. B. PAGET. Kalnoky. (L.S.) (L.S.)

SEVEN POUNDS IN ONE WEEK.

NOT every man who is thin would thank you for fattening him. He doesn't want to be fat and for very good reasons. Unnecessary fat is a load to carry about; it interferes with a man's power to work, shortens his wind, and dulls his wits.

his wind, and dulls his wits.

Yet, on the other hand, a certain amount of flesh is needed for health and comfort. For example: A man five feet high should weight about 120lbs,; and man five feet six inches, 145lbs. It is a regular accending scale. The insurance companies allow a variation of 7 per cent, above or below it, and beyond those limits charge an extra premium. One shouldn't be much over or under his proper weight if he wants to be sound and hearty—and we all do want that.

Now we will tell you how Mr. Thomas Crosby, being under weight,

Now we will tell you how Mr. Thomas Crosby, being under weight, gained seven points in a week. He had lost 1½ stone, which is too much off for a man who was never fleshier than he naturally ought to be. It was this way. He was right enough up to May, 1891. At that time he began to feel if and out of sorts. He had a nasty taste in his mouth—like rotten eggs, he says—and a thick, slimy stuff came on his guins and teeth. His appetite failed, and what he did eat was, as you might say, under compulsion; and right afterwards he would have great pain in his stoniach and chest. Plainly, something was amiss with him in that region. He was often dazy, and cold childs ran over him as though he were threatened with fever. Of course we should expect a man wino is handled in this way to lose strength. Mr. Crosby lost strength. In fact, he got so weak and nervous that he shook all over, and his hands trembled as if a current of electricity were running through him.

lost strength. In fact, he got so weak and nervous that he shook all over, and his hands trembled as if a current of electricity were running through him.

To use his nown words: "I rapidly lost flesh, was 1½ stone lighter, and could hardly walk about. Once my parents thought I was dying, and sent in haste for the doctor. I saw two doctors in Epworth and one at Haxey, but they were not able to help me. Our vicar, Rev. Mr. Overton, recommended me to the Lincoln Infirmary, where I attended for eight weeks as an outdoor patient, without benefit.

"Soon afterwards Mr. Sn. rp, a chemist, at Epworth, spoke to me of the virtues of a medicine known as Another Seigel's Curative Syrup. Being interested in what he said, lieft off trying other things and negan taking this Syrup. It a few diys I felt hetter, and presently I gained seven pounds in a week. At that rate I soon got back to my work, and have had the best of health ever since. I tell these facts to everybody, and am perfectly willing they should be published. Yours truly (Signed), Tom CROSHY, Ferry Road, Epworth, via Donicaster, December 23rd, 1892."

After reading Mr. Crosby's story we scarcely need to ask why he lost flesh. The minute he stopped eating and digesting his usual allowance of food he began to fall away. Trees, they sny, grow as much from the air by means of their leaves, as they do from the soil, But men don't. They've got to be built up through their stomachs. Indigestion and dyspepsia (Mr. Crosby's complaint) stops this process and poisous those who have it, besides. That accounts for all the painful and dangerous symptoms our friend speaks of. The doctors do what they can, but, unluckily, they don't possess the medicine that goes to the bottom of this disease and cures it. The remedy is Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, and hothing else, so far as we know, It restores digestion, and digestion covers the boutes with fat enough for health and good looks.

WANTED a Graduate, strong in English, as Second Teacher for the Janai Frange School. Pay Rs. 45 per month, with frequenters, and good prospects of incresse of pay.

Apply, with testimonials, to the Secretary,
Janat Training School, Janat.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1805

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

OF

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

BY

F. H. SKRINE, cs.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alta,

- 1. A portrait of the Doctor.
- 2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana.
- 3. About 225 pages of original essays from his brittant pen.
 - 4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE :

To registered subscribers paying in ... Rs 5 advance To other subscribers and ordinary ... Rs. 6 purchasers

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Manager, "An Indian Journalist," and the both of the Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,— Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque

cheque

has been remitted per money order

To be legibly Name..... written Address..... 1895. The

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chilpore Road, Fouzdari Balakhana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Suigeon, Acconcheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

country. SPECIFICS for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by inegularities and indiscretions of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Plescriptions, are transmitted on application. are transmitted on application. Freetingans, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full ac-

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

GENUINE HOM(EOPATHY.

A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S.,

Homæopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or ersonally daily at his residence, 30-1, Coloutolah Street, Calcutta

Lady Elliott Portrait Memorial Committee.

Anan Arthur Hon, Justice Beverley Hon, C. E. Buckland W. D. Cruncksnank Baron Gaerter Col. Hules, 6th B. I. A. Macdonald David McLaren Mann Allan Arthur Baron Gaerter
Col. Hules, 6th B. I.
A. Macdonald
David McLaien MorriHon. P. Playfair.

S. E. J. Clarke H. H. The Maharaja Darbhanga, K.C I.E.

W. O. Bell-Irving

A.F.M. Abdur Rahman A. Sunson.
J. O'B Saunders A. H. Wallis.

J. O.B. Saunders [A. H. Wallis, Maharaja Sir J. M. Tagore, K. C. S. I. Pressidant—Allan Arthur. Hon. Treasurer—J. O'B. Saunders. Hon. Secretary—David McLaren Morrison. At the meeting of Committee held at the Chamber of Commerce on the 19th January, it was decided to have a picture of Lay Elhott painted, any surplus to go towards a personal present.

All subscriptions to be sent to the HON. TREASURER,

9, Hare Street, Calcutta,

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE.

- R
 Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption,
 Wills &c.* Price

 No student or practitioner should be without a count of the CEEAR
- be without a copy of this GREAT
- (Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas." (Sd.) Nana Bhai Haiidas,"

 Bengali translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshiai, 4 Pice ... 2 8

 Bengali Translation of the Dattakachandiika,† Pice 0 8

 The Evidence Act with notes in

 Bengali,† Pice 1 0

 The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengali,† Pice ... 4 0

 Principles of Zemindari Management and Book-keeping in Bengali 0 10

 First Lessons in English for Ben-

- rust Lessons in English for Ben-
- gan noys, Price ... 8. Bharat Sasan Pranah*

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5. CONTENTS.

- Historical Analysis of the evolution of
- religious systems.
 Definition of the term " religion."
- Definition of the term "religion."
 The problems of the philosophy of religion and then solutions, old and new.
 (a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tortoise, and a boar (b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the secrifice of animals, and the huming of ghee or incense &c. &c. &c. &c.
- and the buning of give or incense &c. &c. &c. &c. &c. The weapons offensive and defensive of religious teachers. The power of fine words. The act of becoming a prophet. The cumulative effect of hardswearing for each.

- for ages.
- Specimens of Phranised history. Brahmmed and Christian priesteraft
- compared.

 The artificial miseries of men caused by
- IO. religion. Tyranny and taxation of religion
- The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
- man's opportunity.
 Swindling as a fine art.
 New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
 The great prophets of the world and their doings.
 Probable origin of the Saiva religion.
- 15.
- Tantric mysticism and abominations. 17. * To be nad of Messrs. Thacker Spink &
- Co., only. † To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradhani Agency, No. 11, Raja Nabakiishna's Street, Calcutta.

tanic Medicine Co. I, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

CAUTION!

Ir having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (202, 4 annas, 8 annas or 9/2d, 12 annas or 1s. 1/2d. and Rs. 2 or 2s. 9d) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really are

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Ceylon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUTTA.

NOTICE-Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee tates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

BY SARADA PRASAD BANERJEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE For 1895.

Having the largest sale of all similar works,

ENGLISH PREPARATORY COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES

This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th CLASSES INDIA READERS NO. 1

FOR 6th & 7th CLASSIS

These books are of remarkably simple style

These books are of remarkably simple style and quite suited to Indian students.

The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P. and Ondo, the Punjab, Madras, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Burma, invited to the above publications of un que

To be had of S. K. LAHIRI & Co., College Square, Cancutta.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF

	MEMORIAL FUND.	n .
ı.	His Highness The Maharaja of Dur-	Rs.
2.	bhanga K.C.I.E.,	,000
3.	His Highness the Nawab Bahadur of	,000
4.	Moorshedabad, Amrul Omra, G.C I E. His Highness the Nawab of Junagadu,	800
5.	His Highness the Maharaja Bahadui	500
6.	of Cooch Behar, G.C.E Nawab Bahadur Sir K. Abdul Gham, K.C.S.L. and Nawab Bahadur K.	500
-	Ashan Ulla, C.I E	500
7. 8.	Nawab Azam Yar Jung Bahadur	500
9. 10.	Kuan Danadar Duard mauddin, Cale.,	500 300
11	Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mo- han Tagore, K.C.S.L	250
12. 13.	Messrs, Mackinnon, Mackenzie & Co.	200 200
14.	Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosein Ali Mirza Bahadur	150
15.	Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab Syed Zamul Abdın Khan Bahadur
16. 17.		140 1 0 0
18.		100
	dur, K.C.I.E.,	100
19.	Han Kasım Anff	100
21	Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir H. Brackenbury, K.C.B., Babu Jai Gobind Law	100
22 23,	The Honble Mr. Justice Guru Das	100
24	Banerjee The Homble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose	50 51
25 26.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan	50
27. 28.	Bahadur, C.S.I Maharajkumai Benoya Krishna The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve-	50 50
29.	lyan The Hon'ble Mouly: Abdul Jabbar	50
30.	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishon of	50
ji.	Calcuita Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I E., Nawab Jahandar Meetza Nawab Huzoor Mura The Hou'ble W. C. Bonnetjee Nawab Syed Ameer Husein Syed Amel Huda V. W. C.S.	50 50
32 33.	Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Muza	50
34 35	The Hou'ble W. C. Bonnergee	50 50
36.	ayeu munu muna, may, c.a.,	50
37 38.	J. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S.,	50 50
39.	Sir Alexander Miller	50
40. 41.	Moulvi Mahinudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	32
42	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy	25 25
43 44.	Kumar Dinendra Notain Roy Babu rPashupatty Nath Bose	25 25
45.	Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy	25
46. 47.	Raja Sir Somindia Mohan Tagore,	25
48.	Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury	25 25
49.	Babu Rama Nath Ghose	25
50. 51.	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar	25 25
52. 53.	R. Belchambers, Esq Rija Sunja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhing	25
54.	Rai Budreedas Mukim Bahadur	25
55 56.	Babu Gopal Led Seal Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam	25 25
57-	Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam A. F. Apcar, Esq H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S.	25
58. 59	Lord William Berestora, K.C.I.E.,	25 25
60. 61.		25
62.	Additional Chairman Rasion Ras	25 20
03 64.	Prince Mahomed Bakhtyar Shah Bahon Smendra Nath Pal Chamber	20
05.	" Aukhoy Kumar Ghose	20 20
66. 67.	Moulvi Imadd Ali Rai Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar	20 20
68.	D. Panioty, Esq	20
69. 70	Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-law Moultr Syed Ashruffuldin Ahmed,	20 20
71.	Khan Bahadur	17.
72.	T. Inglis, Esq., c.s	16

73.	A. H. Giles, Esq		16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq., C.S.		16
75.	The Hon'ble Moulvi Strajul	Islam
,,	Khan		16
76	Moulvi Serajuddeen		15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq		15
78.	H. A. D. Phimps, Esq., C.s.		10
79.	Baboo Kiran Chunder Roy		10
80.	E. N. Baker, Esq		10
.18	Baboo Doyal Chand Bose		10
82.	" Madan Mohun Bose	•••	10
83.	77 1 1 17 hours		10
84.	Moulvi Synd Akram Hossain	•••	10
		•••
85.	Moulvi Azız Anmud	•••	10
86.	Rai Kanyelal Dey Bahadoor	•••	10
87.	H. Holmwood, Esq	•••	10
88.		•••	10
89.			5
90.	" Sarodaprasad Ghose		5
S	abscriptions will be thankfully r	eceived	by
the	Honorary Joint Secretaries,
RAI	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	Bahadu	JR,
	4, British Indian Street, C	Calculta	, and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMA
	Barrister

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

16, Taltolla, Calcuita.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nuckel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours withone winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—I keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sinser Reg. from Dunding says:—I have sold it for Rs. 16. x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sinser Reg. from Dunding says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mi. T. B. Scott of Patina Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. I-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. I-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emetalds, at Rr. 18 o. Mr. G. Smith, Silt lispector from Sankutta, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and tuby at Rs. 30. Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hinting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13 Pie. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I gold Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Serigeant for Rs. 28 x Pte. H. C. Bishon of L. F. L. Regt, from Kamptee says:—For the first one I gold a factor, Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed for 6 of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P. R. Scott of Patina One Bombay. Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO, BOMBAY.

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distinctsing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications mide at home by the pattent once in two weeks. A painphile texplaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A.

HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St.
TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suggesting; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA; FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs
Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend.

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

. Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate &

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

If paid in advance,

Same las		•		1.
Yearly		•••	• • • •	Кs	12
Haif-year	y	•••	•••	,,	7
Quarterly		•••	•••		4
Montany				Кe	1-8
Single or :	sample	Copv		Ans.	0-8
	If no	it paid in ad	vance.
Yearly		٠		Rs.	18
Halt yearl	y	• • • •	•••		10-8
Quarterly		•••	•••	"	6∙0
Monthly	•••				2-4
Single or	sample	Сору		Ans.	0-13
No add	monai	charge for t	postage	or p	cov

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of a mans a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) it be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphleti (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reii & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellingto. Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

POLITICS LITERATURE SOCIETY REVIEW O F AND

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 684.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

TO SWALLOWS ON THE EVE OF DEPARTURE. BY B. SIMMONS.

"The day before V--- 's departure for the last time from the country-it was the 4th of August, one of the hottest days of the season-as evening fell, he strolled with an old school-fellow through the cool green avenues and leafy arcades of the neighbouring park, where his friend amused him by pointing out to his attention vast multitudes of swallows that came swarming from all directions to settie on the roofs and gables of the manor-house. This they do for several days preparatory to their departing, in one collected body, to more genial climates." - MS. Memoir.

Joyous birds ! preparing In the clear evening light To leave our dwindled summer day For latitudes more bright ! How gay must be your greeting,

By southern fountains meeting,

To mess no faithful wing of all that started in your flight !

11.

Every clime and season Fresh gladness brings to you. Howe'er remote your social throngs Their varied path pursue ; No winds nor waves dissever-No dusky veil'd FOREVER, Frowneth across your fearless way in the empyrean blue. *

111.

Mates and merry brothers Were ye in Arctic hours, Mottling the evening beam that sloped Adown old Gothic towers ! As blythe that sunlight dancing Will see your pinions' glancing Scattering afar through Tropic groves the spicy bloom in showers !

1V.

Haunters of palaced wastes ! † From king-forlorn Versailles

"They all quit together, and fly for a time east or west, possibly in wait for stragglers not yet arrived from the interior—they then take directly to the south, and are soon lost sight of altogether for the altotted period of their absence. Their rapidity of flight is well known, and the 'murder-niming eye' of the most experienced sportsman will seidom avail against the swallow; hence they themselves seldom far prey to the raptorial birds."—Cuvier, edited by Griffiths. Swallows are long-lived; they have been known to live a number of years in

"In the fanciful language of Chateaubriand, "This daughter of a king (the swallow) still seeins attached to grandeur; she passes the summer amid the ruins of Versailles, and the winter among those of Thebes."

To where, round gateless Thebes, the winds Like monarch voices wail, Your tribe capricious ranges, Reckless of glory's changes, Love makes for ye a merry home amid the ruins pale.

Another day, and ye From knosp and turret's brow Shall, with your fleet of crowding wings, An's viewless billows plough, With no keen-fang'd regretting Our darken'd hill-sides quitting, -Away in fond companionship as cheerily as now ! VI.

Was for the soul-endued-The clay-enthralled mind-Leaving, unlike you, favor'd birds t Its all-its all behind, Woe for the exile mourning,

To banishment returning-A mateless bild wide torn apart from country and from kind !

VII.

This moment blest as ye, Beneath his own home-trees, With friends and fellows girt around, Up springs the western breeze, Bringing the parting weather-Shall all depart together? Ah, no !-he goes a wretch alone upon the lonely seas

VIII

To him the mouldering tower-The pillar'd waste, to him A broken-hearted music make Until his eyelids swim. None heeds when he complaineth.

Nor where that brow he leaneth A mother's lips shall bless no more sinking to slumber dim.

Winter shall wake to spring, And 'mid the fragrant grass The daffodil shall watch the rill Like Beauty by her glass. But woe for him who pmeth Where the clear water shineth,

With no voice near to say-How sweet those April evenings pass !

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

X.

Then while through Nature's heart Love freshly burns again, Hither shall ye, plumed travellers, Come trooping o'er the main; The self-same nook disclosing Its nest for your reposing

That saw you revel years ago as you shall revel then *

XI.

-Vour human brother's lot ! A few short years are gone-Back, back like you to early scenes-Lo ! at the threshold-stone, Where ever in the gloaming Home's angels watch'd his coming, A stranger stands, and stares at him who sighing passes on.

XII

Joy to the travail worn! Omnific purpose lies Even in his bale as in your bliss, Careerers of the skies ! When sun and earth, that cherish'd Your tribes, with you have perish'd,

A home is his where partings more shall never dim the eyes. - Blackwood.

WEEKLYANA.

THE Parthenon is to be repaired if not restored. The Archæological Society at Athens has decided to prevent the temple from further running into ruin. The repairs are to be on the lines guggested by the emment German Professor Durm. He and the English and the French archæologists, Mr. F. C. Penrose, who has a work on Athenian Architecture, and M. Magne have been requested to give their views and advice on the details of the proposed repairs. We hope they will be better than those to the Taj at Agra.

JUNE 24, the anniversary of the murder of President Carnot, was solemnly observed at Pans. President Faure went in state to the Panthéon and laid a wreath upon the tomb. He was followed by an enormous number of persons who also deposited a very large number of wreaths. The ruling President also attended a service at the Madeleme held in memory of the murdered President.

THEY have perfected a plan for weekly shipment, in refrigerator cars and cold-storage chambers, of cream and butter, from Canada to England.

An English newspaper to be called the German Times is to be started in Berlin.

A RAILWAY from Russia into Persia, passing through Baku, Resht and Tabriz, is under consideration.

On June 26, at the Imperial Institute, the Prince of Wales opened the fifth International Railway Congress. There were present delegates from various parts of the world. The Prince welcomed them on behalf of the Queen, himself and the great railway companies of England. Among other things, he said .

"Nearly seventy years ago the first railway that was constructed in the world, that between Stockton and Darlington, was opened. Five years later, in 1830, under circumstances of the most tragic kind, the first railway constituted under parliamentary powers and by money publicly subscribed was magnitude for passenger traffic between Manchester and Liverpool, and a ceremony of great interest and greater promise wis marted by the lamentable accident which led to the death of Mr. Huskisson. In the sixty years which have since elapsed, the development of railways has progressed throughout the enapsed, the development of randways has progressed information that world, and we have fitly met here to-day to show our interest in that celebrated industry which, probably more than any other, has enhanced the wealth and fostered the commerce of the world, and has world, and we have fitly met here to-day to show our interest in that celebrated industry which, probably more than any other, has enhanced the wealth and fostered the commerce of the world, and has tended to promote international friendship and universal goodwill (Cheers.). The Rathway Congress had its origin in 1885, when a number of leading railway men met at Brussels to celebrate the Jubilee of the Belgian railways. Congresses have been since held in Milan in 1887, and in Paris in 1889, and the last Congress, which assembled in St. Petersburg in 1892, was made memorable by the splendid hospitality and great encouragement given to it by the late Lamented Emperor of Russia. (Hear.) I fear that we cannot promise you the beauty of Italy, the gaiety of Paris, or the magnificent reception which was accorded to you on the last occasion on which you met; but we can show you Manchester, Liverpool, Caldiff, and Crewe, great centres of industry, from which I hope you will be able to derive useful knowledge, and in which you will be able also to see examples of the most beneficial work. I venture to say this even to our friends from the United States (a country which owns nearly half the rulway mileage of the world), as well as to the representatives of India and our colonies, who have helped forward the work of railway development with a speed and a success which I think deserve the utmost commendation. The programme of discussion, interesting as it is to those who, like yourselves, know how to appreciate technical details, will be of interest likewise to the public. You will be asked to consider not only the acceleration of passenger trains, but the means for promoting the confort of passengers by the use of vestibule or corridor cass, and of improved methods of heating and lighting. You will be also asked to consider arrangements for adding to the safety of the travelling public in such matters as signalling, interlocking, and the security of bridges. Electrical traction will present a field for your inquiries, as y

BEFORE the dissolution, a Bill to reform the inebriate, called the Inchriates Bill, was, on the 21st June, in the House of Commons, read a second time. It is intended to detain in reformatories habitual drunkards who commit or not any breach of the criminal law. The County Court, subject to appeal to the High Court, and the High Court without a jury are proposed to be empowered to order detention up to two years of a person proved to be mebitate and administration of his affairs by another person. Lord Halsbury characterized the proposal regarding non-criminal drunkards as a suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. Lord Salisbury opposed the provision saying that it opened the door to false accusation and to blackmailing, and withdrew from a person who was not even charged with a crime the protection of a jury. The Lord Chancellor expressed his willingness to meet as far as possible the objections raised.

THE first meeting of the Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure was held on June 26, Lord Welby presiding. After some preliminary business, the Commission adjourned till after the General Election.

By a revised notification of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, candidates for the Matriculation Examination of the London University, to be held in Calcutta on the 13th January 1896, are required to apply to him before the 30th September 1895.

In Madras they are trying for the examination of the degree of Doctor of Laws of the London University for Indian candidates to be held in Madias.

٠. THE next or the Fourth Criminal Sessions of the Calcutta High Court will commence on Monday, the 26th August.

MR. R. N. Ray, Deputy Accountant-General, Bengal, officiates as Deputy Comptroller-General, vice Mr. G. R. H. Hatt.

THE District Board of Burdwan advertises for applications for permission to construct a broad-guage railway on the existing metalled district road from Burdwan to Katwa, a length of 35 iniles.

^{* &}quot; However difficult to be credited, it seems to be ascertained be youd doubt, that the same pair which quitted their nest and the limited circle of their residence here, return to the very same nest again, and this for several successive years. In all probability for their whole lives."- Griffith's Guvier.

THE Administration Report on the Rullways in India for 1894 95 commences with the following information :-

"The total length of railways open and sanctioned on the 3150 March 1895, after allowing for immor corrections of indeage, was 21,072 % index, being a net increase of 650 ¼ in less among the year. The total length of railways open for to the on the same date was 18,855 % index being a net increase of 355 % index, reasing 2,217 ½ index still under construction or sanctioned for commencement.

The mean indeage worked during the calendar year was 18,694 index, being an increase of 487 inites over the figures of the previous year.

The total capital only on railways open for traffic to the 31st December 1894 amounted to Rs 23779 crores, being an increase of Rs. 4/61 crores during the year.

crores during the year.

The gross earnings in 1894 amounted to Rs. 25,50,88,564 being an increase of Rs. 1,42,13,096 over the results of the previous year; the working expenses amounted to Rs. 11,98,39,200, and absorbed 4698 per cent. of the gross earnings against 4714 per cent in 1893. The net earnings amounted to Rs. 13,52,49,304, being an increase of

The statistical return on the capital expenditure, as entered in rupees in the books in India, was 5 69 per cent. against 5:46 per cent. in the

. . .

MR. E. M. Lewis having retired, Mr. J. Petty, Deputy Superintendent, Presidency Jail Press, has, from the commencement of this month, been appointed Superintendent of Printing, Bengal. Mr. J. M. Chalmers succeeds Mr. Petty in the Presidency Jul Press.

MR. John Croft having paid the fine of Rs. 800 imposed upon him under the Excise Act, proceedings have been instituted against him, as suggested in Capital, under the Merchandise Marks Act and the Penal Code.

THE Afridis of the Khyber have kept faith with the British and with themselves. They have delivere back the rifles belonging to the Africa deserters of the 20 h Punj do Infantry during the Wazni Expedition, but would not surrender the offenders.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

X,

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE Pathamentary General Election is still proceeding. The latest returns show that 304 Unionists have been elected. The Unionist gains at present are 65. Seventy-three Liberals have been elected : Lineral gams ten.

	Elected.		Gains
Umonists		304	65
T change in		7.7	to

Six Parnellites and 37 Anti-Parnellites have been returned. Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee has not succeeded. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji has been unseated for Central Finsbury. If Barrow would not accept a Radical Bonnergee, Bethnal Green (North East) has elected Mr. Baunagri, Unionist. He has been returned at the head of the poll by a majority of hundred and sixty. He was greatly aided by Lord Harris and Sir Roper Lethbridge. The latter addressed a mass meeting of the electors Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr Caine and Mr. W. L. Bright have been defeated. Mr. H. M. Stanley, the explorer, has been returned for Lambeth. Mr. Kier Hardie has been unseated for West Ham (South). Mr. C. M. Warmington, Liberal candidate for West Monmouth, has retired in favour of Sir W. V. Harcourt. Mr. Arnold Morley, Liberal, has been unseated for East Nottingham, as also Mr. John Motley, Liberal, for Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE Bulgarian Government has reinforced the troops on the Macedoman frontier. This and other measures adopted by the Government o repress the Macedonian agitation are only increasing the ferment.

TURKEY has given back to Bulgaria a portion of territory in the Rhodope Mountains which was ceded to Turkey in 1886.

THE Khedive has gone to Constantinople on a visit to the Sultan.

COLONEL Leontuff, who recently returned from the mission to Abyssima, the object of which was to bring the Russian and Abyssiman churches more closely together, is organizing a fresh and larger mission to that country, which will include an official representative of the Holy Synod.

A DESPERATE attempt was made, at Sofin, on the life of Mr. Stambouloff, whose carriage was stopped by three assassins. They shot and stabbed him, almost severing both his hands, which were afterwards amputated. He has since died. One of the assailants has been arrested.

MR. Cowasjee Jehangir was yesterday installed as a Knight Bachelor at Windsor Castle. Sir Cowasjee is the first native of India who has had the honour of being knighted by the Queen's own hands.

A RECEPTION held by Nasrulla Khan at Dorchester House was a most brilliant affor. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Dukes of York and Cambridge, besides sixteen other Royalnes and the members of the corps diplomatique, were present. Fifteen hundred guests attended the reception.

THE resignation of the Rosebery ministry and the General Election have been in the way of the final orders as regards Chitral. General Low has just been officially informed that Her Majesty's Government require time to decide on the details of the permanent settlement of that country, and that, as the present season is unfavourable for the movement of large bodies of troops, the force occupying Chitral and Dir road cannot be withdrawn before September at all events. The prospect is dismal for the Indian Treasury.

The Chitral honours and rewards have, however, not been further delayed :

To be K. C. S. I.-Surgeon-Major Robertson.

To be Companions of the Bath.-Lieutenant-Colonel Kelly and Captain Townshend.

The D. S. O. is conferred on Captain H. Borradile and Lieutenauts H. Jones, S. Edwardes, J. Fowler, B. Gurdon, W. Beynon, C. Stewart, and H. Harley.

Brevet-Majority is conferred on Captains C. Campbell, H. Borradaile, and C. Townshend.

Lieutenant-Colonel Kelly is appointed A. D. C. to the Queen, with the Brevet rank of Colonel in the Army.

The Victoria Cross is conferred on Surgeon-Captain Whitchurch.

Seigeant Reeves, of the Commissariat Department, is promoted to be Sub-Conductor for his good services under Colonel Kelly.

Subadai Gurmukh Singh, 14th S khs, is granted the Order of Ment and class, and the title of Bahadui for services during the defence of Fourteen non-commissioned officers and men of the 14th Bengil Infantry are granted the Order of Ment, of the 3rd class, for then gallantry at Koragh on the 10th of Match, and on two Bengal Sappers and a man in the 2nd Bonbay Grenadiers, and the 14th Ka hone. Rifles for their gallantry at Reshun. The same honour has also been conferred on Colonel Jagat Singh and 29 men for their gall intry in defending Chitral, and on eight of Colonel Kelly's men.

Hospital Assistant Narinj in Das, of the 32nd B. I, is promoted to be Hospital Aussistant, first class, and three months' pay is granted to three Bhisties on duty in the Chitral Fort.

THE reports about Umra Khan are conflicting. Once he is a close prisoner at Kabul. Then a guest of the Amir. The latest trustworthy news is that he is only a refugee in the Afghan country.

SIR Antony MacDonnell is expected at Allahabad in the third week of October to take over charge of the Lieutenant-Governorship of the United Previnces from Mr. Alan Cadell.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deaf. ness, Singing in Ears, &c , on inatter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free. -Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19. SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

SIR Stenart Bayley had abandoned the rule of these Provinces to be the Political and Secret Secretary in the India Office. He was wiser than those who had condemned him for the descent. His choice has been rewarded and he is now a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India. He is to be succeeded as Secretary by Mr. Lee-Warner. That Political, it is said, will not complete his twentyone years of actual service qualifying for pension until September 16. The rule must, therefore, be relaxed in his favour or the appointment kept open for him. But why should the India Office be a preserve for pensioners? The Royal Commission on India might well direct its attention to that quarter.

A PARLIAMENTARY return gives the circumstances under which certain English Civil servants have not been forced to retire on attaining the prescribed limit of sixty-five years.

"Under the Treasury Minute of April 1892 it is set forth that there "Under the Treasury Minute of April 1892 it is set forth that there are three min grounds upon which the returement of an officer at sixty-five might be detrimental to the interests of the public service, these being as follows;—(1) When the number of officers in a department above the prescribed age is such that their simultaneous removal would cause grave inconvenience; (2) when an officer possesses peculiar qualifications which are essential to the performance of the duties of his office, and which it would be difficult to replace by a fresh appointment; (3) where an officer has been entitisted with the execution of a particular duty which is approaching completion, and it is found that the transfer of the work to another officer who is necessarily less familiar with it would be attended with inconvenience. The return gives under Class II. (Class I, being iid), the names of eight officers who were retained over the age of sixty-five in the year 1894 95. who were retained over the age of Sixty-five in the year 1894-95. Under Class III seven names are given."

Would the British Museum and the India Office were as con siderate! They would then still have Dr. Rien and Dr. Rost. Both were truly irreplaceable. There is not another Arabic and Persian scholar living in England equal to Dr. Rieu. He has, however, been provided for The Cumbridge University aftered its statutes to employ him. If Dr Rost's successor were half as clever or accomplished as he, there might be some reason for enforcement of the Treasury minute. Dr. Rost has, since his retirement, been utilized as a literary back only to be cast away sick and heart-broken.

MAHARAJA Natendra Krishna, Raja Rajendra Narayan Deb, Sir Romesh Chander Mitter and Babus Nobin Chand Dutt, of the Hatkhola Dutt Family, Pashupati Nath Bose, Municipal Commissioner, Guruprassanno and Romanath Ghose, of the Ghoses of Pathuriaghatta and Jorabagan, have called a meeting of the Kyastha community of Calcutta and its suburbs to consider the growing custom of demanding high dowers from the parents of brides. The meeting takes place at four in the afternoon of Sunday next, at 47, Pathurusghatta Street, the residence of the late Baboo Khelachenander Ghose. Government had been applied to to find a remedy for the evil. So Charles Elhott, however, thinks that the reform should proceed from the community uself. The present movement is commendable and we hope will bear fruit.

IN 1874, the Punjab Chief Court in Full Bench had decided that a barrister was debarred from sung for his fees. It still anheres to that opinion. Mr. Arthur Grey sued Dewan Luchman Das, late Prime Minister of Kashina, for Rs 2,391 14. The sum is the balance of a claum for service done as attorney to the Dewan's mother. There are no attorneys at Lahore and counsel, like pleaders, take their instructions from clients direct. The suit was opposed, among others, on the ground on which it has been thrown out. Two Courts having held the claim unmaintainable, there was an appeal to the Chief Court. The Judges were divided Justices Frizelle, Stogdon and Chatterjee stock to the traditions of the bar and held that the plaintiff as a burister-at-law was incapacitated from making a contract of hiring. Justices Roe and Rivaz were of a different mind. The latter says

"An advocate's fees in the Punjib, when all legal fictions have been "An advocate's fees in the Punjib, when all legal fictions have been brushed away, are distinctly merces and not honoraria. The leading advocates of the Punjab Bar can influential and honoraria body) must bargain for their tenumeration directly with their clients, and by a universal custom, which is not considered improfessional in this Province, must even be content to allow a certain portion of their fees to depend upon the result of the lingation. In this respect, and in most others, the advocate is on exactly the same hosting as the pleader. An advocate in this Province has the right of pre-audience over a pleader of older standing, and each makes his atrangement direct with his client. Each conducts his chemis' cases in Court with the same nowers and univileze." Each conducts his chemis' cases in Court with the same powers and privileges."

A barrister is a barrister always. He may sink himself into an attorney, yet he does not cease to be a barrister. He may charge anything for his services, but he must not complain of non-payment. Each to his own, seems to be the verdict of the majority of the Punjab Judges. To the many privileges of a barrister, they will not add a right enjoyable by a pleader.

WE read :-

We read:—
"It is not often that fondness for a pet creature leads its possessor to such earnest efforts to save its life, as that which was recently adopted in an educational establishment in Bombay. A cygnet belonging to a lady in the Fort accidentally swallowed some poison put down for vermin, and was discovered in a state of collapse. The owner at once sent for a European doctor, asking him to bring an anyoning and chloroform. Meanwhile, in order to save time, the distressed lady sent to a chemist's shop close by, for an emetic, which was duly administered, but without avail, and when the doctor arrived he found the was too late to save his singular patient. This is not allebelied to the bird was so severely felt that it was buried, with due ceremony, and in the presence of a number of young people, in the compound of an ecclestastical building."

Is the incident so unnatural? A bird in confinement, affording delight.

Is the incident so unnatural? A bird in confinement, affording delight to its owner, is as much an object of sympathetic treatment and kind consideration as any human immate of a household. Lower animated Nature not unoften affords examples to the lord of creation. Leaving aside the extravagance of costry marriages of dogs and donkeys, affection for animals and birds is worthy of ad praise. If human nature were always as kind, man would never be the brute that he sometimes proves. We can well imagine that it was no vanity but a true humanity that was so anxious for the caged bird and that gave it an affectionate burial,

On Wednesday Mr. Ananda Mohan Bose, Barrister-at Law, was gazetted a member of the Lieutenant-Governor's Legislative Council, On the previous Saturday Mr. Bose had taken his seat

There is a hitch as to the appointment of Baboo Ishan Chunder Mitter. No objection was taken by the defeated candidate for election for the Buidwan Division. Government seems not disposed to accept the recommendation without scrutiny.

The Dacca Division has been permitted to hold a second election.

BRIGADE-SURGEON John Martin Coates, M.D., late Bengal Medical Department, is dead. He was carried away by cholera which is traced to mik in the neighbourhood of the New Market. He was given no military burial, for he had wished, unsophisticated as he was, a plain interment. His first commission was dated as early as 1855. In December of the next year he received medical charge of the 1st Bengal military police battalion. Three years after, in April, 1859, we find him Civil Assistant Surgeon. Next, successively, he was Superintendent of Jails, Hazaribagh, Civil Surgeon, Murshidabad, in joint medical charge, Simla, and in charge of Commander-in-Chief's staff, Samtary Commissioner for Bengal, Principal and Professor of Medicine, Medic al College, Calcutta, and ex-officeo 1st Physician to the College Hospital, Inspector-General of Jans, Surgeon-General, Bengal. On his retirement from service in July 1890, he did not leave India, but continued here chiefly as Physician to Maharaja Sir Luchmeswar Sing of Durbhanga. He had a jovial spirit and kindly disposition which endeared him to his pupils and patients. He was more a friend than a physician. No grave M. D., but Nature's graduate, he Won back more sufferers with his voice and smile,

Than all the trumpery in the druggist's pire.

At a time when the Faculty fell out with Government on the question of hospital reform, that is, reduction of expenditure on hospitals, when Dr. Chevers stoutly opposed any innovation, when Dr. Smith left the Principalship of the Medical College not to be a party to the policy of Dr. Payne, and no body would accept the office, Dr. Coates came forward and rescued Government from a persions situation. Charged with carrying out a policy of stern economy, he found it his duty to recommend payment of fees by students of the Medical College who, after completing their terms, had failed to pass the final examination. He was, unlike himself, severe in his remarks on the petition of the students for exemption.

At the same time, he felt strongly for the Assistant Surgeons who were dismissed the service for refusing to submit to a second examination ordered by Dr. Hilson, on suspicion of foul play at the first He had himself superintended the examination and knew the suspicion had no foundation and was thus enabled to fight hard for them. THE annual meeting of the Indian Association for the Cultivation But to no purpose. He was, as we have seen, differently formed from Dis. Chevers and Smith, his predecessors in the Medical College, or from Dr. Ewart, and, while feeling the injustice to the Assistant Surgeons and to himself, bore the slight in silence.

THE Superinten ding Engineer to the Nizam's Dominions-Babu Madhusudan Chatterjee, C. E, has been retired on good service pension. Passed out of the Rootkee College, he was a District Engineer under the British Government when his services, at the request of Sir Salar Jung I., were transferred to Hyderabad, where he commenced as Principal of the Hyderabad Civil Engineering College on a salary of Rs. 700. On the abolition of the College, he was appointed Superintending Engineer of the P. W. D., on Rs. 1,000 a month. The pay was subsequently raised to Rs. 1200. His services at Hyderabad extend over 23 years, short by some months to entitle him to half pension. Mr. Chatterjee is of a quiet, unobtruding nature. Mindful of his own duties, he advoided Hyderabad politics. If he thus kept himself clear of troubled waters, he must not complain of his devotion to work not having been adequately rewarded. It is something, though, that his son, Babu Kali Courn, has been provided with an appointment

AFTER half a century of service, the Permanent Assistant Private Secretary to the Viceroy, Mr. D. Panioty, has been removed by death. He was never sick or sorry, and had kept his health remarkably well The death was sudden. He sickened and died at Simla while bathing. Although no East Indian Worthy, the Eurasian community might wel, be proud of him. The success of his life was visible even in death. At the funeral, the Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commander-in-Chief were represented. Mr. Pamoty joined the office of the Private Secretary on a small pay when Lord Dalhousie was Governor-General. Previously he was in the Bengal Office where he had his training. Like most members of his community in the upper clerical service of Government, he had no education to speak of. He made up as he went on, till he could keep a promiscuous company engaged by his conversation. He was in charge of the most important and responsible office in India for many years. During this long period he managed it wonderfully well. Never did a secret ooze out, although it was full of secrets of a very important nature regarding finance, wai, deposition of princes and reform of administration. His office was always above suspicion and never shared the obloquy of any of the offices of the Government of India or of the local Secretariat. There were no placards of "No admittance ' or "Warning to Government clerks" in his office rooms, yer not a scrap of information ever got out regarding the deposition of Mulhar Rao, the deportation of Thebaw, the imposition of income tax, or the applition of jury trial.

Mr. Panioty had his weaknesses. He was fond of flattery and had his favourites. Merit to him was a secondary consideration He would rule his subordinates with an iron hand, taking all their sins upon himself. If he prote cied them from the wrath of his superiors, he was unmindful of their wants and sufferings of his own creation. The 55 years' rule was never meant for him. But one of his ablest assistants was retired, on inadequate pension before his time, and another highly competent man under him had sent up his papers in disgust.

But for his caste, the late Assistant Private Secretary, who had the Confidence and high opinion of two Governors-General and ten Viceroys and their Private Secretaries, he would have earned higher disunctions than a C. I. E. which also came late. It was not till the Viceroyalty of Lord Ripon that he was thought worthy of that honour. The distinction that he had valued higher was the privilege of being admitted to State Dinners. He was, therefore, more thankful to Colonel Ardagh than to Mr. Primrose. Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace was exceptionally kind to him. He made a very favourable bargain for him in the matter of the location of the Private Secretary's

Mr. F. W. Latimer is carrying on the duties of the Assistant Private Secretary, and it is hoped he will be permanently appointed. He was brought out by Lord Mayo and has been improving ever since. He has gamed experience and, besides knowledge of the working of the office, has sympathy with the subordinates.

of Science will be held on Monday after next, the 19th, at 5-30 in the afternoon. The Lieutenant-Governor, the President, will take the chair. As this will be Sit Chailes Ethott's last appearance at the Association, it is expected the members will muster in force

REIS & R.IYYET.

Saturday, July 20, 1805.

MARRIAGE DOWER IN BENGAL.

In almost every civilised country, marital unions are the result of girls and their kinsmen being solicited by youths and their relatives and friends. Young men, when they reach a certain age and become desirous of settling in domesticity, look for a wife among the girls of their acquaintance. Kinsmen and relatives interfere, and the terms, which in most cases are few and simple, being settled, the parties are united as man and wife. In India, however, from remote antiquity, marriages have been effected in a different way. Here it is the kinsmen of the girl that have been butthened with the duty of finding a proper mate for her. Women are not made woo, they should be wooed and won-has no application in India. In four out of the eight forms of marriage mentioned by the early sages, the girl's guardians are wooers. By far the majority of unions are based on those forms. Three out of the remaining four, viz., Gándharva, Rákshasa, and Parsácha, have long since been obsolete, the last two in special having become even criminal under the penal code current in the country, for nobody can now wed with impunity a girl abducted from the custody of her guardians or obtaining her consent by fraud. The other form. viz., Asura, in which the girl is purchased for price from her parents or kinsmen, deserves to be put down. This form of marriage has always been current among the lower orders. The Hindu lawgivers directed their censures against it, but they failed to suppress it. So long as girls have a marketable value, their kinsmen exact it without at all caring for the religious injunctions to the contrary.

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow-Bazu Street, Calcutta

(Session 1895-99)

Lecture by Babu Ram Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Monday, the 22nd inst., at 4-15 P M Subject: Bromme, Indine and Fluorine

Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Suko, MA, MD, on Monday, the 22nd inst., at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects. Practical Zoology-The Fowl. Zoology ---Corlenterata

Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjee, BA, MB, C. M., on Tuesday, the 23rd inst, at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects. Histology-Connective Tissue. Physiology-Respiration.

Lecture by Bibu Rim Chandra Ditta, FCS, Wednesday, the 24th inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Carbon and 18 Compounds with Oxygen.

Lecture by Babu Rajendra Nath Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, the 24th inst., at 7 PM. Subject: Archimedes' Principle and methods of determining specific gravity Lecture by Babu Ram Chandra Datta, F C S, Friday, the 26th inst. at 4-15 P. M. Subject : Sulphur and Sulpherented Hydrogen.

Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Sarkar, M.A., M.D., Friday, the 26th inst, at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject : Chemical Physiology-Milk, Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; R: 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 2 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR, M.D.

Tuly 20, 1895.

Honorary Secretary.

The custom of exacting high dowers from the girl's he can thus acquire is nothing to what he can side is confined to the higher classes of society. Speaking of Bengal, it prevails among only Kulin Brahmans and high-born or well-to-do Kayasthas in general. The origin of the practice is not difficult to explain. The daughter, according to the ancient Hindu idea, is looked upon as a chattel. The obligation of marrying her to an eligible bridegroom was cast upon the father by the early sages. Failure to marry her properly was declared to be a sin demanding expiation. The Aryan settlers in India were at first few. Vast tracts of country, with a soil highly fertile, were in the hands of the aboriginal inhabitants. How to multiply, how to increase their number, was with them a question of the greatest importance. Polygamy was sanctioned at a very early age. The Brahmans were allowed to take wives from all the four orders, though in later times the acceptance of Sudra wives was looked upon with disfavour. The Kshatriyas could accept wives from the two orders below them besides their own. The Vaisyas, besides marrying in their own order, were free to choose Sudra wives. The Sudras were limited to their own order. The evidence is not clear of the early sages having sanctioned the remarriage of widows. Neither the Mahabharata nor the Ramayana throws any light on the question. If the re-marriage of widows was ever preva-lent in India in ancient times, it must have been among the lower orders. So far as the higher orders were concerned, they were unaffected by it. For all that, the custom of raising offspring by vicarious means, was certainly in vogue even among the three higher orders. The husband's younger brothers often acted as substitutes if the husband happened to be absent, or if he died without children. The object the Rishis had in view was certainly the increase of population. Men bent upon multiplying their number were naturally disposed to make marriage an obligatory act. Of the four modes of life, viz., pupilage, domesticity, residence in the forest, and complete renunciation, domesticity or the status of a householder was applauded very highly. All the other modes were dependant on it. Every youth, completing his study, was directed to marry and become a householder. He was not to become a forest recluse until he had begotten children. He that dies without having begotten a child goes to an unmentionable place reserved for the childless. His debt to his progenitors remains unpaid. The latter fall down from their high status in consequence of such neglect or omission on the part of their descendant. Besides being a purlficatory act for members of the male sex, marriage was declared to be doubly obligatory for the female sex. Women have no vows to observe, no religious rites to perform, except as wives and in the company of their husbands. The Rishis pronounced fasts as highly meritorious. Unto women having husbands, fasts were, however, not allowed.

Jivadbhartarı ya ndri uposya vratamácharet, A'yuh samharate bhartuh sá nári narakam vraiet.

was the declaration of Atri and, after him, of almost every sage regarded as an authority. The sense is that the woman who, having a husband, observes a vow with fasts, lessens the life of her husband and, departing this life, is plunged into misery. The Hindu idea of marriage is the union of two persons into one for the acquisition of religious merit. A male person, by himself, utay acquire merit, but the merit that solicitous of preserving the purity of their own clans earn along with his wife. For a person of the female sex, the only way open for the acquisition of merit is marriage, for she can do nothing when dissociated from her husband. The obligation of marrying is one from which the very denizens of heaven could not be free. The gods could not exist without their goddesses.

Among a people by whom the institution of marriage was viewed in such a light, the disposal of daughters in marriage naturally came to be regarded as an unavoidable duty. It is true that marriage being an obligatory act, men were as much bound to look for wives as women for husbands, but in a country where plurality of wives was not only allowed but was the general rule, parents would naturally be more concerned with comfortably settling their daughters than their male children. The practice of early marriage also, which necessitated the interference of parents and kinsmen, had much to do with the greater solicitude manifested by the kinsmen of marriageable daughters. The kinsmen of male children, even when the latter attain to a marriageable age, lose nothing by postponing the union. Not so the kinsmen of girls. These, if the scriptures are to be followed, must be married before they attain to a certain state. The rule is a very old one. They who were responsible for laying it down must have been impelled by the desire of multiplying the population. Other circumstances came in to give force to the scriptural injunction. The complete affiliation of the girl in the family of her husband was looked upon as one of the ends of marriage. This affiliation, it was felt, would be easy if the girl married were of tender years. A grown up girl, with her habits formed, cannot be easily broken into the ways of her new home. The joint family is another ancient institution of India which has exercised a potent influence in this direc-tion. Desirous probably of preventing ante-nuptial scandal of any kind, heads of large families numbering cousins and collateral descendants by the dozen, would naturally like to dispose of the daughters as early as possible.

Apart from these reasons founded on considerations connected with both the Hindu scriptures and the peculiar circumstances of Aryan society, so far as Bengal is concerned, the institution of Kulinism, founded by Ballal Sen, has much to do with the greater solicitude manifested, in the matter of marriage, by the kinsmen of girls than those of male children. Adisur, believed to have been the founder of the Sen dynasty of kings, noticed the degeneracy of the Brahmans of his kingdom. He was obliged to import a number of pure and learned Brahmans from the North-West. These soon multiplied under the fostering care of that monarch and his descendants. One of the latter, Ballal Sen, wishing to prevent their degeneracy, classed them as Kulins and Srotriyas. It was a purely sacerdotal and not a social aristocracy that Ballal sought to create. Vedic learning was the qualification that entitled one to become a Kulin. In course of time, however, the institution of Kulinism degenerated. That which was intended to be a sacerdotal aristocracy-an aristocracy of learning and good conduct—became a social aristocracy—an aristocracy of birth and blood. The maintenance of its purity came to be associated with marriage, for birth and blood are directly dependant on it. Parents of girls became by marrying their daughters into proper families. No wonder that eligible youths soon became rare commodities. For all that, large prices were seldom demanded for the acceptance of daughters. Only polygamy became the natural result of degenerated Kulinism. The present custom of demanding large dowers for daughters is of very recent origin.
Although prevailing only among Kulin Brahmans and higher class Kayasthas, and some other castes, notably the Subarnavaniks, it has nothing to do in reality with the institution of Kulinism. The practice is of very recent origin. Only fifty years back, a Srotriya Brahman could bestow his daughter on a Kulin youth without undergoing any expense. A Kulin father also could marry his daughter without much ado. Then, again, the girl's guardians had no objection to the youth of their choice taking more than one wife. Nor were they solicitous of the girl being taken away from the parental home after marriage. It was only when the difference was very great between the social status of the two families that the bridegroom's family could demand a fair compensation. The Savarna Chowdhuries of Barisha, the Gossains of Khurdaha, and a few other families among the Rarhiya section of the Bengal Brahmans, and the Kafs among the Barendras, were obliged to give large dowers for the luxury of marrying their daughters to Kulin youths. We say luxury, for it was by no means obligatory with any of them to contract marriage alliances with Kulin families.

The origin of the custom of payment of heavy dowers, recent as it undoubtedly is, should be sought for in other directions. Formerly, parents of girls, however solicitous of marrying them, never looked for so many accomplishments in the youths of their choice as now. They were content with only birth and blood. Every family had a few paternal acres upon which to live. The love of luxury was not general. The wants of men were few and a little could satisfy these. In course of the last half century society has changed and is changing. Love of luxury has become general. Wants have multiplied. Money is needed to meet them. A variety of accomplishments is expected in a bridegroom. Over birth and blood he must have property or the means of good living. Themselves living in good houses, the guardians of girls are unwilling to send them to that ned or tiled cottages. They are, again, naturally unwilling to secure them the position of only a co-wife. They wish their daughters to be taken away from their houses into the families of their husbands. If poor, the youths must have at least a fair education, which, it is believed, will enable them to earn the means of comfortable sustenance. An eligible youth,-eligible according to the present engible youtn,—engible according to the present standard,—is sought simultaneously by more than one person. There is keen competition in the matrimonial market. There has also been an excess of girls over boys. All this has naturally raised the price of marriageable youths. Brahmans and Kyasthas who constitute the higher classes of Bengal society are, again, imitated by the other castes.

We, therefore, despair of a remedy for the disease. Public meetings and resolutions condemning the practice, would be of little avail. Our habits have become expensive in every direction. The clothes that clad our fathers, the houses The clothes that clad our fathers, the houses and was prepared for it. A number of Sunnis had that sheltered them, the food and drink that nourished them, can no longer content us. So many ornaments of gold and silver have come into fashion that our grandmothers, if they came back to life, would contemplate them with gaping eyes. We have outlived that stage of our national life when wants were few and could be gratified with little labour. The marriage expenses have necessarily increased. The revolution in tastes is responsible for the evil.

Yet a reform is wanted, for we must marry our daughters. Unless we can devise a method, there is every prospect of Shastric injunctions being over-ridden. Then, again, a danger of alarming magnitude threatens us in another direction. Already, in certain families, the death of an unmarried daughter is not looked upon as a calamity. Parents may feel the loss keenly. Still society looks upon it as rather a relief to the father.

THE MAHARRAM.

THE display of sorrow on the anniversary of the death of the grandsons of Mahomed is over, but it was not entirely unattended with disturbance. The first friction occurred at Bhagalpur, where they had long been preparing for it. On the 14th of April an alam was taken out in procession by Syed Irtaza Hossein, a Zemindar. It had been prohibited in previous years, but the prohibition has been removed. The closing reign in Bengal is disposed to relax its stern discipline as regards Bhagalpur. Thus: From---H. J. S. Cotton, Esq., C. S. I.,

Chief Secry, to the Govt of Bengal,

To--- The Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division.

Calcutta, the 27th March, 1895.

Sir, --- I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 364] dated 26th January 1895, reporting on the prayer of the Shia Mahomedans of Bhagalpur to be allowed to carry out the Alam with tir, mussuk and tulwar during the Moharram celebration.

2. In reply I am to observe that the facts of the case at Bhagalpur are not altogether analogous to those of Gya and Chupra in which the decision of Government, prohibiting the procession, was based on the principle of declining to allow any innovation in the existing practice. In Bhagalpur, it appears that the memorialists, Syuds Irtaza Hossein and Murtaza Hossein, have actually been in the habit for many years of taking out the procession with the Shia symbols, but in such a way as not to attract attention or give officace and that, if this practice had been adhered to nothing probably would have been heard of the matter. The question seems to have been stirred up in 1892 by one Mirza Mahomed Saved, of the Oudh family, who had intermarried with the Shias of Bhagalpur and who made attempts Sir, ... I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter 1802 by one Mirza Mahomed Saved, of the Oudh family, who had intermarried with the Shias of Bhagalpur and who made attempts to conduct the procession for the first time with pomp and ceremony through the heart of the town. In consequence, objection was taken by the Sunnis and the Magistrate, Mr. Coxe, prohibited the procession. The proposed procession, which was a pure innovation, appears to have been the cause of all the present trouble to the memorialists. The Lieutenant-Governor considers, that in the circumstance, it was rightly prohibited, but that there can be no objection to the memorialists following their contents of the procession in a quiet manner as old custom and conducting their procession in a quiet manner as they are said to have done in former times from Irtaza Hossien's they are said to have only in the time to the Shahjingi tank, provided they undertake to abstain from the utterance of "tabarra." This route is believed to be thinly peopled and no breach of the peace ever occurred in respect of processions along it in the past. It is not expected that the adoption of this route will excite any disturbance in the future, but the Magistrate will of course adopt such precautions to maintain the peace as may appear to be necessary.

3. I am requested that these orders may be communicated to

3. I am requested that these officers, the memorialists in reply to their petition.

I have, &c.

H. J. S. Corron, Chief Secry. to the Govt. of Bengal.

The alam was, as was to be expected, taken out with great pomp. The Police had anticipated a fight who was sent out to reconnoitre the route was severe-ly beaten. The next day, the dead body of an hena his blood dyes her. This is the most pathetic Emambara on the alam eve and was not seen; alive afterwards. The Shias attribute the death to the Sunnis, who, they say, meant to bring them to trouble and spite the Government order. The Sunnis, in their turn, believe that the Shias nurdered the man in fulfilment of a vow on renewal of permission for the procession. The death is still a mystery. The only visible action of the Police was to warn the leading Suningential tlemen of the city to keep the peace during the Maharram.

In Calcutta, there was a free fight between the taziawallas of Messrs. Cook & Co., and the Police. In consequence, the license was withdrawn for the last day.

The alam and the tazia processions have become an institution of this city. On the seventh day of the Maharram, the alam of Mitza Mehdi proceeds through Colootola, Bowbazar and Lal Bazar Streets. The day after, Haji Agha Kerbalai's alam passes along the same route. Horses representing the dead warriors and some of the Shia symbols excepting ter and mussuk are paraded. The eighth day procession is numerously attended by men of all religions and sects, Sunnis, Marwaris, Jains, Khettris, Bengalis. A spirit of religious tolerance and amity marks the scene. On the tenth day the two combined march through Lal Bazar and Bowbazar Streets and Upper Circular Road to Haji Kerbalai's garden. This year a new alam was seen to emerge from Anthonybagan Lane. It was owned by Syed Mahomed Taha, employed in the railway office. On the tenth day, the horse just in front of the coffin of Imam Hossein seemed to be pierced with arrows and the cloth covering the animal was coloured red. This feature was not observable on the seventh or the eighth day. The three alams had one horse each of this variety. The tazias followed the alams generally and they were dropped into the Kerbala tank at Manicktola. The Kerbala, a little room, was crowded with men and women. The only accident was that of a boy of ten being drowned.

From the Sealda corner to Manicktola, the two sides of the street were crowded with temporary shops vending different articles, the eastern being a continuous range to Kerbala, About twenty-five places were opened for selling pickles alone, and almost all the sellers returned home with empty jars, making a good profit. Everybody was busy buying one thing or another. Only pious Sunnis absented themselves, and if they happened to pass that way, they would not buy anything, for it was a mournful occasion and the shops would remind them of the bazaar established by the mother of Yezid, the murderer of Imam Hossein, to commemorate her son's success.

Such was the spectacle in Calcutta. In the suburban Metiaburuj, the exhibition is in its decline. They had their medle on the seventh night which is unknown to the town proper. It is the preliminary ceremony of marriage between Kasem and his cousin old Sunni was discovered in a well in the garden of all the sorrowful events that occurred in the field fronting the Syed's residence and reported by him. of Kerbala. Want of water, to moisten parched The poor man had been taken to work in the lips, there was none; the children and the whole family were dying of thirst encamped in their tent. Still they fought and died. It was martyrdom, and for this finds an echo in the heart of every pious believer. The Mahomedans, almost all of them, observe these days with great and real sorrow. But the methods of manifestation differ. The Sunnis mourn in silence, while the Shias emphasise their feelings by symbols indicative of the events of those days. With all, however, the murder of the grandsons of the Prophet is equally painful.

INTERFERENCE WITH NATIVE STATES.

The question of how far we are justified in interfering with the internal administration of Native States is one about which there are various opinions. Some say that we should leave them severely alone, and allow them, so to speak, to stew in their own juice; others again say that the British Government should interfere in all cases of injustice; that the Resident at the Capital of an independent State should be the ultimate court of appeal; and that our ent State should be the ultimate court of appeal; and that our responsibility for good government and justice is not merely confined to British India, but extends also to our protected and feudatory States. There is a good deal to be said for the latter argument; for it must be always borne in mind that since the introduction of the "Pax Britannica" we have taken away from the people the only and time honouted remedy of oriental nations against a desporie and oppressive government, t. e., revolt and assassination. We act as the Police of India to keep the peace throughout the land, and this protection is of considerably greater benefit to the independent Princes than it is to the peoples under their sway. The result is that injustice is often committed and their sway. The result is that injustice is often committed and oppression is practised, against which the people have no remedy; because while we prevent them from indulging in any outburst of indignation we refuse to interfere in matters which concern the internal administration of an independent State. This word "independent" is a very misleading one. The condition of affairs at the end of this nineteenth century is very different from what it was at the commencement. A hundred years ago, the different native States were either our enemies or our allies. In the course of time states were entered on the latter have fallen into the second rank of subordinate States. No one will for a moment pretend that in the case of a question of Imperial policy affecting the whole country, we should be justified in yielding to the wishes of one or more States merely because they claimed to be independent. In such a case their protests would not be regarded, and they would be compelled to contorm with the Imperial policy, treaties and agreements notwithstanding. When the Queen became Empress of India, the whole condition of the relations between the Imperial Government and the Native States became changed. This being so, if we refuse to recognise the independence of the vassal States in a matter of Imperial policy, are we justified in refusing to interfere in matters of public Justice and good government in which the interests of the millions under their charge are concerned? The different States may have their own laws and customs and their own system of revenue, taxation and administration. These are all more or less founded upon civilized bases, and the people who reside in such States do so with their eyes open, - a remark their domicile in such countries. But it is the administration and execution of those laws with which we have to do; for it depends upon the manner in which they are administered whether justice is done or injustice is committed.

The Queen-Empress being the over-lord of the States, I maintain that the subjects of a Native ruler have as much right to expect redress for injustice from the hands of her representatives as have her immediate subjects. But as long as we refuse to interfere in matters of internal administration, they are not always sure of receiving that justice, and are debarred from appealing to the British representative. The British Resident at a Native Court should be something more than passive. He should be the Guide, as well as the Philosopher and the Friend. As far as the States themselves are concerned, the policy I advocate is the kindest in the end. The stewing-in-their-own-juice policy, is calculated to lead, in the Zobeyda, the daughter of Imam Hossein, in the field of Kufa. But what an unhappy end! The marriage is changed into a funeral. The bride, before night, has to cast her eyes on the coffin of "interference with an independent State" is apt to be raised, whenever the Resident endeavours to advise it for its own good. This outery generally proceeds not so much from the Princes themselves as from their officials, who, for the most part, have been borrowed from the British service, or who have immigrated from British Provinces. I by no means advocate a nagging and petty interference in matters of detail; but where the carrying out of the laws, or where justice is concerned, the subjects of a native State have, I maintain, as much a right to look to the representative of the Imperial Government for protection against missule and oppression, as the Princes themselves are entitled to our protection from rehellion and anarchy.

--- The Imperial and Assatic Quarterly Revuw.

Ex-Political.

ELEPHANT LORE.

Elephants are a survival from an age incalculably remote, whose flora and fauna are known to us only in coal measures and fossil remains. In this prosaic century, when steam and electricity conspire to abridge toil and simplify mechanical contrivances, their vast, unwieldy forms seem altogether out of place. Their genesis and death alike are shrouded in mystery. For pairing they select torest depths unapproached by man. The Garos and Lushais, whose country swarms with elephants, declare that when one feels his end approaching, he betakes himself to some land beyond mortal ken. However frequent one's opportunities may be of watching their movements, it is impossible to be really familiar with them, or to avoid feeling that there is great gulf fixed between these pachyderms and the rest of creation. Babu Gyanendra Narain Ray Chaudhuri, a scion of a family well-known in the Rangpur district, has raised a corner of the veil which shrouds elephant-life, and his little book, at present available only in a Bengali garb, teems with quaintly-expressed facts, not unmixed with fancies, on this fascinating subject. The popular errors which cluster round the elephant would have enraged and disheartened Sir Thomas Browne. One relates to the period of gestation, which is commonly supposed to be 18 months. Two years would be nearer the mark. Another concerns the suckling of tiny specimens. Nine people out of ten imagine that a baby helps himself to his mother's milk with his trunk: the fact being that the mouth is used, as is the case with all warm-blooded animals. But it is a thankless task to combat ignorance. A good story on this point is to be found in one of the oriental text-books. Elephant dealers have quite as many tricks of trade as their con-frètes the horse-copers. At a certain Fair one of the confraternity was showing off a huge specimen to an intending buyer, and enlarg-ing, as is the manner of his tribe, on its splendid points. While thus engaged, he observed a yokel gazing at the animal intently and then engaged, ne observed a yokel gazing at the animal intently and then glancing alternately at the customer and himself. The dealer took him aside and slipped a brace of gold mohurs into his hand, whispering, "Don't you say anything about it and you shall have as much more after the sale!" The rustic nodded sagaciously, and held his peace. When the deal had been satisfactorily concluded, the vendor approached the supposed accomplice and said :-- "Well, what was the matter with my elephant?" "I find anything out?" replied the young man from the country, carefully securing the p" in hys waist-cloth, "I had never seen an elephant before, was wondering what sort of a beast vours could be!" A newand was wondering what sort of a beast voins could be: A new-born elephant is of a pinkin colour, which deepens with age into the familiar dusky hue. It is weaned at six months; but for the first 7 or 8 years of its life it remains in stain pupillari, following its mother with touching persistence and fed by her with the tenderest leaves that the jungle affords. The milk-teeth drop out in the fifteenth year, and are succeeded by the permanent molar dentition. physiology. Indeed, they form the basis of the native system of classification. tusks are of slower growth, and are of vast importance in the animal's

Males are either (1) Dantals, (2) Ganeshes, (3) Makhnas. The first species includes all provided with tusks. It is subdivided into 6 categories. First and foremost is the Palanga Dantal, so called because in ancient days kings were wont to recline on a couch, palang, fastened to the well poised tusks of some favourite monster, which would march into a tank or river and give its master a bath by slowly ducking its head. The tusks in this sort are 3 to 4 feet in length, curving gently upwards. Next is the Surat Dantal, where massive tusks curve downwards. So rapid is their growth that, unless repeatedly sawn short, they touch the ground. The third is the Chokna Dantal, whose tusks are stumpy—never longer than 18 inches, and slope upwards. The fourth is the Mula Dantal, so named because its tusks taper like the common or garden radish. Fifth comes the Nala Dantal. Nal means "reed;" and the tusks of this kind are thin and scraggy. Lastly, we have the Akas Dantal, in which one tusk points upwards (akua is the Sanskrit for Haven), and the other to the nether region. Such beasts are regarded as inauspicious, and the more so when the tusks are a series of knobs, like misshapen billiard balls. The next great division, the Ganeshes, have but a single tusk on the right side, like the elephant-headed god of the Hindu Pantheon. They are regarded as peculiarly auspicious and have a value far above their deserts. Elephants with a solitary task on the left side are sometimes wrongly styled "Ganeshes." Their proper designation is Ekdanta, and they are of no great value. The third grand division of males, the Makhnas, are by a linuo natura, destitute of tusks or have but rudimentary ones. They are have and hard-working; hence greatly appreciated in the hunting-field. In that sphere they possess the great advantage over tuskers of having no protuberances to become entangled in cane or creeper jungle. When very staunch, a Makhna commands a high pitte, but ordinary ones are of no great account. Apart from their want of an elephant's chief ornament, they have the creat of being sulky and not alivays to be trusted. Female elephants or klunkware called Mevari if they are madens, and Chui if they have given birth to young. Like Makhnas, they are only esteemed when staunch shikaris, and then command fancy prices. The age of an elephant has no relation to its colour, and it is a vulgar error to suppose that white or reddich spots on the head and trunk are an indication of antiquity. Until fifteen or thereabouts it has black toe nails; thereafter the nails grow gradually whiter. Up to thirtifive the upper portion of the ears is erect and firm, but as lite advances it droups perceptibly. The degree of curvature of the deck and depth of the hollows above the eyes enable experts to detect an aged animal.

The next point is the size, which appears to vary with the habitat Those hailing from Nepal, Bhutan, and Sikkim are, like the ponies of those regions, thickset, hard-working and "confilential." Minety per cent, are under eight feet, and nine are never exceeded. This species is usually hog-backed. In Bhutan elephants abound, and the Raja occasionally gives passes to trappers. The Nepal Durbar, on the other hand, discourages kheddah operations and turns imported animals loose to keep up the stock. But the Garo and Khasia hills in north east Bengal are the happy hunting grounds par excellence. They are thinly peopled and scanned with broad valleys which furnish an abundant supply of succulent folder. Hence the elephants caught there are the bulkiest of their race. Eleven feet is quite an ordinary height, and grants are met with approaching thirteen feet. Their doculity is equally remarkable. The yearly catch in the kheddah campaigns undertaken by Government and by private parties, is between four and five hundred, while the supply is practically inexhaustible. The beauty and excellent qualities of Garo elephants are recognized throughout India. In the Decean they fetch Rs. 15,000 and upwards. Those captured on the Khasia and Jamtia Hills run them close; but their numbers are decreasing. They are also found throughout the Manipuri country, and in Hill Tippera the Maharaja derives no proportion of his scanty revenues from the levy of royalties on those trapped in his jungly domains. The annual take there is about 150, but fine specimens are rare. The art of capturing and training elephants has made some advance of late years, thanks to the genius of the late Mr. Sanderson; but in all essentials the methods in use are of hoary antiquity. There are thice approved systems---the Kot, or enclosure, Phansi, Noose, and Paratal, of which more presently. There is, indeed, a fourth, in which the wild animals are driven into pits deep enough to render escape hopeless The injury to their chief pride, the tusks, in the fall or in the frantic efforts to escape, has rendered this plan obsolete.

The Kot is used by experts operating on a large scale. When the cold weather sets in, a camp is formed on a level space near the tract known to be haunted by the huge quarry. This contains ample stores of food for the army employed, often numbering more than a thousand men, as well as for the prospective catch. Then the "seckers," join, hereditary foresters acquainted with all the habits of the animals, are send forward to spy out a herd. When one has been announced, the next point is to ascertain in what direction it is moving. Then a division of the beaters about 400 strong is sent forward to enclose it in a wide circle. They are divided into going of twenty, each under its headman, who carries a gun, the rank and file being armed with spears and axes. Meantime another division have been bushly engaged in erecting a gigantic pound, the kot, into which the cl-phanes are to be diture. It is cruality, varying in size with that of the heid. The wall is composed of trunks of trees eighteen feet long by three and a half in diam ter, embedded in the soil at intervals of 18 linches. It is further secured by layers of heavy bamboos secured transversely to the posts, and by external buttresses or stays of jungle-wood. Round the interior, six less from the fencing, there runs a ditch as broad and wide, so placed in order to prevent the prisoners charging with their full force against the fence. The latter is pierced, on the side whence the prey is expected, by an opening twelve feet wide, 'secured by a massive door, falling through grooves as a portentlik. Its interior side is studded with sharp nails. This gateway is flanked on its exterior by side-walls trending outwards as long as half the dameter of the enclosure, forming, as it were, the section of a funn.1, the door being the small end. This is termed the yard, or angma; and across its broadest in the herd throws back its wings on the side nearest the enclosure leaving an apparently free egress in that direction. Then com-mences a file-firing of blank Cartridge, with an accompaniment of blood-curdling yells; and the frightened animals rush frantically towards their doom. On entering the yard and observing how rapidly it narrows, the herd often attempts to execute a "strategic mov ment to the rear." Then the straw at the entrance of the yard is lit, and fire, the elephants' most dreaded foe, completes their discomfiture. The maddened brutes press eagerly into the narrowing yard and so enter the enclosure. Then two men who have been holding up the sliding gateway, let it fall with a mighty crash, and the prisoners' late is scaled. Soon afterwards, two powerful trained temales khunkus enter the yard and take their stand on either side of the gateway. The portcullis is raised and stand on either side of the gateway. The porteums is raised and a troop of other khunkies, each bestridden by a mahout, enter the enclosure. If a rush be made for freedom, the elephant gatekeepers deal the fugitives terrific blows with their tranks. now one of the captives is singled out for the process of breaking. Four femiles surround him one with a rope-ladder hanging trom her back. Down this her mahout deftly slides, and attaches another rope-ladder to the hind leg of the quarry, repeating the process till the latter has a drag of 80 pounds or so in weight hampering his movements. Then he is driven by the khunkies outside and firmly secured by ropes to a tree. Thus begins his first lesson in civilization.

The second, or phani method of capturing elephant is based on the use of a sort of lasso, A herd of wild animals is followed by experts mounted on trained khunkies. When a likely-looking one is overtaken, the khunkies are driven close to him and one of the mahouts, leaning forward, slips a heavy noose over his head. The poor beast, at the touch of the rope, doubles back his trunk, and thus the noose is easily drawn round the neck. The ends of the rope are promptly made fast on either side to two khunkies which draw it tight, reducing their victim to a state of semistrangulation. His hand feet are then fettered with masses of rone.

Strangulation. His hind feet are then rettered with masses of rope. The third system known as paratal, requires the use of five perfectly-trained khunkies. It comes into play for the capture of solitary males or gondar giants driven from a herd by the superior prowess of a rival and given to carrying death and ruin for miles beyond the forest precincts. When the approach of a gonda is signalled, chase is given by the troop of tame animals, four of which, without riders, press round and jam him so tightly that he is unable to sir. The fifth, which carries a mahout and two trackers, keeps in the back ground till the quarry is thus helpless. Then she joins the struggling group; and one of the experts sides down and attaches a rope drag to the hind leg of the captive monster.

Newly-caught elephant suffer most acutely, and evince their feelings by moods varying with their dispositions. Some sulk and refuse all nourishment. Others go mad with impotent rage; and cases have been known in which creatures in this plight, have flung themselves on the ground with such violence as to perish trom the shock. Generally, however, the meretricious bland-ishments of the trained khunkies end in soothing this violent despair. But captives must be kept for a week at least in the shade, well fed and accustomed to human society, before the breaking process can commence. It is astonishing how quickly they grasp the situation. Some years ago, while serving on the eastern frontier, I paid a visit to a newly-captured herd, the fruit of the Maharaja of Hill Tippera's khedda operations. On this occasion I was greatly struck with the docility and resignation occasion I was gleatly struck with the doctify and resignation of the poor brutes, just torn from their forest homes and forced to bend their poud necks to the yoke. Some, which had been ranging the hills a few days previously free as air, were to be seen being driven to water by a boy. I know of no other wild animal which, captured in an adult state, is capable of being so speedly domesticated. Is this susceptibility a proof of brain-power above or below the average? There is one curious fact which hardly bears out the elephants' legendary character for sagacity. It rately or never occurs to one, however sullen or furious he may be, to drag a mahout from his own or his neighbour's back with the trunk.

The process most in vogue for training is called jbatka. The feet and neck of the wild animal are firmly secured to his posts driven into the ground and thus he is rendered helpless. His hide is then vigorously rubbed by a dozen or more inshouts, using huge brushes made of eight-foot bamboos with their ends split. If the patient resent this treatment by a sweep of his trunk, a spearman posted on either side corrects him with a gentle thrust. After a while, however, he yields to the soothing influences of this rough shampoong, and is then rubbed down with straw. After this process has been often repeated and the animal is accustomed to the presence of mankind, two of the mahouts venture to mount him, under the protection of tame khunkies pressing him closely and spearmen brandishing their weapons near his head. Then begins his first lesson. A khunki is ordered to go through the postures required in full view, and the novice must kneel and rise as she does on pain of a stab or a battering on the head with the heavy goad used by mahouts. In case of prolonged recalcitrance the pupil is jammed between two khunkies so tightly that he is rendered powerless. In the eastern districts the recruit stands in water up to his belly during this ordeal : for the fluid allows the up to his belly during this ordeal : for the fluid allays the pain of the spear thrust and lessons his irritation. It is said that animals treated with this modicum of consideration are more easily tamed than others. But, as in education generally, love is a more potent factor than fear. Elephants soon respond to attention shown them; and patience on the part of a trainer brings their best qualities into play. As soon as the breaking-in process is complete, the product is bought up by dealers, who take their purchases long distances in the hope of disposing of them at a profit. Throughout Northern Bengal it is the custom with zemindars to buy up young, them at one of the great annual Fairs. In February last I visited the Singhessur Mela, and was amazed at the display of elephants. They were tethered in hundreds under the mango-trees of a tope fully a mile square. Rembrandt alone could have done justice to the scene, when the ruddy glow of countless camp fires was reflected by long lines of giants engaged in discussing their suppers of pipal-leaves. An owner told me that he had just sold a beast for Rs. 15,000 which he had bought at the fair four years previously for Rs. 800.

Elephants should be kept in lofty stables facing the north; nothing is so murious to them as glare. This filkbana should be as cool as possible; and be under the master's eye, for the tricks of mahouts are legion. The floor must be smooth and well-paved, to admit of its being kept scrupulously clean. If the bare ground to admit of its being kept scrupulously clean. It the bare ground be considered good enough, the filkhana must be moved frequently, in order to pievent the evil consequences to health of a soil saturated with facal matter. When the stud is numerous, great care must be taken to keep the animals from trespassing on each others domain. Like the rest of what used to be called the "brute creation," elephants have a strong sense of property in the quarters assigned them; a characteristic, by the way, which strongly militates against the socialistic theories so much in vogue in our expiring century

--- The National Magazine.

F. H. SKRINE.

SEVEN POUNDS IN ONE WEEK.

every in in who is thin would thank you for fattening him.

Nor every man who is thin would thank you for fattening him. He doesn't wint to be fat and for very good reasons. Unnecessary fat is a load to carry about; it interferes with a man's power to work, shortens his wind, and dulk his wits.

Yet, on the other hand, a certain amount of flesh is needed for health and comfair. For example: A man five feet high should weight about 120bs, i and man five feet is inches, 145bs, i aman six feet, 178lbs. It is a regular ascending scale. The insurance companies allow a variation of 7 per cent, above or below it, and beyond those limits charge an extra premium. One shouldn't be much over or under his proper weight if he wants to be sound and hearty—and we all do want that.

want that.

Now we will tell you how Mr. Thomas Crosby, being under weight, guined seven pounds in a week. He had lost 1½ stone, which is too much off for a man who was never fleshier than he naturally ought to be. It was this way. He was right enough up to May, 1801. At that much be began to feel ill and out of soits. He had a nasty taste in his mouth—like rotten eggs, he says—and a thick, slimy stuff came on his guins and teeth. His appetite failed, and what he did eat was, as you might say, under compulsion; and right afterwards he would have great pain in his stomach and chest. Plainly, something was amiss with him in that region. He was often dizzy, and cold chills ran over him as though he were threatened with fever. Of course we should expect a man who is handled in this way to lose strength. Mr. Crosby lost strength. In fact, he got so weak and nervous that he shook all over, and his hands trembled as if a current of electricity were running through him.

over, and his hands tiembled as if a current of electricity were running through him.

To use his own words: "I rapidly lost flesh, was 1½ stone lighter, and could hardly walk about. Once my parents thought I was dying, and sent in haste for the doctor. I saw two doctors in Epworth and one at Haxey, but they were not able to help me. Our vicar, Rev. Mr. Overton, recommended me to the Lincoln Infirmary, where I attended for eight weeks as an out loon patient, without beuefit.

"Soon afterwards Mr. Sharp, a chemist, at Epworth, spoke to me of the virtues of a medicine known as Another Sergel's Curraive Syrup. Being interested in what he said, I left off trying other things and began taking this Syrup. In a few days I felt better, and presently I gained seven pounds in a week. At that rate I soon got back to my work, and have had the best of health ever since. I tell these facts to everybody, and am perfectly willing they should be published. Yours truly (Signed), Tom CROSBY, Ferry Road, Epworth, via Doncaster, December 23td, 1892."

After reading Mr. Crosby's stony we scarcely need to ask why he lost flesh. The minute he stopped eating and digesting his usual allowance of food he began to fall away. Trees, they say, grow as much from the air by means of their leaves, as they do from the soil. But men don't. They've got to be built up through their stomachs. Indigestion and dyspepsia (Mr. Crosby's complaint) stops this process and poisons those who have it, besides. That accounts for all the painful and dangerous symptoms our friend speaks of. The doctors do what they can, but, unluckily, they don't possess the medicine that goes to the bottom of this disease and cuies it. The reunedy is Moher Seigel's Curative Syrup, and nothing else, so far as we know. It restores digestion, and digestion covers the bones with fat enough for health and good looks.

IN THE PRESS To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," ву

F. H. SKRINE, cs

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia,

- 1 A portrait of the Doctor.
- 2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana.
- 3. About 225 pages of original essays from his brilliant pen.
 - 4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE:

To registered subscribers paying in .. Rs 5 advance To other subscribers and ordinary ... purchasers ...

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman' will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,-

Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount,

has been remitted permoney order

To be legibly (Name wruten Address..... The

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdaii Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NACENDRA NACH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accouchem, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Philipsis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities and indications of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

every quarter.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S., Homæopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or ersonally daily at his residence, 30-1, Coloutolah Street, Calcutta.

Lady Elliott Portrait Memorial Committee.

Allan Arthur Hon, Justice Beverley Hon C E Buckland W. D Crincksnank B from Gaerter Col. Hailes, 6th B. I. A Macdonald

A F M. Abdur Rahman A. Sunson, J. OB Saunders A. H. Wallis, J. OB Saunders

W. O. Bell-Irving S. E. J. Clarke H. H. The Maharaja Darbhanga, K.C.LE. J Jouslain,
E. F Longley.
C. Moore David McLaren Morri- Hon, P. Playfair,

J. OB Saunders [A. H. Wallis,

Mahataja Sir J. M. Tagore, K. C. S. I.

PRESIDENT—Allan Arthur.

HON, TREASURER—J. O'B. Saunders,

HON, SECRETARY—David McLaren Morrison,

At the meeting of Committee held at the Chamber of Commerce on the 19th January,

it was decided to have a picture of Lady

Elliott painted, any simplus to go towards a person d present.

All palescapages as harmal.

All subscriptions to be sent to the HON. TREASURER,

> 9, Hate Street, C deetta.

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption, Wills &c.* Price No student or practitioner should be without a copy of this GREAT

. (Sd.) Nana Bhai Haiidas." (Sd.) Nana Bhai Hairdas," Bengali translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshara † Price Bengali Translation of the Dattaka-

Bengali Translation of the Dattaka-chandrika.† Price ... 0 8 The Evidence Act with notes in Bengali.† Price ... 1 0 The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengali.† Price ... 4 0 Principles of Zemindari Manage-ment and Book-keeping in Bengali o 10 First Lessons in English for Ben-gali boys Price ... 0 4

gan boys Price ... Bharat Sasan Franali*

IN THE PRESS

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

CONTENTS.

Historical Analysis of the evolution of Historical Analysis of the evolution or religious systems

Definition of the term "religion."
The problems of the philosophy of religion and then solutions, old and new,
(a) Why do Hindus behieve in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tortoise, and a boar
(b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the sacrifice of animals, and the bunning of thee or incense.
Sec. Sec. Sec. Sec.

- &c. &c &c. &c. &c.

 The weapons offensive and defensive of religious teachers.

 The power of fine words

 The art of becoming a prophet.

 The cumulative effect of hardswearing
- for ages.
- Specimens of Puranised history Brahming d and Christian priesteraft compared. The artificial miseries of men caused by

- religion.
 Tyranny and taxation of religion.
 The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity
 Swindling as a fine art.
 New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
 The great prophets of the world and their doings.
 Probable origin of the Saiva religion Fantric mysticism and abominations
- * To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., only.
- † To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradham Ag + 5, No. 11, Raja Nabakushna's Street, Calcutta

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universilly ada Guinea a box, for Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as wind

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off al valuable, as a few doses of them carry off al humours, and bring about all that is required. No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beecham Pills for removing any obstitution or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use.

For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they art like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

human machine
The Natives of India will find Beecham's Pills the finest medicine ever introduced to then notice, the European residents also will find them of great value for cooling the blood
For throwing off fevers and preventing influencing in hot climates, they stand without mutions in no. Communication and arrival.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debu litated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy for Coughs in general, Asthma, Bronchial Affections, Houseness, Shortness of Breath, Eightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheezing, &c., these Pills stand arms valled. Let any person give Beecham's Cough Pills, etrich, and the most violent Cough will in a short time be removed.

Boecham's Tooth Paste
Will recommend itself being efficacious and economical its packed in near arright collapsible Tubes

collapsible Tubes

NOTICE.—G Atherton & Co will forward
on receipt of letter, samples at the following rates size 91/2d, at 8 annas per box; 1-1/2d size 12 annas per box, 2-5 yd, size 2 rupees per rates do not include the rost of postage which will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET, CALCUTTA.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF

	MEMORIAL FUND.
1	R. His Highness The Maharaja of Dur-	ls.
	bhanga K.C.I.E.,2, His Highness The Maharaja of Vizi-	2000
	anagram, G.C.I.E., 1,0	000
	Moorshedabad, Amirul Omra, G.C.I.E. 3	800
• 4	G C.S.I	500
•	His Highness the Micharita Rabadar
	b. Nawah Bahadur Sir K Abdul Gham.	500
18 ₍ 4	Ashan Ulla, C.I.F.	00
	I. Nawab Imad Jung Bahadar	00
10) - Shains-ul Utama, Syed Alt Belgramt 5 5 Khan Bahadar BhatB thauddin, C.I.E.,	00
11	Vizier to the Nawan of Imagrath	လ
	han Tagore, KC - t 2	50
12	Mass. Makeness M. b 9 C.	00
1.4	. Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosem Ah Muza Bahadur
15	. Sunjani Maik Asafad Dowlat Nawab	50
	Feraz Inno	10
16 17	. The Hon'ble Mr. Jusuce Chandra	00
18	Prince Muzi Sir Jahan Kadar Baha-	00
19	The Hardble D. Dlanfare	00
2)	. Haji Kasin Ariff	00
21	Lieuten int-General the Hon'ble Sir H. Brackenbury, KCB., I	ര
23.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gura Das	00
24.	The Handle II. In the Co.	50
25.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter Kr	5 I 50
	Bahadur, C.S.I	50
27 28.	Manarijkumar Benoya Krishna	śo
29.	The Hon'ble Mouly: Abdul Jabbar	50
30.	The Right Ray the Lord Picker of	50
31.		,o ,o
32. 33.	Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzogr Muza	0
34 35.	The Houble W. C. Bonnerjee	0 0
36.	Syed Natur Finds, Esq., C.S.,	0
37. 38.	I. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S.	0
39. 40.	B I Dame W	0
41.	Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	12
42.	Kuma Rudha Prosad Roy	5
43. 44.	Habu Pubungta Narah Roy 2	5
45. 46.	Babh Guru Prosonno Chose	5
47.	Kapa Sir Sourindra Mohan Tagore.	1
48. 49.	Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury 2	5
50.	Kaja Steenath Roy 2	5 1
51. 52.	R Belchambers, Esq.	5
53. 54.	Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury 2	5 1
55. 50.	Babu Gopal Lai Seal 2	i
57	A. I. Apcai, E.sq 23	: 1
58. 59.	Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E., 23
რი. 61.	Munsul Cholam Kasool	i
62. 63.	Prince Mahamed Rukhman Ch., C.S.1. 20	,
64. 65.	Author France Ch	.
56.	Mouly Imadd Ab
57. 58.	Rai Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar 20 D. Panioty, Esq 20	- 1
59. 70.	Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan 20 H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-law 20 Moulvi Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed,	1
71.
••	T Inglia France 17	.8

72. T. Inglis, Esq., C.S .

. 17

			-
73.	A. H. Giles, Esq		16	i
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq , C.S.		16	l
75.	The Hon'ble Mourer Sirajul	Islam	••	i
1	Khan		16	۱
76	Moulvi Serajuddeen	•••		ļ
77.	Abul U.s.m P	•••	15	İ
	Abul Hasan, Esq.,	•••	15	ı
78.	H. A. D. Phillips, Esq., C s.	•••	10	ı
79.	Baboo Kiran Chunder Roy		10	ľ
80.	E. N. Baker, Esq		10	١
81.	Baboo Doyal Chand Bose		10
82.	" Madan Mohun Bose		10
83.	"Kanai Lai Khan		10
84.	Moulyi Synd Akram Hossain		10
85.	Moulvi Aziz Anmud	•••
86.	Kai Kanyelai Dey Buhadoor	•••	10
87		•••	10
	H. Holmwood, Esq	• • • •	10
88.	Baba Harry Mohan Chunder	•••	101
89.	Baboo Chakkanial Roy		5 !
90.	" Sarodaprasad Gnose		5 l
Sı	thscriptions will be thankfully t	received	bv
the	Honorary Joint Secretaries,		1
RAL	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHADI	,, 1
	4, British Indian Street,	C	۱ ۲۰۰
	and A F M Appen Dans	Carcutta	, '
	and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMA	IN, ESQ.	, ,

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

Barrister -- at Law,

16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

Guaranteed three Years.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, mickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. with an extra glick, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily reparable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solended time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jetks. Vir. H. Moore of Royal Artiflery from Poonamaltee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Dumdum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Ro. 1-8-0. Real.

pattment says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-9-0. Real.

Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real

Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0.
Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector from Sankutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkee of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeautfor Rs. 28. Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and quaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO.,

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

CATARRH, Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these Sufferes are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of hiving parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proyed this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple ieniedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Blog St. TORONTO, Canada.

17.8

Scientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure reites from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant,

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or turse complaints in their severest and most chronic form

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the s of TOO PHACHE? A single applica-

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physcians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar pre-paration has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemisis throughout the world

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limitec.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY(ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND Recues of Politics, Literature, and Society BATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

If paid in advance,

	poster on auto	ame,
Yearly	•••		Rs.	12
Hait-yearly Quarterly	•••	•••	,,	7
Montan	•••	•••	,,	4
	, ···	•••	Кe	1-8
Single or sample	Copy		Ans.	0-8
lf no	n paid in ac	Vance.
Yearly	•••	•••	R۹.	31
Haif-yearly Quarterly	•••	•••	"	8-01
Monthly	•••			6-0
	c		. 10	2-4
Single or sample	Copy	•••	Ans.	0-12
No additional	charge for p	postage	or pe	or.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are chaired by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckeer Dutes Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW POLITICS LITERATURE OFAND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 685.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE LADY JANE GREY.

On hill and stream the morning beamed, The fresh and fragiant morn, And through the woodland cheerily The huntsman wound his horn ; And lords and ladies, richly dight, The gallant and the gay, Had vowed to waken with the light The pastime of the day.

Within her chamber, far apart, In simple garb attited, Of modest mien, and blow serene, A lady sat retired. In meditative mood she sat, And scanned the magic page, The dreamy and mysterious lore Of Greece's poet-sage.

And when the sound of horn and hound Broke full upon her ear, " They wist not in their sports," she cried, " What pleasure I have here : They wist not, Plato, of the joy, The rapture that I feel, The ' Paradise of rare device ' Thy fantasies reveal."

The tranquil day has passed away, lts sonny hours have sped, And gathering clouds begin to lower Around the fated head : The guileless truth of early youth, Its faith and trust remain, But other cares and other friends Surround the Lady Jane.

The heartless wiles of crafty men Already bem her in. The perils of the trusting heart In sober sooth begin; Before ber feet adventurers lay The glittering bauble down : The haughtiest knee in England bends To tender her-a crown !

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deaf-tess, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drume and similar appliances entirely imperseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

" My lords," she said, " for one so young, "I were maidenly and meet To take your counsels for a lamp And guide unto my feet : Albeit, I have never sighed Nor sought for high degree ; The gauds and glitter of a court Have little charm for me.

" I reverence your sage resolves, Your subtlety admit, And weak and worthless at the best I know is woman's wit ; But God has fortified my soul Against this trying hour, And in His 'faith and fear ' I shun The path to regal power.

" How often in disast'rous feuds Hath English blood been shed! What living man, my lords, could bear Its curse upon his head? Were it not better to unite, And bid dissension cease, That so we might advance the reign Of righteousness and peace?

" May God protect our English homes, And bless my cousin's reign "-A sudden shout was raised without, " Long live the Lady Jane !" Arise, ye loyal Londoners. And shout for Jane the Queen ! The peerless choice of England's voice ! The monarch of sixteen !

The pageant gay has passed away, The garish dream has flown . In sad and silent prison-room The captive sits alone. The wasted form, and broken heart -The chamber in the tower-Are these the sole memorials left Of that brief day of power?

But ne'er was sufferer's brow, methinks, So placid and serene : Angelic grace had left it's trace In her submissive mien : " He can not err whose hand," she cried, "The universe sustains; And welcome every change and chance His Providence ordains."

·Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, it possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

And as the parting hour drew nigh,
Her faith the stronger grew:
So young, so good, so beautiful,
So constant and-so true!
In vain the zealous priest of Rome
Essayed, with honeyed tongue,
To win her from the cherished creed
To which she fondly clung.

"Sir Abbot," with a smile she cried,
"Your subtle reasons spare;
My heart is fixed and resolute;—
In courtesy forbear:
To argue for my faith is not
For one so weak as 1;
But in it, by the grace of God,
And for it I can die!

"And tell my cousin --since, you say,
She mourns my sinful state—
I have a ghostly counsellor
In this my mortal strait.
Tell her I freely own my fault,
And recognize her right;
She loves me not, and soon the grave
Will hide me from her sight

"May all her subjects duteously
Incline unto her will;
And God forgive me, if I e'er
Have wished or thought her ill
Tell her that though the flesh be frail,
The spirit feels its might,
And longs to burst its bonds, and soar
Rejoicing into light!

" Commend me to my father's prayers,
And to my loving lord
I charge you as a Christian man
To take my dying word:
It mitigates the stroke of death,
The pang of parting pain,
To think that we who loved so well
So soon shall meet again!"

'T is said that on the fatal morn,
From her secluded cell
She saw Lord Guildford pass to death,
And waved a last farewell.
Nay more, she saw, too plainly saw,
Beneath her window borne,
Oh sight of speechless agony!
His headless trunk return.

Her fortitude had well-nigh failed
Beneath the cruel shock;
But calmly, martyr-like, she laid
Her head upon the block.
And long shall fame enshrine her name
Among the great and good;
The image of heroic faith
And guileless womanhood.

And brightly her example still Shines through the mist of years.
The gentle and the true embalm
Her memory with tears;
By winter fires her tale is told,
And never told in vain,
As children listen to the Life
And Death of Lady Jane.

WEEKLYANA.

In consequence of the union of the West and South United Presbyterian congregations in Duns, the church of the former, built 7 years back, at a cost of £2,000, was declared a superfluity and diposed of to the highest bidder for £170. Union and disestablishment go hand in hand. Not the church is free—from the auctioneer's

AT the German town of Insterburg, they have started an Association for the Prevention of Scandal in Society. Each member is bound " to denounce to the president all those who are detected in backbiting their neighbours, giving full details, the names of the persons with whom the report originated, those who helped to spread it and the witnesses to prove it." The Association then calls upon the injured person to proceed against the offender, and offers financial aid if necessary. The members would be more useful if they directed themselves against the origination than the growth of scandals. It is likely, however, that in attempting to check an evil, they will unconsciously help on its spread. The money could be better expended in other ways. At the same time, the establishment of the society may be an indication that the evil which it is intended to suppress has grown enormously. Whatever the necessity, the system of espionage cannot be beneficial to society. It has a tendency to degenerate into terrorism and blackmailing.

THE World's last "Celebrity at Home" is Sir Edwin Arnold. The writer says :-

"Poet, Interateur, journalist, traveller though he be, the handsome flat wherein Sir Edwin Arnold finds a pied-a terre bears few indications of his eventual life or of his long residence. In India and wanderings over the land of the Rising Sun, whose people he learned to love so wen. A large square anteroom leads into what is naturally the most interesting portion of his home—the bright, cheerful study so characteristic of the man. A tiny despatch-box—the companion of many journeys—stands on a small table, and is quite large enough for one who, with such orderly, methodical habits, knews where to put his hand on any paper required, and 'can write on the top of a hat as well as anywhere else.' The bookcases contain only a few teles of a once vist library, for Sir Edwin diskles accumulations, and considers that portable property is a great nuisance. Wherefore he has twice dispersed his books and household gods among his children, so as to be free of effects: nevertheless, there are some intel possessions of interest which he retains, 'only for the present,' he remarks significantly.' Those who see my flat know I live elsewhere; and though I make books, I never keep them.' Among the pictures on the walls there is one of the Emperor of Japan on horseback, another of Prince Siddathadrawing the curtain over the couch of his sleeping wife before he went forth on his act of renunciation, and a fine proof-before-letter engraving of Noel Patons' 'Obeton and Titania.' There are pleiny of deep, comfortable lounging-chairs, presumably for the use of his friends; for Sir Edwin himself, with perfect physical health, never knows what it is to be tried or to have had even one headache, and attributes it to the fact that he never fiets, never hurries, and looks upon life as a fine art, and that it is as reasonable to study to present a healthy body for the soul as it is for a good soldier to keep his scabbard in order for the useful blade. And yet in a career so chequiered, so full of incident, adventure, and unceasing work, it and could almost answer in the same words, 'I will take your life it you do,' he yields' for aud acquantance sake, and a wish to please.'

A born poet and a student from childhood, Edwin Arnold simply was weamed on books, and remembers well, when he was five years old, his father, who always did things on a large scare, sending up to his room a washing-basket full of quartos and folios, among which those of Dampier and La Perouse first fired his imagination with a love of history, of geography, and of travel; while Pope's 'Ihad' he would devour in beu, turning his shouldier to the winnow to catch the last glimpses of the waning light. His schooldays were passed at King's School, Rochester, and King's College, London, after which he was elected to a scholarship at University College, Oxford, where he won the Newdigate prize for his English poem on 'The Feast of Belshazzar,' and the following year was chosen to give the Address to the Prime Minister, Lord Derby, on the occasion of his being installed Chancellor of the University. Leaving Oxford with high honours, he was elected second master in the English Division of King Edwind VI.'s School at Birmingham, and later, turning his footsteps towards the East, he was appointed Principal of the Government Sanskrit College at Poona, and Fellow of the Bombay University. The young Principal's quick mastery of Oriental languages and keen usight into the complex Oriental character, together with an innate tact in desline alike with the native princes, the heads of departments, and the students, enabled him to be of considerable use in educational affairs, students, enabled him to be of considerable use in educational affairs, and he was twice thanked by the Governor in Council for his services. Nor was he distinguished in official and social life only. With the physical vigour and activity which do not generally go with powerful intellects, he was an ardent sportsman, and hau many thrilling adventures while in puisuit of 'big game' and out pig-sticking. With a mind attimed to all that is lofty alse in ideas and in aims and fall of the imagery of poetry, Sir Edwin Amold possesses a peculiar simplicity of character, together with a magnetic power of sympathy and a detestation of all uncharitableness. His conversation is full, now of sparking anecdote, amon of thrilling pathos, as may suit the subject, while the gentle, courteous manner has a charm all its own. His brightness is infectious; it seems to brace and invigorate even the most while the gentle, courteous manner has a charm all its own. His brightmess is infectious; it seems to brace and invigorate even the most depressed of those with whom he comes in contact, and to cause them to look upon life through his own rose-coloured glasses.

Sir Edwin Arnold's foreign Orders alone are a collection of curiosities.

'The Light of Asia' brought him the decoration of the White Elephant from the King of Siam; the Order of the Lion and Sun came from the from the King of Siam; instruction of another factor and Sian came from the Shah of Persia on the production of another factorating volume; With Sadi in the Garden; or, the Book of Love, a poem founded on a single chapter of the work of the Persian poet Sadi. In later years, during his visit to Japan, the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Rising Sian, which carries with it the dignity of Chokunin of the Empire; not to speak of the Imperial Order of the Medipidieh from the Sultan and to speak of the imperial order of the Medijdien from the Sultan and Imperial Order of Osmanle. The decoration Companion of the Stat of India he received on the occasion of the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India; and eleven years after he was created Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. He is likewise a Fellow of the Royal Astatic and other societies, and honorary correspondent of the Geographical Society of Maiseilles."

ACCORDING to the World,

"All Cromwell's descendants in the direct male line are extinct, but "All Cromwell's descendants in the direct male line are extinct, but he is the lineal ancestor through females of a minerous progeny. Among the peers who descend from Cromwell are Lords Ripon, Childrester, Clarendon, Cowpet, Morley, Lytton, Walsingham, and Ampthill; and among the eldest sons of peers who so descend are Lord Countenay (heir to the earldom of Devon), Lord Stanley (heir to the earldom of Detby), and Lord Clifton (heir to the earldom of Darnley). Lady Devon, Lady Derot, Lady Latton, Lady Isabella Whithread, Lady Ampthin, and Lady borthruck are likesise his descendants. So are Sir John Lumbock and half a dozen other bationets, Mr. Charles Villiers, the Father of the House of Commons, and Mr. Montagu Villiers, the vicar of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge."

MR. T. D Beighton, C.S., having fallen ill and taken a month's leave, Mr. P. L. Roy, bartister-at-law, acts both as Deputy Legal Remembrancer and Superintendent of Legal Affans. Mr. Roy has deserved the choice.

THE following from the Indian Intelligence of the current Inuan Magazine and Review is a hard nut even to those mos concerned :-

"The title of Rajah as a personal distinction (conferred) upon Kumar Kristna Deb, of Sooalazar; and Kutar Jagii Khan, of Natajde."

Are we in Bengal or in Swaziland?

THE more knowing Asiatic Quarterly Review transforms the new Chief Justice of the Nizam's dominions into Mir Kadar Buksn. Perhaps it is right. The Langar is just over. The Pleader of Patna has played many parts, and may be anything but a dispenser of justice next to God.

THE Buthday of the Maharaja of Kashmir was celebrated on the 18th July by a salute of 21 guns and half holiday in the public offices, snewing that Mahataja Partab Singh is, if at all, only half ruler in

In the village of Gandhur, near Broach, a Mahomedan having dug up certain Jain idols and carvings, the Jains wanted to possess them-The Collector, Mr. A. C. Logan, decided that they had no claimlegal or moral, to the property, but that Government was pleased to order that "the said idols and carvings should be handed over to the Jams of Broach, provided that they agree to make the Mussulman Gemai Used, who found the images, such a present as the underv decide." Mr. Logan then fixed the value of the present

Thou .

But futu.

Of virtue's model of his position, Prince Sir Jehan Kadi "e Mahomedan Hostel fund.

Old ocean thus, in ca, d, at the Emerald Theatre, the third Is softest of imaginal undir Iswara Chaudra Vidyasagar.
In peaceful glory, by no preside and Baboo Rabindra Nath * Madam Life and Work of the deceased, been published on the subject.

Subscribers in the country all be able to add to it and set medium, particularly given, a

NOTES & LEADERETTES.

OUR OWN NEWS.

R-

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE latest election returns show the following results :-

Unionists elected 393, guns 101

Liberals elected 156, g uns 20

Ten Parnellites, 62 Anti-Parnellites and two Labour condidates have also been elected.

Sir W. V. Hiscourt has been elected for West Monmouth by a majority of five thousand votes, Mr. Warmington, the Liberal candidate, having retired in his favour.

The Times urges the re-election of Mr. Gully as Speaker.

THE Chinese loan has been ovar-subscribed by a large amount.

On the 20th, Prince Nasiulla Khan was granted a farewell audience at Windsor Castle. Her Mejesty handed him an autograph letter addressed to "the Amn, my valued friend and ally." On the 26th, he paid a farewell visit to the Prince and Princess of Wales. The prince, leaves England at the end of this month, and will visit Paris, Brussels, Venice, and Egypt en route to India.

THE Sultan has conferred on the Ilhedive the Order of Khanidan Osman, in recognition of his fidelity and eminent services. The Khedive will visit Odessa and the Crimea before returning to Egypt.

THE funeral of M. Stambouloff took place at Sofia, on July 20. It was a most disorderly scene. The corriége was twice broken by the mob and almost dispersed owing to the panic which seized the mourners A detachment of Cavalry was called out. That prevented a collision between the parties at the cemetery. The coffin was lowered into the grave amidst great hooting and cheering.

Three men have been arrested and charged with the murder of M Stambouloff.

THE Porte has informed the Ambassadors at Constantinople that a scheme of reforms for the Turkish Asiatic provinces will shortly be presented. It has appointed Shakir Pasha to supervise the proposed reforms in Armenta. An annesty has been granted to all Armentans except common law offenders. Lord Salisbury has informed Rustem Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador, that the British policy in regard to the Armenian question remains unchanged.

THE Czar received the Bulgarian deputation on the 20th and declared that he would not refuse to protect. Buigaria in the future.

IN a collision between two Italian steamers in the Gulf of Spezia, on the 21st., 145 passengers and three of the crew were drowned.

AT the invitation of Her Majesty a number of Indians and Burmese connected with the Indian Exhibition, visited Windsor Castle on Saturday, and were most graciously received ADVICES from Bangkok state that the Anglo-French Commission for the delimitation of the territories in the region of the Upper Mekong to enable the French and Butish Governments to establish a buffer State under Chinese control, has returned without having come to any agreement. The failure is owing to the French having erected a fort in the proposed buffer State territory and to the British protection and interests in the country near the Mekong river.

THE French are experiencing great troubles in Madagascar owing to increasing sickness among their troops and the difficulty of providing transport. The arrival of the force at Antananarivo during the present season is doubtful. The French papers complain of bad organisation in connection with the expedition. General Duchesne, commanding the forces in Madagascar, telegraphs that he is marching upon Andriba and is building the road as he goes. The progress of the force is, he states, difficult

THE Russian Pamir Commissioners have been instructed to enter into no negociations with the British Commissioner until Roshan and Shignan have been entirely evacuated by the Afghans.

THE latest advices from Cuba state that the insurrection is further spreading and that the fighting with the insurgents is constant and of a serious nature. The losses of the Spaniards by climate and in the field are very heavy. The Spainsh Government, in view of the serious turn of affinis, will despatch twentythree thousand more troops to Cuba next month

JAPAN demands from China an additional indemnity of seven and half millions sterling for abandoning the Liao Tung Peninsula.

THE Franco-Chinese Convention, lately signed at Pekin, settling the boundaries and commercial relations between Yunnan and Tonquin and permitting radways and telegraphs, opens to French commerce several southern ports, where Cousuls will be permitted, and concedes the right of mining in the three southern provinces, together with freedom to navigate the rivers Loho and Mekong.

BARON Blanc, Minister for Foreign Affairs, speaking in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, said Russia had intimated that she had only religious interests in Abyssinia. King Menelik, he said, owed his throne to Italy, but hid repaid the debt by betraying her. The prospect of war between Italy and King. Menelik is openly discussed in Rome.

SLATIN Bey, the former Governor of Dufour, who was captured by the Dervishes after the fall of Khartoum, and only effected his escape in March last, has arrived in London In an interview with the representative of Reuter's agency he stated that the Khahfa had lost much of his prestige and power, and was now entirely dependent on Western Arabs. The Mahdists, he added, were more likely to act on the defensive than the offensive. No telegraph line, he said, would be possible across Africa until the Mahdists have been wiped out.

THE sensation from Simla is the robbery at Viceregal Lodge of £800 worth of jewellery-the property of Mrs. Grant, wife of Captain Grant, R. N. (retired), a guest of the Viceroy. The jewels were missing on the 23rd, having apparently been removed during Mrs. Grant's absence at Mashobra. No trace has been found of the missing articles.

On account of indisposition, Ludy Ethott has not returned to Calcutta. It does not appear that she will accompany her lord in his

SIR Charles Elliott makes another rather lengthened tour before returning to Daijeeling, Leaving Cilcuita on Monday, the 5th August, he visits Yoz fferpur, Monghyr, Bhagalpur, Rajmahal and Rumpur Bodia. The arrival at Dujeeling is timed 15-30 on Thursday, the 22nd August. The Lieuten int-Governor will be accompanied by the Houble H. J. S. Cotton, Chief Secretary, Captain Currie, Private Secretary, and Captain Lister, Aid-de-camp.

At a special communication of the District Grand Lodge to be held in the Bunbay Town Hall, on the 23rd of August, Lord Similarst, will be installed Pro-District Grand. Master of the English Constitution of Freemasonry in the Bombay Presidency.

THE English world is mid after Grace-the Cricketer. The versable Sir Richard Temple claims to be superior to him. In presenting the gold medal of the Billoon Society to Dr. W. G. Grace, Sir Richard

"As an old curketer myself, I have not forgotten the mysteries of the game, but in the present day the wirket is so managed that the butsman always gets the best of the bowler. In my days I occupied the position of longstop, now no longer required in the field, but it was one of the hardest and most important. Not only talents and experience for the"

were the hands used, but face, chest, limbs were often called into play in stopping the ball. But now all is changed, and things are much easier."

The one rupee subscription in India for the Grace testimonial is, we are afraid, not making rapid progress. The Nilgiri News has opened a second subscription for larger sums. That list is headed by the Governor of Madras and the propuletor of the News with Rs. 50 each.

AMONG the heroes of the Chitral campaign distinguished with the Order of Merit is a Sepoy who had no fewer than 31 wounds. That record is broken by a Sikh soldier. "He was shot in the side at the Koragh Defile, when Ross's party were cut up. He could feel the bullet in his body and so worked away at it with both hands, gradually pushing it outwards until he had extracted it." Immediately he shouldered his tiffe again and did his march of twenty miles.

THERE is also a feeling among Europeans of disappoinment akin to astonishment at the conferment of the Knighthood of the Exalted Star on Surgeon-Major Robertson. He wins the distinction more for his enautry or adventure in originating the campaign than for any gallantry in the field.

IT is said that

It is said that

"the notification issued a few days ago by the Governor-General in Council, ordering the discontinuance of the grant of drawbacks of duty on cotton-goods exported from British ports to Native States, is the first step towards carrying into effect the proposal the Government of India have lately pressed upon the Feinditonies for the levy of a five per cent.excise duty on cotton yins of 20% count, and above. The design of this measure, it is stated, is to bring the conditions under which cotton manufactures are carried on in Nitive States where milk exist into conformity with those obtaining in British India. Unless the principalities concerned agree to this arrangement, the Government of India, it is stated, will take special measures to prevent the importation of cotton goods made in such States into British India.

We may here explain the attitude rather by Lord Science of Alderburn

We may here explain the attitude taken by Lord Stanley of Alderley in regard to the cotton industry in this country and the silk industry in England. He spoke twice and against the cotton excise duties. On the first occasion, Lord Reay had answered only the question on the Notice and not what was asked about the India Office over-ruling the Indian Government as to the difference of 24 and 20 counts. So Lord Stanley reverted to the subject, and contended that, the difference was protection to Lancashire. This time Lord Kimberley answered, explaining that the Government of India had the power to alter, if it found it neces sary, 20 to 24 counts. Notwithstanding that reservation in the Act, the excise duty is unjust to India. It was plain, that her Majesty's Government could not move in the matter without a sop to Manchester. Lord Stanley was for a duty on foreign silk to save the expiring silk industry in England.

THE elected members of the Bengal Council are coming in one by one. The first to sit was Mr. A. M. Bose. He is followed by Rai Bahadoor Eshan Chunder Mitter, who took his seat last Saturday and is gazetted this week.

THE Dacca Division, as represented by the four delegates from the four District Boards, has chosen Bahoo Guruprasad Sen as its representative to the Bengal Council. It is not to be supposed that they have used their discretion or were unanimous. Only three voted for Mr. Sen. The increase of one vote is due to the retigal. of the other candidate. If Raja Surji Kant Acharjee havattu the last of the other candidate. If Raja Surji Kant Acharjee havatte the lassed at King's field, there would have again been a tre. Baboquer which he was had opposed by his own candidature Mah. Oxford, where he won of Durbhanga at the Bihar election and been to give the Address to Now Raja Surja Kant of Muktagachi occasion of his being installed Pleader Baboo. We are sorry for 18 Oxford with high honours, he again Division of King Edward or had not set about the matter in ricipal of the Government Sanskrit win an election, as it never won a tail languages and keen insight into the Notwithstanding, the result cher with an innate fact in de-ling Babu Guruprasad is one of ou the heads of departments, and by talents and experience for the

We give below the Government letter allowing the second voting:

"No. 3396 A.

Appointment Department.

From -H. J. S. Cotton, Esq. C. S. 1,
Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.
To-The Commissioner of Dacca,

Sir.—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 1:91G, dated the 3rd July 1895, reporting that the electoral representatives of the District Boards in the Dacca Division were unable to agree among themselves by a majority for the recommendation of a member to sit in the Bengal Council.

2. In reply I am directed to see the control of the recommendation of the second of the s

2. In reply I am directed to say that although no rule was framed allowing for the adjournment of a meeting of electoral representatives, there is no rule against such adjournment, and that it is always contemplated by the Lieutenant-Governor that on such a deadlock as this occurring, the delegates would adjourn and sit day by day and communicate with their constituents and come to some decision at last. Sir Charles Elliott trusts that they will do so now, and you are requested to convene them again for the purpose. The power of Government to nominate in default of election does not asset until after the expiration of two months from the day on which you issue your invitation to the District Boards to elect a representative but the Lieutenant Governor does not desire to avail himself of this power, and hopes that the delegates will be able to agree on, or to decide by a majority in favour of one main."

The interpretation of the rule is reasonable. But it does not entirely remove the difficulty which may recur again. The initial mistake of an even number of delegates to choose a representative is rectified in the present instance by the retirement of a candidate. We are grateful to Sir Charles Elliott for not seizing an opportunity of nominating a Member of his own selection.

The Bhagalpur delegates have not been wained by the Dacca example. There is a tie there also. Mr. George Hennessy and Rai Banadar Survya Narain Singh have obtained equal votes. The Bhagalpur elections have been the most contested. There were four candidates and every attempt was made to keep out the European.

As usual, the current number of the Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review is varied. It has now additional interest for India. The East India Association has dropped its own journal, and the important papers read there will be published in this quarterly. The July number thus opens with a shorthand report of an Address by Su Richard Temple to the Association at its annual meeting, dealing with "India in Parliament in 1894-95 and the Situation in India." There is more than one paper on India. List work, we reproduced a note on "Interference with Native States" by "Ex-Political." He recommends interference with the internal administration of Native States. His advice is that "the British Resident at a Native Court should be something more than passive. He should be the Guide, as well as the Philosopher and the Friend"

The relations between the Paramount Power and the Native Princes may not be clearly defined. But there can be no question that, in Native Principality, the British Resident, if not the British Government, is more powerful than the Prince. The Ruler is in constant dread of the Representative. The Prince's whole aim and object is to keep the Resident in good humour. If he is dissatisfied, there is no peace for the Prince. The Principality may not be swept away, but the Prince is nowhere. The British Government also has as complete a control as it could wish or feel disposed to exercise. Short of annexation, its power is supreme. It can seize a Prince in his own territory, and, after degrading him by an open trial, depose him, and set up a new dynasty, without the cause being made public. Or, it may quietly send a Prince on exile from his own territories. The Prince is not at liberty to dismiss a servant that is obnoxious to hun, or retain one that is not in the good book of the Resident. If temporarily suspended, the Prince cannot even spend his own or bi-way of the for a clearer definition or bi-w. Or, for open powers? The interference being already ort nich side is it desirable to extend it?

Thou shedd'stream a paper on "the Native Press of India.

But future with which an official from Simla recommends the Of virtue's modest-express policy. He is not for gagging the the native press generally. He is above Old ocean thus, in calm, 1878 for wholesale extinction, by the Is softest of imaginable official, he is Imperial. He would In peaceful glory, by no zewer the Governor-General in Council wspaper, irrespective of the landame Ar the operation of its clauses by a

Subscribers in the country are A bond fide native newsmedium, particularly as given, any paper! That, we may be sure, means much in the writer's vocabulary. We suppose the determination of the question is to rest with some official of the writer's creed. Bus! The reform, though drastic, has simplicity to recomme id it.

By desire of the Lieutenant-Governor, the President, the annual meeting of the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science will be held on Tuesday, the 30th instant, at 5-30 P.M., instead of Monday the 29th as previously annualized. Oher than members have been invited, and it is expected that the proceedings will interest them as well.

DR. Daly and the Metropolitan Institution have parted before their acquaintance was one month old. The students did not like him or his mode of teaching. He was, for one thing, not loud enough for them.

THE Hewrah-Sheakhala Tramways Company, Limited, has a history of its own. It is several years that Messes Walsh, Lovett and Co., of Calcutta, were moved by a few of the foremost men of the Serampore Sub-Division of the Hooghly District to take up the project of a Trainway from Howiah to Sheakhala through Chanditalah and Janai. To avoid acquiring land, it was suggested to run the line along the old Benares Road or what is sometimes called Ahalya Bai's Road. Statistics were gathered to see whether the line would pay. The result was encouraging. The local traffic consisted for the most part of cart- and cattle-borne jute and corn and cocoanuts and vegetables of different kinds. The number of passengers also by cabs and palkis, moving between Howrah and Sheakhala, is respectable. To make assurance doubly sure, it was ascertained that more than half the estimated capital of 3 lacs would be contributed by gentlemen interested in the project. A survey was then commenced. Much time was lost in determining how the E. I. Railway line could be avoided, for no trawway can be laid along the old Benares Road as it runs westward from Salkea without crossing the railway line. It was finally resolved to commence the line from Telkalghat at Howrah, to lead it through Bantra and then reaching the old Benares Rord at Milky to take it along that fine broad road up to Chauditala and thence after a slight deviation through Janai and the villages to its west to Sheakhala, Correspondence was opened with the Hawrah Municipality and the District Road Cess Committee for terms for use of the roads The matter had advanced very far when the firm of Messis Walsh, was succeeded by that of Messes. Martin and Co. The latter took up the project in right earnest. The terms have now been settled with both the Howiah Municipality and the Hooghly District Road Cess Commutee. The Government of Bengal approved of the project and sanctioned it in Murch last. Messis. Martin have drawn up the mean nandom and articles of association. A memorandum of agreement also has been drafted to bind the firm which is to construct the line and the Company to be formed for managing it. The capital is to, be Rs. 5,40,000 in 5,400 shares of Rs. 100 each. Messis. Matta are prepared to complete the line within 18 months. They will carry on the business of the Company under the direction and control of the Directors. The Managing Agents will continue in office notif they resign of their own accord or are removed by a special Resolution of the shareholders. The number of Directors will not be in ite than seven or less than five. Two of the members of the firm of Messis Mattin and two persons nonmated by the Hooghly District. Board will always be Directors, the other Directors being appointed by the shareholders. A Director must hold at least so shares

The question now is, why should the Howish Municipality be entirely ignored? It is fairly entitled to appoint one Director. Upon the same principle the Government of Bengal may claim a voice in the Directorate. It may, however, not care for the privilege and the shareholders, therefore, will not have to endure any dictation from that quarter except indirectly. The principle of shareholders appointing their own Directors is so sound and so usual that no deviation ought to be allowed unless for very strong reasons. The estimated capital is not small in the ordinary course of things, it will have to be raised from persons interested in the project. It is true that there is nothing to prevent strangers from taking a good many shares. But in this country, projects purely local hardly interest outsiders. The promoters would therefore do well to alter the plan about the appointment of at least the first Directors. These should be taken from such families as the Mookerjees of Uttarpara, the Mookerjees of Janai, and Chowdhries of Barijhate and such others. The first Directors should be men competent by their local influence to push the interests of the Company in the rapid disposal of the

A PETITION has been addressed by seventy-six rayyets of Nadia to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. It refers to the case noticed in our issues of February 23 and March 9 It will be in the recollection of our readers how the Magistrate of Nadia, by refusing, on the strange plea of want of establishment, to enquire into the claims of 76 rayyats for possession of their fields, allowed the disputes to be kept open, and how he afterwards induced the Government of Bengal to quarter an additional Police on the disturbed area under section 15 of Act V of 1861. The petition describes a state of things such as is possible under only an admin istration distinguished for vigour beyond the law. Land is meant for use or occupation. Nothing but the highest necessity can justify even a temporary suspension of its use. In Nadia, however, the Magistrate sought to forbid the use of land for an indefinite period. Fortunately, the Divisional Commissioner kept his head. At his recommendation the Government of Bengal refused to grant extension, for an indefinite period, of the Magistrate's order under Section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. For all that, the Bengal Government was weak enough to accede to the Magistrate's prayer for the quartering of a special Police. The costs were directed in the notification to be realised from all the parties to the dispute. The Magistrate, however, levied them on only the rayyets, exempting the two wealthier parties totally, The special Police sat like an incubus on the poor cultivators for a period of six months. During this period the Magistrate did nothing to remove the cause of the dispute by enquiring into the claims for possession. In the meantime, extension, by four months, has been granted by Government for continuance of the additional Police at the cost of the rayyets. This then is the capacity for administration displayed by the District Officer! The action of the Magistrate is mexplicable. The poor rayyets have been kept out of their lands for successive seasons. All the while, however, their powerful landlords, have been allowed to preacefully grow indigo on the disputed land and reap the harvest.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, July 27, 1805.

INSANITARY CALCUTTA AND UNMAN-NERLY COMMISSIONERS.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce has addressed an important letter to the Bengal Government on the general insanitation of Calcutta. The city is fast ceasing to be the sanitarium that it was proving to be after the introduction of filtered water and underground drainage. On the opening of the water works, cholera had almost disappeared. The extension of sewers had purged the city of the buzzing mosquitos. Cholera and smallpox, like fever and bowel complaints, are of ordinary occurrence. Flies and mosquitos dog you at every step. The sewers which were hailed as deliverers from all evils have added a new terror in the shape of sewer gas which pursues you everywhere with nameless and unnumbered ills in its train. Typhoid is on the increase. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Chamber, as representing the European community and the commerce of Calcutta, should be alarmed. It proceeds to the business, however, in no captious spirit, but in the interest of the entire population. It is well also that the Chamber has spoken, for that anxiety for the so its voice is no cry in the wilderness. The Chamber refers to "the recurrence with greater frequence and increasing severity of those waves of disease which modern science in many other places has worked so successfully to stamp out," in addition to "the endemic ailments of the East." It next alludes to the increase of typhoid fever and is most alarmed at the dreaded approach of the China plague which is nearing the city, having arrived at Singapore. Mr. Clarke, the Secretary, exonerates the Commissioners from all responsibility for inefficient works to which they have become heir. He specifies the trenching ground at Goragacha as the danger in our midst, and suggests that no such ground should be permitted on the south or south-west of the city and the southern suburbs.

Unlike Sir Rivers Thompson, Sir Charles Elliott is not for superseding the Commissioners on the mere complaint. Nor does he take any gloomy view The action taken on the representof the situation. ation is that the Bengal Government has laid down the following rules regarding trenching grounds and has called upon the Municipality for a report on typhoidal fevers.

"(I) In no trenching ground should the depth of the trenches exceed

"(1) In no trenching ground should the depth of the trenches exceed three feet, nor should the bulk of sewige deposited exceed one-half of the amount of earth filled in.

(2) Immediate effect should be given to this rule in dealing with the new Goragacha ground, and as soon as that ground has been used up, it should be closed, and the sewage of the Wards concerned deposited it should be closed, and the sewage of the Wards concerned deposited in the new ground at Gopalpur.

(3) This ground, and any new ground that may be reafter be opened, should be trenched symmetrically and on a regular system, so that each part of it shall be used in rotation, and crops grown on the portions used as soon as this can be done.

(4) Trenching on low land should be avoided as far as possible if only low ground can be obtained, it must be artificially rused.

(5) Steps should at once be taken for acquiring the necessary area of trenching ground, and a regular scheme should be drawn up for its working; the amount of sewage to be disposed of should be estimated with reference to the population concerned; and the area necessary to deal with it on the conditions laid down above should be accurately determined. determined.

determined.

(6) The old Goragacha ground has been brought into such a foul condition that in all probability crops will not grow on it. If this is the case it should be turfed over at once, and the new Goragacha ground should be either turfed or cultivated as may be found practicable."

In its reply to the Chamber, the Local Government upfolds the trenching system as the best yet discovered for disposing of fœcal matter. "The practice," the letter says,
"of rendering sewage innocuous by mixing it with dry earth was hailed

"of rendering sewage innocious by mixing it with dry earth was hailed not very long ago as a great saintary discovery, and it has been largely adopted in Europe. The Lieutenant-Governor is informed that the system is successfully followed in several towns in India, and it is the universal practice of Bengal juls to dispose of faccal matter in this way, and no unpleasant results have ensued. It is the misuse and not the use of the trenching system which should be objected to. It depends for it success on the oxidising effect that a porous substance, such as diy earth, exerts by bringing any sewage with which its mixed into mitimate contact with the air contained in its pores. If crops are afterwards grown upon the land thus treated, the process of purification goes on more rapidly and certainly." purification goes on more rapidly and certainly.

Trenching grounds cannot but be a nuisance, and we are not sure that the methods suggested will remove the evils emanating from them. No doubt much of the nuisance will not be felt if the procedure laid down be strictly followed. But the difficulty, especially in lazy Bengal, has always been to as minutely. In the rains, these open tr typical of the place reserved for the earth, the soul of this system, be alone can justify their existence. Their meetings are most crowded when an appointment is to be made. Works or estimates which require scrupulous scruitny are passed without much examination. Private and not public matters engage their earnest attention. They love to talk-to little or no purpose. Any attempt to control them in that direction is highly resented, for they are independent and fearless. The other day, they not only would not accept a proposition to limit their eloquence to reasonable lengths, but hounded the proposer, who had acted from the best of motives and spoke remarkably well. If the majority of speakers at municipal meetings could speak half as well, there would be no complaint. This week they exhibited a temper which is unparalleled in the history of the municipality. We have had independent Commissioners and fearless Justices of the Peace, but they were scarcely so unmannerly as several of the Commissioners proved themselves on Thursday last.

The Commissioners are certainl for the blunder of the sewerage are bound by law to complete a of a blessing, it is the of the unhealthiness of the sewers be improved excer The Commissioners, how

The occasion was the sanctioning of a threestorved verandah for the new viceregal buildings for the accommodation of Government House guests, and the applicant the Military Secretary on behalf of the Viceroy. And what occasion more tempting for pitiable display of bad taste, worse manners and foolish self-importance! The loquacious majority triumphed and the thinking minority went to the The Viceroy himself had a snub. The Commissioners would not only not grant the application but were unnecessarily rude. The Town Hall had witnessed stormier municipal meetings, but we cannot call to mind one more boisterous and unmannerly. After allowing permanent unesthetical structures on footpaths in every street, lane and byelane to insanitate houses and public thoroughfares, they, when the matter grew into a scandal, adopted a rule not to allow any but an open verandah, open to the skies, over a street. We are not aware whether any departure has been made. We know however, that the Commissioners usually observe a rule, in its exceptions. There may be a valid reason for the opposition to the viceregal verandah if the application be the first of its kind. Even if it were so, we must look to the reason of the rule and not its wording. If the verandah is no impediment and is an ornament, the Corporation should hail such a structure. Perhaps the neighbouring long range of verandah of the Great Eastern Hotel scares the Commissioners away. They had contracted beyond the law with the Company for a valuable consideration, and had allowed the structure which did not sanitarily improve the hotel premises, not for the beauty it added

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

THE INUIAN ASSOCIATION FOR the Cultivation of Science.
210, Bow-Bazar Street, Calcutta.
(Session 1895-96.)

Lecture by Babu Ram Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Monday, the 29th inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject. Compounds of Sulphur with Oxygen.
Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Saikar, M.A., M.D., on Monday, the 29th bi-at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects: Practical Zoology—The Pigeon. Zoology or bi-at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects: Practical Zoology—The Pigeon. Zoology or bl-w gerata.

The circulate Babu Ram Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Wednesday, the Subject: Phosphorus and its Compounds with Hy-1Pajendra Nath Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, est-wa, jids.

8 tra Datta, F.C.S., on Friday, the 2nd Aug.

anes ton and metallurgy of the metals,
www. A. M. D., on Friday, the 2nd Aug.
Www. Physiology—Carbo-Hydrates.
yrd and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for yrd are for Physiology; Rs. 4 for asrse of Physiology and Biology.
Vics.

Is 1 LAL SIRCAR, M.D.,

Honorary Secretary.

but for the monthly Rs. 100 it was to bring to the municipal fund. After having obtained the sanction and encroached, under it, the foot-path, the Company repudiated the contract as against the municipal law. The verandah still remains while the Company are absolved from the obligation of the monthly payment. Perhaps we are not right in introducing the other verandah. The Commissioners, following that precedent, have no objection to, in fact they have sanctioned, one-storyed verandah for the new buildings. The length of the suspension structure may probably be in its way.

We respect the feeling that would make no distinction between the great and the small in any application of law or rule. As a constitutional ruler, Lord Elgin may not act upon the slight shewn him by the rejection of the request. But as an Oriental we cannot view with unconcern the degradation of the highest personage in the empire. It is not the rejection but the manner of it that is most reprehensible.

In loyalty to the building regulations the Commissioners would not grant the Viceregal request. Are they as true to them always? Have they never allowed a structure against the byclaws? We wish some one will call for such instances of breach of byelaws. They were afraid of a precedent in the sanction of the present application. There is not another body so unmindful of the past as the Calcutta Corporation. Inconsistency is the rule with it.

We are afraid a crisis is approaching in our municipal affairs.

Metter to the Editor.

THE LATE REVD. K. M. BANERJEE.

Sir, .-- This morning I received the following insulting letter, which, I hope, you will kindly publish in your next issue with such comments thereon as may seem fit to you.

"73, Lower Circular Road, July 25, 1895.

Sir, --- When you sent me the first volume of your book, I bought it to encourage a fellow country-man, and I was both astonished and deeply grieved to read the scandalous way in which you have put my father forward to ridicule; what you have now written you should have had the courage to write when Dr. Banerice was alive, instead of sneaking out after his death. I am surprised also that you should have taken the liberty to write about my father and us at all during our life-time. If I refused you matter for my father's life, it should have been sufficient as a man of honour to keep you from meddling with my father's name. On your own admission I can get a case against you, and I beg now that in future editions, you will be pleased to strike out Dr. Bancrice's name altogether. You have taken an unwarrantable liberty.

> Yours farhfally M. WHIFLER "

For my part I refrain from making any harsh remark upon this letter. I simply ask Mrs. Wheeler, would she have dared write such a letter to a European author? As the daughter of Dr. Banerjee for whom I entertained a very great respect, and whom all Indian people respect, I should not write anything in any public journal against her.

Yours faithfully. RAM GOPAL SANYAL, Author of "Reminiscenes and Anecdotes of Great Men of India."

Taltolla, July 25, 1895.

THE NATIVE PRESS OF INDIA.

By An Anglo-Indian.

"I confess that since my arrival in India nothing has filled me "I confers that since my arrival in India nothing has filled me with such astonishment, nothing has so disheartened me, nothing has made me feel so deeply how great are the difficulties of Government in this country, as insinuations which have appeared in certain organs of the Press with regard to this subject. When the Government of India has succeeded, after many years of persistent effort, in obtaining a re-examination of the conditions of the India Civil Service, it is indeed a matter for surprise that there should be found, I will not say amongst you, for I am happy to think that you have repudiated so unworthy an insinuation, but amongst some of those who represent themselves as the guides and leaders of Indian public opinion, men so incapable of appreciating what has been the character of English Rule and of its English representatives, as to assert in the face of their countrymen that the only object of the Government of India in appointing the Civil Service Commission has been to deceive the people of India and to resort to a base, mean, and abominable trick for the purpose of restricting still further the privileges of those who are so justly anxious to serve our Sovereign in the Civil Service of their country." (Extract from Lord Dufferin's speech to'the Poona Sabha, 19 November, 1886.)

The hostile attitude of a certain section of the native press towards the ruling class in India which called forth the words quoted above and which is, if possible, more marked at the pre-sent time than it was in Lord Dufferin's day, affords a striking example of the difficulty of attempting to govern India on the advanced principles of the West. The hope apparently entertained by Lord Ripon that the semi-educated university graduates who in a large measure compose the journalistic class in India would wield, with honesty and moderation, the power entrusted to them by the repeal of the Press Act has unfortunately not been realized. The voice of the native press has again become loud and menacing. Several organs are nothing more than mere mouth-pieces for out-bursts of hatred and contempt of British rule. By their agency class feeling is aroused among an ignorant and superstitious population to such an extent, that otherwise peaceful citizens are found flying at each other's throats, as happened two years ago in many parts of India at the festival of the 'Id, and as will happen again on the first occasion that the precautionary measures the authorities are in any way relaxed.

The scandal is a great and growing one and in no other country in the world would the existing state of things be tolerated. A conviction, however, is gradually gaining ground that the day is not far distant when the Government will be that the day is not far distant when the Government will be reluctantly compelled to resort to remedial legislation. Three years ago it was considered necessary to withdraw the freedom of the press in places administered by the Governor-General but not forming part of British India proper, owing to the steady necesse of scurilous journals of the lowest type in these districts; and unless native Editors in British India are prepared to take warning by the fate which has befallen their brethern in native states and to confine themselves to fair and honest criticism of the acts of their rulers, it is by no means improbable that many of them will sooner or later find themselves in a similar predica-

The freedom of the press in India was first established by law in 1835 by Sir Charles Metcalfe, then provisional Governor-General. It is true that the newspapers of the period were almost exclusively Anglo-Indian. The native journals could be counted on the fingers of one hand and were small and altogether unimportant, none boasting of a circulation exceeding two or three hundred copies per issue. The law, however, recognised no distinction between the two sections of the press, and the freedom then granted applied equally to all publications whether conducted by Anglo Indian or by native Editors, whether in English or in the vernaculars. This freedom the vernacular press continued to enpy until the days of the mutiny, when, on the outbreak of hostilities in 1857, it at once became evident that only the prompt a-toption of rigorous measures could prevent it from developing into an organ of treason. The authorities were equal to the occainto an organ of treason. The authorities were equal to the occasion. A law was quickly passed rescinding the liberty of the vernacular section of the press, and giving to the Executive summary powers to prevent the circulation of any matter calculated to add fuel to the already rapidly spreading flame of rebellion. Several native Editors were imprisoned, and many presses in different parts of the country were confiscated. It was originally ntended that this law should remain in force for one year only, but its actual repeal did not take place until 1868. The vernacular press was once more free; but the lesson of the mutiny was still fresh in the memory of all, and up to 1872 there was practically little fault to be found with it. Occasionally, it is true, Government was compelled to mark its displeasure at the tone of some particular print, but, on the whole, the press was distinctly on the side of loyalty and morality.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases all kinds. Full priticulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press in stices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought, before the public. Address, Anial Specialist, Alonauy Buildings, 39, Victoria Sireet, Westminster, London, S. W.

About that period a great impetus was given to education in India. Its advantages began to be in some measure recognised and in the growing demand for knowledge the press found increased encouragement and support. In some districts Government itself subscribed largely to the vernacular press, distributing the newspapers among the schools in the hope of further stimulating this desire for knowledge. As the spread of education increased, however, the supply of semi-educated natives soon exceeded the demand. Men began to find that as a means of obtaining a livelihood their education was in a great measure useless. Except in the service of Government there were few careers in which the training acquired in the Government colleges was of much practical value, quired in the Government coneges was or many presentance, and the number of those who could reasonably hope to obtain employment under Government, though large in itself, was small when compared with the supply. "You have educated us, you when compared with the supply. "You have educated us, you must employ us," was their constant cry. It was, of course, impossible that Government, however willing it might be, could find employment for all the graduates whom the schools and colleges were turning out. The result, as might be expected, was much discontent in the ranks of this half-educated class. Many of them turned to the press as a means of earning a living. During the years 1873-1887, the number and circulation of the vernacular newspapers largely increased, more particularly in Bengal where the number of publications was nearly doubled, and it was only natural that these men should pour into the columns of their papers what they considered their grievances. Had they stopped at that, no harm and some good might have resulted; but unfortunately they did not. The loyalty which on the whole had characterised the vernacular press gradually gave place to language calculated to excite bitter hatred and contempt of British rule. age calculated to excite bitter natred and contempt of British rule. Editors became advocates and promoters of sedition. Individual Members of the Government were grossly libelled and held up to merciless ridicule and contempt. Vernacular papers in the hands of unscrupulous editors were used to intimidate and to extort of unscrupulous editors were used to intiminate and to extort money from our feudatories and native subjects. It was clear that this state of things could no longer be tolerated. The opinions of this class were of themselves of little importance, and it could be easily dealt with should occasion arise; but the Government of the day was determined that the machinery of the press should not be employed to spread disloyalty and distrust of British rule among the people of the land. It was reductant to interfere with among the people of the land. It was reluctant to interfere with the freedom of the press, but the policy of non-intervention could no longer be majurateed, and M. 1878 an Act was passed by Lord Lytton's Government watch completely gagged the vernacular press. Printer and publishers were required to enter into a bond binding themselves not to print in any vernacular publication words or signs or visible representations likely to create disaffection to the Government established by law in British India or antipathy between persons of different races, castes, religions or sects" nor to use, nor to attempt to use, any newspaper for purposes of intimidation or extortion. The object aimed at was thus effectually accomplished: the disloyal and seditions utterances of a small class could no longer be communicated through the medium of the press to masses too ignorant to judge of their worthlessness. Unfortunately this "gagging act," as it was commonly called, remained in force for only three years. It was repealed in 1882 by Lord Ripon, who earned for himself a cheap popularity at the expense of sound administration; and but little time clapsed hefore the gravity of the error committed was fully apparent.

So far I have endeavoured to sketch, in as condensed a form as possible, the past history of the native press; and before proceeding to discuss its present extent and influence, a few remarks of a general nature, on the intellectual development of the people with whom the press has to deal, may not be altogether out of place. In the rapid advance towards western civilization in India during the last decade the fact the educated class bear but a very insignificant proper mass of the population is too apt to be overlock standing the great impetus to education, ignor tion everywhere prevail to an extent which in England. India, it must be remembered of agriculturists. Of the 280 millions i no less than 72 per cent. of the adulate a upon agriculture for the necess.he towns form but a small fractiof the living in towns of over 20,000 excertified. 5 millions. The population dwelling in hamlets and villar how country. Conservative to 16 So their acres have long ceased to afford adequate support to their increased number. Extreme poverty is the lot of a numerous class; yet they abhor change of any kin l, and view it with a superstitious dread hardly imaginable. I cannot better convey an idea of the incredible ignorance prevalent among this great rural population, than by quoting the following extract from the official Gazette of the Government of India, dated 27th June 1887. It is by the pan of an intelligent native official and describes graphically the difficulties besetting the path of progress in this country.

"The following cases, which came under my personal observations, will fairly illustrate the hopeless ignorance of the majority of village populations in this country. It was at Mahammadahad Post Office, in Azamgarh district, I was one afternoon sitting under a tree close to the Post Office talking to some Tahul and police officials who had called to see me. The letter-box (a big, square, newly painted, red one, with a big, long, projecting mouth-piece) was lying at a distance of about 20 sards from where we were sitting, waiting to be built up in the wall. A villager approached with a letter in his hand and inquired where he was to place it. The letter-box was pointed out to him. He went up to the box, took off his shoes at a little distance from it, folded his hands reverently, put his letter in the box, bowed low before it and placed 2 coppers on the ground; retreated a few steps with face towards the box (walking backwards), again bowed very low, then put on his shoes and walked away. I did not discover that he had left 2 coppers on the ground close to the letter-box till some time after he had left. In another case I saw a man drop a letter into the letter-box and then putting his lips close to the month of the box, somebody was sitting inside the box to hear and carry out his wishes. . . . Numerous other cases of ignorance of this nature have occasionally come under my observation, but those mentioned above are quite sufficient to show what class of people we have to deal with in rural parts."

The town population is naturally many stages in advance of that of the villages, but even here it cannot be said that education has made much way among the masses.

In painting this somewhat gloomy picture of the intellectual attainments of the people of India, I do not wish to appear to minimize the results that have already been achieved in this direction Much has been done both by the State and by the people them-selves. The extent to which education has become popularized may be gathered from the fact that during the decade ending 1892 93, the annual expenditure under this head from all sources rose from 186 to 229 lakhs, while the total number of educational institutions increased from 109,085 to 144,699, and the number of pupils from 2.8 millions to 3.8 millions. These facts suffice to show the success which has attended our educational system in India. Readily admitting however that in the face of great difficulties much progress has been made, what I submit, is, that the results are comparatively small in proportion to the vastness of the population. The census returns of 1801 show that only 121/2 million adults of both sexes are able to real and the sex million adults of both sexes are able to feel and his of that the percentage of those who possess the merest rudiments. We action is very low. If we proceed a step further and take as our scandard the entrance examination at the Universities of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, we find that out of 70,000 candidates for matriculation during the five years ending with 1891 only 34 per cent. were successful ; while if we go yet further we find the only I in every 10 candidates for matriculation succeeded in obvaining a degree; and of these, it must be remembered, only a limited few attain a standard which will bear comparison with western ideas of progress. facts should be carefully borne in mind in any discussion regarding the freedom of the native press of India.

I now proceed to consider the native press as it exists in the present day. Owing to the ephemeral character of many native prints it is a matter of some difficulty to accurate with accuracy the actual number of papers in existence; but I believe that there are at the present time some 350 newspapers proper published under native management. Most of these are in the Vernacular, but a few are conducted in English, while others are in both a few are conducted in English, while others are in both a law of the search weekly on these are weekly a lation is greater in Bengal than in other parts of the one an average it does not exceed 800 to 900 or header. Sir W. Hunter in his Imperial Gazetteer with a constant of native papers at about with a lation has increased considerably during indestwalt the present time cannot be less than 8 millions a year: in other words, inc. Scan read and write; and they thinkween them. It must, however, and not merely the subscribers, paper; and it is probable that land, as numerous as the latter. In a summerous as the latter. In a summerous as the latter. In a summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter. In the summerous as the latter.

circulation of the native papers is very much larger than might at first sight appear.

The first native newspaper was published in Bingali by the Serampur Mission Press in 1818; and for miny years the native press retained the stamp of its early origin; but at the present time, with the exception of a few of the Malras papers, it is almost entirely devoted to the discussion of political questions. In addition to the newspapers proper there are a coasidetable number of magazines and pamphlets, but the majority of these are politically unimportant. In the front rank of native papers are the Danik and the Bangobasi, Bengali papers of Cilcutta, which are under one management, the Dunk being published on the first five doys of the week and the Bingstan on the sixth. The circulation of these two papers luggly exceeds that of any other paper in India; that of the forms is about 6000 daily and that of the latter averages 23,000. Other well known Calcutta papers are the Hindu Parren, the Bengali, the Amrita Basar Patrika, the Reis and Rayvet and the Indian Mirror. The chief exponents of native opinion in Bombay are the Indian Spectator, the Bombay Samachai, and the Jam's Jamobel. In Madras the Hindu, and Upper India the Alban sam of Lahore Madras the Hindu, and Upper India the Abbin 15.07 of Lahore and the Bharat Jiem of Benares are the most deserving of mention. The native papers are of course small, few containing as much matter as is found in a single page of a London daily. While however it must be admitted that the native press is still in its infancy, it is only necessary to turn to to the last official report on the working of the Indian Postoffice to be convinced that the circulation of newspapers is increasing at a very rapid rate. The figures given by the post office, though they necessarily fall far short of showing the actual circulation, give a very tair idea of the rate at which this circulation is extending throughout the country. The figures I quote include Anglo-Indian papers; but there is every reason to believe that the rapid expansion indicated is rather reason to believe that the rapid expansion indicated is rather due to increase activity in the native press, owing to extra facilities introduced in 1881 for the despatch of light newspapers through the post, than to any viry marked increase in the number of Anglo-Indian newspapers. Takir represent the number of newspapers (excluding Tiking European papers), given out for delivery in 1883-84 the table in the foot note shows the rate of increase during the last ten years. papers), given out for delivery in 1883-84 the table in the foot note* shows the rate of increase during the last ten years. In 1883-84 the number of newspapers in circulation in India (excluding those exchanged with Europe) stood at 13 millions; and in 1892-93, ten years later, this total had risen to over 24 millions. These figures prove very clearly that the circulation of newspapers is increasing at a very rapid rate; but as we have just stued, they naturally fall far short of the number actually in circulation. number actually in circulation.

A few of the native new papers are conducted with ability and moderation; but too many are the mouthpieces of men whom it would be mere affectation to credit with any true feeling of loyalty towards the ruling power in this country; and their demoralizing influence on the ignorant cannot be questioned. They deal in no restrained sentiments, but denounce our rule boldly and with peculiar bitterness. Many of the editors stand so deeply committed as advocates and promoters of sedition that they spare no pains to misrepresent the actions of the Government, and to this end no falsehood is too glating, no exaggeration too gross but will serve to poison the minds of too credulous readers. On the other hand it must be remembered that to supply antidotes to the poisoned weapons of the native press or to effectually expose the forgettes and misstatements, in which many native writers indulged is completely out of the but convince any dispissionage thinker that the unchecked growth of sedition and its free circulation through the medium of the press must inevitably tend to undermine the loyalty and attachment of the people of India to the British crown. Anglo-Indian press has, for some years past, endeavoured to draw the attention of the Government to the growing magnitude of this evil. The Pioneer, a leading journal, has frequently commented, in strong terms, on the evi effects which result from the unbridled heense of the native press. "The official," is stated on one occasion, "is abused in terms of reckless vituperation and, in many instances, is deterred from conscienti ously doing his duty. The minds of the people are poisoned against their rulers and it is obvious to the most careles observer that the hostile attitude of the press and its disgraceful These views are moreover fully shared by the more respectable portion of the native press itself, and are, in fact, held by all most every man who has at heart the welfare and prosperity of our Indian Empire,

Let us now examine briefly the main grounds on which it is reasonable to suppose that the present policy of non-interference with the freedom of the native press is based. They are three.

* 1883-84...165, 1884-85...111, 1885-86...134, 1836-87 145, 1887-88...146, 1888-89...150, 1889-95...153, 1895-91...165, 1891-92...183, 1892-93...186.

Pirstly, an impression that the circulation of the papers is small and that what is written never reaches the masses. The true circulation, however, is, as I have already shown, very much larger than would at first sight appear; and though the number of native newspapers in circulation per annum does not exceed 18 millions, the number of readers is probably four or five times as great. Secondly, a conviction that these papers are so many safety valves, carrying off much that would otherwise so many sarety valves, carrying on much that would otherwise accumulate dangerously near the surface, and which, if deprived of an exit, might lead to the formation of secret societies on a large scale. This argument, however, loses much of its force when it is remembered that the contributors to the press are confined to an extremely small class, --- a class which those most capable of forming an opinion declare to be completely out of ouch with the masses, and profoundly indifferent to their welfare. With regard to the latter part of the argument, it is sufficient to observe that secret societies exist in countries which enjoy a free press, equally with those in which its freedom is materially curtailed; and that they will exist in India on a formidable scale only when discontent has spread itself among the masses, a state things which the native press is doing its best to promote. Thirdly, a belief that it is preferable to ignore the evil than to interfere with the liberty of the press. Those who entertain this opinion appear to lose sight of the fact that all the usual arguments in favour of the free press fall to the ground when the very backward state of the population, to which reference has already been made, is taken into consideration. Wrong opinions no doubt yield to fact and arguments when in course of time facts and arguments are brought face to face with them; but in the India of to-day how is this to be accomplished? The people in India, born amid the ruins of an ancient civilization. tion, are still in the very cradle of western progress; and their welfare is far safer in the hands of a wise and benevolent, if despotic, Government than it would be in their own. So long as this state of things exists, so long as the maintenance of absolute power in this country is a recognized necessity, there can be no question that to allow the seeds of sedition and disloyalty to be shown broadcast by the pastion provides the seeds of sedition and disloyalty to be shown broad-cast by the native press is in the highest degree impolitic, and must ultimately be productive of grave political consequences completely throwing into the shade iny advantages which a free native press might otherwise confer on the country.

It has been suggested from more than one quarter that the obvious cure for the evil is to put into force the ordinary law of libel; but the inadequacy of the existing law in such cases was clearly established on the occasion of the State prosecution of the Rangobui, which, a year of two ago in the controversy over the Age of Consent Bill, exceeded the bounds of all legitimate criticism. Moreover it is unfortunately easier to set the ball rolling than to stop it; and the opportunities given by such trials for the propagation of seditious matter in a great measure nullify any good results which's conviction might otherwise effect. In all cares of this nature, so long as we have to deal with a grossly ignorant and superstitious people, the object aimed at should be the suppression of seditious matter rather than the subsequent punishment of the offenders. This can only be secured by a partial revival of Lord Lytton's press policy; and the fact that this has not already been done is attributed by the natives of India not to a wish to awoid interference with the liberty of the subject which is one of the chief characteristics of the English nation, but simply to fear of the consequences of interfering with a liberty once conceded. It would not, of course, be necessary to withdraw the freedom of the native press generally. An Act might be framed on similar lines to the Press Act of 1878 empowering the Governor-General in Council to bring any bond fide native newspaper, irrespective of the language which it is published, under the operation of its clauses by a simple Gazette Notification to that effect. Confining this power to the Governor-General in Council would be an absolute guarantee that no unnecessary or unreasonable interference with the freedom of any particular paper would be permitted. Criticism of a fair and legitimate character is essential to all progress; but carried to its present extent it cannot but exercise a harmful and disturbing infuence on the country.

In India where, as we have already seen, education of any kind is confined within such narrow limits, its value is naturally greatly enhanced; and probably no society in the world has ever been so entirely at the mercy of this small class which regards itself as enritled by its entellectual superiority to dictate its opinions to others, as are the people of India of the present day. The unreflecting, the vast majority who possess neither the energy nor the knowledge to sift the wheat from the chaff, are entirely at the mercy of selfconstituted leaders, men, for the most part, too young and inexperienced to lead their countrymen with any safety along the path of political reform. No doubt the spread of knowledge is progressing rapidly throughout the land; but many years must necessarily clapse before the evils of mental slavery can be said to be non-existent, or before the free exercise of individual judgment is, in any sense, a reality; and until such time arrives it is clearly the duty of Government to protect, as far as possible, the uneducated masses from the false and seditious doctrines of men who, whethed from lack of intelligence to grasp the true character of England'r work in this country, or from self-interested and spiteful motives spare no pains to throw odium on the Government which has foster-, spare no pains to throw odium on the Government which has loster, ed them and which in return they are now doing their utmost to embarrass. "If the Indian Government" as Sir Lepel Griffin very justly remarks in his article "India in 1895" which appeared in the April number of this Review, "be too timid to protect itself from open sedition and too ungenerous to defend its servants against false and malicious misrepresentation, it has surrendered one of the clementary principles of a civilized government, popular or autocra-tic, and deserves the fate which attends on all rulers who do not kuow how to govern."

Simla, April 22, 1895.

ONLY FOUR TO MAN THE PUMPS.

DEAR, dear ! When you come to think of it how closely related things are; how one thing brings up another. I deas are like a lot of beads

A letter I have just been reading makes me remember what happen-A letter I have just been reading makes me remember what happended to me one winter about twenty years ago. The story is too long to tell heie, so I'll merely give you the tail end of it. I was supercargo on a back bound from London to Rio. A tremendous gale, lasting five days, wrecked us. Forty-eight hours after it ceased there were four men and no more left on the vessel. The captain had been killed by a falling spar, torse of the crew washed overboard, and the rest of the ship's company (save us four) went away in the long boat with the first and second mates. We were taking in water through a leak at the rate of six inches an hour. Working with all our might the four of us could pump that out in forty minutes, but we must do it every hour. It was awful work. For two days we kept it up, without sleep. Then we stopped, took to the quarter boat and showed off. The sea was quiet—no wind. While we lay to within a mile of her the ship threw up her nose and went down stern first. We were picked up the next day by a Danish brig.

Now the old thing is that the letter which reminded me of that experience has nothing whatever to say about ships. Please help me to perience has nothing whatever to say about ships. Please help me to find out the association.

perience has nothing whatever to say about snips. Frease neigh me to find out the association.

The lady who writes the letter says that in July, 1881, she got a bad fright. Exactly what it was she doesn't tell. I wish she did. Anyway it so upset her that she didn't get over the effects of it for mine years. After that her appetite fell off; she lost all real relish for food, and what she did eat only made trouble instead of nourshing her. It gave her put in the pit of the stomach and (cutionsly enough) between the shoulders. She says her eyes and skin presently turned yellow as a buttercup. Her face and abblomen swelled, and her feet the same, the latter so much so that she was obliged to have her shoes made larger. "I got little sleep at night," she says, " and was in so misch pain I had to be propped up with pillows. For weeks together I could not lie down in bed. I had a dry, hollow cough, and bad night sweats. Then diarribos set in, and my lowels became ulcerated. I was often in dreadful agony for forty-right hours at a time. Then I would have a chill as though a sucker of the day were poured down my back. I in dreadful agony for forty-eight hours at a time. Then I would have a chill as though notified by fired water were poured down my back. I got so loce the fired by fifter sew, kint, or do any housework or look after the fired by the fifter sew. Mr. sister had to come and help in the house. "But heavy said I was no a decline and must due. What I suffered for eight syears tongue cannot tell. The doctor could do nothing for me. He said my complaint was complicated and bad to deal with. In 1886 I went as an outdoor patient to the Shrewsbury Infirmary, but only got transient tellet."

Id 1886 I went as an outdoor patient to the Shrewsbury Infirmary, but only got transition telet."

The writer is in good health now, but why did her case remind me of the shipwirek? Let's settle that first. The association is easy and natural. Just see. The ship sank because we four men hado't the strength to pump out the water as fast ast came in. Twenty men might have got her into poit. It is the last straw that breaks the came's back; the last unsupplied need that makes poverty abject and descerate.

camel's back; the last unsupplied need that makes poverty abject and desperate.

These bodies of ours carry the seeds of disease with them all the time—chiefly the poisons created by imperfect digestion, made worse by careless habits. But as long as nothing extraordinary happens we manage to scrape along in a half-and-half sort of fashion. Yet we've got in our blood the suff that any of a dozen diseases is made of, only waiting for something to set it affire. While the liver, kidneys, lungs and skin keep us faitly free—that is, don't let the load get too heavy—we say, "Oh, yes, I'm tolerably well, thank you." Little pains and unpleasant symptoms bother us now and then, but we don't faircy they mean anything.

unpleasant symptoms bother us now and men, and men anything.

By-and-by something happens. A cold, too hearty a meal, a night of dissiplation, an affiction through death or loss of money as in Mis Bunce's case, &c. Over we go. The us. One loose spark has blown up the barrel too small to save the ship. The kidneys, strike work, and we must have help light: means the explosion of latent indigestion blood.

blood.
There I isn't it plain why I thougclusion of the lady's story. She s'three Seigel's Curative Syrup. Half the keeping on taking it I was soon XCC Ann Bunce, The Park, Worlow 1893."

If there were only a way t So worthy as Mother Seigel's bodies, what a blessing it v

DROIT ET AVANT.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1895

WHOLE NO. 686.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

LINES TO THE EX-QUEEN OF THE FRENCH.

in act of true heroism should not pass unnoticed, in any age. The k-queen of the French, who, in spite of the errors and unpopularity fiber husband's government, has always preserved the respect of it French people, from her sincere piety and virtues, was, it is well nown, most adverse to her husband assuming the sceptre.

How is the case changed now! Her arm supported the tottering d man, after his abdication, to the carriage which was in attendance. To courage alone sustained him. This is well known; but it is not generally understood that she would have prevented his abdicating all, and, while others were giving the most fatal counsel, she alone left before the king with the heroic words, "C'est le devoir d'un ion mourr parmi son peuple" Though not much of a poet, I have delivoured to fix public attention on a circumstance which I think serves neither to be overlooked nor forgotten.

The scene to which I have made allusion, and which I have the best athority for believing to be founded strictly on fact, occurred on the arming of the 24th of February. So rapid and unforeseen was the ght of the royal family, that although they were assembled to take eir déjeuner λ la fourchette at the usual time, before an hour had ipsed not one of them was left in the Tuileries. Not only did the een remoistrate; it is stated that the officers in command were infident of the fidelity and homour of the army. Thus the weakness a moment may emperil the destinies of the world!

Gratlest of mothers! on that fatal day
When Orleans, still uncrowned, in buter doubt
Was weakly yielding, thine was it to stay
Ambition's voice, and hish the maddening shout
Of bad excitements; thine't was to shut out
All from thy hishand's breast but one small voice,
The voice of conscience and of truth, without Such aids, saidst thou, ill fortune guides thy choice.
Oh! had he hearken'd then, will might he now rejoice.

But 't was not so; for statecraft gained the day,
And she who now reposes in the grave*—
Peace to her ashes !—o'er thy lord held sway,
And men cried out, "Magnanimous and brave!"
The softer counsel which affection gave Unheeded past; and, haply, out of sight,
Thou shedd'st thy tears—all impotent to save,
But future witnesses, when known aright,
Of virtue's modesteways, which shun day's garish light.

Old ocean thus, in calm and placed mood, Is softest of imaginable things, In peaceful glory, by no zephyrs woo'd,

* Madame Adelaide.

Whereto, as to a mirror, nature brings
Bright forms, and there reflects the spreading wings
Of myriad argosies; there in his joy
The giddy schoolboy makes his minute rings—
Emblems, which still the poet may employ,
Of that vain glory which attain'd begins to cloy.

Yet can this self-same ocean, toss'd on high,
Be fierce and direful as devouring flame,
Raising his tunnid billows to the sky,
And threatening he iven itself—the very frame
Of earth now yields—the floods their empire claim,
Is this the lake which but of late we knew
Reposing sweetly, spiritless and tame,
Fair as a sleeping beauty—gentle too—
Which now its wiath so dire would give us cause to rue?

Noblest of greens! not altered less thy mien
In the last crisis of thy destiny,
When thou erect and firm alone wert seen,
Thy husband's stay, no tear upon thine eye!
Thou could'st the anger of the mob defy;
Age had not bowed thy spirit not thy heart;
For conscious virtue can on self rely.
When coward counsels spoke the word, "Depart,"
"T was thou, and thou alone, couldst set a herome's part,

Dastardly spirits! couldst thou say to those,
Even to thy children, kneeling round the throne,
Who rather timid wavering counsels chose
Than the proud conduct which was all thine own—
Better to die a monarch, and alone,
By treacherous friends deserted, than to fly!
Like Cæsar, thou the height of power hast known,
Dare then, like him, each traitor to defy,
And learn, like Cæsar too, with dignity to die.

Naples, fair land of luxury and ease!

Where pleasure dwells, and virtues stern decay,
Where the bright vineyards and the placid seas
Teach a degenerate race to while away
Their wanton hours, and waste the livelong day

Blithe self-sown children of the teeming earth—
Oh! mid a race so thoughtless and so gay,
If test of excellence be moral worth,
France may well envy thee at least one heroine's birth

-The Spectator.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Eurs, &cg no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. A library THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBER, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, it possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures a knowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

WEEKLYANA.

TENNYSON has spoken of Her Majesty as mother, wife and queen. She is more. The Court Circular announces that Her Majesty has been much distressed by the death of one of her personal Highland attendants, Mr. Francis Clark, a consin of the late Mr. John Brown. A most faithful and devoted servant, he had been twenty-five years in her service. He had occasionally officiated for Brown and then succeeded him.

HER Majesty has presented a silver medal to the Russian railway guard in attendance upon the Prince of Wales, during his journey through Russia, at the time of the death of the late Czar.

FOR services to Welsh literature and the Eisteddfod, the Queen has granted from the royal bounty 100% to the venerable Hwfa Mon, the Arch Druid of Wales.

On July 9, the Duchess of Teck, with the Hon. Mary Thesiger and the Hon. A. Nelson Hood in attendance, opened the new Homœopathic Hospital in Great Ormond Street. The same fair hand, two years back, had laid the foundation stone. The building, with site and equipment, has cost 45,000l. An anonymous donor gave 10,000/, and in all 35,000/. has been raised. The hospital contains 100 beds and can receive 300 out-patients.

٠. THE Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure runs in these words :- ,

"Whitehall, May 30, 1895.
The Queen has been pleased to issue a Commission under Her Mejesty's Royal Sign Manual to the following effect:

VICTORIA, R. I.
Victoria, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, Empress of India, etc., to—

Our right trusty and well-beloved Reginald Earle, Baron Welby, Knight Grand Cross of Our Most Honourable Order of the Kinght Grand Cross of Our Most Honourable Grace of the Bath;
Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor, Leonard Henry

Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor, William Lawies

Jackson;
Our trusty and well-beloved George Nathaniel Curzon, Esquire, commonly called the Honourable George Nathaniel Curzon; Esquire, Our trusty and well-beloved Sir William Wedderburn, Baronet; Our trusty and well-beloved Sir Donald Martin Stewart, Baronet, Knight Grand Cross of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Knight Grand Commander of Our Most Exalted Order of the Star of Jindia, Companion of Our Most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire, Field Murshal of Our Forces, Member of the Council of India;

Our trusty and well-beloved Sir Edward Walter Hamilton, Knight Commander of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Assistant Secretary to the Commissioners of Our Treasury for Great Britain and Ireland;
Our trusty and well-beloved Sir James Braithwait Peile, Knight Commander of Our Most Exalted Order of the Star of India,

Commander of Our Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, Member of the Council of India; Our trusty and well-loved Sir Andrew Richard Scoble, Knight Commander of Our Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, one of Our Council learned in the Law; Our trusty and well-beloved Ralph Henry Knox, Esquire, Companion of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Accountant-General of Our Army;
Our trusty and well-beloved George Risle Ryder, Esquire, Companion of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath;
Our trusty and well-beloved I houras Ryburn Buchanan, Esquire, Barrister-at-law;
Out trusty and well-beloved I North Romander Of Star Barrister-at-law;

Out trusty and well-beloved William Sporston Caine, Esquire; and

and
Our trusty and well-beloved Dadabhai Naoroji, Esquire, Greeting—
Whereas We have deemed it expedient that a Commission should forthwith issue to enquire into the administration and management of the Military and Civil expenditure incurred under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council, or of the Government of India, and the apportionment of charge between the Governments of the United Kingdom and of India for purposes in which both are interested;

New York Western Western Council and Council of the Council of the United Kingdom and of India for purposes in which both are Interested;

Now know ye that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your knowledge and ability, have authorized and appointed, and do by these Presents authorise and appoint, you, the said Reginald Earle, Baron Welby; Leonard Henry Courtney; William Lawies Jackson George Nathaniel Curzon, commonly called the Honourable George Nathaniel Curzon; Sir William Wedderburn; Sir Donald Martin Stewart; Sir Edward Walter Hamilton; Sir James Braithwatte Peile; Sir Andrew Richard Scoble; Ralph Henry Knox; George Liste Ryder; Thomas Ryburn Buchanan; William Sportston Caine; and Dadabhai Nauroji; to be Our Commissioners for the purposes of the said enquiry.

said enquiry.

And for the better effecting the purposes of this Our Commission, We do by these Presents give and grant unto you or any five or more of you full power to call before you such persons as you shall judge likely to afford you any information upon the subject of this Our Commission; and also to call for, have access to and examine, all such books, documents, registers, and records, as may afford you the fullest information on the subject; and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatever.

And We do by these Presents will and ordain that this Our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue; and that you, Our saud Commissioners or any five or more of you may from time to said Commissioners or any five or more of you may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment.

And We do further ordain that you or any five or more of you have liberty to report your proceedings under this Our Commission from time to time if you shall judge it expedient so to do.

And Our further will and pleasure is that you do with as little delay as possible report to us under your hands and seals or under the hands and seals of any five or more of you your opinion on the matters herein submitted for your consideration. And for the purpose of aiding you in your inquiries we hereby appoint our trusty and well-beloved Richmond Thackeray Willoughby Ritchie, Esquire, to be Secretary to this Our Commission.

Given at Our Court at Saint James's the twenty-fourth day of May one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five in the fifty eighth year of Our regin.

Our reign.

By Her Majesty's Command, Henry H. Fow.er."

It being no Parliamentary Committee, the General Elections and the unseating of Members have no effect on it, and Messrs. Caine and Dadabhai Naoraji continue members of the Commission.

:. THERE was a collection, for some national purpose, on the eightieth birthday of Prince Bismarck. At his suggestion, the money has been paid over to the Agrarian League in Berlin,

A PICTURE by Constable, a view on the Stour, one of the collection of the late Mr. C. F. Huth, was sold for 8,500 guineas.

FOR allowing the use of a room belonging to the municipality for an electoral meeting of the Social Democrats, the Burgomaster of Kolberg, in Pomerania, has been fined, by his official superior, ninety marks.

In France, they have remitted all taxes on hygienic drinks. To make up the loss, the tax on alcohol has been raised to 275 fis. ...

THE French Chamber has authorized the Minister of the Interior to suppress newspapers published in France in a foreign tongue.

FOR his connection with the Progres, a paper started with the express purpose of defending the policy of the agents of the British occupation and combating French policy, M. Campana, a French journal ist in Cairo, has been expelled from Egypt.

PRINTING was known to the Romans as early as the second century. Such is the discovery of M. Adrian Diaconu, a Hungarian architect and antiquarian, who has found in the ruins of the ancient Roman camp of Bersovia, at Bogsan, near Temesvar, unmistakable evidence that the Romans and, in particular, the officers of the Fourth Legion (Flavia Felix) made use of movable types while encamped at Bersovia.

MM. Renard and Houseau named their new explosive compound of ozone and benzene "Ozobenzene." It is insoluble in chloroform, ether or petroleum, and dissolvable in crystallisable acetic ether. It detonates when in contact with ammonia, or concentrated sulphuric acid and other bodies, or when suddenly heated to fifty degrees Cent., but not if slowly heated.

THE constantly recurring current question in Greece, or how to remedy the distress of the currant-growing provinces, is still unsolved. Several proposals have been made from time to time. One of them, not accepted last year, was to destroy at the time of exportation a portion of each current shipment in order to raise the market value of the remainder. Recently, the Greek Chamber discussed the same remedy which was again rejected, though by only one vote. In several districts people are said to be starving, and there is apprehension of a revolt by refusal to pay the taxes from sheer

MR. K. G. Gupta, Excise Commissioner, Bengal, has taken leave for THE short-lived Rasebery Moustry, while it knighted an actor, a two months and twenty-five days,

SAHEBZADA Muhammad Bukhtyar Shah has been appointed a visitor of the Presidency Jail. To mark his satisfaction at the event in his life, and in all gratefulness, he entertained the Lieutenant Governor to conjuring tricks and Chunamgully music

An examination of candidates for recruiting the staff of the superior Police officers in Bengal and Assam will be held in Calcutta in November. Only such European candidates as have been nominated by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal will be permitted to appear.

THE Auglo-phobe Journal Egyptien of Alexandria thus introduces Captain Lugara .

"It will be remarked that Captain Lugard, the hornble Uganda butcher, is appointed Companion of the Bath—of blood."

ONE of the caissons of the great bridge which is being constructed at Nig el-Hamid went down and sank with forty workmen.

Ar Bristol, Indiana, a bridge crowded with six hundred people witching a boat race, suddenly gave way. Forty persons were injured and several received wounds which may prove fatal.

 DURING the year ending June 30, Western Australia exported 239,593 oz. of gold.

THE instinct of man has always recognized scents as valuable aids to enjoyment and, therefore, to health. They are now demonstrated to be useful allies of hygiene-powerful germ destroyers. Taking 100 bacteria, a French specialist tested how many would be destroyed in fortyeight hours when exposed at the temperature of 15 degs. Cent, to various essential oils and other perfumes. He found that essential oil of bitter almonds killed 99 of the micro-organisms, and oil of thyme the same number. Oil of cumin did away with 95 per cent.; mint, 93; wallflower, 92; neroli, 90; lemon, 88; lavender; 75; eucalyptus, 74; rosemary, 73; turpentine and camphor, 66. The place assigned to the last article is much lower than it holds in popular belief. Camphor is a very powerful agent. But then we are told the experiments were made with essences, and not with their spirituous or watery decoctions.

In acknowledging the burgess ticket and casket containing the free, dom of the City of Edinburgh presented for distinguished services is Governor of the colony of Victoria, Lord Hopetoun remarked that Lord Rosebery had in his recent colonial appointments gone outside the cricle of his own followers to find the most suitable man and in so doing had set an example for future Prime Ministers.

AT a demonstration held, on July 10, in St. Andrews Hall, Glasgow, under the auspices of the Glasgow Liberal Council, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman said :---

Campbell-Bannerman said:—

"In 1892 the country gave the Liberal Party a great mandate and the Liberal Government had striven up to the full measure of their strength to accomplish the task which was imposed upon them; but the means the country gave the Liberal Government in 1892 were not equal to the duty they put upon them. The lesson to be crawn from the history of the past three years was that heroic measures demand an heroic remedy. What had the Labour Party to do that they were content to play the part of jackal to the Fory hous? Did those gentlemen, who thought they had social deals that were superior to those of the Liberal Party, think that their ideals could be advanced by supporting the Tory policy? Lord Salisbury the other day scouted the whole range of political changes which the Liberal Party advocated, and asked the country to set them aside, and to follow him into the mists of a nebulous social programme. He did not understand that the Labour Party objected to any one of these questions. He contended that it was the duty of the Labour Party, as it was of the Liberal Pirty, to protest against the monstrons assumption that it was Lord Salisbury and the Duke of Argyll, and the 500 men whom they led, who were to interpret the real feeling of the people. He appealed to them to do all in their power to put an end to this state of things once and for all."

The country is now willing to be led by Lord Salisbury and the Duke of Devonshire.

novelist, a poet and a journalist, was not unumidful of other claims to substantial reword. During the year ended June 20, 1895, £1,200 was granted in pensions charged to the Civil List, and distributed as follows :

ed as follows:

"Di. Christian Gusbing, in recognition of the value of his researches into Biblical and Hebrew interature, 150/; Miss Hester Pater and Miss Clara Pater, in consideration of the literary ments of their late brother, Mr. Walter Pater, 50/, each; Mrs. Mary Engenie Hamerton, in consideration of the hier rry ments of her late husband, Mr. P. G. Hamerton, 100'; Mr. William Witson, in consideration of the ment of his poetical works 100/.; Teresa, Lady Hamilton, in consideration of the public services of her late husband, Sir R. G. C. Hamilton, K. C. B., 150/.; Miry Agnes, Lady Seeley, in consideration of the literary ments of her late husband, Sir R. Seeley, K. C. M. G. Regius Professor of Modein History in the University of Cambridge, 100/., Mrs. Edith L. Pearson, in consideration of the literary ments of her late husband, Sir R. Henry Pearson, 100/; Marie, Lidy Stewart, in consideration of the services of her late husband, Sir Robert Stewart, in the cultivation of music in Iteland, 50/.; Mr. George Augustus Sala, in consideration of his tate misband, Sir Robert Srewart, in the cultivation of music in Ireland, 50d; M. George Augustus Sala, in consideration of his services to literature and journalism, 1007; Mr. Alexander Bain, in consideration of his services in the promotion of mental and moral science, 1007; Dr. Juber Hogg, in consideration of his scientific and medical services, 75f; Mr. George Frederick Nicholl, in consideration of his ments as an Oriental scholar, 75f."

LORD and Lady Brassey were to have sailed on July 18, in the Sunbeam, for Australia.

On his elevation to the peerage, Sir Henry Loch takes the little of Lord Lock of Drylaw.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL N. C. Martelli, Indian Staff Corps, has been confirmed as Governor-General's Agent at Buoda from the 25th July, vice Colonel J. Biddulph, Indian Staff Corps. We hope Buroda wil fare better than Bhurtpore under the Martelli guidance.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL W. Loch, Indian Staff Corps, has been confirmed as Political Agent in the Eastern States of Rajputana.

THE Governor-General in Council has been pleased to remit the duty payable under the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879) on instruments in the nature of a memorandum or agreement furnished to, or made or entered into with, the Forest Department by contractors for the due performance of their contracts.

SECONDHAND or used gunny bags imported into British India have been exempted from import duty.

In supersession of the tariff values, assigned to medio twist and yarn in No. 44 of Schedule IV (Import Tauff) of the Indian Tauff Act, 1894, the Governor-General in Council has directed that the said twist and yarn shall be assessed to import duty on the tauff values assigned in the said No. 44 of Schedule IV to mule and water twist and yarn, JUDGMENT in the Budh-Gaya temple case was delivered on Friday the 29th July. The Magistrate acquitted the accused of the charges of actually defiling the Jap mese image, of trespass in a place of worship with intent to wound the feelings of the Buddhists, and of unlawful assembly; but found three Samy isis guilty under section 296 of the Indian Penal Code of voluntarily disturbing the Buddhists when lawfully engaged in their devotional worship, and sentenced them to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100, in default fifteen days' simple imprisonment. An immediate application was made by Mr. Cotton to the Judge who admitted an appeal, and enlarged the accused on bail of Rs. 5 o with one surety. Mr. Holmwood has since confirmed the conviction but reduced the sentence to a fine of Rs. 100 only. Mr. Ghose, Mr. Cotton, and Mr. Sievens, appeared for the appellants, and Sir Griffith Evans, Mr Sutherland and Mi. Howard for Dharmapala. The final word must be pronounced by the High Court. For more remains behind.

MR. Tilly, District Magistrate of Rangoon, has sentenced Mr. Rice, Barrister, to six months' sample impresonment, for criminal breach of trust. An appeal has been lodged, and the Magistrate has accepted bails for three thousand rupees each.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

ጹ

THE WEEK'S FELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE elections have closed, though the final results are yet not known here. The country has decidedly declared itself in favour of Conservative Government. Our Radical friends now console themselves with the feeling that the Salisbury Ministry will not last long.

with the feeling that the Salisbury Ministry will not last long. Parliament meets on the 12th. It is understood that the Cabinet has decided not to oppose the reelection of Mr. Guily as Speaker.

THE Queen herself decorated Surgeon-Captain Whichurch, of Chitral fame, with the Victoria Cross, at Osborne.

PRINCE Nescolib Khan presented the Princess of Wales and her daughters with superb shawls, and the Duchess of York with a collection of furs. His departure for the Continent has been deferred, but the reason I as not been stated.

ADVICES from Idaho state that an insurrection has broken out among the Indians in that territory, who have attacked and massacred seventy families at Jacksonhole.

A DISORDERLY scene occurred at the funeral of a private soldier in one of the British regiments stationed at Cairo. While on the way to the eximetery the party was attacked by a mob which hooted at and stoned the military escort. The affair has caused considerable excitement, and it is expected that the British Government will demand satisfaction for the insult offered.

A DISASTROUS accident happened to a train carrying 400 in. valid soldiers from Hiroshima to Kobe. The line runs for some distance along the sea front, and the fore part of the train was thrown off the rails by breakers and capsized into the sea. One hundred and forty men were drowned.

THE Socialists have been utterly defeated at the elections for the French Councils-General.

In the Italian Chamber of Deputies Signor Crispi declared that the plateau of Eightrea and the Tigre country belonged to Italy, and that the Italian Government was resolved to retain them. King Menelik, he said, wis bound to uphold the treaty with Italy. Signor Uccinli was at the present moment in Africa, and Italy's true interests, he said, were to be defended.

Colonel Leontieff will accompany the Abyssinia Mission home, but the establishment of a permanent orthodox Mission in Abyssinia has been deferred, as King Menelik will not send a diplomatic Envoy to St Petersburgh.

It is reported from Zanzibar that the entire Mymic tribe have revolted, and it is feared the movement will spread throughout the coast. Operations against the tribe will shortly begin, and an obstinate resistance is certain if their stronghold in the Shimba range is attacked. Two of the rebel chiefs have taken refuge with the chief Gazi, south of Mombasa. It is possible that a force will be necessary to compel the rebels to surrender, but no serious trouble is feared.

THE Heves are secretly sung for peace, but, fearing a revolution, are massing their troops outside the capital. The auti-European feeling is increasing, and the British Consul has secretly enjoined all British subjects to leave the interior for the coast.

THE insurrectionary movement in Macedonia has collapsed, though there is still some desultory fighting on the frontier.

THE Novoe Vremya publishes a despatch from Vladivostock, stating the public. Address, Aural Special that Japan is raising her army and fleet to a war footing, has blown Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

up the fortifications of Port Arthur, and now intends to dominate Corea, and hold the King prisoner.

THE Blackburn Chamber of Commerce is sending a commercial mission to China to study the trade of the southern provinces.

THE Moscow Gazette discusses an eventual Russian campaign in India, which, though difficult, is perfectly possible, and even inevitable, if Great Britain persists in her hostility to Russia everywhere. Nevertheless, if England prefers a mutually beneficial entente cordiale, Russia is prepared to aid her to strengthen her dominion in Southern Asia, which Great Britain has insisted Russia is thwarting.

MR. Gladstone will address a meeting at Chester on the 6th of August on the Armenian question. The Duke of Westminister will preside, and several influential supporters of Lord Salisbury will be present.

MR. A. B. Forwood, Secretary to the Admiralty in Lord Salisbury's Second Ministry, has been created a Baronet.

MR. Einest Hait, at the meeting of the Brush Medical Association held on July 3t, declared that the whole of the Indian Medical Service needed overhauling and reconstituting. He censured the system whereby officers obtain by mere seniority high positions for which they are quite incapable. The Association unanimously adopted a resolution to make representations to the Secretary of State on the utter inadequacy of the sanitary administration of India, to give the most elementary protection to Her Majesty's Indian subjects, and to urge the momentum of a Royal Commission or a Departmental Committee of Enquiry.

THE Ambassadors have approved the nomination of Shakir Pasha to carry out the proposed reforms in Aimenia, provided he is invested with full powers, and that the Sultan's scheme of reforms satisfies the Powers.

THE programme of the Lieutenant-Governor's tour has been slightly revised. He leaves Calcutta at 20-57 on Monday next and arrives at Darjeeling at 15-30 on Tuesday, the 20th August. Lady Elliott does not bear him company.

GOVERNMENT has accepted the election of Babu Guro Proshad Sen. He has been gazetted a member of the Bengal Legislative Council.

To prevent the manufacture of Farukhabad rupees, which were called in in 1877, and the counterfeting of called in coins, the Finance Minister introduced, on the 11th July, in the Supreme Legislative Council, a Bill to add to section 230 of the Indian Penal Code, the following:

"Any piece of metal which has at any time been the Queen's coin as above defined shall be deemed to be the Queen's coin for the purposes of this chapter not with standing that it may have ceased to be used as money."

To definitely include the Farukhabad rupee, the illustrations to the sanction are to be added to by

"(e) The 'Farukhabad rupee' which was formerly used as money under the authority of the Government of India, is Queen's com, although it is no longer so used."

THE Code of Civil Procedure has been amended or rather added to authorising a High Court to make such rules consistent with the Letters Patent establishing it to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, as it shall think fit.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

On the 25th July, the Law Member introduced a Bill to exempt Crown Grants from the operation of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, with both retrospective and prospective effect. The additions to the Act proposed are:

"(1) Nothing in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, contained shall apply or be deemed ever to have applied to any grant of transfer of Land or of any intenest therein heretofere made or hereafter to be made by or on behalf of Her Lajesty the Queen-Empress, her heirs or successors, or by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council to, or in favour of, any person whomsover; but every such grant and transfer shall be construed and take effect as if the said Act had not been passed.

(2) All provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations over con-

(2) All provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations over contained in any such grant or transfer as aforesaid shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor, any rule of law or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding."

So Alexander Miller explained that by the Act limitations over in transfer of property to persons not born at the date of transfer are void, and that the question arose in connection with the Porahat Estate. He himself thinks its hither Government are not bound by the Act. That that opinion nearly he Pie rule, it is thought desirable to settle the question in the way proposed, specially as the Advocate-General of Bengal has expressed a different opinion. According to him, the Crown has no power at common law to create an impartible and malienable estate in land which has not hitherto by custom been impartible and inahenable. The Law Member will give the Crown that power, which, as he says, "it need not exercise except in any case in which it thinks proper." This easy view of absolute power is thoroughly un-English and opposed to modern levislation as against the spirit of the age. We may therefore expect a lively debate on the Bill. If Dr. Rashabehary Ghose is no longer in the Council to cry down the attempt in favour of perpetuities, a member may yet be found to stay the hand raised for arbitrary power. So Griffith Evans to the rescue !

THE fight over the Viceregal verand in has ended satisfactorily to both sides. The Municipal Commissioners met specially on Thursday, on a requisition from twelve of them, and ag eed to allow the three-storeyed hanging structure. The matter had practically been decided on the previous Monday at the Lieutenant Governor's River Party on board the Rhotas. At the formal meeting the Chairman moved a resolution sanctigning the three-storyed verandah and reaffirming the rule disallowing covered verandahs, which resolution was carried, though several amendments were proposed and seconded. Thus the Vicerovalists as a writer in the Statesman calls, those who were for the verandah, gained what they had contended for, and the Radicals who were dead against it, saved their municipal conscience. These were afraid lest the sauction for the Viceregal verandah be quoted as a precedent for other verandahs. They therefore agreed to break the fluie to allow what they could not resist, and simultaneously resolved that no covered verand ins be allowed. The reaffirmation itself forms a precedent which those who are for such verandahs may point to hereafter. The Commissioners in meeting could not refuse the sanction. Public opinion had denounced their conduct of last week. The General Committee had sanctioned the structure, the Chairman had given permission to build and the structure was nearly ready. At this stage it was decided not to allow it. This order so late could not be practically given effect to, *For he Commissioners are bound by the action of the mijority dan, persineral Committee, the Chairman agreeing, and although the acc. not the General Committee cannot prevail against the order of the Commissioners in meeting, the Chairman could not withdraw the sanction already given but only carry out the order so far as it was practicable. Such being the law, all unmannermess and exhibition of temper might have been saved, without compromise of any kind, by quietly passing over the matter.

The law was so altered to give more power to the Chairman and to leave the working of the municipal law to the General Committee, which was also limited to a small number. This was the doing of Sir Henry Hirrison. He was once pushed to a corner by the late Jadutal Mullick, when the late Chairman had telegraphed a large order to England without waiting for the sanction of the Commissioners in meeting. Jadutal had opposed that item of business in the Town Council, the then General Committee, and had given notice of opposing the sanction. He was prudent enough not to carry matters to extremes and did not move further. The law was, however, altered that the Chairman might be more free.

In the present discussion much stress has been laid on the rule which it is sought to preserve inviolate as the work of Sir Henry Harrison. There was no greater somer in this line than he. Sir Stewart Hogg hid set his face against new haroging verturals and made a crusade against existing projections. With the advent of Sir Henry Harrison, verturd his began to hang in numbers, and they multiplied so fast that it was found incressing to make a stern rule. Sin Henry was of the same opinion with Mr. Skrine.

MR. Skrine is paying dearly for his tashness. He had brought in a motion in the municipal board to circumscribe the vapourings of its loquacious members. That project involved nothing less than disarming the Bengalee of his chief weapon. The Bengalee does not wield the sword, or any other instrument of aggression or defence. The only weapon with which he is most familiar is his supple tongue. To forbid him its use is cruelty. It is true, he has latterly taken to the pen. But that is no reason why he should not prize the much older weapon. Speaking of Dante, Sydney Smith remarkinto mut he might be a great poet, but as to inventing tortures, he tat of mere bungler. He displayed no imagination, no knowledge of the human heart. The Inferno is too full of contrivances for the infliction of mere physical tortures, but there is not much of mental torture in it. Chaffing his friend Macaulay, he said, "Oh, you should be dumb. False dates and facts of the reign of Queen Anne should for ever be shouted in your ears; all liberal and honest opinions should be ridiculed in your presence; and you should not be able to say a single word during that period in their defence." Surely, the condemnation of Macaulay to suence under such circumstances would have been a torture exquisite in its cruelty. But even such torture would be nothing compared to Mr. Skrine's closure in the municipality. Mr. Skime is credited with thoroughly understanding the Bengalee. It would seem that he has yet to learn. Our patriots are many of them verbal hydrants. They derive their principal sustenance from-words, words, words. Words are their chief pabulum. They live upon them and by them. To deprive them of the use of words would be to rob them of their life-breath.

IF Mr. Skrine is the butt of ridicule of the patriots in the Corporation, the Chairman too seems to have thrown him overboard. When questioned by one of the Commissioners whether he had heard Mr. Skrine use offensive language to him at a previous meeting and what steps he intended to take to punish Mr. Skiine, Mr. Ritchie replied that he had heard certain unpath aircutary words but what they were he could not catch, and, without calling on Mr. Skrine to explain or to apologize, ruled that he could not take any notice of an incident necurring at a previous meeting. The ruling may be a salutary one. For the moment it acted as a balm or avoided further exhibition of temper. But does the matter end there? Has it received its quietus? We wish it had. It does not appear, though, that the Chairman had considered all possibilities. In burying an nupleasantness, he leaves a loophole for its escape. He begins by a mistake. In laying down his law, the Chairman breaks at himself. It is of the nature of the Compromise Resolution regarding the Viceregal verandah. He would not allow the taking up of an unpleasant incident of a previous meeting. In the same breath, he condemns unheard a colleague for certain unembodied sounds which had reached b linous at a past sitting of the Commissioners with c

THE last week witnessed two celebrations in honour of Pandit Vidyasagar. One of these took place at the Emersid Theatre, in connection with the Vidyasagar Library, and the other at the Star Finatre. In the former, Babu Rabinda, Nath Tagore read a discourse on the character and doings of the deceased Prince of Pandits. The meeting at the Star was presided over by Dr. Rishbehary Ghose. The speakers, besides the chairman, were Babus Hirendra Nath Dutt, Hem Chandra Roy, Chandi Charan Banerjee, and Amatalid Bose. The last two addressed the audience in Bengali. Babu Amritalal, as usual, was very entertaioning.

THE Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science held its annual meeting on Tuesday. Sir Charles Elliott presided. The gallery was full with members, students and others, mostly Native.

Some half a dozen European gentlemen and one European lady were present. The New Indian Woman, like the Maharajas, was conspicuous by her absence. Dr. Sitear opened the proceedings by reading the report which could not be presented earlier on account of his had health. Altogether 79 lectures were delivered during the year 1894, exclusive of to practical demonstrations. The session of 1894-95 was opened by Father Lafont with an introductory lecture. A new section, that of Biology, was opened, with an inaugural discourse, by the Honorary Secretary, followed with 5 lectures by Mr. Banwarilal Chaudhuri, B.A., BSc, and 3 by Di Niliatin Sukar The audited accounts of the Association at the close of last year show a balance of Rs. 1,23,116-10 against Rs. 1,17,972-6 11 of the previous year. The reading of the report over, the Secretary made, as usual, an earnest appeal for more funds. In the fervour of eloquence and the need of more money for an institution to which he has devoted his whole life and energies, he unearthed the buried controversy at its birth, and after thin lapse of two decades denounced the Temple of Science, characterized as an opposition shop to his own. He deplore, at buth as a check to this day to the flow of money to his own. But he forgot that he had refused to incorporate that institution with his own which would have made it more flourishing. Dr. Streat has lived to be disabused of many of his impressions since the conception of his Temple of Science, and may be live longer still to know that that opposition, if it was an opposition, generated more energy in himself and the friends who had sided with him. His institution had experienced apposition from within itself-The incident alluded to by the Secretary was elaborated upon by the Vice-President Father Lifont, but not sufficiently enough to be intelligible to all present. He only indulged his spleen on the devoted head of another reverend gentlem in, now no more, who professed a different creed and held a different view. He was equally unhappy in explaining why he gave up lecturing at the Association. He could not have rendered a greater disservice to the cause for which he spoke that evening. Dr Sircar's appeal was also for further aid from Government. He wished for a special recognition of the Science Association, Sir Charles Elliott replied to the points raised in the address and took the audience into his confidence by relating some of the measures taken by himself and his Government in the cause of science. We hage no space for the reply this week.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, August 3, 1895.

THE PILGRIM SHIPS BILL.

A BLIND LEGISLATION.

THE Pilgrim Ships Bill now before the Select Committee is an important measure, affecting as it does Mahomedans throughout India, particularly the middle and lower classes who form the bulk of pilgruns. It is a measure also in the right direction. But the haste with which it is being rushed through Council has caused alarm among the ignorant, is repo apology for it offered by the member in charge, the Bill is unsatisfactory and worse than the original sin, as the Persian proverb says. There has been no public preparation for such a drastic measure. Even now the papers relating to the subject are known only to the select circle. All that is known of them is what the member in charge of the Bill has been pleased to publish. We must confess that Sit Alexander Mackenzie is more out-Bill was introduced on the 11th July, published at Simla on the 13th and referred to the Select Representations on the subject will be received or fancied, upsets them completely. through Local Governments only up to the 15th Whatever the rigour of the law, the Indian August. It is the will of the Secretary of State Musalmans will not cease to perform the Haj. that the measure be passed before the next Haj The heavy restrictions will defeat their own season. The Government of India has, therefore, no choice in the matter, and the law must come into force on the 1st October.

The Mahomedan community is grateful to Government for the interest taken and anxiety shown for the Mecca pilgrims. It has not only devised measures and obtained concessions from the Sultan for the comfort and welfare of its subjects, but spent a large sum of money for better accommodation in pilgrim vessels. After all that Government has done for the Mahomedons, it is surprising that it should not have safeguarded their interest in the International Sanitary Conference held at Paris in 1894, and would neglect to be properly represented in the Council of European Powers in a matter of such vital importance to 57,000,000 raddions of Her Majestey's subjects. This is affective, or whatever it be, has filled the minds of Ind in Mahomedans with consternation, and they are exceedingly grieved that they are to be guided in the performance of their religious rites and ceremonies by the combined wisdom of European Continental Powers. Although Asia is reputed to be the original home of cholera, the Government of India believes that any epidemic of the disease in Europe, when it has travelled from outside, has done so by land by way of Russia, there being no evidence that it came from India by sea. In that belief, it declined to attend the Dresden Convention of 1893 called to concert measures against the invasion by cholera of Europe, for it would not be a party to imposition of objectionable obligations upon the local, and especially the maritine, Governments of this country.

Notwithstanding, the Bill is introduced, which, when passed, it is feared, will practically close the Haj to the poorer classes, to whom no religious obligation is so dear as a pilgrimage to Mecca. To-day restrictions are put on the pilgrimage to satisfy a foreign demand based on no other substantial reason than the fear of a dreaded disease. Who knows that to-morrow the demand will not be repeated in a graver form? Will the Government of India be prepared then to end the Haj entirely. From the way in which it is now proceeding, it will be equally prepared to pass another Bill in three or four weeks, at Simla, without allowing any opportunity for representation. Such quick legislation in the interest of Foreign Governments, the necessity whereof is not acknowledged by our Government, cannot confirm the faith of our people in its wisdom or good intentions. The present Bill so religiously affecting the Mahomedans is being considered in Select Committee without a Mahomedan being on ... Nor is it possible to give every possible carathabatton to a measure of such magnitude within such a short time. We do not say that Government should not pass any measure which it thinks proper. The educated Musalmans, we are sure, believe that Government has been actuated by the best of motives, although under pressure from outside. But of what good those intentions if the result be disastrous? The political effect also cannot but be injurious. It spoken than Sir Alexander Miller usually is. The difficult to remove from the minds of illiterate millions the wrong impression which the Bill has begun to create. Mahomedans are very sensitive Committee on the 25th of the same month, about their religion, and the least interference, real regions, or rather I should sav, to regions which existed only in the imagination of the projectors. The rival scheme could not, in the nature of things, be long-lived. Indeed, it died as soon it was born. But the mischief done by those who helped it at its birth has been disastiously permanent. The popular mind, not over informed anywhere, and grossly ignorant in this country, has not yet recovered from the spell which the sound of the word 'practical' bound it twenty years ago.

The fact remains that though the Association was established with the express intention of paying irs workers from month-ly subscriptions, the painful discovery was soon made, as was apprehended by Babu Keshab Chunder Sen, that the necessary apprendiction of be got on paper, far less redized. The Association has accordingly been depending upon honourary lecturers from the very beginning. And it is only since 1892 that we have been able to pay some remuneration to our lecturer on chemistry, though, as already said, not adequate enough to command his entire time.

It was not till the most pressing requirement of the Association, the building of a lecture hall was met, that we could venture to speak of the endowment of professorships, as another of our pressing requirements, without which indeed the permanency of the Institution could not be assured. Accordingly on the day Lord Ripon laid the foundation-stone of the lecture hall, I made my appeal for tunds for the endowment of professorships.
"The present lecturers," said 1, "are rendering their services gratuitously, out of pure love of science, and out of regard for the advancement of the natives of this country, but they cannot continue to render those services for ever. And neither can we expect, nor ought we to expect, that we should always be able to command honourary lecturers. This is neither possible nor desirable. We must have men continually at work, observing and experimenting and investigating, within the walls of the Institution, in fact, devoting their lives to the cultivation of science in order that we may have natives of the country contributing to the advancement of human knowledge, for which specific object this Institution was projected and has been established."

Object this institution was projected and has been established."
Two years later, in 1884, when the lecture hall was inaugurated by the same Viceroy, I once more urged the necessity of endowed professorships, and a fund for one professorship was actually started. His Excellency not only gave us permission to call it after him, but gave us a substantial donation of Rs. 1000 in its aid. H. H. Sivaji Rao Holkar, then first Prince of Rs. 1000 in the sun of fund. But sad to say, after the departure of Lord Ripon, at least, this has been the coincidence, the fund has improved but little, notwithstanding our repeated appeals in its aid. After 1886 it has come to an absolute stand still, a fact which so much surprized Sir Steuart Bayley that in addressing the members and assembled guests at the annual meeting in 1888, he was compelled to put the question, "In this wealthy city is Lord Ripon's name then forgotten ?' and instead of waiting for a reply added, "but I would rather leave you to draw the moral, and content myself with reminding you of what Lord Ripon himself said that 'a single school founded, a single what Lord profit mines and the school shall provided, will do, in the times which are before us, more to uphold the honour of an ancient name or to create the reputation of a new one, than any outward show of dignity or any personal display of wealth."

The Committee of Management, after having year after year regretted inability to report any improvement in the fund, have for very shame abstained from even alluding to it. But the importance of a professorship endowment fund, especially when coupled with the name of a most popular Viceroy, is so great that I cannot let slip this opportune and I might say this auspicious occasion without bringing it prominently forward once more to the notice of my countrymen, Hindu, Mahomedan, Parsi, and all who take pride in the name Indian.

I have called this occasion opportune and auspicious, because we have the privilege of holding this meeting under the presidency of a ruler who has evinced genuine earnestness in the cause of science by substantial encouragement, not encouragement by word of mouth only, but by the actual endowment of a prize for original research in the adjudication of which an honourable place has been given to this Institution. Considering the occasion then, may I not hope that those of my countrymen present here will enable me to announce at the next annual meeting that the Ripon professorship has become an accomplished fact?

has become an accomplished fact?

I may be permitted to point out that the failure to found a professorship in the name of Lord Ripon would be a serious reflection upon our gratitude and our sincerity. The enthusiasm that was displayed in honour of his lordship throughout the length and breath of India was phenomenal at the time. Was that enthusiasm sincere? might well be asked when we have literally done nothing to perpetuate his memory. If it was sincere, how is it that our gratitude followed suit with the smoke of the fireworks with which his lordship was entertained at Belgatchia, that is to say, evaporated and did not settle down into something solid and substantial? And what thing more solid and substantial could possibly be imagined than what we are now speaking about, which would not simply be a token of our sincerity and of our gratitude but would benefit us without measure and for ever?

But, Sir, it is not in aid of the endowment of this one professorship, however important to endow for the sake of our national character, that a want your powerful voice. Phose who have even the most superficial knowledge of what and how the hations of the West are doing for the cultivation of the sciences ought to know what number of professorships we require for an Institute of Science which professes to be, and deserves to be, and may be made to be, a national Indian Institution.

First in the field to awaken the people of India to the necessity of the cultivation of the physical sciences as the best and indeed the only method by which they can be essentially improved, by which the Asiatic torpor of ages can be shaken off, by which the bost prestige of the Indian sages as the educators of the world in primeral times, can be regained,—would it not be a pity if such an Institution were to languish for want of support? And would it not be a greater pity still if after having advanced as far it has done, it is suffered to die of inantition, or worse, to dwindle into a sorry and miserable thing for ever bearing witness to the want of energy and enlightenment of the present Indian people?

Now what is the advance which the Association has made during the twenty years it has been in working existence? This is not altogether inconsiderable if it is borne in mind, that it has the in in altogether inconsiderable it it is bother in mind that it has $\tilde{V} \tilde{V} \ti the shape of interest from Government securities and Rs. 20,000 as tent from the road-side shops. It has altogether spent Rs. 1,80,000 of which, the sam of Rs. 31,000 was spent in the purchase of the premises on which the sam of Rs. 31,000 was spent in the purchase of the premises on which it stands, Rs. 30,000 in building the lecture hall, Rs. 41,000 in building the laboratory, about Rs. 36,000 in the purchase of instruments, about Rs. 3,000 in furniture and Rs. 2,000 in books and periodicals, and nearly Rs. 8,000 in municipal taxes, and the balance of Rs. 28,000 in establishment, charges general, lecture charges, lighting, &c. As regards the number of lectures delivered, in place of two in the month with which the work-of the Association was begun, there are now six a week or work-of the Association was begun, there are now six a week or twenty-four in the month during the working session.

"We must therefore gratefully admit" with the Hindoo Patriot "that Bengal, and especially the Metropolis, has done much for the cause of science. But it must be equally admitted that much more that could have been done has not been done. We see only the names of a few millionaires on the subscription list, and it is their names which recur on different occasions. How many there are who can come forward very liberally, but have not done so? What more convincing proof do they require of the utility and the im-How many there are What portance of the Association than the testimony, in eloquent, earnest and often impassioned words, borne of that utility and importance by successive Viceroys who have been its patrons, and by successive Licutenant-Govenors who have been its presidents?"

"But it is not our millionanes alone," continues the same journal,
"who are to blame for their apathy and indifference to the cause of the Science Association. The institution has not met with that appreciation from the bulk of our community which it was expected in the beginning that it would. This means the apathy and in-difference of the educated classes, who are and ought to be the proper representatives of the country. Education has not, it is reached the masses. But what increasing numbers of graduates are being turned out year after year by our universities. To them the ntages of science-cultivation in this country cannot be matter of doubt. And yet we do not see that they have moved in the matter adequately to their numbers and their culture. We do not see that they have come forward either with their purse of with other help at their easy command. We do not mean to say that there are not honourable exceptions, but how lew, how solitary these excep tions are! We do not exaggerate when we say that we have scarcely found a single graduate who has tried to persuade others to help the institution. If our graduates had shown any earnestness in the matter, and acted the part of the missionary in the cause of science, the Association would have worn a different and brighter aspect. The rules of membership have placed it within reach of every one with moderate income."

I think I have made clear what is expected from my country from the wealthy and the learned, as regrds this institution. I will here quote an important observation which was made by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton in his address on Technical Education at the Bethune Society some years ago, which has a most pertinent bearing on what I have been so feeby urging. "A most urgent need to india," said I have been so feeby urging. "A most urgent need to india," he, "is the better disposition of hoarded wealth. India is in need of wealthy men who have wisdom and experience, who will not fritter away their money on tamuba and ceremonies, and who are not unwilling to lay out capital which will bring them neither titles nor official smiles. We do not want capital to be buried, we do not want it to be wasted on marriage expenses, nor do we want it to be squandered in sycophantic subscriptions or in the reception and entertainment of officials. Some expenditure of this kind will al-Some expenditure of this kind will always be unavoidable, but the waste which now runs rampant must be checked. No spectacle is more deplorable in the eyes of the well-wishers of this country than the lavish squandering outlay which fashions demands and public opinion sanctions on these occasions." I have only to remark in this connection that we have two kinds of hoarded wealth in this country, one in the shape of hoarded gold and silver and the other in the shape of unused intelligence. In order to liberate the latter it is necessary to liberate the former, which in this sublunar world of ours is a magic transformer of energy of all kinds.

And now, before I resume my seat, a word as to what I And now, below I resume my seat, a word as to what I expect, and may legitimately expect, from Government. Lord Lytton, when he paid a visit to the Association in 1880 to be present at one of its lectures, in addressing the audience after the lecture, sail, "and let me beg you to remember that the cause of science here in India is really of all causes the most deserving, the most beneficent, and the most charitable." Lord Ripon marked "the deep and sincere interest he felt in the progress of the Association—an interest which," his Lordship said, "increased with his increasing acquaintance with the wants of India," by contributing liberally to its funds, Lord Lansdowne, also a contibutor to its funds, when laving the Goundation-stone of the tributor to its funds, when laving the foundation-stone of the Vizianagram laboratory, said, "I am convinced of the great value of the work which the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science has done in the past, and is likely to do in the future, and added, "I shall be expressing the general opinion of those who stand around me when I say that, living as we are in an age remarkable for the number and brilliancy of its scientific discoveries---an age in which every civilized nation is contributing its quota towards the general fund of scientific knowledge---we should be reluctant to think that India, considering the intelligence of many of the races by which it is inhabited, should fail to bear its share in extending the dominion of man over the natural world.'

I need not here recount what your predecessors in the presidential chair said and did for the Association. Your Honor has gone further them all when in presiding at our annual meeting in 1891, you were pleased to observe---It is quite right that Government should support and encourage everything that is done to promote the growth of the love of science in India. It is these words which have emboldened me to say my humble say, as I am now doing, as to what we may expect from our Government. We are thankful for what the Government has already done for the Association by its moral support, and by acquiring the land on which its premises stand.

But it can do much more in a variety of other ways without any appreciable charge upon its finances. For instance, it can turnish the institution with instruments made at its workshops for its meteorological, mathematical, telegraphic and other departments, at little or no cost. It can supply it with spare speciments from its geological and other museums. And it can order copies of all its scientific publications to be sent for the library of the institution.

There is one other thing which I humbly beg to suggest Government can easily do, and which is calculated to benefit the Association immensely by drawing students to its lectures and practical demonstrations, and that is by passing some such resolution this - that candidates for Government service requiring a knowledge of science will have preference if they can show certificates of having passed through full courses of instruction at the Science Association. While this will be a very great encouragement to students, it will be a gain to Government to have men under its service with a better knowledge of their work than would otherwise be attainable. It has become a fashion to reproach the Indian student for not taking to the study of science for the love of science, as if even in the most civilized countries which owe their exchange and the most evaluate the sum of the student prosecutes scientific studies with expectation of neither immediate nor prosecutive advantages. It is, as I have often said, a note-worthy though said lact that earnest students are seldom found amongst those who are born and bred up in the lap of luxury and case; all the world over, and specially in our own country, they are met with chicily among the poor. It is the duty of every lover of true with clirily among the poor. It is the duty of every lover of true worth and of the State to find out genuine talent from its home in adversity.

And now, Honourable Sir and Gentlemen, I have done. I feel that and the standard of an and tentremen, I have done. Heet that satisfaction to investly. Having had to satisfy the demands of the stomach by my professional work, I had not leisure enough left to devote to the adequate fulfilment of the task I had set before myself. I think I ought to admit that it is chiefly to this cause that the progress made by the Association in twenty years has been so small compared with what has been done in the West during that time as scarcely to lead to any hopeful prospect. If I am still persevering, it is because I have faith in the inherent capacity of my countrymen to explore the secrets of nature, it is because I have faith in the beneficence of our Government, and above all, it is because I have faith in the providence of God.

My countrymen, you have but to will it, you have only to pro-perly use your hoarded wealth and hoarded intelligence, and it will not be long before you take your place among the favoured nations of the world. Do you want any recent example to encourage you and inspire you with confidence? Look at Japan, only a few years ago perhaps the most insignificant country in Asia. And yet see what science has done for her. Why should you despair when you are backed by a most glorious past and can rely upon an inherited intelligence not inferior to any other in the whole world? How is it that the spirit of your sages does not animate you, sages who set before man the loftiest ideals of excellence, truth for the intellect and absolute disinterestedness for the heart? I leave you to ponder over these questions and to find what answer you can.

ONLY FOUR TO MAN THE PUMPS.

DEAR, dear! When you come to think of it how closely related things are; how one thing brings up another. Ideas are like a lot of beads are; how one thing brings up another. Ideas are like a lot of beads on a string, aren't they?

A letter I have just been reading makes me remember what happened to me one winter about twenty years ago. The story is too long to tell here, so I'l merely give you the tail end of it. I was supercargo on a back bound from London to Rio. A tremendous gale, lasting five days, wiceked us. Forty eight hours after it ceased there were four men and no more left on the vessel. The captain had been killed by a falling spar, three of the crew washed overboard, and the rest of the ship's company (save in four her away in the long boat with the first and second mates. We were taking in water through a leak at the late of six inches an hour. Working with all our might the four of its could primp that out in forty innucles, but we must do it every hour. It was awful work. For two days we kept it up, without sleep. Then we stopped, took to the quarter boat and shoved off. The sea was quiet—no wind. While we lay to within a mile of her the ship threw day by a Danish big.

day by a Danish big.

Now the odd thing is that the letter which reminded me of that ex-perience has nothing whatever to say about ships. Please help me to find out the association.

perience has maning whatever to say about ships. Please help me to find out the association.

The lady who writes the letter says that in July, 1881, she got a bad fright. Exactly what it was she doesn't tell. I wish she did. Anyway it so upset her that she didn't get over the effects of it for nine years. After that her appetite fell off; she lost all real relish for food, and what she did eat only made trouble instead of nourishing her. It gave her p in in the pit of the stomach and (currously enough) between the shoulders. Sine says her eyes and skin presently turned yellow as a binterrup. Her face and abdomen swelled, and her feet the same, the latter so much so that she was obliged to have her shoes made larger. "I got little sleep at night," she says, "and was in so much pain I had to be propped up with pillows. For weeks together I could not lie down in bed. I had a dry, hollow cough, and bad night sweats. Then diarrheas set in, and my bowels became ulcerated. I was often in dreadful agony for forty-eight hours at a time. Then I would have a chill as though a bucket of cold water were poured down my back. I got so low I could not longer sex, kint, or do any housework of look after my children. My sister hid to come and help in the house.

"Everybody said I was in a decline and mist die. What I suffered for eight years tongue cunnot tell. The doctor could do nothing for me. He said my complaint was complicated and bad to deal with, in 1886 I went as an outdoor patient to the Shrewsbury Infirmary, but only got transient reliet."

The wetter is in could health now but, why did her case genomed me.

In 1880 I went as an outdoor patient to the Shrewsbury Infirmary, but only got transient refer."

The writer is in good health now, but why did her case remond me of the shipwieck? Let's settle that first. The association is easy and natural. Just see. The ship sank because we four men hadn't the strength to pump out the water as fast as it came in. Twenty might have got her into poit. It is the last straw that breaks. camel's back; the last unsupplied need that makes poverty abject as camel's back; the last unsupplied need that makes poverty abject an desperate.

These bodies of ours carry the seeds of disease with them all the time—chiefly the poisons created by imperfect digestion, made worse by careless habits. But as long as nothing extraordinary happens we manage to scrape along in a half-ind half-sort of fashion. Yet we've got in our blood the stuff that any of a dozen diseases is made of, only waiting for something to set it after. While the hivel, kidneys, lings and skin keep in fauly free—that is, don't let the load get too heavy—we say, "Oh, yes, I'm tolerably well, thank you." Little prins and impleasant symptoms bother us now and then, but we don't fancy they mean anything.

By-and-by something happens. A cold, too hearty a meal, a night of dissipation, an affliction through death or loss of property, a fight

By-and-by something nappens. A coin, not nearly a meal, a night of dissipation, an affliction through death or loss of property, a fight as in Mrs. Bunce's case, &c. Over we go. The last straw has crushed us. One howe spick has ollown up the barrel of powder. The crew is too small to save the ship. The kidneys, liver, skin, and stomach strike work, and we must have help right away or perish. All of which means the explosion of latent indigestion and dyspepsia poisons in the blood.

blood.
There!:sn't it plain why I thought of the ship? Now for the conclusion of the lady's story. She says: "In 1889 I first heard of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. Half a bothe made me feel better, and by keeping on taking it I was soon's trong and well as ever. (Signed) Mis. Ann Bunce, The Park, Worthen, near Shrewsbury, February 22nd, 2021.

1893."

If there were only a way to save sinking ships as certain and trustworthy as Mother Seigel's medicine is in the case of sinking human bodies, what a blessing it would be to poor sailors.

NOTIFICATION.

THE following revised rules framed under Act, VIII of 1878, having secesived the sanction of the Local Government will be put in force with effect from the 1st August, 1895, in super-session of those published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 28th November 1883, Part I, Gazetie of the 28th November 1883, Part I, page 1123.

1. Applications for the transhipment under Section 128 of free goods shall be presented to the Collector of Customs before; 3 P.M., on the day on which the transhipment is required, and such goods will be allowed transhipment under the pass issued without any charge.

2. Applications for the transhipment under Section 128 of dutiable goods shall also be presented to the Collector of Customs before 3 P.M., on the day on which the transhipment is required, and they shall be accompanied by the fees payable under Section 133 of the Act on the following scale:

For each transhipment between the hours each transhipment between the hours of 8 A M. and 5 P.M.

Each package

Rs. A. P.
... 0 2 0 with a minimum fee of a m a ximum of rupees

3. In calculating the fee in the case of wrought-iron, such as bars, rods, phates, sneets, hoop, old pig, pipes and tubes and tinned plates, of asphalt in bulk, and also of all loose metals in bulk, each ton and fraction of a ton shall be taken as representtwenty. ing one pickage.

F. H. SKRINE,
Offg. Collector of Customs.

Custom House, Calcutta, July 29, 1895.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

OF

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, CS.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia, 1. A portrait of the Doctor.

2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and arm.

3. About 225 pages of original essays from his brilliant pen. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE :

To registered subscribers paying in ... Rs 5 advance
To other subscribers and ordinary purchasers

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Ree Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Press, I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta. Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman

Subscribers to the Essays by a Diamina will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such torm may be used as,—

Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies	or " An I	naian	Journaille	57.	Tue :	unouni, que

R∢.	has	been	remitted
						y order
To be	legibly (Nan	ne

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta,

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by inegularities and indiscretions of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full ac-counts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARIEE.

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption, Wills &c.* Price
"No student or practitioner should be without a copy of this GREAT Work." 16

(Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas," Bengali translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshata.† Price ...

Bengali Translation of the Dattakachandrika.† Price ... 0 8

The Evidence Act with notes in Bengal.† Price
The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengal.† Price
Principles of Zemindari Management and Book-keeping in Bengali
First Lessons in English for Bengali boys, Price
Bharat Sasan Pranali*

0 10

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

CONTENTS.

1 Historical Analysis of the evolution of religious systems.

Definition of the term " religion.

The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new.

(a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tor-touse, and a boar.

b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the sacrifice of animals, and the burning of ghee or incense.

&c. &c. &c. &c. &c. religious teachers.

religious teacners.
The power of fine words.
The art of becoming a prophet.
The cumulative effect of hardswearing

for ages.

Specimens of Puranised history.

Brahminical and Christian priestcraft

compared.

The artificial miseries of men caused by religion.

religion.
Tyranny and taxation of religion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
The great prophets of the world and their doings.
Probable origin of the Saiva religion.
Tantric mysticism and abominations.

* To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., only.

t To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradhani Agency, No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutta.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally ad-A RE universally admitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Stoand Pain in the Sto-math, Sick, Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drow-siness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Die ins and all Neivous and Trembling Sensation, &c. The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes.

Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one box of these Pills, and they will be achieved to be sense.

knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

WORTH A GUINEA A BUX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off al humours, and bring about all that is required No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beerham's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use.

For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

human machine.

: Natives of India will find Beecham's The Natives of India will and Beccham's Pills the hoest medicane ever introduced to their nonce; the European residents also will find them of great value for colling the blood. For throwing off fevers and preventing inflammations in hot climates, they stand without very stand. These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Network and Debu-litated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the world.

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy for Coughs in general, Asthma, Bronchial Affections, Houseness, Shortness of Breath, Tightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheezing, &c., these Pills stand univalled. Let any person give Beecham's Cough Pills a trial, and the most violent Cough will in a short time he removed.

Beecham's Tooth Paste Will recommend

Will recommend itself being efficacious and economical: it is packed in neat airtight collapsible Tubes.

NOTICE.—G. Atheiton & Co. will forward on receipt of letter, samples at the following rates: size 9/3d. at 8 annas per box; 1-1/3d. size 12 annas per box; 2-, 9d. size 2 rapees per box; Tooth Paste 12 annas per Tube, these rates do not include the cost of postage which will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET, CALCUTTA.

MARIA D DATE A DETO A DESCRIPTION !

ME	WAB BAHADUK ABDUUL LUT	LLL
	MEMORIAL FUND.
ı,	His Highness The Maharaja of Dur-	Rs.
		2,000
2	His Highness The Maharaja of Vizi-	, 1,000
3.	His Highness the Nawah Bahadur of	1,000
4.	Moorshed thad, Amirul Omra, GC1F, His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh,	. 8oc
4.	G C.S.I	500
5.	His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur
6.	of Cooch Behar, G.C.L.E Nawah Bahagur Sir K. Abdul Gham,	500
	K.C.S.L. and Nawid Bahadur K.
7.	K.C.S.L., and Naw to Bahadur K. Ashan Ulla, C.J.E Nawab Imad Jing Bahadur Nawab Azam Yar Jing Bahadur Shams-in Ulama Syed Ah Belgrand Kan Bahadu bahadur	500
8.	Nawab Azam Yar Jung Bahadur	500
9. 10.		500
	Vizier to the Nawab of Junag idb	30.
11.	Maharija Bahadur Sir Joundia Mo-
I 2.	Babu Jodu Lai Mullick	250
I 3. 14.	Babu Jodu Lai Mullick Messrs, Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. Prince Wala Kadr. Syed. Hosein Ali Miza Banadur	200
14.	Mirza Banadur	150
15.	Mirza Banadur Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab Syed Zunui Abum Khan Bahadur Feraz Jung	- ,-
	Feraz Jung	140
16.	Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee, C.S.I. The Houble Mr. Justice Chandra	100
17.		100
18.	Prince Mirra Sir Jahan Kadar Baha-	100
19.	dur, K.C.I.F., The Houble P Playfair	100
20.	Haji Kasim Anff	100
21.	Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir
22.	H. Brackerbury, K.C.B., Babu Jai Golund Law	100
23	The timble Mr. Justice Count Das
24.	Banerjee The Houble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose	50 51
25.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt	50
20,	Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan Bahadur, C.S.I.	50
27.	Maharajkumar Benoya Kushna	50
28.	The Hou'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Trevelyan	50
29.	The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar	-
30.	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of	50
	Coloutto	50
31. 32.	Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I.E., Nawab Jahandar Meetza	50 50
3.3.	Mawao rinzoor Mirza	50
34 35.	The Houble W. C. Bonnerjee Nawab Syed Ameer Husein	50 50
36.	Syed Nurul Hud , Esq , es, Hakeem Gholam Raza Khan	50
37. 38.	I. G. Ritchie, Esq. c.s.,	50
39.	J. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S., Sir Alexander Miller	50 50
10. 11.	F. J. Rowe, Esq Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	32
	nadur,	25
12. 13.	Luma Ratha Prosad Roy	25 25
4.	Babu rPashupatty Nath Bose	25 25
15. 16.	Numar Doulat Chandra Roy	25
7.	Raja Sir Soutindra Mohan Tagore,	25
18.	Raya Intended Nath Changlians	25
()	Babu Rama Nath Ghose	25 25
0 1.	Par Sam Day Dayle Del 1	25
2.
	R. Belchambers, Esq.	25
3.	R. Belchambers, Esq Raja Surja Kanta Achargee Chowdburs	25
4.	R. Belchambers, Esq Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur	25
4. 5. 6,	R. Belchambers, Esq Raji Suija Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukim Bahadur Babu Gopul Lal Seal Maniki Syad Abdus Salam	25 25 25 25 25
4.	R. Belchambers, E.q Raji (Supi Kanti Achirjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Bahu Gopul Lal Seal Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape u, E.q H. Luttman Johnson Foo Cs	25 25 25 25 25
4. 5. 6. 78.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raji Sunja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Baha Gopai Lal Seal Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape o, E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E.	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25
14. 15. 16. 17. 18.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raj (Supt Kanta Ach 17ge Chowdhury Ran Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Bahu Gop il Lal Seat Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape u, E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord Wilman Bersford, K.C.L.E.,	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25
14. 15. 16. 7. 18. 19. 10. 1. 19.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raj (Supt Kanta Ach 17ge Chowdhury Ran Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Bahu Gop il Lal Seat Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape u, E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord Wilman Bersford, K.C.L.E.,	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25
14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 10. 11. 12. 13.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raj (Supt Kanta Ach 17ge Chowdhury Ran Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Bahu Gop il Lal Seat Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape u, E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord Wilman Bersford, K.C.L.E.,	25 25 25 25 25 20 20
14.5.6.78.90.12.34.5.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raj (Supt Kanta Ach 179e Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukun Bahadur Babu Gopul L.J Seal Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Apr. u, E.q. L. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord William Beresford, K.C.L.E., Munshi Gholam Rasool F. H. Skrine, Esq. C.S., The Hoolble H. J. S. Cotton C.S. C. S.L. Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry, Aukhony Kumar Ghose	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 20 20
14.5.6.78.90.12.34.50.	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raji Suija Kanta Achurjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Baha Gopul Lal Seal Moulus Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Apeu, E.q. Lord Wilsiam Bere-ford, K.C.L.E., Munshi Gholam Rasool F. H. Skrume, Esq. C.S., The Howbie H. J. S. Cotton C.S., C.S.L. Prince Mathomera Bukunyar Shah Bahoo Surendra Nath P. al Chowdry Aukhory Kumar Ghose Munula Imadd Ah	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 20 20 20 20
14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raji Sunja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Baha Gopai Lal Seal Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape o., E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord William Beresford, K.C.L.E., Munshi Gholam Rasool F. H. Skrime, Esq. C.S., The Howbie H. J. S. Cutton, C.S., C. S.L. Prince Maltomed Bukutyar Shah Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry, "Aukhoy Kumar Ghose Moulet Imadd Ah Ru Shab Chomager Nandy Bahadar. D. Pamork, Esq.	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 20 20 20
145.6.78.90.1234.50.7.89	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raji Sunja Kanta Achurjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Baha Gopul Lal Seal Moulus Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Apeu, E.q. H. Lautman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord Wulliam Bere-ford, K.C.L.E., Munish Gholam Rasool F. H. Skrume, Esq. C.S. The Howble H. J. S. Cotton C.S., C.S.L. Prince Maltomed Bukunyar Shah Bahoo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry Ankhoy Kumar Ghose Moulty Ionadd Ah Ru Shab Chomore Nundy Bahadar D. Pamoty, Esq. Chowdry Mahomed Atlamand Khon	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20
14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19. 19	R. Belchambers, E.q. Raji Sunja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury Rai Budreedas Mukum Bahadur Baha Gopai Lal Seal Mouler Syad Abdus Salam A. T. Ape o., E.q. H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. C.S. Lord William Beresford, K.C.L.E., Munshi Gholam Rasool F. H. Skrime, Esq. C.S., The Howbie H. J. S. Cutton, C.S., C. S.L. Prince Maltomed Bukutyar Shah Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry, "Aukhoy Kumar Ghose Moulet Imadd Ah Ru Shab Chomager Nandy Bahadar. D. Pamork, Esq.	25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 25 20 20 20 20 20 20 20

72. T. lughs, Esq , C.S.

73	A. H. Giles, Esq		16	!
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq , C.S.		16
75.	I'ne Hon'ble Mouivi Straju			1
, ,.	Khan		16	l
70	Moulyi Serajuddeen		15	!
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,			i
		•••	15	ļ
78.	H. A. D. Pumps, Esq., C s.	•••	10	ł
79.	B (boo Kiran Chunder Roy	•••	10	ļ
80.	L. N. Baker, E-q	•••	10	ï
8r.	Baboo Doyal Cuand Bose		10	ì
82	" Madan Mohun Bose		10
83.	"Kanai Lai Khan		10	ı
84.	Moulyi Syud Akram Hossain	•••	10	•
85.	Moulvi Aziz Anmud		10	١
80.	Ru Kanyelai Dey Bahadoor			1
		•••	10	Į
87.	H. Holmwood, Esq	•••	10	ı
88.	Bibn Harry Monus Chunder	• • • •	10	Ĺ
89.	Baboo Chakkanlal Roy		5	١
90.	" Sarodapiasad Gnose		5	ŀ
Su	bscriptions will be thankfully	received		l
	Ionorary Joint Secretaries,		· 1	l
15	the state of the second second	• •		8

RAI RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI BAHADUR, 4. Bittish Indian Street, Calcutta, and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMAN, Esq., 16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

Guaranteed three Years.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, pitent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for R.S. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repartable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr Jao. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solended time and ever stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jetks. x Dr H. Moore of Royal Artillety from Pomamaliee says:—I sold it for Rs. 10, x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Reg. from Daindum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mr, T. B. Scott of Patna Opum Department says:—The watch you sent me some from Danadum says: —I have sold at for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opum Department says: —The watch you sent me some seven ye us ago is still keeping very good time. Jowelled Ring Re. 1.8–0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1.8-0. Fishonable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubires, Emeralds, at Re. 1.8-0 Mr. G. Smith, Silt Inspectio from Sanikutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Koyal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pie. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25, the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28. Pie. H. C. Bishop of I. F. L. Regt, from Kamptee says: A Cuporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladnes' Rs. 24; both with extras and quaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real soind gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO.,

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

CATARRH. Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT Sufficiers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the hining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications in the at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HULTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada. ... 17-8 TORONTO, Canad ... 16 Scientific American.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF" All who suffer find sure relies from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering; white in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO. SCIATICA. FACEACHE, PRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most circumcturing.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By us intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanisticet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Batagate &

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Sa RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in advance,

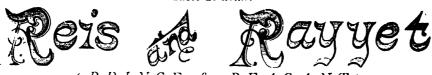

... Half-vearry Quaterry ... Months K- 1-8 ... Monthly ... Single or sample Conv If not paid in advance, Rs. 18 Yearly Hair-yearly... ... ,, 10-8 No additional charge for postage of peor.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest coarge for which is Rs. 5.
Business. Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet." and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column)

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Caicutta.

DROIT ET AVANT

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEÉKLY NEWSPAPER

...KEI NEWST

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1895.

WHOLE NO 687.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

-1 esm 2 ~

TO THE STETHOSCOPE.

" Tuba mirum spargens sonum." - Dies Irae.

Stethoscope! thou simple tube, Clarion of the yewning tomb, Unto me thou seem'st to be A very trump of doom.

Then thou whisperest in his ear
Words which only he can hear—
Words of woe and words of cheet
Jubilatés thou hast sounded,
Wild exulting songs of gladness.
Misererés have abounded
Of unutterable sadness.
Sometimes may thy tones impart,
Comfort to the sad at heart,
Oftener when thy lips have spoken,
Eyes have wept, and hearts have broken

Calm and grave physician, thou
Art like a crownfd King;
Though there is not round thy brow
A bauble golden ring,
As a Czar of many lands,
Life and death are in thy hands
Sceptie-like, that Stethoscope
Seemeth in thy hands to wave.
As it points, thy subject goeth
Downwards to the silent grave;
Or thy lingly power to save
Lifts him from a bed of pain,
Breaks his weary bond ige-chain,
And bid, him be a man again.

Like a Priest beside the altar Bleeding victims sacrificing, Thou dost stand, and dost not falter Whatso'er their agonizing Death lifts up his dooming finger, And the Flamen may not linger!

Prophet art thou, wise physician, Down the future calmly gazing, Heeding not the strange amazing Features of the ghastly vision. Float around thee shadowy crowds, Living shapes in coming shrouds ;-Brides with babes, in dark graves sleeping That still sleep which knows no waking ; Eyes all bright, grown dim with weeping , Hearts all joy, with anguish breaking; Stalwart men to dust degraded ; Maiden charms by worms invaded; Cradle songs as funeral hymns; Mould'ring bones for living limbs; Stately looks and angel faces. Loving smiles, and winning graces, Turned to skulls with dead grimaces. All the future, like a scroll, Opening out, that it may show, Like the ancient prophet's roll, Mourning, lamentation, anguish, Grief, and every form of woe

On a couch with kind gifts laden, Flowers around her, books beside her, Knowing not what shall betide her. Languishes a gentle maiden. Cold and glassy is her bright eye, Hectic red her hollow cheek, Tangled the neglected ringlets. Wan the body, thin and weak ; Like thick cords, the swelling blue veins Shine through the transparent skin, Day by day some fiercer new pains Vex without, or war within Yet she counts it but a passing, Transient, accidental thing , Were the summer only here, It would healing bring ! And with many a fond deceit Tries she thus her fears to cheat :

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fall particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspape press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

"When the cowslip's early bloom Quite hath lost its rich perfume; When the violet's fragrant breath Tasted have the lips of death; When the snowdrop long hath died, And the primrose at its side In its grave is sleeping; When the lilies all are over, And amongst the scented clover Merry lambs are leaping; When the swallow's voice is ringing Through the echoing azure dome, Saying, ' From my far-off home I have come, my wild way winging O'er the waves, that I might tell, As of old, I love ye well. Hark ! I sound my silver bell ; All my happy birds are singing From each throat

A merry note,
Welcome to my coming bringing?
When that happy time shall be,
From all pain and anguish free,
I shall join you, full of life and full of glee?

Then, thou fearful Stethoscope Thou dost seem thy lips to ope, Saying, " Bid farewell to hope I foretell thee days of gloom. I pronounce thy note of doom-Make thee ready for the tomb ! Cease thy weeping, fears avail not , Pray to God thy courage fail not He who knoweth no repenting, Sympathy or sad relenting, Will not heed thy sore lamenting-Death, who soon will be thy guide To his couch, will hold thee fast , As a lover at thy side Will be with you to the last, Longing for thy latest gasp, When within his iron grasp As his-bride he will thee clasp "

Shifts the scene. The earth is sleeping.
With her weary eyelids closed,
Hushed by darkness into slumber.
Whilst in burning ranks disposed,
High above, in countless number.
All the heavens in radiance sleeping,
Watch and ward
And loving guard.
O'er her rest the stars are keeping.

Often has the turret chime
Of the hasty flight of time
Warning utterance given.
And the stars are growing dim
On the gray horizon's rim,
In the dawning light of heaven.
But there sits, the Bear ont-uring
As if no repose requiring,
One pide youth, all unattending.
To the hour, with bright eye bending.
O'er the loved and honoured pages,
Where are wit the words of sages,
And the heroic deeds and and thoughts of far distant ages.

--- Blackwood.

(To be continued.)

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Elos, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will the sent post free.—Attificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBIRS, 10, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON

WEEKLYANA.

THE University of Gottingen admits ladies to its degrees as "special exceptions." But these exceptions are about to form the rule. The second of such admissions is that of Miss Maltby, an American, closely following the heels of Miss Chisholm, to the degree of doctor of philosophy with the distinction "cum laude" and a special commendation of her written work. There are now twenty women preparing at that University for their examinations.

THE Council of the Legion of Honour having refused to strike out the name of M. Effel, the French Chamber resolved upon a $B_{1,1}$ for the re-organization of the Council. The Council have since unanimously decided to resign.

THE first German expedition has started for the interior of Somaliland The object is to traverse the unexplored Somali and Galla countries, and then to reach the Indian Ocean near Mombasa. The caravan is composed of fifty native soldiers, fifty camel-drivers, ten servants, one hundred camels and six horses.

A STATEMENT by the French Minister of Marine shews that since 1891, fifty-seven vessels costing 94,791,000 frs. have disappeared from the Navy list, and are being replaced by fifty-eight ships which will cost 552,453,000 frs.

AT Christie's on Saturday, July 13, a portrait of Lady Mulgrave, by Gainsborough, realised 3,5000 guineas; a portrait of Loid Nelson, by Hoppner, 2,550 guineas; a sea view by Ruysdael, 4,200 guineas a Holy Family, by Murillo, 4,000 guineas; a portrait of Lady Reade, by Romney, 1,050 guineas; Mrs. Beresford, by the same artist, 1,650 guineas; a 'Canal View,' by Hobbema, 1,450 guineas; and a por trait of Maria Carleton, by Hoppner, 1,050 guineas.

ACCORDING to a recent report the number of women and guls returned as occupied out of every 1,000 in England and Wiles was 3405 in 1881 and 3442 in 1891, giving an increase of nearly four per thousand. In the United States the increase has been 7e markable. We give some examples:—

...

Women employ	ed as-		1870.	1890
Actresses			692	3,949
Aichitects			1	22
Artists and teachers	of art	•••	412	10,810
Authors, literary and s	cientific		. 4	10,010
			159	2,725
			67	1,235
Dentists		• • • •	24	337
Engineers and survey	115			127
Journalists			35	888
Lawyers			5	208
Musicians and teacher	s of mu	51C	5.753	34,518
Government officials	. Fed	eral.	5.7 55	34,3.0
State, and local.			414	4.875
Physicians and surgeo			527	4.555
Theatre managers, sho	wmen, &	kc	100	634
Book-keepers and acco	ountants	·	*	27.777
Clerks and copyists			8,016	64,048
Stenographers and typ	ewiiter	٠	7	21,185
17

In England there are no lady elergymen, nor dentists, nor Gov ernment officials.

LORD Rosebery contradicted the statement that he had created four new Peers in consideration of their having given 1,00,000/ to the war chest of the Radical Party at the recent election. His Secretary writes to a correspondent.

"Of the four Peers created the two wealthy ones were promised the Peerage by Mr. Gladstone in 1892, when Lord Rosebery had nothing to do with matters of that kind; and therefore they certainly do not receive the honour for coming to the assistance of the Liberal war chest on the present occasion. Of the other two Peers, who were recommended by Lord Rosebery on his own Separate responsibility, one is a distinguished servant of the Crown, but, as Lord Rosebery helieves, not a Liberal in politics; and the other is a Liberal in politics who has served in the Government, but who is certainly not in a position to give large contributions, if any, to party purposes."

"A LIBERAL, though a Unionist," "having written to the Duke of Devonshire, pointing out that certain recent proceedings appeared to indicate a premature endeavour to force the alliance into a fusion where the name of Liberal might be merged or lost, his Grace has replied as follows:

"I think that I may be best able to reply to your letter by referring you to the speech which I made on Inne 15 at the banque of the Mational Union of Conservative and Constitutional Associations, in which I entered rates fully into the question of the relations nerviced the Conservative and Lineard Unionist parties. It may be gathered from my observations on that occasion that while I perhaps attach less importance than is attributed by others to the distinction between allocated and fusion, I pointed out in the strongest terms that the avowed opinions of many of us prevented us from ever adopting the names of Conservative or Tory, with all the associations which attach to them. While the Home Rule question exists I would gladly see Unionists of all sections adopting that name in preference to any other designation, must continue to consist of Conservatives and of Liberal Unionists, Our independent existence has been recognised in the clearest manner in the formation of the prevent Givernment; the preparations for the general election in the Unionist interest have been made, and it is now being conducted, with complete harmony, by our independent existence has been recognised in the clearest manner in the formation of the prevent Givernment; the preparations for the general election in the Unionist interest have been made, and it is now being conducted, with complete harmony, by our independent organisations, and there is not, so far as I am aware, the slightest desire or opponents, to put an end to the existence of either of the independent parties whose close alliance has, up to the present time, been attended by such remarkable success."

OUR Monghyr (Jamalpur) correspondent writes .-

Preparations are making for the reception of the Lieutenant Governor, who is expected at Monghyr on the 11th.

Two natives of Behar are alleged to have been brutally murdered in Monghyr and Rampur, a village in Jamalpur, respectively. Two men are under arrest. Another suspicious death of a native is reported here. The dead body has been removed to the Monghyr Government Hospital for post mortem examination.

The local municipality is now devoting itself to the sanitary improvement of the native quarters. In Nowagong Boidyapara some filed houses have already been demolished, and lands having been acquired, a new wide road has been made, while others are in contemplation with additional improvements. It is also proposed to have water-works. It is intended to bore the foot of the hills forming the Eastern boundary of Janadpur till a perpetual spring is reached, whence the water will be conveyed through pipes to the town.

The Rhootta crop is abundant. The climate may be said to be pretty fair, notwithstanding some isolated cases of cholera.

MR. H. M. Kisch having been granted privilege leave for two months and thirty-days, Mr. W J. Hain, officiating Post Master General, Madras, will officiate as Post Master General, Bengal.

MORE than one attempt was made in Calcutta to tax bicycles, but failed. Madras is more advanced. We read that Dr. W. H. Wilson, Professor of Chemistry, Madias Presidency College, appealed to the Presidency Magistrates, Egmore, against the taxation of his bicycle by the municipality. The Court held that a bicycle is a vehicle with springs and taxable under the Municipal Act.

NOTES & LEADERETTES.

OUR OWN NEWS,

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS

~をいる気をなって

CHINA is again to the fore. Not as the receding Power before the advancing Japan, but for another bloody deed—the massacre of foreigners. A report reached Shanghai from Foochow of slaughter of Christians at Kuchang, including five foreign ladies. The next information from Foochow was that ten British subjects were killed at Kuchung, and that the houses of the foreigners were set fire to. The Rev. Mr. Stewart, his wife and child were burnt, and seven unmarried women were killed with swords. The American residents escaped. It was also runnoured that the victims were subjected to shocking atroctice. To add to the intipotation and horror caused throughout England against the Chinese, it is reported at Hongkong that further riots have taken place between Kuchung and Foochow. The sectaries of the Vegetarian Society set fire to the houses of the foreign residents. The remains of the Kuchung victims have the foreign colonists at Foochow, Hongkong, and Shanghai, demanding protection from their respective Governments and punishment of the murderers. Lord Salisbury next demanded from China a decree ordering the death of the culpres in the Kuchang massacre, and the fullest protection for missionaries; also that an escort be provided for the British Consul who is going to Kuchang to enquire into the massacre. A reply has been received from China assenting to the demands. The position of the Europeans at Foochow is regarded as critical, owing to the hostility shown to foreigners. The province of Fukien is in a state of rebellion. Several guilboats have been ordered to Foochow to protect the foreign

The latest advices from China state that the Chinese soldiers sent to protect the Mission at Kuchung broke into the place and plundered it.

Renter's correspondent at Hongkong telegraphs that an infuriated mob attacked, on Aug. 7, the British and American Missions at Fatshan, near Canton. Hospitals were demotished and other da mage was done. Some of the Missionaries saved themselves by flight. A Climese guiboat has been despitched to the scene to quell the disturbance and restore order. The anti-foreign agitators propose to destroy all the Missionaries to the treaty ports. The sectaries of the Vegetarian Society now number twelve thousand and are well armed and organised, and able to withstand the Chinese troops.

His Excellency Kung Tajen, Chinese Minister in London, had a protracted audience with Lord Salisbury on Thursday. A meeting of the Cabinet was held immediately after to discuss the Chinese massacies.

THE Porte's reply to the demands made by the ambassadors in regard to Arinenia is deemed unsatisfactory. It is stated that Sir Philip Currie, British Ambassador at Constantinople, has been instructed to demand the release of the unconvicted Armenian prisoners. Great Britism, jointly with the signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, demands the immediate appointment of a European Commissioner to administer the province of Armenia on behalf of the Sultan.

Heavy rains have fallen throughout Japan, causing serious floods and loss of life. The rice crops have been destroyed, and a famine 15 feared.

THE Emperor of Germany arrived at Cowes on Monday afternoon in his yacht, escorted by five men-of-war. The Emperor dined with the Queen at O-boine in the evening. He will remain at Cowes for a week for the yacht races, and will then go on a visit to Lord Lonsdale at his shooting-box in the North.

An interview took place, on the 5th, between the German Chancellor and Count Kalnoky, the Austrian Foreign Minister, at Aussee, when they discussed the foreign situation, particularly in regard to Bulgaria.

As previouly announced, Mr. Gladstone addressed a meeting at Chester in favour of Armenian reforms. He strongly denounced the Porte, whose denials and promises, he said, were valueless England must not fear the word "corercion" in dealing with Turkey. He could not do otherwise. The English press unanimously approve, it is said, of the language used by Mr. Gladstone. All England must now be up in arms against the unspeakable Turk!

THE rioting at Tabriz has been stopped, and quiet it stored.

REAR-ADMIRAL Rawson was to have sailed for Mombiss or the 8th. If the ultimation which he is instructed to present to the rebel chiefs of the Mynne tribe is disregarded after Mondey, a punitive expedition will go the Shimba range.

of the foreign residents. The remains of the Kuchung victims have FOUR British ironclads were to leave Gibratar on the 8th under sealed been buried at Foochow. Indignation meetings have been held by orders. It is believed that their destination is Morocco.

MR. Colin Campbell has been appointed Secretary to the Welby Commission on Indian expenditure in place of Mr. C. T. Ritchies resigned.

PRINCE Ferdinand is still absent from Bulgaria, where the situation is grave and complex, owing to the overthrow of all hope of a reconciliation with Russia under the present régime.

THE visit of the Afghan prince is drawing to a close. Colonel Talbot has been created a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. Mr. T. A. Martin, the Amir's Agent, has been knighted. Lord Salisbury wrote an autograph letter to Mr. Martin, informing him that Her Majesty the Queen would confer the honour of Knighthood upon him. Mr. Martin goes to Osborne on the 12th.

THE steamer Catterthun, bound from Sydney to Hongkong, has foundered on a rock. Sixty persons have been drowned, of whom forty-six are Chinese.

IT is stated that the object of the arrival at Tangier of the British and Spanish squadrons is to obtain Consulates at Fez. as France has already secured a similar concession.

THE Maharaja of Patiala has gone to Ootacamund, where he means to stay for a couple of mouths, with a large stud of thirty-five horses including some racers. A jockey himself, he has subscribed Rs. 1,000 to the Fund for a testimonial to Grace the BURMA is fast being quieted down. During the second quarter of 1895 the number of violent crimes was 168, of which 51 were dacoites, against 299 and 116 in the second quarter of 1894. In Upper Burma the number of dacoites fell from 22 to 6, and in the Lower from 94 to 45.

THE Rangoon Municipal Committee have adopted the report of their Water-works Sub-Committee recommending a loan of 35 lakhs for the new water-works and 20 lakhs for various sanitary improvements, and a tax of two per cent on commodities largely imported into Rangoon by sea, such as ghi, sugar, grain, pulse, tilseed, groundnut oil, and tobacco.

MR. Beatson Bell, the bête noire of the Bengalee, had a tussle with a beast of the forest which he killed. While holding court, he was informed of a strange visitor in the shape of a leopard near Manickgunge. The Magistrate of Dacca immediately ordered a gun and went for the beast followed by his faithful Chubrasi, Mr. Bell attacked the beast but it got the better of him-had him down and was mailing him when, finding his master in danger, the peon bravely came up and handed him another gun. This was the saving of both master and servant. The leopard now left its first prey and turned towards the new comer. This enabled the master to be on his legs again and shoot the beast dead before it could do any injury to the servant

THE amendment of the Civil Procedure Code has been followed up by a Notice of the Judges of the Bengal High Court, in which they order a General List of Commercial Causes separate from the General List of Causes and General List of Suits for Liquidated Claims. In fact, they had been awaiting the amendment to make special arrangements in the original side for commercial suits, that is, suits in which the claim auses out of the ordinary trainsactions of merchants and traders-such as relating to the construction of mercantile documents, exports or imports of merchandise, affreightment, insurance, banking and mercantile agency and mercantile usage. By and bye, the Court will have special Judges for such suits.

IT seems the Printer of the Calcutta Gazette is independent of the

-in any part of the Gazette. It is well, though, that he keeps himself unknown. The High Court notice which we have just mentioned requires more than one correction. It cannot be that Mr Belchambers is ignorant of the number and names of the Judges. We know Sir W. C. Petheram is the Chief Justice who heads the list of signatories to the order. But who is the second signatory signing himself H. T. Petheram? Messrs, Thacker, Spink and Co. had once transported Mr. Justice Ghose to the Campbell Medical School, The printer of the Gazette imports a new Judge in Mr. Justice C. N. Ghose. He also robs one of the Judges of one of his nominal alphabet, probably thinking it too much of a good thing, for the letter occurs many times.

SIR John Lambert having gone on leave and resigned his sent in the Bengal Legislative Council, the Police Commissioner's place in that assembly has been filled by the Police Magistrate Nawab Syud Ameer Hossem. Both are members of the same Order of the Indian Empire, and fast friends. Sir John has not found another native magistrate to his liking. This is the second legislative career of the Nawab Magistrate. He had been member of both the Local and Supreme Councils for more than one term. He is again selected for the Lower Chamber, with perhaps a prospective lift to the Upper. Khan Bahadoor Mahomed Yousoof was in a manner forced to the repetition of membership in the Bengal Council while he had been longing for the other place. These repeated, appointments of the same persons plainly shew that no other Mahomedan is worthy of a place in the Council presided over by Sir Charles Elliott. If that be the view of the next régime, the two Mahomedans already named will have perpetually to represent their brethren. Is there not another Mahomedan in Bengal who could do as well if not better? So much the worse for that community !

THE prosecution of Rai Isri Prasad was commenced in the Patna magis tracy on the 3rd September. Apprehending a foregone conclusion, an application was made by the Babu to the High Court, which transferred the case to the Court of the District Magistrate of Sarun. After a lengthened enquiry, that Magistrate, on the 6th June, directed him to execute a bond for Rs. 25,000 with two sureties for Rs. 12,500 each, to be of good behaviour for three years, in default to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment. The matter came up to the High Court again, on Thursday, the 6th August, when Justices Macpherson and Banerji, on the application of Mr. Hill, instructed by Messrs. Leslie and Sons, ordered a rule on the District Magistrate of Sarun to show cause why his order should not be set aside, in that it was based, to a great extent, on evidence which was legally madmissible and that if that evidence be excluded the remaining evidence would not support the order.

A RULE has also been issued by the same Judges in connection with the Budh-Gya temple case. Mr. Ghose argued for a long time and the Bench agreed to a rule on the Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of Jaipal and two others and sentence of Rs. 100 fine should not be set aside on the ground that the evidence disclosed no offence and that the agreement dated the 11th February, 1877, between the Secretary of the Government of Burma and the Mahant of Buuh Gya was misconstrued and nusunderstood.

While moving for the rule, Mr. Ghose tired to shew that the case was one for the Civil and not the Criminal Courts. The prosecution, represented by Mr. Dharampal, one of the Secretaries of the Mahabodhi Society of Calcuita which has been founded with the ostensible object of acquiring the Budh Gya temple for the Buddhists, had endeavoured to set up a new image of Buddha in the temple. The Mohant's people resented the trespass and opposed it as best they could. If the small knot of Buddhists who go by the name of Mahabodhi Society, wish to vindicate their rights to the temple, a civil and not a criminal case should be the proper form. A criminal forum, presided over by a Magistrate of Mr. Macpherson's calibre and frame of mind, cannot, by its sentence, terminate the real dispute. Mr. Ghose pointed out that, after the strong expressions of opinion in which the Magistrate had indulged, regarding Printing Press Act. His name does not appear-prominently or not the Mohant's rights over the temple, before Dharmpal had made his complaint, he should not have tried the case himself. The Mahabodhi Society have engaged able Counsel to show cruse against the rule, Whatever may be the decision of the High Court in the matter actually before it, there can be no doubt that the Civil Courts wid be altimately called up in to declare the rights of parties,

WE read in an English paper that "at the recent Commencement at Harvard, the honorary degree of LL. D. was conferred (in absentia) upon Dr. Fitzedward Hall," The honour for the great American in England comes from the American University late. But it is never too late to do a right thing, and we hope Dr. Hall will live long to enjoy the distinction from his own countrymen. Dr Hill has lived in England for twenty-six years and does not expect again to see his native country which he has not visited for twenty-one years.

In acknowledging receipt of Pundit Shambhu Chindra. Vidyaratna's Chartfamala, Di. Fitzedward Hall writes,-"It is a happy and patriotic idea, your commemorating the more noteworthy of your recent countrymen. Among them I notice, with gratification, several of my old personal friends. My respected teacher and coeditor, Bapudeva Sastel, with whom I enjoyed several years' intercourse, I am glad to see that you have biographized. In many respects he was a remarkable man. Emment as a scholar, he was likewise estimable in his private relations."

THE Doctor further writes,-" Of cheering omen for the future is the fact that Mr. Skrine has written the life of the Louented Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee. The appearance of the book, of which I have ordered a copy, I await with pleasure "

A STATEMENT in our notice last week of the annual meeting of the Science Association has been taken exception to. We said that Dr. Sircar had refused to incorporate the Temple of Science with the Science Association. We heed hardly explain that we spoke of Dr. Sircar as representing the Association, for he could not act on his own opinion in a mitter which was the concern of houself as of several others who formed the committee of management. Dr. Sircar himself had no objection to the amalgamation if the objects of both were the same. After a hot and acromomous discussion at a joint meeting of the Association and the League, presided over by the Governor Su Richard Temple, it was found, it is needless to say, that the two parties could not agree. We take the final results of that meeting from the proceedings of the Science Association

" His Honour then said that, after having heard both parties, he was clearly of opinion that the two funds could not be analyzinated, and, if the two parties could not contonic together, he must treat with them separately. After what he had heard that day from the speakers representing the different parties, he must give up all hope of a reconciliation.

The Res. K. M. Bauerjee proposed that, if the two parties could not combine, yet they could both work and treat each other as loving brethren. work under the same roof, separately,

His Honour then got up and said that he was certain that no amal-

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow-Bazar Street, Calcutta. (Session 1805-96.)

Lecture by Dr. Miliatan Sukir, MA, MD., on Monday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 8 P. M. Subjects: Practical Zoology-The Pigeon, Zoology

Lecture by Babu Rijendra Nith Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesdays the 14th Inst., at 7-30 PM. Subject. The Physical properties of Gas and the barometer.

Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, on Thursday, the 15th Inst., at 6 30 P.M., Subject: Magnetism; Fundamental Phenomena; Induction. Lecture by Bibn Rim Chandra Ditta, FCS, on Fridity, the 16th Inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Lead and Silver.

Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Sirkar, M.A., M.D., on Finday, the 16th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject: Chemical Physiology-Carbo-Hydrates.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

Mahendra Lai. Sircar, M.D.,

August 10, 1895.

Honorary Secretary.

gamation could take place, as at would only end in discussions, and interfere with the working of each. He took the sense of the meeting by asking for votes for separation and analysimation respectively, 32 hours were rused in favour of separation, and 5 in favour of on the unation."

REIS & R.LYYET.

Saturday, August 10, 1805.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

THE Liberal cause in England has gone down. The silent change in the opinion of the British electorate, regarding both Irish Home Rule and the Lords' House of Parliament, was not clearly discerned by either of the great parties. When the lower chamber was dissolved and the parties prepared for the contest that is just over, neither of them was aware of the measure of popularity which the Lords still enjoy in the country. Whatever the absurdity attaching to the idea of hereditary legislators, the British aristociacy stands on a footing entirely different from that in which the aristocracies of ancient Rome and Greece, or of many modern countries, stand. In Britain, only the eldest son of a peer succeeds to the privileges of the peerage. The other children are all commonners. On the failure of heirs, these are often called to the peerage. Success also in the learned professions and the public service frequently leads to recruitment of the peerage from the commonalty. Thurlows's boast of the peerage having sought him instead of his having sought it, rightly considered, would furnish the British peerage also with ground for boast, for it showed how free that peerage is from anything like narrowness in its constitution. Burke pointed out, in one of his unrivalled orations on the American war, that the history of Britain differed materially from the histories of Rome and Greece. In the latter, an incessant struggle was carried on between the two orders of people till an equality was brought about of political privileges. Social distinctions continued, but these were independent of political rights and were entirely founded on wealth, knowledge, and superior civilisation. In the British Isles there has been no struggle between the aristociacy and the common alty for the equalisation of the rights of citizenship. The domestic history of England, in particular, has been the history of the imposition of taxes. The ablest pens and the most eloquent tongues have jointly discussed this subject of taxation, and the whole nation, with a courage that cannot fail to be admired, have fought for reducing to practice the conclusions to which those speculation; have led The cause has been handed down from bleeding sire to son. Peers have combatted, side by side with the people, in the forum and the field, on behalf of those principles. There was a peer among the obnoxious members of the lower chamber who i Charles I wished to arrest in their places; and among those that objected to ship money, there was a peer who like Hampden had asked the tax-collecto to call again. Voltaire, in his serio-comic characterisation of English history, missed or omitted notice, this glorious feature. His remark the is the province of the hospitan to write the hist of the island, considering and that persona, the finally determined all affairs of moment made to letestation of the bloods! I acought about to a struggles of parties in that country whose policies have been as tempestuous, as the seas that was its shores. At the same time, however, the measure of not stinted. "Who would have imagined," he said, "that from this horrible abyss, this chaos of dissension, cruelty, ignorance, and fanaticism, a Government should at last spring up, the most perfect, it may be said, now in the world? Yet such has been the event. A sovereign honoured and wealthy, all powerful to do good, without any power to do evil, is at the head of a free, warlike, commercial, and enlightened nation. The nobles on the one hand, and the representatives of the people on the other, share the egislature with the monarch."

The noble fabric of the British constitution has been slowly raised by the exertions as much of the aristocracy as of the people. In the struggles for curbing the arbitrary propensities of the Crown, for establishing the fundamental maxim of the British Government that the subjects are not to be taxed without their own consent expressed through their representatives, the peers have not stood aloof from the people. Such being the attitude of the British peerage, and such its constitution, the day of its fall is yet distant. The appeal to the country in 1895 has resulted in an unmistakable declaration that the House of Lords is to continue with unabated privileges. That the Liberals should have committed so great a blunder as to mistake the voice of a few advanced Radicals for the voice of the British people, is viewed with surprise by everybody The Liberal Unionists have cast their lot with the Conservatives. Danger to the Union and the threat levelled at the upper chamber of the legislature have combined interests that could not, under ordinary circumstances, be combined. It is useless to indulge in forecasts about the manner in which the new Conservative Premier will guide the vessel of State. The Liberals are taunting the Unionists with having abandoned their principles for sharing power with the opponents of progress. Some are predicting the speedy fall of a ministry consisting, as they say, of "all the talents," for except the two great questions about the union and the Lords, the Duke of Devonshire and his party will find it impossible to support measures dictated by purely Conservative principles. But coalitions of opposite interests have not always proved ephemeral. There are many questions appertaining to the border land of both Liberalism and Conservatism in which Lord Salisbury may fairly count upon the support of his new allies. Nor is the Conservatism of the present day actually so narrow and fraught with stolid prejudice as to be altogether hateful to moderate Liberals. The section of the Liberal camp led by Lord Roseberry is essentially Radical Politics have compromise for its essence. The Conservative Premier knows the value of compromise. All things considered, the political atmosphere of England does not show any sign from which it would be safe to predict a short life to the new ministry or a speedy return of the Radicals to power with their declared programme of Home Rule and abolition of the House of Lords.

So far as India is concerned, this great dependency of the British Crown has in the past reaped greater benefits from Conservative than from Liberal administrations. The Queen's Proclamation, viewed was to be imposed at the instance of local bodies as the solemn charter of India's rights, was the within limited areas for drainage works, and when Mysore to its old Hindu rulers was a Conservative measure. The restoration of Gwalior too was the gracious act of a Conservative Cabinet. It He thought it was a misnomer to call it anything is true that Lord Lytton's gagging Act could else."

praise he accorded to the English constitution is never have been passed but for the improbability of a veto by a Conservative Secretary of State, and that we owe the repeal of the Act to the influence of Liberals. The sister Arms Act also has been due to Conservative reaction. But was not the Vernacular Press law supported by Indian members of Lord Lytton's Legislative Council? As regards the Arms Act also, notwithstanding its repeated condemnation by Mr. Gladstone, was it not retained untouched by his party? It is only as regards Manchester agitation that India truly stands in dread of a Conservative Ministry. But considering the absolute need there is of the duties on cotton for enabling the Indian Finance minister to make the two ends meet, the danger, after all, may not be real. At any rate, India is capable of being sacrificed to the exigencies of party struggle as readily by Liberals as by Conservatives.

THE SANITARY DRAINAGE BILL.

THE TEN PER CENT. ARGUMENT.

At the last sitting of the Bengal Council, after a strong opposition, the Bengal Sanitary Drainage Bill was passed. Mr. R. C. Dutt attempted to meet the objection of the Zemindars that the financial clauses involved a breach of the Permanent Settlement. The view of the Zemindars is well known. Anything exacted over and above the revenue payable under their solemn contracts with the State, call it cess, rate, or tax, involves an infringement of the settlement. The question was thoroughly sifted on the occasion of the imposition of the Road Cess. The then Secretary of State for India, without arguing the matter, authoritatively declared that the terms of the settlement did not exclude such local cesses. It cannot be expected that in a question of this kind, where one of the parties to the contract takes it upon himself to decide its meaning, the other party will silently acquiesce. Government willingly neglected the chance of silencing controversy by refusing to submit the question to the arbitrament of the Judges of either the Bengal High Court or Her Majesty's Privy Council. Every time the question has come up, the the dixit of officials and their solid votes in the Council chambers have settled it. So far as the sanitary cess is concerned, Mr. R. C. Dutt's attempt, therefore, to meet the contention of the Zemindars by argument deserves every praise. It is true Mr. Dutt gives credit to his colleague, Mr. Risley, for having completely disposed of the objection of the Zemindars. But Mr. Risley's essay is not distinguished for anything new. There has been much special pleading, mixed as usual with assumptions. Leaving Mr. Risley for the present, we will notice a point or two of Mr. Dutt's The daily papers report that "he denied that this was a violation of the Permanent Settlement. It could not be called a cess in the same sense as the Road Cess. It was not permanent; it was not imposed upon the whole province, or the whole of any district, and it was not intended to be permanent. It was a rate which

To describe the rate as a voluntary contribution is only a specious sophism. The Commons' House of Parliament grants subsidies to the English Sovereign. Those subsidies are met by the people whom the House represents. In paying their dues, therefore, to the State, the people of England are said to make voluntary payments. It is true that the pockets of the English people cannot be touched unless they themselves give their consent through their representatives. But do the District Boards of Bengal at all stand to the people in the relation of representatives and represented? We wish it were so. Many long years will have to roll away be-fore these Boards will be truly representative bodies. The temporary character of the rate for a particular purpose has scarcely any value as an argument. If it means anything, it means that those who have the power of breaking the settlement do not break it for the whole province and for all time to come. They break it in only particular parts of districts and break it for temporary periods. Breakers of a solemn promise they are, but not to the extent contended for by the Zemindars. Mr. Dutt's answer to the objection that the financial clauses affect only the class interested in land to the exclusion of the general community, has no originality. It is based on the principle which Sir William Hunter, the statistician-general of the Government of India, first brought into fashion. "It was said," we quote Mr. Dutt's speech, "that it was inequitable because it fell upon the landed classes. To that proposition he begged to demur. As had been pointed out, the classes terested in land amounted to 80 per cent, of the whole population, and if they excluded the lower classes interested in agriculture it would come up to something like 90 per cent. The remaining 10 per cent. or probably a good proportion of them, were unable to pay any taxes at all, so that by imposing a rate upon people connected with agriculture they imposed a rate practically upon the whole population benefited by the schemes contemplated under the Bill." There, we have the thing cut and dry. The landed classes amount to 80 per cent. of the total populaion. Excluding the lower classes, the figure would come up to 90 per cent. That is almost the whole community, for in matters of this kind who would stop to consider such a trivial exclusion as 10 per cent, of the population? Legislation based upon such statistics is extremely dangerous. The Income Tax is levied upon the general community. Unbearable and objectionable as the tax is, it would become ten times so if a portion of the com-munity were exempted from it. If the exemption be extended to even 5 per cent, of assessible incomes, the rest of the community will regard the imposition as tyrannous. When the clause in the Bengal Rent Act regarding occupancy rights was under discussion in the Supreme Council, it was argued on Schalf of the Zemindars that the principle involved in the change effected by the law, was dangerous. A valuable right was conferred on a class of tenauts. By so much was the Zemindar's interest in the land limited. And yet it was proposed to confer that right without the persons who would acquire it doing anything. Payment of rent was directed to be evidenced by printed receipts. The withholding of such receipts was made penal. The cultivating rayyet was not even to produce his receipts for twelve years to prove possession for that period. If only he reasoning; Buddhi is the faculty above the ratiocinating mind,

reasoning; Buddhi is the faculty above the ratiocinating mind, or The Bbagavad Gitá or the Lord's Song tronslated by Annis/

Besant, London: Theosophical Publishing Society.

touched the land once with the plough, the presumption would immediately arise of his possesssing the land for twelve years. Never before was a valuable right bestowed on any class of the people on such easy terms. Nothing was to be done for winning the right. The difficulty was pointed out that lay in the path of the Zemindars in rebutting the presumption. Auction-purchasers in particular, who have not a scrap of paper in their hands, would be absolutely helpless. As against them every rayyet would succeed in acquiring the right of occupancy. These objections were met by the statement that auction-purchasers represented only 5 per cent. of the Zemin-dars of Bengal! Sir William Hunter, therefore, urged that the difficulties of such a small class of landed proprietors should not at all be considered. The clause was adopted. The retort that Sir William invited, although it was never made, is that those who suffer from the action of thieves represent a very small fraction of the community. What need, then, of a largely paid Police and an elaborate criminal justiciary for preventing thieving?

THE LORD'S SONG.

Mrs. Annie Besant has given the world a new translation of the Rhagavad-Gitd, or, as she renders it, The Lord's Song, consisting of 168 pages in all, including the title page, dedication, and preface. It is published by the Theosophical Publishing Society of London, with its branches at Benares and Madras. Printed by Women's Printing Society, the get up is excellent. The version is certainly classical. It preserves the spirit of the original to a greater extent than many translations by English scholars. The terseness of Sanskrit has also been maintained. This, however, has told in many places on perspicuity. Mrs. Annie Besant is not free from the highly amusing spirit of selfreliance which Western scholars often display when they reject the authority of Sreedhara or Sankar or Madhusudan, not on questions of doctrine but on the meanings of Sanskrit words. With them the Petersberg Dictionary is a work of greater authority than the scholia or commentaries of Indian giants of learning, on matters connected with the etymology or syntax of Sanskrit words and sentences.

Mrs. Besant is undoubtedly a woman of genius. She possesses a highly facile tongue and a pen hardly less so. The booklet is dedicated to "All Aspirints in East and West." "Aspirants" is, of course, a theosophical technicality. It probably means all those individuals, of both sexes, in Asia, Africa, Europe, and America, who believe in "Mahatmas," or expect to see them (if they have not already done so), and who hope to be like them either in their present birth or at some regenerations near or remote. We beg to be pardoned by Theosophists if we explain the word wrongly. Undefined as Theosophy is, most of its technical terms are also undefined. Under the circumstances, they cannot complain if they are sometimes misunderstood by the world outside the pale of Theorophy. The preface is well written and shows that Mis. Annie Besant has in a great measure understood the material doctrines of the Guá. Her explanations of the terms Manas and Buddbi, however, are not quite correct. These words, it is said in the preface, do not require to be explained for the Theosophical readers. It is only for the uninitiated that the explanations have been vouchsafed. "Manas," she says, "means Mind, both in the lower mental processes in which it is swayed by the senses, by passions and emotious, and in the higher processes of reasoning; Buddhi is the faculty above the ratiocinating mind, and is the Pure Reason, exercising the discriminative faculty of Intuition, of spiritual discernment." We have here the language of all schools of philosophy. At first it is explained that Buddhi is a faculty; it is then said that that faculty is above the ratiocinating mind; then comes the identification of the faculty of Buddhi with Pure Reason; and lastly, it is said that the faculty of Buddhi exercises the discriminating faculty of Intution. A faculty exercising another faculty can scarcely be intelligible to non-Theosophical readers. This, however, is not all. Manas does not imply the higher processes of ratiocination. Manas is frequently counted among the senses. "Manah shishthau indriyani" occurs, very frequently in Sanskrit literature. Buddhi is the faculty of ratiocination. Manas is the servitor of Buddhi even as the senses are the servitors of Manas. Buddhi is commonly described as "nicebayátmiká," meaning that it discriminates and leads to certitude of knowledge. Discrimination or certitude of knowledge must depend upon ratiocination. Then, again, what is meant by "the discriminative faculty of Intuition?" The capital Idoes not help us much in the connection. Intuition, as ordinarily employed, means knowledge independent of ratiocination. It is not the province of Intuition to discriminate. It seizes ideas at once,---ideas whose truth is afterwards sought to be established by ratiocination. We are not aware of the word Intuition having been used in the sense of the discriminating faculty. At any rate, Buddhi, as used in the Gira, implies the ratiocinative faculty which derives the materials upon which it works from Manas.

Theosophists are always for mysterious interpretations of common things. We are, therefore, not at all surprised at Mrs. Annie Besant's endeavour to find out the esotetic signification of the Gita. The passage is characteristic. We present it to the reader without mutilation :

"Such is the obvious teaching of this sacred book. But as all the acts of an Avatara are symbolical, we may pass from the outer to the inner planes, and see in the field of Kurukshetra the battle-field of the Soul, and in the sons of Druarashtra enemies it meets in its progress; Arjuna becomes the type of the struggling Soul of the disciple, and Shri Krishna is the Logos of the Soul. Thus the teaching of the ancient battle-field gives guidance in all later days, and trains the aspiring Soul treading the steep and thorny Path that leads to Peace. To all such Souls in East and West come these Divine lessons, for the Path is one, though it has many names, and all Souls seek the same goal, though they may not realise their unity."

We thought that the idea of Emincipation worked out in the Gita, not to say anything of the doctrines of rebirth and the bonds of action, of the practice of penances for making oneself independent of "pairs of opposites," the capacity of well fought battles to lead the slain to heaven, and the obligation of duly discharging the duties of caste, is essentially Indian. It seems that it is not so. "Aspiring Souls," we are told, in the East and the West, realise the same ideas.

In several places of the translation we have marked "conches' , as the plural of " conch." All the lexicons we have consulted give conchs as the plural form. We suppose the native gentlemen who eexaminal the proofs, mispronouncing the word, pluralised it by instead of a. Some errors of rendering may be noticed and there. The well-known verse 5 of Lesson II, is thus translate ' ; -

"Bester to eat in this world even the beggar's crust that to slay Mera Gurus, high minded. Slaying these Gurus, well wishers. I should to a blood-besprinkled feasts."

In the second line of the verse occurs the adjective arthakam a The commentation Sreedhara first takes it as equivalent to " arthaka matmakan" and as qualifying "bhogan." Then follows the remark, introduced by "yadva," that it qualifies "Gurun." It is, pretations given by a commentator represents his own mature view. "Artha-kaman," therefore, should, according to this great and universally venerated scholiast, be taken as an adjective of " Gurun." There is a contrast in the verse, shown very beautifully. At first Aijuna says that it would be better to eat the teggar's crust than slay those bigh-minded Gurus, Bhishma and Drona. Next, he remarks that even if those Gurus be taken as "arthikaman," that is, as stained by cupidity, even then they should not be slain. Among the host of commentators nobody has ever suggested that "arthakaman" is capable of being taken as implying "well-wishers." Indeed, the error is so gross that the variest tyro in Sanskrit would not commit it. Mrs, Annie Beasant, however, makes light of all the commentators and, on her own authority, renders the word as equivalent to "well wishers." Here is how she disposes of such vermin as Sreedhara and Sankara and Madhusudana: "More often translated, greedy of wealth," but the word is used elsewhere for well-wisher, and the term is move in accordance with the tone of Arjuna's remsrk." "Arthakaman" used elsewhere for "well-wishers!" W. e e, pray? The fact is, Theosophists by Intuition, know more than other people.

TEACHING OF SCIENCE IN INDIA.

SPEECH BY SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT.

At the annual meeting of the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science Sir Charles Elliott, the President, said :

I look back with pleasure to the time, in the year 1891, when I first attended as President and addressed the annual meeting of this Association. I now address it in the last year of my Lieutenant-Governorship, and it is a satisfaction to hear what your Secretary, Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, has been able to announce to you regarding the progress which the Association has made beginning from its origin, twenty years ago, when the idea first came into his head of starting the Association and carrying it on, to more recent times, when Lord Ripon and afterwards Lord Lansdowne were patrons of the Association, down to the present day. During the last three years I find from the reports of the annual meeting that Di. Mahendra Lal Sircar has addressed you every year, and has chiefly dwelt on two points, and these two points he has again impressed upon us in the present year. The first of these leading subjects of his arguments was the importance of creating and pro-curing more funds with the object of ensuring the establishment of a paid staff of lecturers to carry on the work of this Association. fully agree with him that you can never expect that the services of honorary lecturers will be available for long series of years with the same energy and the same intellectual freshness which von may expect to receive from paid lecturers. Honorary lecturers will carry in the work for a time with ability and enthusiasm, but, after the first cuthusiasm is worn out, cannot in the ordinary course of things toil on in the same hearty manner, and the work will languish. is not fair to lay such a great strain upon their time and energy, and you must expect that the teaching will fall off unless it is kept up by the stimulus of salaries. I hope that the appeal that your Secretary has made may reach the ears of those who are interested we have heard this evening the names of those who have bestowed from then abundance and their liberality large sums upon this institution and have materially helped to increase its sphere of usefulbenefactors of the public, and especially of the youth of this country, and I rejoice to see some of them sitting round me here in this hall. I rejoice also to think that others who are far off, like the Maharaja of Kuch Behar and the Maharaja of Vizianagram, will read the report of this Association, and feel that the gratitude of the rising generation of Bengal is theirs; and this will be sufficient recompense to them for the generosity which they have shown. The other point which the Doctor has so frequently tried to impress upon you, and which I agree in, is that it is impossible to expect that the youth of this country will, to any great extent, take up the study of science for its own sake without the expectation of a remuleit true return, other immediate or prospective. Some provise a must be made in order to enable them to live by the art which they profess. In the year 1892 the Dector said that it was necessary not only that we should remanerate the teachers, but that we should also enco rage the boys and provide for them from a preunary point of view. In the years 1893-94 he made similar remarks--that the young men mit be convinced of the material advantages to be derived from the study of science before they will We have just heard in the address dovote their tine to its pursuit. of course well known in this country that the last of two inter- delivered to-day a similar sentiment expressed as tersely and as strongly as before. Now these views are entirely shared in by the Government, and I wish, as this is the last occasion on which I shall address you, to point out to you how much the Government of Bengal has done during my tenure of office to encourage the study of science, and how much I have been privileged to assist in this movement, and how far I have been able to carry out those views which Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar has so wisely and so strongly impressed upon myself and upon you.

But before I turn directly to that subject, I will say one word with regard to the appeal which he made just now on the subject of the assistance which the Government should give to this instituof the assistance which the Government should give to this institu-tion, and his request that an arrangement might be made by which a certificate given by this institution of satisfactory progress and advancement in the study of science should cause a certain amount of preference to be given to candidates for Government employ-ment requiring a knowledge of science, over other candidates who were students of other institutions. Now what I must say to you on this subject is, that Government looks upon science as a whole, and not as connected solely with this Association. The chief object to which I have tried to direct my endeavours has been to create elsewhere similar opportunities and similar means of obtaining advancement in science to the opportunities and means which are presented here. It would be impossible for the Government to put aside those who were trained in its own institutions and say that it will give preserence to those of this institution. All that it can do is to give preference to those who have followed a full course of study in science, regardless of the place where they studied and the institution to which they belonged. The object, I believe, of this institution is to supply means of education in science to those not attached to schools and colleges, or who belong to schools and colleges which do not possess a laboratory, or the needful instrucolleges which do not possess a isooratory, of the needful instru-ments, or sufficient machinery, or the requirements and equipments necessary for the pursuing of these studies. We have all these things at some of our Government institutions, and further, we do all we can to increase and improve the scientific apparatus of those schools and colleges, and we cannot put the students of this Association on a different level from those of our own instantions.

Now with regard to the work which the Government has done during the last four or five years, I will take it under the different heads of the institutions which are supported by Government.

First and foremost is the great Presidency College, not far from this place. We have built a laboratory there at a cost of a lakh and-a-half of rupces, which is fitted up with amost everything that a laboratory requires, and with every requirement and equipment which is necessary to put the students of physical science at this institution on a level with those trained in the best-equipped laboratory in any part of the world. The effect of what has been done in this direction is to be seen from the numbers of those who have passed out in recent years having taken up the B. Course. The number of students who passed the B.A. in the second or B. number of students who passed the B.A. in the second or B. Course in 1892-93 was 37, in 1893-94 it increased to 65, and in the last year, 1894-95, it rose to 84. Of those who took the M.A. degree in science there were five in 1892-93, twelve in 1823-94, and fifteen in 1894-95. Therefore I think we are able to assert that we have not only supplied a means, but we have also met a demand, and that the means that we have created has been taken advantage of by those who wish to follow these studies.

Recently we have opened a Geological course in the Presidency College, and one young man took his M. A. degree in Geology, College, and one young man took his M. A. degree in Geology, being the first, or perhaps the second, who has taken that degree since the University was formed. And now comes in the case which Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar has given, in which he asks what is that young man to do with the geological knowledge which he has acquired? It is extremely difficult at present for a geologist to find employment of a suitable kind, but the Government of Bengal has made an application to the Government of India to make a temporary appointment for him in the Geological Department and see what he knows and can do. If it turns out that he has merely learned the books and the formulæ for the sake of taking the degree, and that he has no capacity for comparing and observing things, and shows little intention or inclination to carry on his studies, the Government do grant my request, the young man's probation will not last very long. But on the other hand, if he puts his mind to his work, and desires opportunities to travel about to make himself acquainted and familiar with the formation of the moun-tains and the mineral wealth of the country, then there is a vast field before him for useful and remunerative work in the prosecution of such enquiries.

I turn next to the Sibpur College for Engineering. That institurin next to the Sippur College for Engineering. I hat insti-tution, as you all know, has been very largely developed and trans-formed during the last few years. We have decided after much discussion to give up the old system of carrying on the work shops as a remunerative business belonging to the Public Works Departas a remunerative ousness octoning to the runte works Depart-ment, and allowing our boys only to attend there to see how the paid artisans were working to carry out some portions of the rougher parts of the work under their directions. We have now separated the workshops into two parts, and the workshops attached to the College are entirely distinct from the workshops under the P. W.

D. Of course there are a few instructors, but there are no paid workmen; the whole of the work has to be done by the boys who are being trained there in these classes, as engineers, apprentices, an i artisans. They are making a new laboratory, and all the desks furniture, and appliances are being made by the boys themselves: and thus the starting of these workshops has been a practical schooling of the greatest value to them, and they turn out machines of considerable excellence. I saw the other day a lathe which was said to be worth in the muket about Rs. 500, but the raw material of which cost only Rs. 80, the labour being entirely sup-plied by the boys. These machines are used in the College itself, and when these workshops are completely fitted out they will be and when these workshops are completely fitted out they will be able to supply all the industrial schools in the country. The number of these schools is rapidly increasing, and they have all been affiliated to the Sibpur College. The result of that affiliation is that they are inspected by the Principal, and when the boys have completed the course in these industrial schools they come on to the Sibpur College with or without scholarships, and are admitted if they can procedure.

the slipur Collège with or without scholarships, and are admitted if they can pass the examination even in the second year so as to give them a fair start to carry on their training.

Further, we have alranged to start a mining class in the Sibpur Collège, and, as you know, mining is an industry which is just beginning to open out a vista of varied and remunerative employment in this country. I am sorry to say that our offer in promising to start this mining class has not as yet been sufficiently met. It was decided that we should admit to this class only boys who had abeliance that we should admit to this class only only who had taken an engineering degree; but as vet we have not got a single application from any Bachelors of Engineering. These classes have been kept open a second year, and I hope that after the next examination of the B. E. degree, which will soon take place, or perhaps has recently been held, we will get boys to attend this class. If no Engineers offer themselves we shall then throw the classes open to the apprentices, and future engineers will not thank their predecessors for having lost this opportunity. Two valuable scholarships have been instituted, and will be given it suitable can didates appear. The theoretical instruction will last for one year, and after that there will be a year of practical training in the mines. We have arranged with several mines to enable the boys taken to pay a premium of Rs. 500, which is required for each boy who is received as an apprentice in the mines. Thus you will see that the Government has for some time been doing what Dr. Mahendra [a] Step recommend and its present plain over. Mahendra Lal Sircar recommends, and is at present doing everything not merely to supply knowledge, but to supply a course of life which will give remunerative employment to those who follow this course of study.

Another important matter we have in hand in connection with Another important matter we have in name in connection with the Sibpur College is the introduction of electrical teaching. We are going to start an installation of electrical lighting for the College and workshops, and the putting up of those works, and seeing how they are carried on will of itself be a useful education for the boys. We also intend to have a class of students in electrical science, and the plant which is required for this purpose is estimated to cost £400. In order to utilise the knowledge thus gained we have 400. In order to utilise the knowledge thus gained we have applied to the Government of India to guarantee one appointment in the Telegraph Department every alternate year to a qualified student who passes creditably through the course at the Sibpur College. You will see from what I have said, that in making these recommendations and creating these openings for the study of practical science Government has been going to a considerable ex-pense, and I have no doubt that we shall find this expense is well returned to us and to the country at large by the benefits which will be conferred on the boys who take proper advantage of the training which it is open to them to receive.

I turn next to the School of Art. This institution has recently been rebuilt at a cost of a lakh and a half of rupces. We have also fitted up the art gallery at the cost of Rs. 18,000, and spent Rs. 10,000 on pictures to be added to the collection already exist-The Art School has been taken from its unsuitable quarters at the end of this street, and the boys are now put into the lighted, arry, and palatial quarters in Chowringhee. It was at first thought that though the new building situated in Chowringhee would be pleasant and convenient to the teachers, it would not be so suitable to the boys, but I am glad to find that this has not turned out to be so, the attendance having risen from 198 in 1892-93 to nearly 300 in 1894-95. The number is constantly increasing, and before long the school will have to impose a certain degree of closure and not admit every one who offers himself. Several of these students obtain remunerative employment in the Survey Department and the Botanical Gurden, and a number of private firms and companies employ them for engravings on wood, lithography, drawing, etc. If you wish to see a full account of what these do, you must turn to Sir Alfred Croft's annual report on Education for the year 1893-94, in which he goes into the matter at great length.

I had little difficulty in defending this school against an attack that was made upon it from England. To my great surprise one day we received a despatch in which it was said that all the schools of art in India were believed to be expensive and useless failures. The Hon. Mr. Buckland wrote a reply which completely vindicated the Indian schools of art from the reflection cast upon them, and I can say from my personal knowledge that it was not true also either of the Calcutta or the Lahore School of Art. not forget to mention another source of employment which is open to the boys who go through the school of art, viz., the large number of posts of drawing masters which are being created by Govern-ment. We have extended drawing to most of the Government zillah or high schools, and to all the training schools. And every one who wishes to take service as a teacher in the vernacular schools must know drawing. Unless he has obtained a certificate in it he will not be qualified to obtain employment in the middle or primary school. In this way we have employed from 50 to 60 young men as drawing masters in these schools, and the knowledge of this subject is getting more and more important. I trust that the time will come when the example set in the primary schools of the Central Provinces will be followed here, and that drawing will become an essential in every school. This teaching is generally allowed to be most beneficial in training little boys to observe what they are looking at and to distinguish one animal from another, one tree from another, and so on. I look upon the School of Art as the great source from which education of this kind will be spread over the whole country.

will now only briefly mention the Medical College, which does so much for teaching our young men who go out from there as assistant surgeons, the rudiments of medical science, and supplies them with the means of getting lucrative practice. We are reto Bengal I have felt that this is a crying want. As now existing, it is not a place where boys should be collected in large numbers: there is not enough space, or light, or air: it is not even sanitary, there is not enough space, or light, or air: it is not even sanitary, and it makes the work for the masters and the boys most difficult to carry on. I have devoted one lakh of rupees for the rebuilding of one section only, the anatomical section of the college, and I hope my successors will go on with the work and improve the chemical and other sections and give sufficient space, light, and air to all who intend to follow the medical profession. I will also mention the fact that we are now building a new laboratory for the Dacca College at a cost of Rs. 40,000, and for the Cuttack College at a cost of Rs. 15,000, out of which I am glad to announce that Rs. 10,000 was given by the Maharaja of Mourbhunj, who studied in the College and who gives this money as testimony of the gratitude that he feels for the education which he received there. I regret to see that the prize which I myself have founded for the promotion of original research has up to now not been as successful as might have been expected or hoped. But there is no reason for despairing, and I hope a boy bred up in this Association will yet be able to carry it off by applying the rudiments of knowledge acquired here to the prosecution of research in some useful and practical question after he has ceased his studies.

The only thing that I wish to say in addition to the statistical facts I have given is a matter in which I have to some extent been anticipated by the Secretary. I had intended to draw your attention to the remarkble comparison which may be made between the success of the Japanese and the defeat of the Chinese in the recent war. Dr. Sircar has already touched on this comparison, and I will not dwell upon that very much because it is so obvious. will not dwent about that country in compatison with Seemed to every one a very small country in compatison with China and so late as four or five years ago it would not have been placed on the same level with China. Only a few years ago, a learned gentleman, Mr. Pearson, wrote a book in which he said that the Chinese were the coming race, and that they would overrun the world. It so happened that when I was last in England I met Mr. Pearson and told him: "With great deference to your views, I think you are wrong. I believe that China is not the coming race but the receding race. There was not the slightest hope for China unless she looked facts in the face and devoted herself to the study of science rather than the study of licerature, and rendered all the branches of her Administration more honest and more efficient." If I may say so, China follows the A course and Japan the B course. (Laughter and cheers.) The education of China is entirely literary: they do not apply their knowledge to any practical purpose; while, on the contrary, the education of Japan has given itself entirely to practical purposes. These practical purposes are very largely military purposes. From a hupractical purposes are very largely military purposes. From a numanitation point of view it is a matter of regret that they are so largely military; but it is chiefly owing to this that the has beaten her formulable tival and raised herself to a high position of respect, not of 'y in the eyes of the Chinese, but of all European nations also.

G e further remark and I have done. I will only mention the plague at Hongkong, of which you hav heard and which we were so muc' aimed lest it should be imported here, that for the first so muc farmed lest it shound be imported here, that for the first time in the listory of Calcutta I had to put on a quarantine in the Hug'll. Who was it that discovered the origin of that discase, the bacillus by which it was caused? Not an English savant nor a German, but a Japanese doctor——a scientific man, who, so to speak, had gone through the Japanese B course. Now, why is it that while we are here living smong bacilli, in the very home of bacteria, no Indian student has helped us to discover the bacteria of some of the hateful diseases that devastate the population, and ruin the happiness of so many homes? Why should we have to turn to Dr. Koch, Dr. Haffkine, or Dr. Cunningham to throw light on the origin of cholera or of malarial fever? I trust that some of you boys will be able to wipe away that reproach in the near future, and that you will set your minds to make discoveries which will save the population from the diseases which prey on it.

If anything of this kind comes out of this institution, if any of the boys trained here should afterwards be shown to have done such work as this, all I can say is that that will be the best reward that can possibly be given to those who have been such good and true friends to you as Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, Father Lafont, and other honorary lecturers and supporters of this Association. (Loud and continued applause.)

ONLY FOUR TO MAN THE PUMPS.

DEAR, dear ! When you come to think of it how closely related things are; how one thing brings up another. Ideas are like a lot of beads

ARK, uear 1 when you come to think of it how closely felated things are; how one thing brings up another. I deas are like a lot of beads on a string, aren't they?

A letter I have just been reading makes me remember what happened to me one winter about twenty years ago. The story is too long to tell here, so Pil merely give you the tail end of it. I was supercargo on a bark bound from London to Rio. A tremendous gale, lasting five days, wrecked us. Forty eight hours after it ceased there were four men and no more left on the vessel. The captain had been killed by a falling spart, three of the crew washed overboard, and the rest of the ship's company (save us four) went away in the long boat with the first and second mates. We were taking in water through a leak at the rate of six inches an hour. Working with all our might the four of us could pump that out in forty minutes, but we must do it every hour. It was awful work. For two days we kept it up, without sleep. Then we stopped, took to the quarter boat and shoved off. The sea was quiet—no wind. While we lay to within a mile of her the ship threw up her nose and went down stern first. We were picked up the next day by a Dauish big.

day by a Danish brig.

Now the odd thing is that the letter which reminded me of that exerience has nothing whatever to say about ships. Please help me to perience has nothing whatever to say about ships. Please help me to find out the association.

The lady who writes the letter says that in July, 1881, she got a bad fright. Exactly what it was she doesn't tell. I wish she did. Anyway it so upset her that she didn't get over the effects of it for nine years. After that her appetite fell off; she lost all real relish for food, and what she did eat only made trouble instead of nourishing her. It gave her p in in the pit of the stomach and (curiously enough) between the showlders. She says her eyes and skin presently turned yellow as a butter up. Her face and abdomen swelled, and her feet the same, the latter so much so that she was obliged to have her shoes made larger.

"I got little sleep at night," she says, "and was in so much pain I had to be propped up with pillows. For weeks together I could not lie down in hed. I had a dry, hollow cough, and bad night sweats. Then diarrhoea set in, and my bowels became ulcerated. I was often in dreadful agony for forty-eight hours at a time. Then I would have a chill as though a bucket of cold water were poured down my back. I got so low I could no longer sew, knit, or do any housework or look after my children. My sister had to come and help in the house.

"Everybody said I was in a decline and must die. What I suffered for eight years tongue cannot tell. The doctor could do nothing for me. He said my complaint was complicated and bad to deal with. In 1886 I went as an outdoor patient to the Shrewebury Infirmaty, but only got transient tether."

The writer is in good health now, but why did her case temind me of the shipwreak? Let's settle that first. The association is easy and natural. Inst see. The only got transient ieliet."

The wiiter is in good health now, but why did her case remind me of the shipwretk? Let's seitle that first. The association is easy and natural. Just see. The ship sank because we four men hadn't the strength to pump out the water as fast as it came in. Twenty men might have got her into port. It is the last straw that breaks the came!'s back; the last unsupplied need that makes poverty abject and camel's back; the last unsupplied need that makes beverly abject and desperate.

These bodies of ones carry the seeds of disease with them all the time—chiefly the poisons created by imperfect digestion, made worse by careless hibits. But as long as nothing extraordinary happens we manage to scrape along in a half-and-half sort of fashion. Yet we've got in our blood the stuff that any of a dozen diseases is made of, only waiting for something to set it aftire. While the liver, kidneys, lungs and skin keep us fairly free—that is, don't let the load get too heavy—are say, "Oh, yes, I'm tolerably well, thank you." Little pains and unpleasant symptoms bother us now and then, but we don't fancy they mean anything.

unpleasant symptoms bother us now and then, but mean anything.

By and-by something happens. A cold, too hearty a meal, a night of dissipation, an affliction through death or loss of property, a fright as in Mrs. Bunce's case, &c. Over we go. The last straw has crushed us. One louse spark has blown up the barrel of powder. The crew is too small to save the ship. The kidneys, liver, skin, and stomach strike work, and we must have help right away or perish. All of which means the explosion of latent indigestion and dyspepsia poisons in the means the exposure the ship? Now for the con-blood.

There I isn't it plant why I thought of the ship? Now for the con-clusion of the lady's story. She says: "In 1889 I first heard of Mother clusion of the lady's story. She says: "In 1889 I first heard of Mother Seiger's Curative Syrup. Half a bottle made me feel better, and by keeping on taking it I was soon strong and well as ever. (Signed) Mrs. Ann Bauce, The Park, Worthen, near Shrewsbury, February 22nd, 1893."

If there were only a way to save sinking ships as certain and trustworthy as Mother Seigel's medicine is in the case of staking human bodies, what a blessing it would be to poor sailors.

IT having been represented that the production of Dyers' Certificates if made compulsory would involve hardship to the trade, they will not be insisted on, but in their absence Dyed Yarns under 21s will be treated as above that count and pay duty at 5%.

In the cases of higher counts than 20s (paying duty at 5%) the nett Grey weights and the actual dyed weights are required by Government and in such cases the Grey count as well as the nominal Dyed count must be shown in the bills of entry thus.—

Grey—Dyed

443 405
5505 405
544 405

54s 60s 401 405

605 50s and so on. This order will take effect from 23rd September next.

F. H. SKRINE, Offg. Collector of Customs. Custom House, Calcutta, August 2, 1895.

THE public are informed that on and after the 15th instant no cheques will be received in respect of Customs dues drawn on B inks which have not joined the Clearing House This order has been rendered necessary by the delay experienced by the Bank of Bengal in realising such amounts.

F. H. SKRINE.

Offg. Collector of Customs.

Custom House, Calcutta, August 2, 1895.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

OF Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, cs

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia,

1 A portrait of the Doctor.

A postrait of the Doctor. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana About 225 pages of original essays from his brilliant per

Selections from his correspondence.

To registered subscribers paying in Rs 5 advance ... To other subscribers and ordinary parchasers

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the fee Press, I, Ucknor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman' will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,—
Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque has been remitted permoney order To be legibly (Name..... Addres written 1895.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S. Homwopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at mis residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutta.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdan Balakhana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Acconcheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities and indiscretions of diverse kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without methods. with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the Bruish Isles, on receipt (by post) of full ac-counts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE.

Rs. As. Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption, Wils &c.* Price "No student or practitioner should be without a cone of the CDEAC." without a copy of this GREAT Work.

(Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas,"
Bengali translation of the Dyabhaga
and the Mitakshara,† Price ...

0.8

Principles of Zemindari Management and Book keeping in Bengah o 10
First Lessons in Eighsh for Bengah boys, Price ... o 4
Bharat Sasan Pranah* ... o 8

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

1. Historical Analysis of the evolution of religious systems Definition of the term "religion,"

The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new.
(a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tor-religious teachers. The power of fine words.

The art of becoming a prophet, The cumulative effect of hardswearing for ages.

Specimens of Puranised history.

Brahminical and Christian priesteraft compared The artificial miseries of men caused by religion.

religion.
Tyranny and taxation of religion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
The great prophets of the world and

The great prophets of the world and their doings.

Probable origin of the Saiva religion. Tantric mysticism and abominations.

* To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., only.

† To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradhani Agency, No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutta.

IT having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a feated in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (we, 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 annas or 1s. 11/2d. and Rs, 2 or 2s. 9d) are clearly printed on the lid of each box The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really are.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Cevlon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET CALCUTT 1.

NOTICE.-Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee rates plus V.P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

BY SARADA PRASAD BANERIEE. SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE For 1895.

Having the largest sale of all similar works,

ENGLISH PREPARATORY COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES.

This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th CLASSES.

INDIA READERS NO. 1

FOR 6th & 7th CLASSES

These books are of remarkably simple style

These books are of remarking sample says and quite suited to Indian students.

The attention of School authorities in the N-W P and Outh, the Punjab, Madras, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Burma, invited to the above publications of un que

To be had of
S. K. LAHİRI & Co.,
College Square, Calcutta.

MATERIA DI DATEA DITO A DIDONE I HIMPER

N A	WAB BAHADUR ADDUUL LUIE	LL
	MEMORIAL FUND.
_		Rs.
1.	His Highness The Maharaja of Dur- bhanga K C.I F ,	,000
2.	His Highness The Maharaja of Vizi-
,	mage on, GCLE, I His Highness the Nawab Bahadur of	,000
3.	Moorshedabad, Amrul Omra, G.C.I.E.	800
4.	His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh,
5.	G.C.S.L His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur	500
ъ.	of Cooch Behar, G.C.I.E	500
6.	Nawab Bahadui Sir K Abdul Ghan,
	of Cooch Behat, G.C.I.E. Nawab Bahadur Sir K Abdul Ghan, K C.S.I., and N twib Bahadur K Ashau Ulla, C.I.E. Nawab Ini d Jung Buhadur Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur Shamsul Ulana Syed Ah Belgram Nawab Ashau Ullana Syed Ah Belgram	500
7.	Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur	500
8.	Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadu	500 500
9. 10.	Khan Bahadar Bhai Bahanddin, C I E.,	500
	Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh	307
11.	Maharaja Bahadur Su Joundra Mo- han Tagore, K C S.L	250
12.	Babu Iodu Lat Mulitek	200
13.		200
14.	Muza Bahadur	t fo
15.	Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab	150
	Mirza Bahadur Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab Syed Zamul Abdin Khan Bahadur Ferra Jang
16.	rent jung	140 100
17.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandra	.00
18.		100
10.	dur. K.C.I.E	100
19	The Hon'ble P. Playfair	100
20. 21.	Haji Kasiin Ariff Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir	100
21.	H. Brackenbury, K C B , Babu Jai Gobind Law	100
22.	Babu Jai Gobind Law	100
23	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Guin Das Baneijee	50
24	The Hon'ble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt.	51
25.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan	50
26.		50
27.	Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna	50
28.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E J. Trevelyan
29.	The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar	50
	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of	50
30.		50
31.	Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I F., Nawab Jahandar Meerza	. 50
32. 33.	Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Muza	50 50
34	The Hon'ble W. C. Bonnerjee Nawab Syed Ameer Husein	50
35. 36.	Nawab Syed Ameer Husem	50
37.	Syed Nurul Huda, Esq., CS, Hakeem Gholam Raza Khan	50 50
38.	L. G. Ritchie, Esa, C.S.,	50
39. 40.	Sir Alexander Miller F. J. Rowe, Esq.	50
41.	Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	32
	_hadur	25
42 43	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy Kumar Dinendra Naram Roy	25 25
41.	Bahu rPashupatty Nath Bose	25
45. 46.	Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose	25
47.	Raja Su Sourndra Mohan Tagore,	25
٠.	C.I.E	25
48. 49.	Raya Joundia Nath Chowdhury Babu Rama Nath Ghose	25
50.	Raja Steenath Roy	25 25 25
51. 52.	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar	25
53.	R. Belchambers, Esq Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhury	25
54.	Rai Budreedas Mukim Bahadur	25 25
55. 56.	Babu Gopal Lal Seal Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam	25 25
57.	A T. Apca, Esq	25
58.	H. Luttin in Johnson, Esq. C S. Lord Wil iam Beresford, K.C.I E.,	25
59. 60.	Munshi Gholam Rascol	25 25
61	F. H. Skime, Esq. C S., The Houble H. J. S. Cotton C S., C.S.I.	25
62 63.		20 20
64.	Bahoo Smendra Nath Far Chowdry	20
66.	" Aukhoy Kumai Ghove	20
67.	Rai Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar	20
68.	D. Panioty, Esq Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Khan	20
69. 70.	H. E. A Cotton, Esu., Barrister-at-law	20 20
71.	H. E. A Cotton, Esq., Barnster-at-law Moulvi Syea Ashruffuddin Ahmed,
	Khan Bahadur	17-

72. T. Inghis, Esq. C.S.

... 17-8 ... 16

Scientific American.

3.	A. H. Giles, Esq		16
4.	F. F. Handley, Esq, C.S.	•••	16
٠ .	The Hon'ble Mouly, Strapa	l Islam
•	Kuan	• • • •	16
76	Moulet Serajundeen		15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,		15
٠6٠	H. A. D. Pminps, Esq. Cs.		10
79.	Baboo Kiran Chinader Roy		10
śo	E. N. Boker, Esq		10
ßr.	Baboo Dayal Chand Bose		10
32.	" Madan Mohun Bose		19
3 4.	"Kanar Lat Khan		10
4.	Moulvi Syud Akram Hossun		1)
5.	Moulvi Aziz Annut		10
ō.	Rat Kanyelat Day Banadoor		10
7	H Holmwood, Esq		10
8	Baba Huny Mon o Chunder		10
v).	Baboo Chakkana a Roy		5
Ú.	"S nod iprasa i Gnose		5
5	observations will be mankfully	received
he	Himorny Joint Secretaires,
la.	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHADU	JR,
	4, Bourn Indian Street, and A. F. M. AEDUR RAHM.
	4.		•

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WAICH. Rs. .

Burister-atlaw,

16, Taltolla, Calcutta

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open faced, nckel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pietty box and full three years guarantee. Warranted to stand the rough-est use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily re-purable. Others sell at double our rates. One with free for the nurchase of 8 at a time. parable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Crylon says:—It keeps sulendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. × Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamillee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Duindin Says.—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. F. B. Scott of Patna Opium Devices. partment says - The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

partment says: -The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real
Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real
Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubres, Emetalds, at Re-180 Mr. G. Smith, Sit Inspector from Sanikutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30" Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extrast and full three years' guaranteed, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extrast and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13 Pte. G. Hiwkes of 204 Voik Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeantfor Rs. 23 Pte. H. C. Bisho, of L. F. L. Rigt, from Kamptee says.—A Coponal offered Rs. 50 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real tolid gold watch Rs. 50; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extrast and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real soint gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only, by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO,

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO, BOMBAY.

CATARRH, Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT. Sufficies are not generally aware that these diseases ore contagious, or that they are diseases or contagious, or that they are time to the resonant filters in the filter of thing parasites in the filter of the mose and enstachian times. Moreover, has proved the resonant to the a first, and the result is that a simple the region of the filter of the second of the property of the second of the property of the second of the filter of the parasite explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HUTTON DINON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO Conda. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure relies from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO. SCIATICA, FACEACHE, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most chionic form,

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs As almost too remarkable for CREDENCE As a you subject to HEADACHES and the ortures of TOOTHACHE? A single applica-tortures of 1001 HACHE r A single applica-tion will reneve you.

In Sole-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Phy-The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of nones. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world

Agents in Calcutta Smith Stanistreet & Co. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Remew of Politics, Literatur RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in advance, •••

... Ks. 12

		•••		•••	••	,
Quarterly					,,	4
Monthly		•••			Ř.	1-8
Single or s	unple	Copy		•••	Ans.	υ-
	lí no	t paid in	advan	ce.
Yearly		٠			Rs.	31
Halt-yearl	y				,,	10-8
Quarterly			•	•••	"	6-0
Monthly					,,	2-4
Single or	sample	Copy			Ans.	0-12
No addi	monai	endige ic	or post	age	or pe	OL.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each inser-tion. The lowest charge for any advertisement tion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uchoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street. Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 688.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

TO THE STETHOSCOPE.
(Concluded from Page 374.)

Cised the book,

With gladsome look
Still he sits and visions weaveth.
Fancy with her wiles deceiveth;
Life to come with glory gildeth;
And though all is bleak and bare,
With perversest labour buildeth
Wondrous castles in the air.
He who shall possess each palace,
Fortune has for him no malice.

Ouly countless joys in store : Over rim, And mantling brim,

Whilst he dreams,
The future seems
Like the present spread before him:

Nought to fear him,

All to cheer him, Coming greatness gathers o'er him;

And into the ear of Night Thus he tells his visions bright :—

" I shall be a glorious Poet!

All the wond'ring world shall know it,

Listening to melodious hymning;

I snall write immortal songs.

" I shall be a Painter limning Pictures that shall never fade ; Round the scenes I have pourtrayed Shall be gathered gazing throngs : Mine shall be a Titian's palette ! " I shall wield a Phidias' mallet ! Stone shall grow to life before me, Looks of love shall hover o'er me, Beauty shall in heart adore me That I make her charms immortal. Now my fuot is on the portal Of the house of Fame : Soon her trumpet shall proclaim Even this now unhonoured name, And the doings of this hand Shall be known in every land.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafthes. Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long standing, will seek post free. Arthocial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely reperseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON. "Music? my bewitching pen Shall enchant the souls of men.
Aria, fugde, and strange sonata,
Opera, and gay cantata,
Through my brain,
Iq linked train,
Hark! I hear them winding go,
Now with half-hushed whisper stealing,
Now in full-voiced accent pealing,
Ringing loud, and murmuring low.
Scarcely can I now refrain,
Whilst these blessed notes remain,
From pouring forth one undying angel-strain.

As no living lips shall speak
As no living lips have spoken—
Advocate the poor and weak,
Plead the cause of the heart-broken

And this little tongue, the earth

With its barning words shall fill.

"Ye stars which bloom like flowers on high, Ye flowers which are the stars of earth, Ye rocks that deep in darkness lie, Ye seas that with a loving eye Gaze upwards on the azure sky, Ye waves that leap with mirth , Ye elements in constant strife, Ye creatures full of bounding life . I shall unfold the hidden laws, And each unthought of wondrous cause, That waked ye into buth. A high-priest I, by Nature taught Her mysteries to reveal : The secrets that she long hath sought In darkness to conceal, Shall have their mantle rent away, And stand uncovered to the light of day. O Newton ! thou and I shall be Twin brothers then ! Together linked, our names shall sound Upon the lips of men."

Like the sullen heavy boom
Of a single gun at sea,
When athwart the gathering gloom,
Awful rocks are seen to loom
Frowning on the lee;
Like the muffled-kettle-drum,
With the measurrd tread,
And the wailing trumpet's hum,
Teiling that a soldier's dead;

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, it possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

Like the deep cathedral bell Tolling forth its doleful knell, Saying, " Now the strife is o'er, Death bath won a victim more "-So, thou doleful Stethoscope ! Thou dost seem to say, " Hope thou on against all hope, Dream thy life away : Little is there now to spend; And that little's near an end. Saddest sign of thy condition Is thy bounding wild ambition ; Only dying eyes can gaze on so bright a vision. Ere the spring again is here, Low shall be thy head, Vainly shall thy mother dear, Strive her breaking heart to cheer, Vainly strive to hide the tear Oft in silence shed. Pangs and pains are drawing near, To plant with thorns thy bed : Lo! they come, a ghastly troop, Like fierce vultures from afar ; Where the bleeding quarry is, There the eagles gathered are ! Ague chill, and fever burning, Soon away, but swift returning, In unceasing alternation; Cold and clammy perspiration, Heaft with sickening palpitation, Panting, heaving respiration;

Heaft with sickening palpitation,
Panting, heaving respiration;
Aching brow, and wasted limb,
Troubled brain, and vision dim,
Hollow cough, like dooming knell
Saying 'Bid the world farewell!'
Parched lips, and quenchless thirst,
Everything as if accurst;

Flowers without the least perfume;
Gone from everything its bloom;
Music but an idle jangling;
Sweetest tongues but weary wrangling;
Books, which were most dearly cherished,
Come to be, each one, disrelished,
Clearest plans grown all confusion;
Kindest friends but an intrusion;
Weary dispenses

Weary day, and weary night—
Weary night, and weary day;
Would God it were the morning light!
Would God the light were passed away!
And when all is dark and dreary,
And thou are all worn and weary,
When thy heart is sad and cheerless,
And thine eyes are seldom tearless,
When thy very soul is weak,
Satan shall this victim seek

Day by day he will be by thee, Night by night will hover nigh thee, With accursed wiles will try thee, Soul and spirit seek to buy thee.

Close we here. My eyes behold,
As upon a sculpture old,
Life all warm and Death all cold
Struggling which alone shall hold—
Sign of woe, or sign of hope!—
To his lips the Stethoscope.
But the strife at length is past,
They have made a truce at last,
And the settling die is cast.

Life shall sometimes sound a blast, But it shall be but "Tantivy," Like a hurrying war reveillie, Or the hasty notes that levy Eager horse, and man, and hound, On an autumn morn, When the sheaves are off the ground, And the echoing bugle-horn Sends them racing o'ver the scanty stubble corn. But when I a-hunting go, I. King Death, I that funeral trump shall blow With no bated breath. Long drawn out, and deep and slow Shall the wailing music go: Winding horn shall presage meet Be of coming winding-sheet, And all living men shall know That beyond the gates of gloom, In my mansions of the tomb, I for every one keep room, And shall hold and house them all, till the very Day of Doom.

-Blackwood.

WEEKLYANA.

THERE was an employé in the finance department of Madrid who bore the name—Don Juan Nepomuceno de Burionagonatoto-recagageazcoecha. India is a land of wonders. But at prevent we cannot call to mind a longer nominal phrase than Ashtkamaldal. padmaprakashita-dhanavidyagoonalava Gouri. This paragon of sweetness and excellence is a daughter of the late reformer Durgaram Mancharam Mehtajeea, a Nager Brahman of Surat, in the Bombay Presidency.

now found necessary to raise the number of hours a day. It has been now found necessary to raise the number of hours to eleven. Before the Bill sanctioning the rise is passed, orders have been issued not to prosecute any infringement of the condemned current law. The Dundee mill-owners, overflowing with the milk of human kindness for the dusky denizens of India, have moved the Secretary of State for India for restricting the hours in Indian mills for women and children.

THE Greek Chamber has at last passed a law reducing the tax on the export of rusins by 4 diachmas per 1,000 litres, and imposing a retenue of fifteen per cent, on those exported for trade purposes.

THE new Gracco-Russian commercial treaty, which is to last for ten years, provides for a fixed import duty on Russian cereals and for a monopoly of Russian kerosine oil in Greece. The treaty was intended or is expected to drive American petroleum from the Greek market.

A FOURTH part of the main line of the great Trans-Siberian Railway has been completed, after employing 70,225 persons and costing 73.437,111 roubles. A special harbour at Batoum is being constructed for the coasting trade between that port and Russia.

THE Rev. William Hastie, D. D., late Principal of the General Assembly's Institution in this city, and recently assistant to the Professor of Divinity in the University of Edinburgh, has been appointed Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, inclinding many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

" ELECTION Eggs, three a penny. Notice : not sold for human food," is the latest development in trade brought about by the English practice of pelting opposition candidates at the hustings. It is said that in one town, during the late hours of polling, several itinerant merchants cleared, by such eggs, a good sum of money.

WE read:—
"Mr. Herbert Spencer has refused the decoration which the German Emperor offered him. The incident recalls the fact that the Emperor's grandfather offered the decoration of the Iron Cross to Thomas Carlyle, and somewhat to the surprise of his friends the gruff old sage accepted it. The honour was conferred in consideration of the services of the Scottish philosopher in bringing the personality of the great Frederick to the attention of the English-speaking world. Indeed, no worthy biographer of the sarious and, it might be said, founder of the Prossian Kingdom had appeared among his German countrymen. Carlyle subsequently refused an English title, and when it was pointed out that he had accepted the Prussian monach's favour, he grindly replied that that had never been conferred, so far as he could ascertain, except for merit. In a letter to a friend, however, he said that the Emperor would have bestowed a more varied gift if he had sent him half a pound of good tobacco."

JOGENDRA Nath Mookerjee, Vakil, High Court, N.-W.P., has been sentenced by the Sessions Judge of Allahabad, to three years' rigorous imprisonment. He was charged under sections 193 and 109, 196 and 471, Indian Penal Code, with using a forged document to get an appeal admitted beyond time. All the assessors were of opinion that he was guilty. Mr. Blennerhasset found him not guilty under sections 193 and 109 Concurring with the assessors, he found him guilty under section 471. The charge under section 106 was staved.

A DIVISION Beach of the Calcutta High Court, consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beverley, have held that a duly certificated Mukhtear can, when properly authorised by a power of attorney, file applications in Civil Courts of all grades for execution of decrees. The Subordinate Judge of Nadia had held the contrary. The impression, we think, is very general among Munsiffs and Subordinate Judges that certificated Mukhteans, even when holding powers of attorney, are incompetent to act for parties in the Civil Court. Upon a proper construction of the provisions of the Legal Practitioners' Act and sections 36 and 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there can be little doubt that this impression is incorrect.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS.

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

PARLIAMENT was opened on Thursday by Royal Commission. Her Majesty, in her Speech from the Throne, which was read by the Lord Chancellor, said :- I have received communications from the Foriegn Powers which assure me of the continuance of their good-will. No complication has arisen in any quarter calculated to endanger the peace of Europe, and I trust that the peace concluded between China and Japan will be enduring. I have observed strict neutrality and taken no action in respect thereto, except such as appeared likely to favour the termination of the war. I deeply regret the atrocious outrages on the English Missionaries in the province of Sukein, where the Chinese Government are taking active measures which, I hope, will result in an effective punishment of the murderers and all persons in any degree responsible for them.

Alluding to the troubles in Armenia, Her Majesty says that they have been attended with horrors, which have moved the indignation of all the Christian nations in Europe, and the English people especially, and Her Majesty anxiously awaits the decision of the Sultan regarding the reforms in that quarter jointly suggested by the British, French, and Russian Ambassadors as being necessary to prevent a recurrence of constant disorder.

Considering the season of the year Her Majesty says that it will probably be found more convenient to defer until another session the consideration of any important legislative measures except those that are necessary to provide for administrative charges.

Mr. Gully has been re-elected Speaker of the House of Commons. Mr. Justin McCarthy has been unanimously re-elected Chairman of the Anti-Parnellites. It is stated that the meeting was a harmonious one. The House of Lords has voted the Address in reply to the Queen's

Speech

In the debate Lord Salisbury said that the Sultan of Turkey would be guilty of a grave error if he declined to aid the Powers in their endeavours to extirpate anarchy and cinelty in Armenia. Regarding the massacre in China he said that if China was neglectful or lukewarm in punishing the culprits, further action would be necessary on the part of the British Government.

His Lordship defended the retention of Chitral, and said that it was not intended to increase the military expenditure or the forces in India for that purpose. Lord Rosebery opposed the retention of Chitral, and demanded the production of the opinion expressed by Su Donald Stewart. He urged the need for financial military concentration in India.

Dr. Tanner for giving the he in the House of Commons to Mr. Harrington, and refusing to apologise when called upon by the Speaker, was named and suspended.

IT is stated that the Sultan is firmly resolved not to admit foreign control over the reforms in Armenia. The Grand Vizier counsels his Majesty to make the concession, but the palace party are opposed to it, and the Grand Vizier's position is considered precatious.

THE Times concurs in the protests of the European community in China against the inadequacy of the demands for rediess made by Great Britain and the other Powers concerned, and states that if the Pekin Government is incapable of, controlling the Provincial authorities, Great Britain must deal with the latter directly. A commission, consisting of British and American Consuls, one American Naval officer, and three missionaries with a strong Chinese escort, has started for Kucheng, to enquire into the recent massacres. At a meeting held by the Church Missionaries Society, a resolution was passed that no disaster would be allowed to interfere with the Society's work. One British and one American ranser have sailed for Foochow for the protection of their respective subjects there.

REUTER'S agency has been informed that the Franco-Chinese treaty only agrees to certain rectifications on the frontier of Chenghung, not the cession of the whole of that State east of the Mekong, but the portion ceded is so considerable that it is expected the Anglo-Chinese Convention of 1894 will be annulled.

THE Times is informed that the Chinese Government is in a state of helpless confusion, and is incapable of any decisive action or of exercising effective authority.

THE Times, speaking on the Upper Mekong boundary question, approves of the measures taken to affirm the reality of the British Power over Kinngcheng, the French claim hitherto being baseless and madmissible.

THE only serious difficulty now impeding the retrocession of the Liaotung Peninsula to China is due to the attitude of Germany, which does not share in the opposition shown by China, Russia and France to the amount claused by Inpan as supplementary indemnity. A strong anti-English current is being at present displayed in the German press. Great Britain is accused of finistrating German Colonial aspirations.

JAPAN is making arrangements at Pekin for a commercial treaty with China, the latter securing for Japan the most favoured nation clause, including the right to establish Consular Courts in China.

IT is stated at St. Petersburg that the Egyptian question will be discussed on the opening of the French Parliament, and that an attempt will be made to obtain the British evacuation by united diplomatic steps. It is understood that France, Russia and Turkey will support the movement, and it is hoped that Germany will also joint it.

HERR Bormann, a German official, is about to start for East Africa to consult Major Wissmann regarding the construction of the first section of the Central African Railway. It is hoped be will obtain the sanction of the Reichstag to begin the railway next spring.

As the ultimatum which was sent to the rebel Chiefs of the Mymie tribe has been disregarded, an expedition of 400 blue-jackets besides Native auxiliaries and 800 porters, left Zanzibar, on the 15th; for Mombasa to attack Mweli.

THE Emperor of Germany arrived at Lowther Castle on Aug. 11 as the guest of Lord Lonsdale. On the 15th he embarked in his yacht for Germany.

PRINCE Francis Ferdinand, the Austrian heir-apparent, is seriously ill with lung catarrh.

THE return of Prince Ferdinand to Sofia has been made the occasion of a loyalist demonstration against the extreme Russophil party. The military element predominated,

THE Czai has ordered that English shall be taught instead of German in the schools at Tashkend.

THE Times commenting on the protest of the jute industry says the rinth is that, however the competing manufacturers may agitate, the great body of English people wish to see fair play for India, and that the Secretary of State realising this, and having courage to act steadfastly thereon, is master of the situation. India will have no cause for complaint if she is given fair play. But fairness is not always for her. She is sometimes sacrificed to party interests.

CHITRAL will not be annexed to British India but retained. Such is the decision after months of discussion and deliberation. The opinion of Lord Roberts prevails.

A moderate garrison will be retained in Chitral territory, and arrangements will be made by which the road thither by the Panjkora route will be available for postal purposes, for carriage of supplies, and for reliefs. For the present, at any rate, it will be necessary to keep troops on the Malakand and at the Swat river crossing, but from that point to where the road enters. Chitral territory tribal arrangements will be made.

Two regiments, two mountain batteries, or two guns with two Maxims, will be stationed, while the headquarters will be formed at Kila Drosh

I'wo Nauve regiments, two guns and two Maxims, with a Native detachment, will hold from Chitial to Kiladrosh, Chitral levies manufaming the line to Dir.

The Khan of Dir, with levies, will hold from Dir to Chakdara, and a brig ide on the Marakand, with a battalion at Chakdara, will probably complete the line.

The evacuation of the Jandoul Valley was completed on the 14th without a shot being fired. The Sikhs still hold the enclosure to the west of Panjkora river, but were to move early the day after to Sada, leaving a detachment on the bridge.

Umra Khor's relation, have settled on various estates in the Jandoui Vailey

HERE is how an Anglo-Indian contemporary fiets at what he calls the supmeness or apathy of the Indian public to the settlement of the Chitral question.—

"The supmeness of the Iodian public is as irritating as it is irrational. If the voice of the people has a right to be heard upon any matter affecting their welfare, it is surely upon this one. Imperialists who indulge in glorious paragraphs about the advancement of English prestige across the finite at any cost, should be reminded that it is easy to be reckless of the types when other people pay them. This matter is being decided by half-a-dozen men who are ultimately as little concerned with the effects of their action as the Archbishop of Canterbury. But long after they leave the scene of their mistaken effort, if it comes to pass, the rayyet will go hungly oftener because of them, and India a decade behindhand in her development, may look back and thank Loid Elgin's Government for her unprogressiveness. If no action is taken there is little to convince the people of England that India cares much one way or the other, and the views of the Indian inhitary party so omnipotent in the Government here and so strongly represented in the present Cabinet, will naturally pievail. Many Indian grievances of far less importance have been ventilated by all the most approved methods of modern agitation, but we have yet to hear of a single authorized protest being made against the fatuous and Indicrously wasteful policy which seems to be approaching cultimation in Chirtail.

The native press generally has condemned the retention of Chitral. Our contemporary, however, notices with pain that as yet no authorised protest has been made. Truly, the people of India may very well pause before they make such a protest, seeing that their most solemn protests on other questions go for nothing when the Government of the day, Conservative or Liberal, is bent on carrying out its own resolves.

In China the person on whose property the remains of a murdered man are found, is held responsible for the murder till the guity are discovered. One of the consequences of this strange law is that men still breathing under ghastly wounds are refused all assistance. Humanity is as much a virtue in China as anywhere, but the Chinese law prevents people from showing their goodness. The officials are as corrupt as possible. Unable, frequently, to detect the real criminal, they exact round sums of money from persons in whose neighbourhood a crime has been committed. In the early days of British rule in Bengal, some such law of holding the man responsible on whose property a murder was commuted was in full force. There was no end of the wrong to which the proprietor was subjected. One of the consequences of this state of things was that people frequently denied ownership and possession of what undoubtedly belonged to them, while others, more courageous, stepped forward as owners and, after standing the worry of Police investigations, had their claims universally allowed. Like inheritance, gift, sale and other known methods of transfer of ownership, responsibility freely admitted under such circumstances, sometimes operated to create a title to land. It was thus that the Mookerjees of Janus became owners of several miles of the bed of the Saraswatt. A considerable portion of Sibpur on the other side of the river changed hands in the same way. So great was the dread of the police when it proceeded to make an investigation that the markets and shops were all closed. Men and women would not stir out of their homes. Persons, past fifty years of age, if caught by mischance and questioned by the guardians of peace, alleged non-age and refused to answer the simplest queries. The Zemindar's people had actually to levy a tax, called Daroga sciami, for inducing the Police to guit the village.

READ the following '-

"Sn George Campbeil represented for many year sa group of burghs in Parlbament. There was a writy Dean in one of them, who was credited with saying, when Sir George appeared, fresh from his Indian careet, to contest the seat, that 'he had never had any tota of the extent of the Indian famine until he saw Sn George.' Those who remember (and frequenties of the House a few years ago are not likely to forget it) the tall, spare figure of the member for the Kukcaldy burghs, will appreciate the Dean's little joke."

Sir George Campbell was not so gaint when he took charge of the Lieutenaut-Governorship of Bengal. He laboured very hard in the post. It was a rule with him never to go to bed until he hard disposed of all the cases on his table. Constitutionally of a spare though muscular frame, severe toil told on it. Many of Sir George Campbell's successors have been seen to leave Belvedere with the weight of flesh and the hue of health on their checks, although they had neither at the time of entering it. The change in Sir Charles Elliott, however, has been most remarkable. He actually looks much younger than what he was while Chief Commissioner of Assam or Public Works Munister.

THE Standard of July 26 writes :-

"At the meeting of the Court of Common Council yesterday, the Library Committee brought up a report on the letter of the Bishop of Stepney asking whether, in the event of the Philological Library of the late Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte being acquired by public surscription or otherwise, the Corporation would be willing to accept its custody with a view to its preservation in the Guildual Library. They recommended that the library, if so acquired, should be accepted, and that 350l. should be expended in making certain alterations in the Library for its reception. This was agreed to 5

The Prince's Library has been valued at 6,000 guneas, but it is worth a great deal more, as in some departments, for instance in Bisque, English dialects, Founish and Romanese, it is perfectly unique. The movement is due to Dr. Ross, late librarian of the India Office, at any rate he is assisting as an expert. If the sum is raised and the widow accepts it, she will for that moderate sum render the country in which her husband found a home a most generous and disinterested service. In the Guildhall the books too will be generally accessible.

ONE of the greatest of Sanskrit scholars passed away in Professor Rudolf von Roth. That death has been bately mentioned in the English press. It is race, again. We have much pleasure, therefore, in reproducing from the Athenaeum the following obstuary notice:—

"Prof. Rudolf von Roth, who died at Tubingen in the night from the 22nd to the 23rd of June, after but two days' illness, was born at Stutigatt on the 21d of April, 1821. After matriculating at the University of Tübingen, he passed through the usual course of a student of divinity, but inder the fascinating influence of Ewald's teaching soon devoted himself with ardour to the study of Eastern Languages, especially Sanskitt and Persian. Subsequently he spent some time in Paris, Oxford, and London for the purpose of copying and collating Vedic and Zind MSS, and collecting other materials towards the purguit of the literary researches he had planned out for himself. On his return to Tubingen in 1845, he established himself as a Privatdocent, lecturing on the Hebrew text of the Old Testament and on Sanskitt and Zend. By the publication of his three rectures 'Zur Literatur und Geschichte des Weda' (1846), containing the first fruits of his Vedic studies—an English translation of which, from the pen of the late Dr. J. Murr, appeared in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal—Roth at once founded a new era in Vedic research. His subsequent works in this field—"Vaska's Nimika' (1848-52), the 'Atharvaveda,' edited jointly by himself and Waitney in 1856, and various separate treatises—all tended to increase and spread his reputation as an expounder of the Veda, and attracted students from all civilized countries to Tubingen to attend his lectures, while his periodical course on the history of religious commanded even larger audiences. The work, however, with which Roth's name, as the real founder of Vedic philology, will even be intimately connected is the great 'Sanskitt Dictionary' (seven volumes, folio, St. Petersburg, 1852-75), in which he undertook the Vedic portion and also the medical terms, the remaining classes of Sanskitt words falling to the share of his collaborateur, Dr. O. von Boutlingk. As a relief from his professorial lectures, Roth took a keen interest in local archae logical researches, the materi

• Though short, it is a very appreciative notice of the great departed. Weber had spoken of him as "the best of all of us." This opinion will find an echo in the heart of every foremost Sanskiit and Zend scholar except perhaps one whose vanity is supreme. A true German professor, he devoted himself to acquisition and dissemination of knowledge without a thought of agggrandising his own wordly prospects. Richly endowed in the head, he had also a noble heart. A combination which made him estimable both as a professor and as a man. India is as much indebted to him as to Professor Max Muller.

THE case against Mr. Croft, under the Merchandise Marks Act, was transferred from the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Sealda to that of the District Magistrate of Alipore. The Pieader for Mr. Croft explained that his client had no objection to the nationality of the Deputy Magistrate but that the present case being on all fours with the one already decided by that officer, it was not unreasonable to suppose that he would take a similar view of Mr. Croft's conduct. The Magistrate of the District made over the case to the Joint, Mr. W. B. Thompson, who took it up on Wednesday. Mr. Croft prayed that the hearing might be deferred till after the 28th when his appeal to the District Judge from the order of the Sealda Magistrate would be disposed of. There was no disposition in the Court to grant the adjournment. Application after application was refused. The first objection taken by the Pleader for Mr Crof: was that the present proceedings were untenable while the first conviction was in force, in that the offence now charged to him was practically the same for which he had been convicted. The prosecuting Pleader contended, that if in the course of one transaction several acts were committed and if each of these acts or series of acts constituted an offence by itself, the person or persons committing these different acts might be tried for all the off-nces at one time or at diff-ient periods for different offences. The Court agree ng with this interpretation of the law, overruled the first objection. A second objection was made that the records were not in Court. It brought no better result. The hearing then commenced when the third application was filed under section 526 A. of the Criminal Procedure Code for a fortnight's postponement to enable Mr. Croft to move the High Court for transfer of the case. This was a settler. The prosecuting Pleader declared that the section was obligatory. But still be thought there was nothing to prevent the Court from going into evidence if it saw fit to do so. The Court: "You are quite right; but it is not worth while, and so we will not discuss that matter. The case might be transferred to some other Court and have to be heard de novo. I must accept this petition although I think it is merely a dodge to gain time. The case is adjourned to the 30th instant." On the application of the Government Prosecutor, an order was made directing that two bottles from each case be sent for examination by an expert, and on its own motion the Court increased the bail to Rs. 500.

A VALUED correspondent, who knows and can speak with authority, speaks of the Saintary Drainage Bill passed by the Legislative Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal thus:—

"The pissing of the Simitary Dismage Bill into law has caused widespread construction in Behar. They say it is but the thin end of the wedge, and we have the fine prospect of another cess at no distant date. The patters responsible for obstruction of the natural diamage of the country are the Government and the Rulway Company and they should in pistice pit the greater share of the cost. We have seen that since the introduction of railway in the district of Sarui, malatious fever has been steadily on the increase."

His Highness Inteshan-inddaula Niwab Mahomed Ismail Khan Bahadur Firoz Jung, the Niwab of Jiora, died on the 5th Maich 1895 He left only one son who is a minor, who was proclaimed Chief of Jaoia on the 29th July, under the title of Fukh-ind-daula Nawab Ifrikhar Ali Khun Bihi dur Saulat Jung. He was placed on the musuud by Colonel D. W. R. Bair, the Agent to the Governor General in Central India, who came down from Indore for the purpose. He also announced at the Durbar that "During the amounty of His Highness the Nawab the administration of the Jora State wil, under the order of the Government of India, be left in the bands of Kirio Bahudui Yar Mabomed Khan, Minister of Jana, subject to the general control of the Political Agent in Western Midws, and under my orders as Agent to the Governor-General for Central India. I confer on Yar Mahomed Khan full civil judicial powers, subject only to the control of the Political Agent and the Agent to the Givernor General, and also full criminal judicial powers, with the reservation that all sentences of death shall be subject to confirmation by the Agent to the Givernor General."

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow-Bazar Street, Calcutta.

(Session 1895-96)

Lecture by Babu Ram Chandra Datta, FC s., on Monday, the 19th Inst., at 4-15 P.M., Subject Mercury and Bismuth.

Lecture by Babu Ram Chaudra Datta, E.C.S., on Wednesday, the 21st inst., at 4-15 P M Subject: Copper and Codmium.

Lecture by Babu Rajendra Nath Chatterjee, MA, on Wednesday, the 21st Inst., at 7-30 P.M. Subject. Barometer its uses and Boyle's law.

Lecture by Dr. Mithendra Lil Sucar, on Thursday, the 22nd Inst, at 6-30 P.M., Subject: Magnetic Induction; Laws of Mignetic Force—Lecture by Bibn R im Chandia Datta, FCS, on Friday, the 23nd Inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Tin and Antimony.

Lecture by Dr. Nitratan Sukar, MA, MD, on Friday, the 23rd Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subjects: Chemical Physiology—Carbo-Hydrates.

Admission Fer, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR, M.D.,

Honorary Secretary.

August 17, 1895.

The Agent spoke in highly complimentary terms of the minister. :-"Khan Bahadur Yar Mahomed Khan is an officer of tact, ability and experience, who has already served for eight years as Minister of Jaora and has worked under His Highness the late Nawab with much skill and success. During his administration the debts of the State, which amounted in the year 1885 86, to Rs. 16,60,725 - 3 have almost been cleared off, while many improvements in the general administration of the State have been established.

Khan Bahadur Yar Mahomed Khan has my full confidence, and I feels are that during the minority of His Highness, Mahomed Iftishar Ali Khan, he will continue to conduct the administration with the same ability and zeal that maked his services to my lamented friend the ability and zeal that maked his services to my lamented friend the late Nawab Mahomed Ismail Khan, and I expect that all the officials and the subjects of the Jaora State will yield to Khan Bahadur Yar Mahomed Khan the fullest respect and obedience, and will assist him to the utmost of their power in the fulfilment of the important duties which deadless assessments. which devolve upon him during the minority of the Nawab.

We also hear good accounts of the minister from other quarters. Khan Bahadur Yar Mahomed Khan is a son of the late minister of the State and is related to the Prince. He had been on the Berar Commission and has travelled in Europe.

The Governor-General's Agent concluded saying

The Governor-General's Agent concluded saying .—

"Special arrangements will be made for the education and training of His Highness the Nawab, and in fulfillment of my responsibilities as Agent to the Governor-General, and as the personal friend of His Highness' father, it will afford me great pleasure to personally superintend measures that are to be taken under the orders of the Government of India for bringing up His Highness, so that when he attains his majority he may be in every way qualified for the important duties of the ruler of the Jaora State.

I take this opportunity of addressing the Thakurs, who hold villages and lands granted to them by the Jora State under the guarantee of the British Government, mz, the Thakurs of Sadakheri, Susi, Boikhera, Keiwasa and Tall. Piesse Thakurs may be assured that the rights guaranteed to them by the British Government will be maintained in their integrity. But, on the other hand, I desire to warn these Thakurs that other obligations to the Jaora State, which are cleanly Supulated in the paths and kabuliaris which they hold and have giver, must be rigidly observed without excuse or which are clearly supulated in the pattas and kaonatas much hold and have giver, must be rigidly observed without excuse or

During the last few years it has been observed that these. Thakurs During the last few years it has been observed that these Thakurs have attempted to oppose the rightful claims of the Durbar of Jaura, and have endeavoured to establish an independence which is not warranted by the terms of the guaranteed grants under which they hold their istaniar jaigurs. They should remember that they hold villages granted to them by the Jaura State in consideration of personal attendance, payment of rent, fidelity, and due performance of duty, and it will be to their advantage to remember that any breach of their engagements to the Jaura State will inevitably result in their punishment and the attachment of their villages.

The attitude of the Thakurs imposes an additional responsibility on the Minister Regent. But we trust he will prove equal to the occasion, Of one thing we may sure that when the Prince takes the management in his own hands in proper time, there will be a surplus instead of a deficit in the Treasury.

THE fifth Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, Mr. Abul Hassan, has, it seems, no judicial temper. He has been called upon by the Chief Magistrate to answer a charge of assault on one Abdul Aziz, a dealer in hide, whom, it is alleged, ou little or no provocation, he abused in language most offensive to a Mahomedan, whom he caught by the nape of his neck and struck with his clenched fist near the left temple and went on repeating the assault till rescued by Mr. Subman, a barrister. Dealers in hide are not the men to bear an affront so meekly. Oftentimes they are aggressively offensive to their customers, Europeans not excepted. The prestige of a Small Cause Court. Judge must be great indeed !

WE are truly sorry for Su Donshaw, Munickjee, Petit. At his age, the death of the son who was to succeed to his baronetcy is a teirible blow. He has had three sons. The first, Cowasjee, died in 1878. The second, Frames, is just dead, and the third, Bomaniee, is ailing. In death, as in life, the Paisees are lavishly liberal. At the third day ceremony of the death, the Petit family subscribed Rs. 4,03,000 to local charmes. So Dinshaw gave away half a lakh, two and half laklis being charged to the estate of the deceased.

On the 5th August, the Officiating Lieutenant-Governor of the N -W. Provinces land the foundation stone of the Meetut water works. The feature of these works is that the engines will be worked not by steam, but by water power. The Ganges Canal will be utilized for the purpose.

MUCH is made of Bib to Hem Chonder Sen as the first and only M D. of the Calcutta University since the adoption of the rule dispensIs Dr. Sen better as regards literary accomplishments than his predecessors? It is significant that the Principal of the Medical College has found it necessary to be strict in sending up boys for the medical degrees.

THE Chinese Commissioner not having entered appearance and the season being advanced for work at high altitudes, orders are to be issued for immediate return of the Sikkim Tibet Boundary Commission. The demarcation of the Eastern Pamir region is, however, being pushed on. The Amu's agent reached the camp on Lake Victoria on July 27 and next day the first boundary pillar was fixed

THE jury having found them guilty, the Sessions Judge of Dacca sentenced two youthful Mahomedans, for a horrible outrage on a Mahomedan gul of 16, to seven years' transportation.

Two sensational murders or rather one murder and one massacre the first in the Suburbs and the second in the town, are reported this week. In Bhawanipore, a Mahomedan who had only four months married a girl of 11, cut her throat at night when sleeping to prevent her from remaining with her parents whom he suspected of immoral designs on his wife. He had wanted to remove her but there was objection from the parents. To make an end of all his doubts, he put an end to his innocent girl wife. This reminds us of Nobin's murder of his wife Elokasi-to save her chastity and his honour.

The other is a more ghastly tale. A Bengah, aged about forty, respectably connected, named Annadaprosad Ghose, ran amuck and dangerously wounded three of his own sons and two of his brothers-in-law. His grandfather Ramkumai Ghose came from Bamanpara, in the Howrah Sub-division of the Houghly district, and settled in Calcutta. He had two sons, the elder of whom Doorga Churn, of a domineering spirit, separated from the father. He was book-keeper to Messis. Gladstone Wyllie & Co., and left a little fortune at his death 20 years back. He had two wives, the first of whom still lives. She bearing him no son, he, pining for a male heir, took another wife, and after fasts and feasts to Brahman and various other religious rites was at last blessed with a son, the hero of the tragedy. The father's delight knew no bounds when another son was born of the same wife. Happily, she is also dead. Doorga Churn at his death left a little fortune. The heirs-at-law could not agree. They went to law and divided the patrimony. Annada, like his father, has no sweet temper and always ill-treated his wife. A spendthrift, he expended himself in every way. He losing all and growing more cruel to the wife, she removed herself with her children to her father's. There he pursued her and made himself a terror to that household. He was not allowed admittance. This made him furious, Aiming himself with deadly weapons, he, at dead of night, climbed into the room where his children were sleeping, backed three of them and stabbed two of his brothers-in-law who came to their rescue. He had meditated the murder of his wife also. She, however, escaped. She has been a patient wife and a good angel to him But for her he would have been brought to trouble long before

THERE seems to be a fatality about the wills of eminent Bengalis, Even when drafted with sufficient cire, the wishes of the testators are somehow circumvented Everybody knows how the will of Raja Kristonath of Cossimbazar, by which that unfortunate young nobleman had devoted the whole of his splendid property to the educational needs of Bengal, was frustrated by the genius of a Brahman lawyer, Hara Chandra Lahiri of Serampore. The heir-at-law succeeded to the property which Government wished to administer either as exccutor if the will held good, or appropriate as its own under the English law against suicide. But it must be admitted that the a immistration of the estate by the holder has always been for the public good. For there is not another Raja or Rani in Bengal who has been more lavish with her wealth than Maharani Surnamoye. To omit many other wills of millionaires, the next will that was set aside was the famous one of Bibu Prosanno Coomar Tagore. The heir-at-law had been disinherited. In the clearest possible language the testator had declared that his only son would take nothing under the will. Prosanno Coomar himself was no mean lawyer, and had consulted not only ing with the preliminary passing of the BA. examination, all the foremost counsel of his day but also some of his friends among the Judges of the Bengal High Court. The next will whose material provisions have been circumvented is that of Pundit Iswara Chunder Vidyasagar. This will may not be famous for the property dealt by it, but no one canfdeny that the testator himself was one of the greatest of philanthropists that Bengal has produced. His life is indelibly written in the history of Bengali literature and also in the educational history of his country, Pundit Vidyasagar, like the Tagore Baboo, had distuberited his only son. Some of his friends, however, who were unable to move him while alive, joined together after his death in frustrating his deliberate wishes. Influential meetings were held after the Pundit's death for perpetuating his memory. Nobody, however, seemed to care how the deceased philanthropist was treated in the matter of his will. With great difficulty the will was proved. Even this would not have been done but for the single-minded exertions of Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee. Some of the witnesses to the document endeavoured to behave towards the testator who had placed his faith in them as men behave towards a dead hon. Out of the three executors named in the will, one had predeceased the testator; one refused to act; so the document was proved by only one of them. After probate wis granted by the High Court, the property, we understand, pissed over to the disinherited heir. To the public at large it matters little who enjoys the property left by Pundit Vidyasagar, although it is impossible not to feel some pity for finistration of his plans after death. The matter, however, does not rest here. The testator had established a Higher Class English School at his native village of Businga, called after his mother, "The Bhagavati Vidyalaya." His will contains a bequest of Rs, 100 per month in aid of this institution. We regret to learn that the school is in its downward course towards extinction. The two higher classes have been dismissed, and the institution reduced to the rank of what is called "Middle Class English School," It is time, we think, that Sir Alfred Croft turned his special attention to the school, to preserve, if possible, a monument of the founder's philanthropy, who has done so much for education in Bengal. The Busing School is, again, as much a public property as the Metropolitan Institution, The desecration of the one has been prevented. Why should not the other be saved?

REIS & RAYYET.

The second secon

Saturday, August 17, 1895.

A MAHOMEDAN VIEW OF ANGLO-ISLAM-IC JOURNALISM IN BENGAL.

THE equestion has often been asked-Have the Mahomedans of India any newspaper in English which can be strictly called their own-an organ which represents their views correctly and authoritatively on subjects relating to their community? Although repeatedly asked, it has never been answered in the affirmative. There is unfortunately no such representative organ, recognized in all quarters as the true exponent of the views and wants of the Mahomedan community, or which the public can look to for authoritative opinion and reliable information on Mahomedan questions, political, social, or educational. Bengal, which is considered as the most advanced province in the country, where the Mahomedan population is very large, and where there are scores of Mahomedan graduates in every large city, has not yet been able to produce any English newspaper for the Mahomedans which fulfils half the conditions laid down.

The next question which suggests itself is, Why is there not a national organ or true representative paper conducted in a manner consistent with the importance, dignity and literary fame of the community and able to hold its own against English newspapers conducted by the Bengalees or the Parsees?

The explanation usually given is that the Mahomedans are very poor, and for want of sufficient funds they cannot start a respectable and able paper which would meet the requirements of the community. It is also alleged that the existing journals can hardly pay their own expenses, and that they have to devise various means to keep them going. Sometimes compassionate appeals are made to the rich of the community for aid to the socalled national organ, and not unoften the well-to-do are obliged to contribute their mite to this national fund. Officials too have been known to interest themselves in the cause

When papers under the editorial management of Bengalees, Parsees and Europeans are largely subscribed by Mahomedans, there is no reason why a Mahomedan paper conducted ably on proper lines should not succeed and prosper under the patronage and liberality of its own community. Such a paper would also be equally welcome to other nationalities-Hindus, Parsees, Europeans and all. A newspaper is usually a trading concern and its success depends upon its management. For a national paper and particularly when that nation is much behind the times in education and general progress, there must always be an editor belonging to the same community with a real carnestness of purpose, genuine sympathy, entire devotion, and special sources of information. It is also essential that he should know Arabic and Persian, and be well informed in all Mahomedan matters. Such men, however, are rare in that community. The half a dozen men who come up to the ideal are better employed in other spheres and cannot be expected to take charge of a concern which does not pay. European, Eurasian and Hindu Editors of Mahomedan journals have been tried, here and elsewhere, and they have not succeeded, because they did not know the subjects with which they were to deal, nor could they have any real sympathy with the community whose paid advocates they were.

The Mahomedans themselves are to blame for this state of things. They can talk a good deal and live beyond their means. They can be proud of not understanding Bengalee but they show no real taste for English literature or their own. Among hundreds of Mahomedan graduates there is not any man in Bengal, except perhaps Mr. Jus-tice Amir Ali, who has written any book in English worth perusal on any important or interesting subject. There are hardly three Mahomedans in Bengal who have ever contributed anything to any of the daily and weekly papers or magazines which attracted public notice. Vernacular journalism in Bengal among Mahomedans is equally lamentable. There is not one Urdu paper worthy of note Not one Mahomedan graduate is engaged in conducting any such paper. Not one graduate is engaged in equalified to write Urdu correctly and ably. Why this dearth? Because the Mahomedans after leaving college bid farewell to all books. They only seek Government employment or run to the Bar where the chances are not always good. They do not understand the true value of knowledge. They cannot appreciate independent profession. They do not seek knowledge for its own sake. They do not think for a moment what good a man can do to his community by his pen if he knows how to wield it. If some Mahomedan graduates, under-graduates, or other students had devoted themselves to improving their journalism, it would have paid them better and at the same time done good to the community

Unless some persons make literature their profession, there is little hope of a qualified Mahomedan editor and a well conducted respectable journal. Editors who cannot distinguish between Persian prose and poetry, cannot be expected to do the duty of an editor of a Mahomedan journal. If the Mahomedans want to better their political position and protect their interests, they must wake up from their deep slumber. No amount of tall talk and pride of past glory will raise them in the scale of nations and help them in keen compe-tition in these hard days. The only way to prepare them for the contest is to start some good vernacular and English journals. Some patriotic and high-minded Mahomedans ought to take to the profession of journalism and devote their lives to the social and political welfare of the communi-ty. There are hundreds of subjects of vital interest to that community, but how few of them are taken up or properly dealt with by the existing Mahomedan journals! This neglect can only be due to ignorance or incompetence.

The half dozen Urdu journals which are published in Bengal and Behar, are not worth the paper on which they are printed. They are a disgrace to the community whom they profess to represent. The Mahomedans of these Provinces ought to blush at these miserable rags. They bode no good to the present generation of educated Maho-medans in Bengal. On the contrary, they raise doubts whether the graduates themselves are well versed in Urdu or Persian. The present writer has known Mahomedan examiners in those languages selected by the Syndicate of the Calcutta University, who cannot speak Urdu as decently as any Khid-matgar of the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad. It is strange that many who foolishly hate Bengalee do not know Urdu or know it less than Bengalee.

Letter to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SONG.

Sig. -- I have read with interst your review of Mrs. Annie Besant's new translation of the Gud. It undoubtedly possesses many merits. At the same time, it is not free from errors of rendering. Verse 12 of the Eleventh Lesson is really a crux to European scholars. Even Mr. Davis, who is generally very accurate and whose English translation of the Gud is regarded to have supplanted the earlier versions of Thompson and Gladwin, and which is in some respects better than Telang's in the Sacred Books of the East edited by Professor Max Müller, has not been able to render the verse correctly. The original is, > Kalosmi lokakshayakrit, Prayriddho lokan samahartumiha prayrittah. Ritepi tvam na bhavishynti saurve Yevasthitah pratyanikeshu yodhah.

Correctly rendered, the verse would read, " I am Time, the destrover of the worlds. Swelling with might, I am now engaged in destroying all creatures! Even without thee, all these warriors that stand in the several divisions, with cease to be !"

What Krishna wishes to say is that the warriors assembled together in Kurukshetra would all be destroyed even if Arjuna refused to slay them. Sreedhara, in his gloss, explains,

"Rit tvam hautaram vina," i. e., without thee acting as a slayer. Sankara also explains, --- "Ritapi Vinapi," &c.

Now read Mrs. Besant's version :

" Time am I, laying desolate the world, Made manifest on earth to slay mankind! Not one of all these warriors ranged in strife Escapeth death; thou shalt alone survive."

The error is as gross as the one pointed out in the BHARGAVA.

Calcutta, August 12.

THE INSANITATION OF CALCUTTA.

THE HEALTH OFFICER'S ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AT THE GENERAL COMMITTEE ON AUGUST 10.

Question .-- Will the Health Officer be good enough to inform the Commissioners whether he is aware of the existence of any special cause or causes, which have lately rendered the condition of Calcutta "highly insanitary" beyond, of course, the original defects in the construction of the sewage system? If so, when did he draw the attention of the Commissioners to the same and what were his recommendations for the removal or mitigation thereof.

Answer .-- I am not aware of the occurrence of any special cause or causes of a new character tending to render the conditions of Calcutta more insanitary lately than in previous years; nor do I think in analysing the development of the diseases which have recently prevailed in Calcutta are there to be found any strikingly new features which would render the existence of such causes probable. The unusual mortality and sickness in Calcutta were due to the great prevalence of small pox and of fevers. As regards small-pox its epidemiology is characterised by a periodicity which manifests itself every 4 or 5 years in almost all unvaccinated and overcrowded centres of population. This has been the experience of Calcutta ever since statistics have been recorded. The origin of the periodicity and the causes which give rise to the severity of the disease in particular years have not yet been elucidated by

With reference to fevers, although there was a large increase last year, a tendency to increase has been observed since 1889. The figures are as follows :---

Year.	•	Deaths.		Ratio
1889	•••	3,307		7.7
1890		4,112	•••	9.4
1891	•••	4,614		10.2
1892	•••	4,593		10.5
1893		4,713		10.7
1804		5,667		129

From these figures it will be seen that as regards the production of the tise in fevers, there are causes continuously at work in Calcutta, and that there is no occasion to look for special causes for an explanation. Of the permanent conditions rendering Calcutta insanitary ation. Of the permanent conditions rendering calcutta insanitary the most important is certainly that mentioned by the Commissioner, otz., the detective condition of the sewerage, a condition which I pointed out from the first year I had the opportunity of examining the sanitary condition of Calcutta.

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Description of Calcutta

Proceedings Descri

recently recurred with greater frequency and increasing severity?
what is the total number of deaths from such diseases in each during 1891 and 1894, and the percentage thereof, in relation to the population?

Answer .-- The deaths and death-rates from sever and small-pox are to be seen in the following table :---

From the table (which is omitted here) it appears that in the Town Area deaths from sever in 1891, 1892, 1893 and 1894 were respectively 4,614; 4,593; 4,713; and 5,667; the ratios being 10.5; 10.5; 10.7 and 12.9. Deaths from small-pox during the same period were 10.7 and 12.9. Deaths from small-pox during the same period were 13; 16; 13; and 346: the ratios being '02; '03; '02 and '74. Comparing the fever statisticts of the town with those of the suburbs, we find the ratio of the town which is sewered fast approaching the ratio of the suburbs which is undrained, the ratios being now respectively 12.9 and 14.3.

Of other epidemics the cholera ratio was high in 1891, the year of the 'Ardhadoya Jog,' when the deaths amounted to 2,955, but since then it has been below the average. There have been no other epidemics.

Question .-- Will the Health Officer kindly lay before the Commissioners statistics showing the total number of deaths from typhus and typhoid fevers in each year during 1891 to 1894, and specifying the localities in which these occurred? Answer .-- There were no cases of typhus fever recorded between 1891 and 1894. Of typhoid fever, there were 7 deaths in 1891, 4 in 1892, 8 in 1893 and 6 in 1894. A large proportion of these were reported from the Calcutta Hospitals. The Commissioners will observe that these numbers refer to mortality and not to sickness; and if there has been any increase of cases, the disease has not been of a fatal form.

Question.—Is the Health Officer aware of the existence of the plague in China referred to in the letter of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the Local Government, dated 10th July, 1895? What are the characteristics of the disease? How does it originate and how is it propagated? Is there any reasonable probability of the plague breaking out in the city in the near future? If so, has the Heath Officer drawn the attention of the Commissioners and the public to the matter, and when?

Answer.—Yes. The chief feature of the plague consists in an exceedingly painful and swollen affection of the lympathic glands preceded by high fever, vertigo, flushed face, intense thirst, vomiting and delirium. The mortality is the highest observed in any other disorder varying from 80 to 97 per cent. The disease is contracted chiefly by those who reside in or visit infected centres, and it attacks more especially overcrowded and filthy localities. The intection does not seem to travel long distances. The lower animals such as cows, buffaloes, goats, rats, mice, &c., take the infection and probably propagate the disease. During the outbreak in Hongkong, Kitasato, a Japanese Physician and Scientists, and Yhersin, a French Physician and Scientist, and Yhersin, a French Physician and Scientist, and the single remains in a latent state in China, and from time to time acquires exceptional activity from causes which are unknown. It spreads from locality to locality, probably by human intercourse, and in this respect the fact is important that the period of incubation is usually about 7 days and probably not longer than 12. Accordingly, one of the most effective measures for protecting Indian ports distant about three weeks from China, consists in medical inspection and a quarantine and disinfection of suspected and infected vessels. At the time of the prevalence of plague in Hongkong, I discussed the necessary measures with the Health Officer of the Port, and these were put into practice by the orders of the Lieutenant-Governor. The disease is slow in travelling, has not a long period of incubation, and Calcutta is a three week's overage from China, so that with precautions to the inspection and disinfection of ships arriving from infected ports in China, there is a very little probability of the plaque breaking out in the city in the near future. As regards the susceptibility of the disease in Hongkong in the different races, the following order was noted:—Chinese, Japanese, Hindus from India, Malays, Jews, Parsees

Question.—In his opinion what precautions other than those associated with pratique should be taken to guard the Metropolis against the breaking out of the plague? Has he made any recommendations to the Commissioners for the adoption of those precautions? If so, when; if not, why not?

Answer .-- Every one knows that quarantine is a measure of only relative efficacy, and if once the plague should be admitted either by land or water, the conditions in Calentia would render it an easy prev to its ravages. It is against these conditions that the necessary measures should be pressed on, and I enumerated these measures in detail in the report for the first quarter of this year. Of these conditions the most important are overcrowding and pollution of the soil. The distribution of the inhabitants of a town are beyond the direct control of a Municipality, and can only be influenced by regulating the distribution of the houses. This, in every town, is effectof by the Municipality armed with an efficient Building Act, As regards the pollution of the soil, Mr. Baldwin Latham showed that the outfall of the Calcutta sewerage was obstructed by tidal influences, that the sewers were sewers of deposit, that they leaked into the subsoil, and that there was a constant interchange between the sewage, rainfill and subsoil water. That a number of the sewers the sewage, rainfill and subsoil water. That a number of the sewers leak has been proved by uncovering them for inspection; that the soil is polluted has been determined by analysis; that the subsoil water is contaminated has been ascertained by the analysis of the water of wells; so that this condition of affairs produces a sort of Goragado throughout Calcutts. Since Mr. Baldwin Latham's visit to Calcutta, I have, in every Annual Report, drawn special attention to the urgency of carrying out his recommendations, and the dager of delay which is now demonstrated from the lact that there were nearly 1,000 more death in 1894 from fewers than in 1893, and that the increase during the 6 months of the year has been nearly 900 compared with the corresponding scason of last year.

The only means in my opinion to obviate in an efficient and satisfactory manner this state of affairs, is to take immediate steps to invite an expert of the experience of Mr. Baldwin Latham to visit Calcutta to draw up the designs for the necessary works, more specially with reference to the outfall of the city, to plan the suburban drainage and set the works in motion under a Superintending Drainage Engineer; and further to appoint this expert as Consulting Engineer, so that he may have complete charge and responsibility of the works, and inspect periodically their progress until they are finished.

I believe it is only by reduction of overcrowding by a Building Act and by immediate and radical measures in regard to the purification of the soil both in the town and summiss that it is possible to secure a proper remedy for the present still of things.

W. J. Simpson, M.D., Health O. hier.

August 7, 1895.

SIR W. W. HUNTER ON EDUCATION OF INDIAN WOMEN.

HIS SPEECH AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL INDIAN ASSOCIATION IN AID OF SOCIAL PROGRESS AND EDUCATION IN INDIA.

Sir W. W. Hunter, K.C. S. I., said: My Lords, ladies and gentlemen.—The Council have asked me to submit the following resolution to the meeting: "Phat this meeting, resognising the increasing desire for education among Indian women, and appreciating the efforts already made by the National Indian Association to meet the demand, earnestly trusts that the public will generously support this important part of the Association's work." The Council wish me, in laying the motion before you, to say a few words in regard to the exact position of the Association towards female education in India, and to state to you our immediate reasons for making this appeal. The question which will occur to many of you is this: Is there any serious ground for asking the public to help us in our work? Now, first, as regards our exact position towards female education. We have heard some admirable remarks from Lord Harris as to the work done by the Association with the view of bringing Indians and Europeans together. We have also had from Sir Charles Crostiwatic a luid marrative of the early failure and more recent success of the inovement for lemale education in the North Western Provinces. I, therefore, pass from State efforts, but before saying what I have to say I should like to heartily recognise the great services which have been rendered by the missionaries have been the ponceits of all education in India. The missionaries have been the provinces of all education in India—of education for the highest as for the lowest classes, and especially for the women of India. The result is now becoming apparent, A generation of educated Indian women, few in numbers at present but full of promise for the future, has grown up.

promise for the future, has grown up.
You will find that almost all these educated women of India who have made their mark in our day were native Christians, or were educated under missionary influence. The result is no doubt an honourable one for missionary enterprise; but how does it strike the natives of India? Take the list of these women of mark; take Toru Dutt, the distinguished poetess of Bengal, or Mis. Sathianadhan, the novelist of Madras, whose works are so racy of the soil; or take the distinguished women whose memons form the subject of Mrs. Chapman's most interesting book. Almost without exception they are the product of missionary education. Now, as Lond Hartis his explained and as Sir Charles Crosthwaite has enforced, temale education, in the opinion of many of them, means not only a social revolution but a teligipus revolt. Female education is in part the product of a desire for better tinings amongst the mattees of India, but chiefly inherity of exangelising in fluences foreign to them. I put it to you, ladies and gentlement, supposing a system of education were introduced into this country from without a system of which we had some apprehension; supposing that system were minimated among our girls by the missionaries of a foreign religion, let us say of the Hindu religion, or of the Buddhist religion, or even of the Roman Cathol's religion, what a sense of tear would it spread among our English

Now, why have the missionaries had this--I will not say monopoly--but this immense share in female education? It is because the State finds it extremely difficult to interfere in the matter. At one time it was my duty to visit the femile schools throughout the various Provinces of India, in order to draw up a scheme for extending education. I tound when I had written the chapter on female education in the Report of the Commission that it was a mere chapter of difficulties. It we not a chapter of how to do it, but of the difficulty of doing it. That difficulty remains to this day. The State, a Lori Harris has very properly gaid, can interfere only very charily in the matter. What agency then can take its place, and so dissociate female education from the idea of a religious revolt in the Hindu mind? It is the agency of sympathetic but unsectarian private effort. Phat agency has many workers among the natives of India themselves--native workers from His Highness the Gaikwar of Baroda, whose brother has just now so ably explained what is speing done in that kingdom; to the Maharaja of Mysore, the good and noble young prince whose loss we have so recently had to deplore, but whose place is taken in Bengal and in the North West Provinces, as we have just heard, by other men of rank equally decirous of advancing the condition of their country-women. There is a noble native agency at this moment at work in India, but like most native agencies at present it requires encouragement, guidance, and support from England. That guidance and that support support and support from England. That guidance and that support the National Indian Association endeaveurs to give. The National Indian Association takes the women of India as they are. It does not seek to destroy their religion. It accepts the basis of existing institutions, and it merely tries to render the women of India more intelligent companions as the wives of educated husbands, and more intelligent mothers for educated children. It aims to effect for the femal: mind in India what Lady Dufferin's splendid enterprise does with regard to their physical needs. It is the true complement of the work is being carried on by Lady Dufferin's Fund, and, alas ! on a scale infinitely below its requirements.

The men of India are advancing hand over hand. We are creating a new race of men whose future it is impossible to prediet; but while the men are going forward the women hang behind; and a man when he marries finds himself belonging to one century and wedded to a century far back. That is our position towards female education in India. Sir Charles Crosthwaite came before you able to say that he had to ask for watte came before you able to say that he had to sak for no money. I am in a less fortunate position, for I have to explain that we do need money. Education is nowhere (especially, at starting) self supporting. I suppose in no country m the world is female education more valued than here among us. Go to Cambridge and you will see Cirton and Newnham; go to Oxford and you will see Lady Margaret's Somerville and St. Hugh's--very fine buildings, noble institutions; but how built and how supported? Are they built by the parents of the students, or as commercial speculations? Are they even supported by those who profit by them? Certainly not. They supported by those who profit by them? Certainly not. I ney were built by outside help, and they are maintained by outside help. Therfore, in asking for outside help towards the education of the women of India, this Association is making no novel demand, but making a demand which has been again and again made for the women of England themselves.

These institutions at Oxford and Cambridge almost always date from some pious founder. Well, we, too, date from a pious foundress--Miss Mary Carpenter. Miss Mary Carpenter was not only our pious foundress, but she was our chief, I was going to say, our only benefactress. What she wanted to see done going to say, our only benefacters. What we wanted to see done was this. She did not desire any new departure (the danger of which Lord Harris has pointed out); what she desired was to see the work, which native gentlemen of India were themselves taking np, helped and guided by sympathetic aid from England.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, what practical form does out aid take? It provides, first, scholarships; second, home teaching; third, assistance to schools; and fourth, the training of teachers, and training schools for young Hindu widows. We have heard from Lord Harris, and in Lady Harris's almirible note, the work that has been done in Bombay. Indeed, the first article in out Magazine for May deals with semale education in Bombay on a very interesting manner. Madras has always been in the torefront of our work, and in speaking of Madras I should like to say a word, in which I am sure you will all join me-a word of sorrow for the death of one of the most devoted educationalists that ever went from this country to India. The loss of Mr. Grigg, formerly Director of Public Instruction in Madras, leaves a blank in our system of education, and throws a most serious responsibility upon those who now have to carry on the work, which he and Mrs. Grigg so long carried on, of temale education in Madras.

I will take only one Presidency of India and a single example of our work in it--our Widows' Home in Bengal. That is not a Christian institution, but an institution maintained by a Brahman a Christian institution, but an institution maintained by a Brahman ...Mi. Saspada Banerji and his wife. This lady and gentleman have a house outside Calcutta, which, under the auspices of our Calcutta Branch, they have turned into an Institution of unique interest. It is not only a day school for girls, with 128 pupils attending it, but it is also a training school—a normal college you may call it, for the training of teachers, and also a home for widows. Some 19 Hindu widows are boarded in the house and are being trained to useful professions; 25 have already left the Home and are helping to instruct others.

These poor women who have bitherto been denied any rôle in life are being qualified for a useful career. There are 14 other boarders, many of them of high caste, and two of them little girls who have been deserted by their high caste husbands. In this Institution you have many varieties of educational work. You have little girls to the number of 128 in the school-rooms ; you have the boarders, 33 in number, learning to become teachers : among them 19 widow receiving a pew careerin life. Mr. Banerji has also a large sphere of usefulness in the country around him with 14 district centres. To each of these 14 centres he sends either an educated widow or a Hindu lady teacher, and in each of them there is a group of homes who subscribe for these ladies' teaching. In this way a real but non-destructive education is brought within the reach of a number of our fellow subjects in that part of India. If we could help this institution sufficiently, it would double its work within three years. If we had only funds we could establish institutions of the kind in every Province of India.

There is a demand in India for education for girls, but for a constructive education---not a revolutionary education or one destructive of their religion. Until we have satisfied that demand we can never say that we have satisfied the claims of India upon our philanthropic zeal. I should like to mention a single case to show how our Widows' Home in Bengal practically works. One Child was left a widow at the age of 5 1/2 years. She has been nearly 7 years in the Home and her mother, herself a young widow, came to the Home with her: I think the mother's age was 14 or 15 when her husband died. They learnt out of the same book, and the mer hussian acid. I ney learnt out of the same took, and the mother is now a teacher in the school. That single story illustrates the pathetic opportunities which constantly present themselves. Therefore, ladies and gentlemen, I ask you to help us, and I ask the public outside to help us, not to create a revolutionary education in India, but to aid in our efforts to establish a true female education on an unsectarian basis and upon non-destructive principles.

STARVED INTO MUTINY.

A FAMOUS mutiny on shipboard came to pass in this way: When the ship, which had sailed from London, was well down the Channel, it was found that the provisions intended for the use of the crew were totten and, of course, uneatable. The men complained to the captain, who promised to put into into some near port and exchange the bad stores for good. He fulled to keep his word, and as the poor sailors stores for good. He failed to keep his word, and as the poor sailors couldn't sail the ship 10,000 inles on empty stomachs, they killed the captain and mate, helped themselves to the cabin provisions, held high captain and mate, neighbor themselves to the caoin privision, nead and punks for a few weeks, and finally stuttled the ship, put off in the boats, and were all lost but three. The captain could have prevented all this if he had chosen to; but perhaps the owners and he had put up the bad job on the men. Very likely, and got served out for it. They were both criminals and fools.

were both criminals and fools.

But there are stips that must needs sail to the end of the voyage with only the original stores. Come what may, they can't go back or put into any port. Some are well found and others badly; and so voyages differ.

put into any port. Some are well found and others badly; and so voyages differ.

To mondly the illustration, the latter kind of vessels are human beings. At birth we sail on a voyage, which by rights cought to be security years long. But how many of us continue on the Sea of Life that long? Very few compriatively. Most of us go down sooner. Why? Because we recklessly, carelessly, or ignorantly waste the stock of wital force with which Nature endows us at the start. There are no meat shops or bikeries on the Atlantic, nor are there any places after birth where we can beg or buy more "life." This is perfectly plain to me. Is it plain to you? I am afraid it isn't. Let's see whether a little incident will throw light on it.

Mr. Henry Fish had been a fortunate man. His forbears had done well by him. Up to the Autumn of 1890 he could say, "I have always been strong and healthy." For thirty years he had worked as a painter for one employer. He must have been not only a healthy man, but a good punter. So far his "virality," his constitution, had been equal to all demands on it. It had endured a lot of haid work, resisted the weather, and digested his food. Then it telused to go on. I tstuck work. It wouldn't make sail or pull an oar. In plain English the symptoms or signs of the trouble were these: Loss of appetite, bad taste in the moath, terrible pains after eating, yellow eyes and skin, and rheumatic gout in the feet. His legs and stomach became fearfully swollen, and his heart palpitated and thumped flightful y nearly all the time. On account of the distress given him by solid food he could only eat slops, and not much strength can be got out of them.

By-and-by the best he could do was to hobble about on circlestering down. For over a month he snatched what sleep he could when

By-and-by the best he could do was to hobble about on crucinethe could not be abed at all, because he couldn't draw his breath when lying down. For over a month he snatched what sleep he could when supported upright on his crutches. Just think of that, and be transkul it wasn't your case. He wasn't able to lift his hand to his mouth, and had to be nuised might and day. He got so low (in spite of dictionattending him) that he didn't expect to live, and didn't desire to. One attending him) that he didn't expect to live, and didn't desire to. One doctor said he had heart disease, and that his heart was big as a bullock's which was nonsense. During all this illness Mr. Fish had a professional nurse from a convalencent home. When he had wank so low as to make it a wonder how he kept alive at all, he first heard of the medicine which finally cured him. In concluding his letter he says, "After beginning to take Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup I never looked behind me. I got stronger every day, and have alled nothing since. This medicine sived my life, and I want the public to know it (Signed) Henry Fish, Great Malvern, County of Worcester, January 12th, 1803;

Only a word more. We spoke of men and women being like ships that have to sail to the end of the voyage with what supplies they start with. By that we mean, not supplies of food, but supply of power for digest food. You see the difference? Bread and meat are no better than lead and leather if you can't digest them. In Mr. Fish's case it was not food that falled, but power to we st. He had indigestion and dyspepsia. The wonderful remedy discovered by Mother Seight Stopped the waste of virality caused by the disease, and enabled Nature to use food to build up the periaining body. He will now proceed, we hope, towards the port of Old Age, with favouring winds. Yet, save for timely ressue, he would doubtless have gone down, as millions do, leaving but a momentary eddy over the spot where they disappear.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ,

Wholesale Stamp Deater. Established 1880. 61, Regent Street, London W. Bankers: The London & County Bank.

IN THE PRESS

To be published in October 1895

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU Ö. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, C.S.

The volume, uniform with Mooketjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia, I. A portrait of the Doctor.

2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes and ana.

- 3. About 225 pages his brilliant pen.
 4. Selections from his correspondence. About 225 pages of original essays from

To registered subscribers paying in advance Rs. 5 To other subscribers and ordinary purchasers

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Olders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Street, Calcutta.

Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" will be communicated with.

To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,— Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque · has been remitted per-money order

GENUINE HOM(EOPATHY.

To be legibly (Name.....

A CARD. Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M S. Homwopat/ic Practitioner.

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutta.

Lady Eliott Portrait Memorial

Committee | W. O. Bell-Irving Alian Arthur S. E. J. Clarke H. H. The Maharaja Darbhanga, K.C.LE Hon. Justice Beverley Hon. C. E. Buckland W. D. Cruicksnank
Baron Gaerter
Col. Hailes, 6th B I.
E. F. Longley.
A. Macdonald
C. Moore. David McLaten Morri- Hon P. Playfair.

David McLaten Mottison
A.F.M. Abdur Rahman
J. O'B Saunders
Mahanja Str J. M. Tagore, K.C. S.I.
PRESIDENT—Allan Arthur.
HON. TREASURER—J. O'B. S unnders.
HON. SECRETARY—David McLaten Morrison.
At the meeting of Committee held at the Chamber of Commerce on the 19th January,
it was decided to have a picture of Lady Elliont painted, any surplus to go towards a personal present.
All subscriptions to be sent to the
HON. TREASURER,

HON. TREASURER, 9, Hare Street, Calcutta.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdair Balakhana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, NAYIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayuvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, As-thma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c, including dis-eases brought on by inegularities and indis-cretions of diverse kinds. Catalogues, con-taining full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Teles, on receipt (by post) of full ac-counts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

every quarter,

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARIEE.

Rs. As.

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption,
Wills &c.* Price 16 o

"No student or practitioner should vithout a copy of this GREAT Work.

(Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas," Bengali translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshara,† Price ... Bengah Translation of the Dattaka-chandrika,† Price ... The Evidence Act with notes in

The Evidence Act with notes in Bengali,† Price
The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengali,† Price
Principles of Zemindari Management and Book-keeping in Bengali
First Lessons in English for Bengali boys, Price
Bharat Sasan Pranali* ... 0 4

IN THE PRESS

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

CONTENTS.

Historical Analysis of the evolution of

religious systems.

Definition of the term "religion,"
The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new. ligion and their solutions, old and new.
(a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tor-

(b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the sacrifice of animals,

The art of becoming a prophet.

The cumulative effect of hardswearing for ages, Specimens of Puranised history Brahminical and Christian priesteraft compared. The artificial miseries of men caused by

religion.

Tyranny and taxation of religion.

Tyranny and taxation of religion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.
The great prophets of the world and their doings.
Probable origin of the Saiva religion.
Tantice mysticism and abonitington.

Tantric mysticism and abomination

* To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink &

† To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradham Agency, No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutta.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally ad-A RE universally ad-mitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Billous and Nervous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Sto-math, Sick, Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizzness and Diow-siness, Cold Chills, Flushmos of Heat Los-Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appente Shormess of Breath, Costiveness.

Scurvy, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dieams and all Nervous and Sieep, Frightful Dreams and all Nervous and Frembing Sensation, &c. The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes

Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one box of these Pills, and they will be ac-knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are to valuable, as a few doses of them carry off at valuable, as a few doses of them carry off at homours, and bring about all that is required No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beecham's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon testion females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use. For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

human machine.

The Natives of India will find Beecham's Pills the finest medicine ever introduced to their notice; the European residents also will had them of great value for cooling the blood. For throwing off fevers and prevening inflammations in hot climates, they stand without crival.

These are Eacts testified continually by These are Facts testing continuous to members of all classes of sourcet, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Delintated is, BEECHAM'S PILIS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy for Coughs in general, Ashma, Bronchial Affections, Houseness, Shortness of Bieath, Tightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheezing, &c, these Pins standard unit valled. Let any person give Beecham's Cough Pills a trial, and the most violent Cough will in a short time be removed.

Beecham's Tooth Paste

Will recommend itself being efficacions and economicals, it is packed in near airtight collapsible Tubes.

NOTICE—G. Atherton & Co. will following rates, size 9/2d, at 8 annas per box, 1-1/2d, size 12 annas per box, 25, 9d size 2 tipres per box; Tooth Paste 12 annas per Tube, these rates do not include the cost of postage which will be added to the amount,

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET CALCUTTA.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF MEMORIAL FUND. I. His Highness The Maharaja or Dur-His Highness the Nawab of Junagath, Vizier to the Nawab of Junag an ... 305 Maharaja Bahadur Sir Joundra Mohan Tagore, K.C.S.I. ... 250 Babu Jodu Lal Mullick ... 200 Messrs, Mackingon Mickenzie & Co. 200 Prince Wala Kidr Syed Hosein Ali Muza Bah idui ... 150 Shijani Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab Syed Zamui Abdin Khan Bahadur Feraz Jung ... Raja Peary Mohan Mookeijee, C.S.I. 100 The Houble Mr. Justice Chandra Madhab Ghose ... 100 Prince Muza Su Jahan Kadar Bahadur, K.C.I.E., ... The Hon'ble P. Playfar... ... 100 ... 100 ... 100 23 Baneijee The Honble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose Sir Romesh Chandra Muter, Kt. ... Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan Bahadur, C.S.I. ... Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Trevelyan The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar 20. Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of 30. Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C.I E., Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Jahandar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Mirza The Hon'ble W. C. Bonnerjee Nawab Syed Ameer Husein Syed Nurul Huda, Esq., C.S., Hakeem Gholam Raza Khan L. G. Ritchie, Esq., C.S. 50 50 J. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S., ... Su Alexander Miller ... • • • 39. F. J. Rowe, Esq. Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Bahadur, ... Kuma Radha Prosad Roy Kumar Dinendra Natain Roy Babu rPashupatty Nath Bose Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy ... Raja Sir Soumdia Mohan Tagore, 57. 58. Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry ... Aukhoy Kumar Gnose ... Moulvi Imadd Al: ... Rai Sub Chunder Nundy Bahadar ... Rai Sub Chunder Nundy Bahadar ... Chowdry Mahouned Aijamand Khan H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-law Moulvi Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed, Khan Bahadur ...

73.	A. H. Giles, Esq		16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq., C.S.	•••	16
	The Hon'ble Moulvi Strajul	Islam	1
75.	Knan		16
_,	Moulyi Serajudeen	•••	15
76	Monte Serajanueen		15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,		10
7ď.	H. A. D. Pattips, Esq., C.s.	•••
79.	Baboo Karan Chunder Roy	•••	10
δú.	E. N. Biker, E.q	•••	10
81.	Baboo Doyal Chand Bose	•••	10
83.	" Madan Mohun Bose	•••	10
83.	" Kanai Lai Khan		10
	Moulvi Syud Akram Hossain		01
84.	Moulvi Aziz Ahmud		10
85.	MOUNT AZIZ AMMON	•••	10
80.	Ru Kinyelal D-v Bihadoor		10
87	H Homwood, Esq	•••
88	Babu Harry Monna Chunder	•••	10
89.	Baboo Chakkanlal Roy	•••	5
00	Sarodapiasad Guose	•••
′ s	abscriptions will be mankfully	received	by House ary Joint S-cretaties,
15 71	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHADI	JR,
1.576	4, British Indian Street,	Calcutta
	and A. F. M ABDUR RAHM	AN. ESO.
	and A. F. M ABDOR RAMA	- 11 AW	,

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATOH. Rs.

16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, mickel silvero, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dal, for Rs. 7 V. P. With an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more man 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily reparable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal Rulway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps silendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Autilery from Poonamillee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Reg. from Duindum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patia Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electric cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubbes, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0 Mr. G. Smith, Sil Inspectio from Sanikutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ting at Rs. 50 and tuby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with exitas and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13 Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infancy from Punadhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Seage int for Rs. 28 x Pte. H. C Bishop of L F. L. Rg. from Kamptee says:—A Corporat offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open taced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with exitas and quaranteed for 3 years.

How the exitas and full three years' guaranteed to be of teal soud gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay pet V. P. P. Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, mickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY

CATARRH

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the hining membrane of the nose and eustachian tibes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distnessing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment its sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by AUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St.

10 Scientific American. diseases are contagious, or that they are

Barrister-at-law 20

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure reites from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helolessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, IUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHL, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most curonic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you. In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

Remew of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If pard in advance, 11	para in auran	· · · ·

1 early		•••	•••	K.	12
Haif-yeart	ÿ	•••		,,	7
Quarterly	•••				4
Montais		•••		Κŧ	1.8
Single or	lamı	e Copy	•••	Ans.	o-8
	lı r	ot paid in adv.	nce,
Yearly		·	•••	Rs.
Half-year	y			11	10.8
Quarterly	٠				ó-o
Monthly			•••		2-4
Single or	samp	le Copy	•••	Ans.
No aud	ittona	a charge for pe	ostag	e or p	eor.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches 10 the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (barriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 689.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

- ، وعبوه ،--

SIR WALTER RALEIGH:

THE THOUGHTS AND FEFLINGS WHICH LED HIM TO PROPOSE HIS SCHEME CONCERNING EL DORADO.

SCENE—The tower, with a lattice that does not admit a view of the rising or setting sun.

'Γ is long since I have seen the pilgrim-sun Gird up his garments for the dusky day, His locks wreathed tight about his decent brow : 'T is long since I have seen them shaken out Upon his shoulders -when the modest youth Reels to his couch, like tired Bacchanal; The rich clouds hanging glory round his path. But something I can see-the comely moon, With well-filled born, shines in a summer sky That grows not dark till morn !- now like a bow Drawn by aërial archer-yon bright star, An arrow that hath parted from the string, Is on its way-and now she is a bark Ploughing a summer sea, so calmly blue ! Such as round fairy islands of the west Flows breathlessly. Ah! that such bark were mine. This prison, smaller than a cabin, hath No such sweet progress; in its aims we sleep For ave forgotten as in Death's small crib. Its profitless confinement bears not onward ! Hark ! there are merry tones of children round me, Music that steals as from the gate of heaven To hell's deep womb-huge fireworks that mimic Those strange appearances by Genn wrought Amid autumnal clouds-cities in flame, And men that fight and die. You coloured lamps Outrival dew-drops of the morn, or gems Deep in the earth. Oh! that I could wring out From demon-miners treasures hid in vain, Like love in the sick hearts of pallid nuns. Could I but bear some here, forgiveness, fame, Might dance around me-better far than these, Action, that tide that stirs the stagnant blood-Courage that thrown upon a dung-heap mounts Once more its fiery horse. What do I here? I have schooled my boiling thoughts, and learnt and taught What meek-eyed sages tell, with rocky brow, And hearts that beat calm as an infant's breath-I had given back my birthright, but for whom? Not to the winds-not to thee, marble death !

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure the Deafuess, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Yet thou hast trampled on it-thou hast rent The precious crucible in which 't was poured; Thou hast enclosed within a narrow tomb A spirit linked with mine Six months ago And I was busy as a clerk could be Conning the golden past, whence fancy mounts, And feeding for his roots a noble stream -Now 'tis a river locked within a cave. Having no egress. Now I weave no more The mingled web of acts and lessons wise. Six months ago, and he was like a bee. Sucking in nectar from the flowers that lay Opening beneath my sun, and giving back The honey of sweet praise, and dearer love. And dearest sympathy. I was to him A lofty hill, around whose storm-swept peaks His thoughts like clouds might gather ;-he is gone-I was not near to soothe his dying head . And yet my cordials, drawn from many an herb, Sedulously sought in days of liberty. On home and foreign shores, relieved thy pain The very hour before thy soul took flight. Sweet noble prince! who even so carly learnt The combat between subject, filial love, And sense of right-a royal love of greatness. The serpent breeds the eagle, and some say It stang him too -may God forgive the thought ! Sweet moon, thou'rt shining as thou shon'st that night Upon his torch-lit funeral-lighting now His sister's bridal train -it fonows quick -The nation's tears are dry -- my will of grief Is what it wis. My land, too, it is gone. The scenes of pleasures sweet, and graceful toil -My walks and stately trees, given to a thing Polluting what it crawls o'er; and I begged, I sent my gentle wife to beg in vain-That his fair dawn might not be clouded o'er With such a veil -that his free hand might pause Ere it cut down the old paternal tree, Yielding its fruit to feed my little ones,

(His wife enters)

My own Elizabeth! the time seems long
That thou hast left me - wert thou gazing down
Upon this pageant city—dost thou, too,
Forget the grave, and him who sleeps therein?
My thoughts have ranged over all pist, all future;—
I thought ou thee, when for thy sake the first
I slept within a prison's wills, and knew
Its gloomy leisure, and of our sweet babe
That, like a flower in a dark cavero, cheered
The blackness of the place—and of this king,
A sterner master in his boyishness

^{*}Prince Henry, for whom Raleigh wrote his "History of the World."

Than our old prudish mistre Whom the domestic charities No lessons of sweet wisdom. Of freedom, my beloved !-A pastoral cot within a lone No : England's woods may Over my brows ; and quiet Companions for the wild at heart Vast wealth, bright mines of gold, and beauty strange, That will not dom more eyes with girlish tears, Where deep and boundless rivers teach to flow /A nobler tide within the human heart, And mountains, standing like Omnipotence, Rise above earthly things ! My boy, too, goes-My gallant Walter !-either to wreath his brow As trees in their young spring, or die wrapt round In his first glory. Thou, my dear, wilt live With our young poet René-let him dream Of glorious cities, and untrodden seas, And beauteous monsters-only named so, Because their forms, like angels, are not known ; And let him hang above thee as a bow Over the Autumn woods, whose changing leaf Hath glory, beauty, tenderness, not seen In their rich prime. Now leave me, my beloved. I write a letter, worded cautiously. To this royal pedant, hung with golden phrase Of wealth, to tempt his pleasure and his pride!

WEEKLYANA.

JAPAN is on the highway to fame as a military Power. She has beat China in war, and is inventing weapons of destruction. After years of experiment, one of her sons has perfected a new rifle and obtained permission to manufacture it. The weapon to said to have five advantages over any rifle now in use in Japan, namely, (1) its reduced weight and easier action; (2) less powder is required than for any other arm of equal power; (3) 175 rounds can be fired in the same time or 75 more than from any other gun; (4) the manufacturing cost is less; (5) while the existing rifle cannot be discharged when even a trifling obstacle gets into the lock, the new one can be fired even in sand, and the barrel will not burst if 80,000 rounds be fired from it.

THE Legal Practitioners' Act is being amended. The Law Member has introduced a Bill for better and speedier suppression of law-touting. It is proposed to empower the High Courts to suspend or dismiss any pleader or mooktear found guilty of unprofessional conduct and authorize the District and Sessions Judges and Commissioners of Divisions to punish, in the same way, revenue agents, pleaders or mooktears who are found or reputed to be habitual dalals or law touts, the suspension or dismissal by these autnorities being subject to an appeal to the High Courts.

...

The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab strongly supported the measure. He said that professional men generally looked on the habit of touting as most mischievous. Whatever the stringency of the law, the practice will continue, for it has support in high quarters supposed to be above low practices.

THE Code of Criminal Procedure is also to be tinkered. The object of the Bill introduced for the purpose by Sir Alexander Miller is stated to be " to give effect to certain recommendations made by the Commission appointed to enquire into the trial by Jury system." From a telegram in the Englishman it appears that all the recommendations have not been accepted. Among other things, it is proposed to empower Judges to require from jurors, either before or after, or both before and after, the return of their verdict, separate guidings on issues of fact. Without the Bill and the speech of the Law Member which have not yet reached Calcutta, it is too early to speak on the subject. We only hope the system of trial by jury will not be undermined in view of its abolition at a future date.

THE Government offices will close at Sunla on the 2nd November reopening at Calcutta on the 4th.

YESTERDAY, at the Town Hall, Lord Sandhurst was installed District Pro-Grand Master of Freemasonry in Bombay and its territories The ceremony was completed, as in all British gatherings, by a banquet at which two hundred brethren weie present,

The High Court has quashed the conviction in the Budh Gya temple case. Both the Judges hold that no offence was committed under section 296 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the worship of Dharmpala and his associates was not lawful.

WE had a hero of 132 fights in Calcutta. There is now a slayer of 12 panthers in the Vizagapatam Agency Tracts. The young Maharaja of Jeypore, a pupil of Mr. Marsh, writes to a contemporary

"On Monday, the 22nd ultimo, at IP. M., I received news from Sanokandi, a village 5 miles from Jeypore, that a panther had killed a cow the previous night. I started at 4 o'clock; but, owing to bad roads, did not arrive before 6 o'clock. I got into the machan that had been prepared for me at 7 o'clock. There was very heavy rain, and the night was very dark. The panther came at 8 o'clock. I heard the noise of the panther feeding on the kill, and, aiming at the spot I judged the panther to be in, I fired, and luckly struck the beast on the right sale. He roared when he was struck, and ten about 50 cm. judged the panther to be in a tirred, and to carry states the beast on the right side. He roared when he was struck, and ran about 30 yards. It was too dark to follow him that night, but next morning the villagers It was too dark to follow him that night, but next morning the villagers found him dead, and brought his carcass to my fort. It measured 7 feet 5½ inches. On Tuesday, the 23rd denn, I received khubbar at 3 o'clock that a painther had killed a uog in the village of Unite, 3 miles from Jeypore. As on Monday it was raining hard and very dark, so I had to judge from the crunching of the painther where he was 1 got into the machan at 7 o'clock, and had to wait till 9 o'clock for the painther. As on the former occasion I had judged accurately, so I was again fortunate enough to send a bullet into the shoulder, which killed him on the spot. The painther measured 6 feet 10½ inches. I came home at 10 P.M. On Thursday, the 25th dem, at 3 o'clock khubber of another kill by a painther at Kokahandi, another village near Jeypore, reached me. I started at 4 o'clock. Here the kill was near a house, so a machan was not necessary. I took my station in the house, and loop-holed the wall facing the kill. The painther came at 9 o'clock. The night was clear, so I had a good aim I fired and seni a bullet right through the head. The painther fell at once and never moved. It was 6 feet 5 inches long. I returned home at 10 o'clock. I have now shot 12 painthers."

The Maharaja is still very young and may yet outnumber the

The Maharaja is still very young and may yet outnumber the fights of the hero. It is to be desired that under Mr. Matsh's tuition he will prove more than a good shot in the dark, and smell rats as well as panthers.

FOR valuable assistance rendered in conciliating the rival religious factions in the town of Yeola, the Governor of Bombay in Council has conferred on Gapairao Shivdeo, Rajah Bahadur, of Malegaon, a Second Class Sardar of the Deccan, the dignity and status of a Sardar of the First Class.

MOUVI A. Q. M. Noorul Alam, of the Calcutta Mediessah, has addressed the following circular to the parents and guardians of the students of that institution :-

"The undersigned begs to remind the parents and guardians of the students attending the English Department of the Calcutta Madrasah, the Alma Mater of the Mahomedan Education in these Provinces, and now a century old, that the total absence of religi Provinces, and now a century ord, that the total absence of rengious training at school or at any other place renders young minds free to adopt the views and habits of others, without knowing whether those ideas and habits are consonant with the tenets of Islam. Obstacles to the advancement of Religious Education exist. whether those ideas and habits are consonant with the tenets of Islam. Obstacles to the advancement of Religious Education easily both at school and at home—at school, because the University dispenses with religious training; at home, because it has prescribed a course of subjects in learning winch Indian students can spare but little, if any, time for religious education. After completing their University career, worldly cares beset them to such an extent that they feel no inclination in this direction. There is thus a great danger of a revolution in the religious sentiments of the rising generation. The adoption of foreign ideas and customs has produced an alarming increase in disobedience and insubordination on the part of the young. The young and mexperienced led no scruple in doing actions and in eating food that are strictly forbidden by Mahomedan Law. Only recently the insubordination and irreverence of school-going boys roused the Government of accord its serious attention to the matter, and hence in 1288 and opportunity was given to the public to discuss the subject. From the report on 'Discipline and Morial Training in Schools and Colleges in India,' published by the Supreme Government, it is evident that, without religious teaching, the progress of the abovementioned growing evil will not be restrained and checked.

Venturing to attempt to remedy time state of things, by impartiture scholing in the present generation of the present generation for the measure and resource in the resource of sensors and the resource of the subjection of the present generation of the present generation of the measure the foreign and the resource of the subjection of the present generation of the present progress of the subjection of the subjection of the present generation of the present generation of the present generation of the present progress of the subjection of the progress of the subjection of the progress of the present progress of the subjection of the progress of the subjection of the progress of the present

Venturing to attempt to remedy this state of things, by imparting religious instruction to the present generation of young menturough an Utous religious book entitled Nooral Monumen, the undersigned has obtained the permission of the Educational Authorities to give religious training to the students of the Madrasah—both Sunnis and Shiris,—after school hours. But before opening a Rubgrous Class, for which the a istance and services of competent men, connected with the Madrisch (especially of Siamsul Ulama Moulvi Ahmed, the Hear-Mouro of the Arabic Denartment), have been secured, it is necessary for the undersigned to have in this connection the opinions and suggestions of the prients and guardians of intending papits. Then kind support is therefore earnestly solicited. To meet the expenses of the class a small fee of two or four annas—according to the number of pupils—will be charged."

If for the small fee, the Moulvi can reform the boys, he will have done a service to his community. The attempt is laudable. There is a general camplaint that M shomedán, like Hindu, boys are growing more and more unmannerly and impatient of discipline. They have grown so wise that they call their fathers fools.

In the village of Bankipore, in the Diamond Harbour sub-division of the 24-Perganas, an old man named Sham Nath Jogi has been killed by his son Sarodaprasad, a boy of sixteen years. On account of his victions life, he was ordered out of the house. The son retaliated by driving the father out of the world. He struck him with a heavy-club while smoking the hookah. The blow fractured the head and the old man died after removal to hospital.

NAWAB Vicat-ul Umra, the Prime Minister, and Colonel Mackenzie, Resident, Hyderabad, have arrived at Simla, to arrange for the visit of the Viceroy to the Nizam's dominions.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

8

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE Address in reply to the Queen's Speech was voted by the House of Commons on the 20th. The House has invalidated Daly's election for Limetick.

In the House of Commons an amendment, brought forward by Mr. John Redmond, demanding a statement of the Irish policy of the Government, was rejected by 130 votes. A motion, by Mr. Balfour, giving the Government the whole time of the House for the rest of the Session, was adopted by a originity of 148 votes.

MR. CURZON, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, replying to Mr. Carson, said it would be impolitic to raise the question of an indemnity to families of British subjects murdered at Kucheng until the marderers had been punished, which was of primary importance. The Commission to enquire into the missacres has arrived there and several important arrests have been made. Reuter's correspondent at Hongkong telegraphs that the Prefect attached to the Commission and the Chinese officials at Kucheng refuse to permit the British and American Consuls to be present at the examination of the prisoners. The Consuls have protested, and the matter has been referred to the Viceroy. The Times' correspondent at Hongkong reports that the soldiers are plundering the people, and more incendiary placards have been posted in Canton. The latest news is that an armed mob has wrecked the Chapel and school house of the American Mission near Foothow. The populace are parading the streets with the cry "Drive out the foreign devils."

Mr. Curzon, in reply to another question, said that the Government was not informed of the terms of the Franco-Chinese Convention, which is still unratified: but Her Majesty's Government would take the necessary steps to prevent any disregard of Chinese engagements to Great Britain in reference to the territory affected by the Convention.

In his maiden speech in the House of Commons, Mr. H. M.

Stanley supported the Uganda railway scheme, saying it would be impossible for the British to evacute Egypt until the Soudan was restored to order, and that it would be necessary to extend the Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

Uganda railway to Wady Halfa. Mr. Curzon, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, replying to several questions, said that, with the fullest reserve, the Government had addressed France regarding her movements on the Nicer. He was apparent of the despatch of any F each expedition to Equation: With regard to Egypt he said the time had not yet arrived to reconsider the question of the evacuation of that country by the British, and the Government were not prepared to announce their policy in connection therewith, He then referred to the Buffer State question in Northern Siam, and said that the Government policy in Kincheng and the country beyond the Mekong would be the same as Lord Risebeiv's. With reference to Sum, Mr. Curzon said that the object of Government would be to vin ugate British interests, and safeguard the integrity and autonomy of the Siamese. Government, and see that China granted to Burna the same advantages as those accorded to Tonquin.

LORD Lansdowne, Secretary for War, stated in the House of Lords, on Augst 19, that Lord Wolseley would succeed the Duke of Cambridge as Commander-in-Chief on the 1st of November. The conditions of the appointment were being considered, the Government having reserved the liberty to make any necessary changes.

IT has transpired that when he was received at Windsor, the Shabzada communicated to the Queen a request that the Amir should be officially represented in London by a diplomatist, but an unfavourable reply was made. The Pince leaves England next week, and will stay in Paris for a few days. He will embark on the Clive at Marseilles about the 9th of September.

THE Times regards the statement made by Lord Salisbury in regard to Armenia as an emphatic warning to the Sulian that, unless reforms are introduced, it will be improbable that the Powers will continue to guarantee Turkish autonomy. But the Portes seems resolved and has again rejected the demand of the Powers.

A MERTING of members of the House of Commons who are favourable to currency reform was held, on August 16, under the presidency of Sir William Houldsworth, and a resolution passed forming a committee of the House of Commons to promite an international silver conference.

A SERIOUS boiler explosion at an hotel in Denver, Color do, caused the collapse of the building, which catching fire was burned. Fifty persons are reported to have perished.

SEVENTFEN THOUSAND jute workers at Dandee have struck for higher wages and are idle

THE Channel steam of Section, when nearing Newhaven, foundered, after being in collision. Facility was 300 passengers on board, all of whom were saved.

An official despatch from General Darmeson, dated the 12th instant, just published, states that he has arrived on the heights near Antreba, on which the French forces are advancing. The French newspapers are very pessimistic regarding the campaign in Madagascar, and letters from their correspondents, dated the 22nd July, state that the mortality among the troops is deplorably large.

MUCH soreness is felt in Italy owing to the demonstration by France of the commercial treaty between Italy and Tunis, thereby destroying an important Italian trade

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, & ... may learn of a new, simple treatingnt, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Autal Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

A CONFERENCE of Lancashire millowners held in London has nominated a Committee to co-operate with the Parliamentary Committee against the cotton import duties in India.

THE Criminal S-ssions of the High Court will commence on Monday next, Mr. Justice Sale presiding. The calendar is an extremely light one as regards the number of prisoners, but a heavy one indeed when we consider the character of the crimes charged to Annadaprasad Ghose who will be tried for mirder and attempt at murder of his three sons and two brothers-in-law. After examining over two dozen witnesses, the Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossein Khan Bahadoor committed the prisoner on Thursday. None of the witnesses was cross-examined, the prisoner reserving his defence for the High Court. Whatever the feeling against him in native society, he may be confident of a just and impartial trial

THE High Court rises for the Long Vacation on the 10th September. With the close of the court, Mr. Justice Sale ceases to be a Judge, for Mr. Justice Trevelyan for whom he has been acting is expected to join after the holidays.

ON a representation from a number of Fellows that none of the members of the Syndicate should be appointed Examiners, it recorded a resolution to that effect so far as it was practicable. After following the principle for a time, the loophole has been taken advantage of to further advance the power of the king of the University.

The President of the Faculty of Law nominates the law examiners. For the present year he selected Mr. Allan and Mr. Casperez for the Honours examination. Two examiners have hitherto been considered sufficient and for the last two years both of them have been Europeans. The king who was admitted to the Honours only the year before last was now anxious to have the upper hand in the examination as in all other matters. A plea was started that European examiners were not Hindu lawyers, and it has been decided to appoint a Bengali. And who more fitted than the freshest from the examination? To meet any possible objection on financial grounds, he is willing to do the work, unlike a lawyer, without any fees. We are not told whether the Syndicate has passed a resolution thanking the Babu for the generous self-sacrifice in the cause of the University.

WHILE the Freemisons of Bombay were making themselves ready to instal Lord Sandhurst as District Pro-Grand Master, another worthy member of the Craft, was preparing the field for its extension in Bengal. On Wednesday, Mr. Skrine, the Officiating Collector of Customs, read at the Hall of the Society for the Higher Training of Young Men. an interesting and entertaining lecture on Freemasonry. The chair was taken by Mr. Longley, an old member of the Brotherhood. He was modest enough not to trace the institution, like many of his brethren, to the father of mankind, but attributed to it many good things of this world. He made a distinction between a Mason and a good member of the Craft. Mr. Skrine was full of his subject. For the short time at his disposal, he could give only a rapid sketch of the rise and progress, the eclipse and regeneration of the Fraternity which his overspield Europe. The eloquence of the address was a surprise to many. Mr. Skrine's fame for ability, versatility and sympathy for the Indians had preceded him to Cilcuita. On the present occasion, he surpissed himself and many of his comperis. There were passiges in the address of an elevation of style and thythm which we do not usually find in Anglo-Indian literature. The peroration was magnificent.

"In India, he said, prospects were most hopeful. He trusted that he would see the day when every town throughout the Empire would have its little body of idents, banded together in the bonds of brotherly love. These are times, he iemarked, when all who have the welfare of this great country at heart should furget animosities and accidental difference of creed and colour, and match shoulder to shoulder in the van of progress. We are passing through a period of trinstinn, when tact and sympathy alone can reconcile claims, apparently conficing to social and political equality. Freemasonly may be made a powerful factor in unting forces which, rightly directed, would give bealthy civic life to the dense masses of ignorance and prejudice that surround us. That it is destined to thrive and develop throughout the world at large segually certain. In the age of teening populations, of a daily in creasing struggle for existence, of the ruthless oppression of the weak by the strong, the Lodge is a haven of peace for the bewildered unt in this human live. These, at least, the din of competition without sounds softly; there his eyes rest only on friendly faces: there he is conscious that all are animated by the maxim—' Every man for his brother and God for all l^m

Read slowly, the lecture would, perhaps, have been more impressive. Those who could not follow still enjoyed it, for it was an artistic piece of workmunship throughout. We give the two anecdotes related by the lecturer which heightened the interest of the audience. The first is well-known in Masonic circles. The young lady afterwards became Mrs. St. Leger, pronounced "Silinger," and her guardian was out here in India. There is no doubt about its authenticity. The other is a personal experience of the lecturer.

Speaking of the somewhat ungallant rule which excludes the fair sex from Masonic gatherings, Mr. Skiine narrated its history thus ---

"About the middle of the last century a young Irish nobleman, who was an enthusiastic Mason and Master of his Lodges had a lovely maiden sister who was endowed with a full share of female inquisitiveness. She burned to know the nature of the secret rites periodically enacted in the family dining room where the Lodge was held. So an hour or two before the time fixed for an assemblage the gul ensconced herself in the case of a tall, old clock of the "grandfather" species, which stood in a corner of the 100m. In the cramped position she heard evrything that passed at the mitiation of a recruit, and would doubtless have escaped with her ill-gotten knowledge had not her brother remarked that the timepiece had stopped, the weights and pendulum having been deranged by the pressure of the delinquent's body. He opened the case to set the clock going and stood aghast at the discovery. Then, beside himself with fury, he drew his sword and would have taken his sister's life had he not been held back by the bretnien. The funting intruder was relegated to the doorkeeper's custody, while her fate was decided. Many were of opinion that death should be the penalty, but finally milder counsels prevailed; and it was resolved that, as the culprit had learnt so much, there was nothing for it but to complete the process of initiation. And so the young lady became a Mason, and used to walk in the first line in processions of the Craft."

Again, he says .-

It is possible that Masons themselves are not aware how widely sprend is some knowledge, gurbled it may be, of the principles of their science. An incident in my own life occurs to me which appeared likely to open up a variety of curious problems. Many years ago, when Assistant Migistrate in a Fransgangetic district, I received a report from the local police of the arrival of a gang of Nuths, or G ypsies. Wherever these social plagues had halted there arose a loud and bitter wail from the villagers of missing goats and pillaged gardens. I, therefore, obtained the District Magistrate's permission to prosecute them for bad livelinood. In due course there appeared before me in the dock, imprimis, an old min the effect of whose patriarchal beard was marred by his shifty eyes, secondly, a pair of handsome impadent girls, and last, an indefinite number of children of ever type, many of whom had been, I fear, stolen from their distracted parents. After a brief enquity I discharged the women folk on their and resking to quit the district within 24 hours, detained some of the little ones for further researches, and ordered the old leader of the gang to find security in Rs. 200 to be of good behaviour for a year. I need hardly add that no bail was forthcoming. I was in the act of informing the fellow that he would have to go to fail for a twelvemonth, was a lo, he discovered himself to me as a Mason! I was struck 'all of a heap,' but duty had to be done and my brother in Ceatt' was haired away to durance vite. I pondered long on the curious discovery I had mide. How could a common Gypsy have gained a knowledge of mysteries so closely guarded? To satisfy my curiosity. I paid a visit to the jul and secured a private interview with the old Nuch. H: wis very salky and not at all inclined to be communicative, but after a little pressing, he convinced me that he was a Mason; and what is more, that he held a higher grade in the inerarchy than I did. I then niged him to tell me how he had been initiated. He glanced at me with a peculiar twinkle in his beady eves and said, 'Sahib, if I tell you all, will you let me out?' I was obliged to tell him that his release did not test with me, but with the District Magistrate, who alone had the power to cancel on order of the kind. 'Then ask the Bara Saheb,' he said, 'surely he will listen to you and let me go.' I explained that that functionary was not a brother Mison and would not look at things in the same light as I did. 'Well,' he said, 'I will not tell you anything.' And so I went away discomined; and being shortly afterwards transferred. to another district, lost a unique opportunity of discovering a wonder-

THE criminal information in the Caief Magistrate's Court against Mr. Abul Hissan, the fifth Judge of the Court of Small Cinses, for assault and battery was withdrawn. The complainant said that he had no case against the defendant and apologised for having rushed into Court for little or no cause. The matter then dropped,

WE see we have caused unnecessary pain to the relatives of Bahoo Jogender Nath Mookerjee, Vakil, High Court, N.-W.-P., mistaking him for Rajendra Lil Mookerjee sentenced to imprisonment. We had erred in the company of the Pioneer, and take the earliest opportunity to make the correction. Rijendra has been let out on bail.

MR. H. C. Ker, otherwise Babu Hem Chunder Ker, is dead and no mistake. While still in the heyday of his service and glory, the newspapers had made him dead. But he survived that paper death long to the joy of his near and dear ones and friends. He had served Government for forty long years. Commencing as a Daroga he ended as a Sub Registrar. In the interior ne was admitted to the Subordinate Executive Service and rose to be one of the two officiating native assistant Secretaries in the Bengal Oifice. He had the reputation of being an excellent officer, though blundering.

THE Statesman of the 21st August takes exception to some points in our article on the Pilgitin Ships Bill of the 3rd instant We are afraid, we have not been explicit enough. We do not think that it is a mischievous piece of legislation. We said-it is a measure in the right direction and we do not oppose the Bill for the object it has in view. The Government of India itself may not " be acquitted of culpable negligence in omitting to take proper steps to ascertain what was going on, and to place its views before the Conference." But that does not preclude any objection to the Bill when it is open to so many attacks. The remark of contemporary that the Bill confers benefits on the poor pilgrims who will have to pay more dearly, is of the nature of the argument adopted by a Government official who wanted to acquire a piece of rented land on which Government had built without permission of the Zemindar. The owner was told that he was not entitled to any additional rent on account of the construction, because it had improved his land. We are sure a slight raising of the rates of fares for pilgrim ships will not be minded. The various restrictions and petty annoyances which can only be overcome by money, stand in the way of easy occeptance of the measure. Our contemporary will, we believe, understand us when we say that hard laws are not enforceable, and therefore releat their own purpose. They are bad legislators who frame laws against the manners and customs of a people, whether religious or other, The diversion of the little money of the poor pilgrims, to procure their convenience, van only tend to subject them to more privations which nitimately may prove their death to the annoyance of others. It is the fire to argue that they are not entitled to perform the Hat. We need not repeat that the Bill aims at nothing but good. The problem is difficult—how to meet all objections—to do good without inviting evil. Nor has the Government approached the subject in a proper way The Bill is a confession of weakness and helplessness, For the principal object in view, the Bill only empowers the Executive Covernment to legislate on the matter at its covenience and in the manner to be deemed desnable.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, August 24, 1895.

THE SANITARY DRAINAGE BILL.

THE MACHINERY FOR COLLECTION.

WHEN the Road Cess Bill was under discussion in Council, the Zemindars had stoutly opposed the scheme of collecting the Cess through them. The argument that the imposition of the Cess involved and England, who fully supported the contention of the Zemindars. The memorial the landholders of Bengal addressed to the Secretary of State was rejected. It was held that all that the Government of 1793 had done was only to fix for ever the public revenue. This, it was affirmed, did not preclude succeeding Governments from imposing such local taxes on the landholders as the circumstances of the country might at any time demand. Nothing could be further from Lord Cornwallis's intentions, while he made the assessment permanent, than to absolve the landholders for ever and age from their liability as subjects to pay such taxes to the State as the State might on any subsequent occasion deem it expedient to demand from them. It was one thing to declare the land revenue permanent and quite another to affirm the absolute immunity of a particular class of subjects from future taxes of any kind. Terms more distinct than those employed in the Settlement Regulations were required before the privilege claimed by the Bengal landholders could be allowed. Besides the language of the Regulations, the Zemindars stood on their pattahs and their vernacular translates executed under official supervision. Those pattahs, with their counterparts, embodied their contracts with the State. All the duties they were required to do, from supplying rations for value to the troops passing through their estates to the reporting of crimes committed within them and the assistance they were to render to the Police in the execution of warrants or for the arrest of proclaimed offenders and suspicious characters, were laid down in them. Considering that all their profits were derivable from land, and that such profits represented the difference between the total yield and the demand of the State, any tax imposed on them would reduce, their profits as effectually as an actual enhancement of the State demand. No tax, therefore, could be imposed on them as landholders which would have the effect of reducing their profits from land. If they traded or did any business, they would certainly be liable to pay such dues as the State might demand for general or particular purposes. The whole question was argued on either side with great ability. Unfortunately, the decision was pronounced not by independent judges but by one of the parties to the controversy. From the nature of things, the decision could not but be viewed as an act of power instead of being a judicial pronouncement. The Government treats the question as finally closed, while the landholders always press their contention whenever projects are launched forth for touching their pockets, and will do the same till the end of the chapter.

Finding that there was little probability of winning their case, the representatives of the Zemindars, when the Road Cess Bill was on the legislative anvil, directed their energies to oppose the machinery proposed for collection of the Cess. The Zemin dars were sought to be made responsible for the collection under the penalties attached to failure in respect of the revenue. In other words, upon failure to collect a tax imposed on others as on themselves, they were to be deprived of what belonged to them and which they held under an altogether different tenure. Under all civilized Governments dero-gations are scarcely to be noticed from the principle a direct infringement of the Permanent Settlement of 1793 was scouted by the executive of individual responsibility. The State levies an imposition on A and B. A discharges his obligation lawyers, however, were found, both in India duly, B does not. That A after having discharged charge by B of the obligation imposed on B, involves an utter reversal of every enlightened principle of rule. In no other country would such legislation be possible. The selfishness involved in the scheme was audacious. It was not proposed to arm the Zemindars with any summary power of realization in cases of recusancy. They were to make good all deficits in the collection. The ordinary good all deficits in the collection. The ordinary Civil Courts were pointed out to them, with their slow procedure, for pursuing all recusants.

No juridical argument could be urged for justifying such legislation. The sovereign authority can impose any obligation it likes on the subject so long as that obligation is one whose discharge would depend on the will of the individual burthened with it. The imposition of legislative obligations on any other principle would be absurd. The law might call on A to pay and enforce its call with a penal sanction. To require A, however, to see that B willingly obeys a call made on B and attach penal sanctions to the requisition, would be converting A from a free subject or citizen into something more than a servant of the State. The status would be an unnatural one, A State servant might lose his situation for inability to make others comply with the demand he has it in charge to enforce. But no Government ever thinks of realising from him sums he fails to collect. The taxgatherer is, at least, free to resign his situation and, toregoing his wages, save what he has as his own. Not so the Zemindar. The proposal, therefore, to utilize the Zemindar's agency for the collection of dues imposed on others, involved an exercise of power that was entirely unwarranted. No precedent could be urged in favour of the plan, drawn from the example of enlightened legislature, ancient or modern. The fact is, the project implied a degree of legislative recklessness that was simply astounding.

The Zemindars have always been distinguished for loyalty. The object Lord Cornwallis had in fixing the land revenue for ever and making it independent of administrations with their incessant changes of personnel, was not simply to protect the rayyets from wilful exactions by giving a permanent interest to the proprietors, but to create a body of sturdy supporters of British rule in India. Lord Cornwallis had the fullest sauction of the Court of Directors as also of the Ministry of the day. There can be no doubt that he sacrificed a portion of the State dues, but, considering the circumstances under which that sacrifice was made, tew could challenge its wisdom. The landholders of Bengal have not falsified the anticipations indulged in their creation. Their loyalty to British rule has never been questioned. From a company of merchants playing the sovereign under royal charters, British rule has developed into right imperial proportions. It may no longer need a landed aristocracy with interests thoroughly identified with its own. After, however, a hundred years of British rule, at a time of profound peace, the Mutiny burst forth with all its horrors. The whole of Gangetic India was ablaze. They, however, who had any stake in the country in the form of property, were found to range themselves on the side of order. Some of the large landholders gave substantial help to the Government. Smaller landed proprietors chose at least to stand neutral. Very few amongst the landed classes cast in their lot with the rebel cause. The policy, therefore, even ratna and corrected by Ishan Chandra Bandyapadhya. Calcutta-his own should be held responsible for the dis-lat the very height of British power in the East, to burden the landholders with vexatious obligations for the sake of a small advantage to the State, can never be approved by those who wish for the permanence of British rule.

The Road Cess Act was passed. It was well understood, however, that the obligation thrust upon the Zemindars of collecting the dues of the State from the rayyets was thrust upon them with their consent. The Zemindari representatives in Council at least withdrew their opposition. Their Associations also accepted the scheme, without agitating for its reversal. The Road Cess Act, since then, has undergone some tinkerings. All these have been done for further safeguarding the interests of the State. The position of the Zemindars has not been at all improved. So far as the State is concerned, the collection of the Cess has been considerably facilitated. The Zemindars, however, continue to be sufferers. Many of them, unable to realise the Cess from recusant rayyets, particularly from holders of small rent-free lands, are patiently suffering losses year after year, without being able to recoup them by costly appeals to the Civil Courts.

It is scarcely necessity, after this, to comment on the equity of burthening the Zemindars with the obligation of collecting the Drainage Cess. However advantageous the ready agency of the Zemindar may be to the State, the scheme is utterly indefensible from every point of view. Not even was the shadow of an argument attempted in the Council for justifying it. From the Lieutenant-Governor downwards, all the Honourable Councillors expatiated on only the simplicity of the machinery, with copious thanks to the official who had first suggested its adoption.

PANDIT VIDYASAGARA.

This book is a brother's tribute to departed worth. The story of Pandit Vidyasagrr's life has been told from begin ning to end with all its details. The narrators are his younger brothers, for though written by the third brother, Pandit Sambhu Chandra Vidyaratna, the next, Ishan Chandra Banerjee, has revised the narrative carefully. The style is simple and pure with many unlaboured graces. No part of the narrative seems to flag or halt. The eloquence of the writer flows on smoothly, without any symptom of that disease of the understand ing called Furor Biographicus from which a loving and obedient brother could hardly be expected to be free while speaking of a brother whose eminence was unquestioned and whose virtues were universally allowed

The book reminds one of the observations of Macaulay on Boswell. Macaulay, in speaking of "Bozzy," has made a distinction between the author and his work. While praising the work, the critic has depreciated the author by attributing to him. on the best evidence possible, viz., his own admissions, every kind of vice that can stain a gentleman. The general inferiority of Boswell's intellect also has been the critic's theme. He has endeavoured to prove it by various references to the work-The absence of a single remark, of any originality, among the numerous observations of Boswell on men and things, seems to lend colour to the critic's contention. After all, however, Macaulay's estimate of Boswell is, to a great extent, absurd. It is impossible to believe that Boswell, who is universally regarded as the prince of literary biographers, had no art; that, in fact, he blundered into success and produced one of the best books in the [.] Vidyasagar-Jivancharita by his brother Sambhu Chandra Vidya-

English language in the department of biography, with the aid of only a strong memory and careful observation of what passed around him. Whatever the soundness of Macaulay's theory, there can be no donbt, however, that the critic's observations about the simplicity and candour of Boswell are singularly correct. "Those weaknesses which most men keep covered up in the most secret places of the mind, not to be disclosed to the eye of friendship or of love, were precisely the weaknesses which Boswell paraded before all the world. He was perfectly frank, because the weakness of his understanding and the tumult of his spirits prevented him from knowing when he made himself ridiculous. His book resembles nothing so much as the conversation of the inmates of the Palace of Truth."

. Without any of the vices imputed to Boswell, of either character or the understanding, Pandit Vidyaratna has displayed in his book a simplicity and candour that is eminently Boswellian. Many parts of Vidyaratna's narrative read like the conversation of the inmates of the Palace of Truth. Nothing has been attempted to be hidden from the reader. The heartrending poverty of the family when Vidyasagar was born, the hard labour which his father had to undergo for making the two ends meet, the various toilsome domestic offices which the ladies of the house had to discharge but which in even middle class families are entrusted to menials of both sexes, the refusal of a Brahman in tolerable circumstances to marry his daughter to Vidyasagar's father, Thakurdas, on account of the latter's poverty, the acts of naughtiness in which Vidyasagar indulged from exuberance of boyish spirits, the exultation of the family when intelligence was received of Thakurdas's having obtained an employment, with free quarters and board. at Calcutta, on a monthly pay of Rs. 2, which in those days of cheap living, when rice sold for 2 maunds a rupee, would be regarded with as much complacency as an appointment now of Rs. 15 per month, the labour that young Iswar Chandra cheerfully took upon himself, when he came to Calcutta for prosecuting his studies in the Sanskrit College, of cooking the daily food of his father, himself, and his brothers, his utter indifference to what are called the comforts of life, the spirit of endurance he showed amid privations the like of which it has been the lot of few to endure that belong to families of respectable blood, and hundreds of other circumstances, of a similar kind, have all been detailed

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

(Session 1805-06.)

Lecture by Babu Ram Chandra Datta, FCS., on Monday, the 26th Inst., at 4 15 P.M., Subject: Assentium.

Lecture by Dr. Nibratan Sukur, Mal, M.D., on Monday, the 26th Inst., at 6 to 8 P. M. Suojects: Practical Zonogy—The Pigeon: Zonogy—The Hydrozoa.

Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjee, B.A., M.B., C.M., on Tuesday, the 27th Inst., at 6 to 8 P.M. Subject: Histology—Connective Tissue: Physiology—Respiration.

Lecture by Baon Rim Chandra Dutta, F.C.S., on Wednesday, the 8th inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Gold, Platinum and Aluminum.

Lecture by Babu Rijendia Nath Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, the 28th Inst., at 7-30 PM Subject. Boyle's law; its application and Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, on Thursday, the 29th Inst, at 7-30 P.M., Subject. Magnetic Induction; Laws of Magnetic Force. Lecture by Baou Rain Chandra Datta, F.C.S., on Friday, the 30th Inst, at 4-15 P.M. Subject: Chromium and Iron.

Lecture by Dr. Nitratan Sarkar, M.A., M.D., on Friday, the 30th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject: Chemical Physiology—Carbo-Hydrates.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAI. SIRCAR, M.D.,
Honorary Secretary.

with an artlessness that is almost amazing and that enhances the reader's esteem for the narrator, considering that the latter, as a brother of the whole blood, is as much exposed as his subject to the gibes of thoughtless vanity in thus drawing aside the veil. Many transactions, again, in which others were actors, have been described with a simplicity that is utterly inconsistent with that conventional respect for eminence which characterises even the least worldly of men and that reserve which bespeaks ordinary prudence. Vidyasagar's biography, is, in some respects, a curiosity in literature. It is a round, unvarnished account of the man and his surroundings as his biographer knew them.

Vidyasagar's ancestors were, many of them, men of learning. His grandfather was a remarkable character. He had abandoned home and friends for becoming a religious wanderer. A dream forced him back to his native village. He had dabbled in astrology. When Vidyasagar was born, he predicted that the child, in all his life, would display a bull-like doggedness of resolution in every thing to which he would set his hand. Irresolution would never be one of his weaknesses. Believers in astrology would find a confirmation of their faith in Vidyasagar's life-story, for the prediction of the grand-father was abundantly verified in all the acts of the grandson. Vidyasagar received the rudiments of his education in the Pathasala of his native village. There he picked up his knowledge of Bengali and such proficiency with figures as might qualify him for a merchant's accountant or a Zemindar's gomasta. The extraordinary intelligence of the boy and the tather's connection with a small trading firm at Calcutta where he was an accountant, led to the boy's removal to the metropolis. In those days there were many scholarships in the Sanskrit College and Brahman boys were admitted either free or on nominal fees. Within six months of joining the College, Iswar Chandra got a scholarship of Rs. 5 per month. His scholarships enabled him not only to meet the costs of his own education but afford some help to his father. At College Iswar Chandra distinguished himself by his intelligence and thorough devotion to his studies. His was a brilliant record of success in every examination. Having joined the College on the 1st of June 1820 he left it in 1841, after a study there of 12 years and 5 months. His final certificate, under the signature of Babu Rasamaya Dutt, the then Secretary, bears date the 10th December 1841, and the subjects in which he had sequired proficiency were Grammar, Poetry, Rhetoric, Vedanta, Nyaya, Astronomy, and the Dharma Sastras, r.e., Hindu law, both ceremonial and relating to

We must refer the reader for the details of Vidyasagar's life to the book itself. We have no mind to injure the author by sum marising the story. Nor can any summary, however carefully made, afford the degree of pleasure that one is sure to derive from a perusal of Vidyaratna's pages. A review, again, of such compass as ours, is scarcely the place where Pandit Vidyasagar's services to the cause of Bengali literature, or of the remarriage of Hindu widows, or of the abolition of polygamy, can be discussed in detail. We can but briefly advert to them.

Those who think that there was no Bengali prose before the time of Rammohun Roy are certainly in error. No book might have existed, although that is very doubtful, written in Bangali prose, but then the people conducted their epistolary correspondence in Bengali prose. All legal documents, again, of transfers of property, by gift or sale, were in Bengali prose. The people talked prose, and there is no rease, to suppose that our ancestors, two generations back, talked a language different from ours. From very old times, the curriculum of the village Pathasalas of Bengal embraced Bengali composition as required for purposes of epistolary correspondence, legal documents, and orders by Zemindars to their village agents or gomashtas. Rammohun Roy, therefore, did not invent Bengali prose. His celebrated essay in which he laid down the rules which should be observed in construing Bengali prose, was necessary for the kind of prose he wrote. It was compounded of Bengali and Sanskrit, with the Sanskrit idiom predominating. If he had written as he used to speak or as others spoke, there would have been no necessity for the rules of construction he framed for comprehension of his writings. With Rammohun Roy, therefore, what began was really that sort of prose which we have discarded or are endeavouring to discard. The religious movement which was headed by Rammohun Roy collected a band of scholars around him who did much for creating the sort of Sanskritised Bengali prose, which, it was thought, was the only language consistent with the dignity of writing. The opposition which the Brahmo movement provoked employed writing for the dissemination of its views and, therefore, Bengali prose was as much indebted to it as to Rammohun Roy and his immediate followers. The early writers of the Tatwabodhim Patrika, the Pashanda Pidana, and the Pattyapradana, did much for Bengali prose. They were the real teachers of Vidyasagar whose early style was not the Bengali of Bankim but a Sanskritise-I Bengali more polished than that of the Rammohun Roy period. Vidyasagar was the father of that Bengali which lives in the pages of his Vetala panchamvingsati, and Sitar-banabasa, and Sakuntalab. Its genus was the same as that of the Bengali of the period immediately before him. Vidyasagar lived to discard that Bengali for the prose of his polygamy paraphlets which is all that one can desire from a purist's point of view. That prose is graver than the prose which is spoken by a man of culture, but its nature is not essentially different. Vidyasagar lived to forget his own earlier Bengali and write the Bengali of at least Vidyabhusan in his Somaprakasa.

August 24, 1895.

The movement about the re-marriage of Hindu widows has been a failure. Vidyasagar lived to see that failure. We can never forget the shock he gave to society in Bengal by his first book in support of the legality of re-marriage. He was answered by a host of Pandits, but there can be no doubt that he had the best of the argument on his side. The whole question. however, we think, was argued on wrong principles. It mattered little which among the host of Hindu sages whose works have come down to us had raised his voice for the re-marriage of Hindu widows. Such re-marriage had fallen into disuse for several centuries. The later Pandits of Bengal who, so far as Hindu law, both ceremonial and that relating to inheritance, is concerned, are as much revered as Parasara or Narada, do not admit the legility of such murriages. Indeed, such marriages had ceased for centuries before their time. The task, therefore, that Vidyasagar proposed to himself, wa, to prove the legality of such marriages from the ancient Dharma Shastras, could be productive of no practical results. It was at best a feat of intellectual gymnastics. The theory that the Rishis never contradict one another, and that their declarations bind the modern Hindus in all concerns of life, is only a fiction. As might have been expected, notwithstanding the large sums of money spent on it, the movement has proved a downright failure. Very few marriages have taken place. Hindu society has not recognised them, Indeed, it has exeasted them that have followed Vidvasagar.

The Pandit's attack on Polygamy was, we believe, utterly uncalled for. With the spread of English education and the difficulty of earning a livelihood, polygamy had been nearly dead when Vidyasagar armed himself against it. That was a downright waste of energy. Not one polygamous marriage has been prevented for Vidyasagar's action on the occasion. Then, again, under the numerous limitations the Rishis have allowed, their declaration against polygamy, supposing Vilyasagar's interpretation to have been correct, could not be productive of any practical results. The Hindu Shastras allow a man to take a second wife if the first wife utters a single word that is disagreeable to the husband. Matrimonial quarrels, we suppose, are as old as the date of expulsion from Eden when Eve blamed Alam for having be en weak enough to listen to he arguments or solicitations. If the Hindu Dharma Shastras are followed, the least difficulty will not be encountered by a man of marrying propensities in taking as many wives as he likes. The widest door is opened to polygamy by the verse beginning with Sadyant ipriyavidini. Some of the other limitations, agdin, are as ridiculous and absurd. A wife that brings forth only daughters may be superseded. A wife that is ill, continuously for some time, may similarly be discarded. If the Shastric declaration against polyguny was to be revived, it could not be revived without those limitations. Seriously speaking, such revival, were it possible, would only have injured Hindu society without doing it any go d This view was entoiced by Bunkim Chandra Chatterjee in his celebrated article in Bangadariana in reply to the paygime pumpilet No. II of Pandit Vidyasagar, In closeness of reasoning and pol ished banter, Chatteriee's reply came up to the standard of any of those inimitable productions with which Sydney Sinith graced the Edinburgh Review in its proud at days.

Chandi Charan Banerjee has given the world a new life of Vidyasagar. The narrative portions are mainly based on Pandit Vidyaratna's book. Several materi al errors, again, disfigure the new volume. Many of these have been corrected by Vidyaratna in a second publication called Bhrama-nirásha which forms, as it were, the supplement of his first book. Considering the savisfactory character of Vilyaritha's book, there was scarcely any need of Chanli Ciaran's publication, especially when he had very little to ald to the purely narrative portion of his subject's life. Chandi Charan was never familiar with Vidyasagar. His big volume con ains many elaborate d iscussions of topics that are only collaterally connected with his subject's biography. Without treading so closely on Vidyaratna's heels, he might have employed himself usefully by throwing these discussions together, reterring his readers for personal particulars to the earlier and more authoritative work.

TRIUMPH OF VASUDEVA.

A Review of Pandit Ram Nath Tarkaratna's" "Vasudeva Vijayam" in the Revue Critique, 13th May 1895. By M. A. Batth.

Translated especially for Rev. and Rayyes.

The correct way to present to the reader the poem of Pandit Ramnath Taikarama will be to give an analysis of it.

I. Vásudeva-Krishna reigns over the Yadavas (t-19) at Dvaravati (20-58), surrounded by his queens, among whom shines Rukmini and the new favourite, Satyabhama (59-62). To see the latter, Narada descen is from heaven (63-68). He is received by Krishna and Rukmin (60-87).

order to present it to Rukmini (48-73).

III. Lamentations of Satyabhama; she wishes to die (120); Kalavati tries to console her, and promises that she shall have her revenge (21-41). Despondency of Satyabhama, which her companions endeavour in vain to releive (42 68).

IV. On being informed of all this, Krishna goes to her. The pertum: of the Parijat flower, with which he has been impregnationally the statement of the same of the sam

IV. On being informed of all this, Krishna goes to her. The pertume of the Parijat flower, with which he has been impregnated, revives her (1-30). Krishna tenderly questions her as to the cause of her distress. Satyahhama conceals it, but one of her friends reveals it (31-35). Krishna promises to bring the Parijat flower to her (56-63). Night descends upon the reconciled pair (64-73).

V. Morning hymn of the Vaitaliks : awakening of Krishna and

V. Morning hymn of the Vaitaliks: awakening of Krishna, and Satyabhama's toilet. Morning exercises and charities of Krishna (1-25). Council of ministers. Krishna consults them how to obtain the Parijat (26-34). Gada, his younger brother, does not see any other way but one, war, which will be mere play (35-36).

The first edition, the date of which I do not know, contained only 16 cantos.

The son of Satyaka is for the employment of diplomicy (nit.), and amicable means (57-81). Krishna agrees with him. He would amicable means (57-81). Krishna agrees with hi.ii. He would send an ambassador (82-83). VI. Krishna invokes Narada, who immediately makes his

VI. Krishna invokes Narada, who immediately makes his appearance with his usual companion, Parvata (1-9). Krishna charges him to carry his message to Indra; at first to ask amicably for the Parijat; in case of refusal, to reply by a declaration of war. (10-47). Narada, who is sure of a quarrel, accepts the mission, but he loresces a refusal, and advises Krishna to prepare his army (48-55). Departure of Narada and Parvata; their journey to the Himalaya (56-68). VII. Description of the Himalaya (1-57). After having crossed it, the messengers arrive at Amaravati, the capital of Indra Narada delivers his message, but immediately follows up (52 63). the demand with a threat (64-76). Anger and refusal of Indra. Narada, all joyous, returns and makes his report to Krishna (77-89).

VIII. Krishna assembles his army, and gets on his chariot of war with Satyabhama, (1-19). March of the aimy, to which Arjuna and many other kings join themselves (20 63).

IX. The army beholds Mount Meru (1-21), traverses the sources of Ganga (22-43) and encamps on Mount Meru (44-58).

Setting of the sun and rising of the moon (58-78).

X. Sun-rise on Kailasa (1-15). Awakening of Devi; Kumara comes to salute his mother (16-24.) and of the near approach of Krishna. She had caused Lukhsim, the goddess of Fortune to come to her from Indra's heaven, by a message sent through her follower Vijavá. Lakshimi told Devi of the persecutions she had suffered at the hands of Indra for her attachment to Vishnu. Devi heiself has a wish to revenge herself for the previous contemptuous treatment of her by India, as India had refused the Parijat to her likewise, and she would like to see him humiliated. With this object she sends to him her son Kumara (25-55). Kumara disguised under the form of Vishakha and giving himself out as a messenger of Krishna, demands the Parijat in arrogant words, --which makes a struggle mevitable (56 80). Anger and refusal of Indra; kamara threatens Indra and reines (81-116).

XI. Krishna beholds Mora (1 11) Arjuna describes it to him (12 68),

XII. India consults his guru Brihaspati, who blames his pride and advises him to give up the tree (1-17). Anger and refusal of Indra (18-35). Jayanta, the son of Indra, drops in and promises victory (36-46). Indra defies Kumara, the god of War, and the General of his armies. On the advice of Briha pati he consecrites lavanta as the Generalissimo of the Devas (47 62). Sachi, the consort ladrate as the Generalissino of the Devas (47 02). Sachi, the consort Indra, sees the ceremony and the spectacle from the top of her palace; her companions, the goddesses, inform her of what is going on, and are alarmed at sinister presages (63-77). Sachi tranquillizes them. Is not Indra invincible? She goes down, emtranquillizes them. Is not index invincine r so goes down, embraces her son, encourages him and Index, and declares her intention to combat by their side.

Index conjures her to renounce her intention. She obeys, and proceeds, beyond the region of the starts, to Brahman (76-116).

Description and march of the army of the Devas towards Meru. Night comes on (117-148).

XIII. Informed by Garuda of the approach of the enemy, Krishna gives the alarm to the army of the Yadavas (1-12.) Indra harangues the Devas: he has done all in his power to prevent a conflict; today also he had declared to Garula that he was quite willing to give up the Parija, but that Krishna must consent to ask it from him with the humility which becomes a younger brother. At present there is no alternative but to fight for the good cause. He despatches Vayu, the good of Wind, as his scout

XIV. The battle commences (1-24). The exploits of Agni, of Yama, of Varuna, of Vavu, of Kubera, of Jayanta, of Bilarama, of Arjuna, of Gada, of Satyaki, of Pradyunna (25-40). Jayanta triumphs over Pradyunna, but the army of the Devas begins to give way (41-67). XV. Indra haster

Indra hastens to help. Krishna and Balarama rush to meet him (1 24). Indra flings back Balarama; but powerless against Krishna, he prepares to hurl his vajra, thunder; Krishna, on his part, gets ready to unloose his disc, the Chahra, when Brahman intervenes (25-52) Brahman's hymn to Krishna-Vishnu, the Supreme Being: May Krishna pardon! and Krishna pardons and lowers the Chakra (53-63).

Atter renewed exchange of compliments and peaceful XVI. words, Brahman disappears. Krishna offers unconditional peace (1-16). Brihaspati accepts it in the name of Indra, and invites Krishna and the Yadavas to Amaravati to ratify it. Krishna Krishna and the Yadavas to Amaravati to ratify it. Krishna accepts the invitation (17-33). Javanta remains implacable. But Indra who had remained silent, feels his pride gradually going down. At last he gives himself up to the joy of reconciliation: he re-animates the dead, and after having ordered Visvakarman, the architect of the gods to make in his capital every preparation for the reception, he mounts his chariot and proceeds there himself, with Krishna, Satvabhama, and the armies of the Devas and Yadavas (34 41). Reception at Amaravati (42-73). at Amaravati (42-73).

XVII. The next day, Krishna and Satyabhama, Indra and Sachi, the Yadavas and Devas, with Visvakarmin as their guide, go out to admire the grand exhibition (Pradatçani) of all the wonders of art and industry which Indra had, by his architect, organised in honour of his guests (1-108).

XVIII. After having enjoyed for many days the splendid hospitality of the king of heaven, the Yadavas take their leave. Each of the gods gives them the most precious article he has Indra himself gives the Parijara, about which nothing had been mentioned by him since the reconciliation. Krishna and Satyabhama mount the celestial chariot of Indra, which was driven by Matali (1-27). Return from the skies to Dvaravati. Krishna points out to Satvabhama the different regions of the Earth over which they pass in their aerial journey (28 100). Triumphal reception, and the planting of the Parijat in Dyalavati (101-113). Signature of the poet. (114 118).

The above analysis is only a summary. I believe, however, that it faithfully reproduces not only the frame-work of the poem, but also all the springs and essential motives of action, so that it will be easy for the reader, should be wish to refer to other works where the same episode is treatedly, to determine whether the subject in its entirety has lost or gained under the hand of Pandit Rimnath Tarkaratna. But I ought, at the same time, to add that such comparison will hardly be equitable. The entire design, the plan, even the subject, are equitable. The entire design, the plan, even the subject, are of the least importance here. By themselves they are of small import; they are simple themes, they are opportunities more or less favourable. The value lies in the elaboration of the details. And this the Pandit has done with extreme care and brillancy. He has shown real qualities of observation and inventive faculty in the additions made, of an intelligence which is at once supple and keen, skillul in allusions and in eathing the sabile harmony of thoses of an invention frequently the subtle harmony of things; of an imagination frequently the subtle harmony or things; or an imagination requestive accurate and always ingenious to cause a metaphor to flash out, to dress and colour the comparisons, to be lavish as regards the alankara, those ornaments which, according to Hindu doctrine, are the very soul of poesy. He likewise knows well to clothe the whole with the rich and flowery diction of the Mahakavya, the resources for which he posseses in a high degree, and to put into masterly metrical forms! Indian criticism, therefore, has given the most flattering reception to his "Triumph of Vásudeva." It has not considered the work unworthy of being placed side by side with the best works of the classical period; he has even been, in this connection, styled Kilidasa. This was probably the name of the surname of the lather of the Pandit. He has himself placed his work under the auspices of a stanza of the "Malavikagnimita," and the return from the skies to Dvaravati, in the 18th canto, is an amplificafrom the skies to Dvatavati, in the 18th canto, is an amplifica-tion of a well-known scene in Sakuntalas. I doubt, however, of his having specially received his inspiration from Kalidasa. Anyhow, he would have remained far behind his model in relative sobriety and in delicacy of taste. His diction, strain ed to exaggeration, surcharged and with long compounds, is full of assonance, allicrations, and play upon words, which, in spite of his cleverness, are made at the expense of the language, which, though remaining materially correct, loses its idiomatic vigouil. If there has been any imitation of the works

- . The author informs us that he was born in Santipui (district Nadia, Bengal) of a respectable Bridhman family, garra Bharadwaja. His father, Kalidasa Kavi, (or i⊕the name nothing but a metaphor?) --a poet like himself, was equally writed in the Smritt, in the doctrine of the Trittas, in the Nyayt, in the Minansi and in the Sankhya, and had merited the surname of Vidyabagiga. He himself had likewise composed not poem in the year 18-5 5aka, 1882 A. D., and in it pays his homage to a patron of a master by the name of Sib Chandra. -a poet like himself, was equally versed in the Smriti, in the
- † For instance, Harivansa, 122-133; Vishnu Purana, V. 30, 31, to speak only of such as are accessible in translation.
- I There are not less than 19 kinds of metres used in this poem.
- 6 Other pieces, where one can see an imitation of Kalidasa, are less characteristic, for instance, certain discriptions. have their place marked out beforehand in every Mahakavya.
- The author seems to think that every expression, (derivative, The author seems to think that every expression, (derivative, and, above all, compound) which is grammarically allowable, is, for this reason, justifiable. Has he good authority for using only Nandana in the sense of "son" (XII. 53), or for Subviva, Subwar (II. 44)? Gire and adre are synonyms of Parzata; are they still synonymes when Parvata is a proper name (VII. 39, 53, 64)? I note down here a few errors not included in the eriata...-1, 9a, omit the Pirarga; 19d, read Pindram; V. 73c, bildina...; what is the use of salvasasyayá, VI. 33d?; VIII, 19, read navibbra and uparvapari; XII. 96, macbaib; 13, 29d, mituntrya. The feeble cusuras are too frequent, for example, VII. 72a; XVIII, 24a; 33, 54c.

done it with incontestible dilettantism. India, however, easily pardons this. She has for a long time been in the habit of confounding together the state of the pardons this. She has for a long time been in the habit of confounding together the pleasure of perusal of the works of the poets and of guessing enigmas!

Per contra, to the European reader these are grave defects. Whatever he may do, how willingly soever he may endeavour to place hunself in a Hindu point of view, he will be sure to feel painfully the artificial and unpleasantly impersonal nature of poetry. He may, perhaps, think that all modern Mahakavyas must, and the sure to all modern of the models. poetry. He may, perhaps, think that all modern Mahakavyas must, of necessity, be imitation, and that a large number of old models are the same. These latter, however, he will agree to read, because they are ancient documents, but he will with difficulty resign himself to knock his head against imitations where this quality is wanting. These tatal conditions do not depend so much on the law of style, which is not so terse as to lose its clasticity, nor so as on the language itself, which a daring spirit can pass over, as on the language itself, which ties down thoughts to used forms and imposes a common bond. Nowhere is the workman subjected by the instrument with which he works to such a bondage, for the instrument here is a dead language, which, in the state in which it has to be used, has never been The unlimited richness of its vocabulary and a living one. the poverty of its syntax reduce poetical work to the construction of epithets; the propositions, in their turn, juxtapose them-selves without being subject to each other; in lieu of periods we have stanzas independent one of another. The result is a kind of patch-work, in which everything is on the same plan and of the same value, --- a discourse not woven together and without any perspective. No doubt, the language is excellent when sentences have to be brought out, and when images and comparisons have to be fashioned, and, in this respect, there are in the poem of Pandit Tarkaratna a whole respect, there are in the poem of Pandit Tarkaratna a whole assortment of delicately-worked gems. It also lends itself admirably to descriptions so long as the object is simple or when the synthesis can be made easily; the picture, for instance, of the approach of night, at the end of the 4th canto, is very beautiful. But it fails whenever the object is complex (thus the description of the Himalaya is a complete failure, and it could not but be sq), and it becomes wholly powerless in a natiation. The equivocal character of Narada cannot be grasped unless one has come across him elsewhere,—we cannot gather it from one has come across him elsewhere, --- we cannot gather it from the text; and it is not less difficult to find in the 10th canto the motives of action of Devi and Kumara. Anyhow, the solution of this enigmatical narrative appears to be placed, and, as it were smothered in the folds of some long epither, where there is every chance of not discovering it in the midst of this confusion which is nothining but a sea of epithets.

The Pandits who, from time immemorial, are addicted to the use of high rhetoric are not mere dillettantes. They always have, as a professional occupation (one or more of the Shasttas) certain rules of which the Sanskitt language is the organ. As, of old, amongst us, all literary men, whatever might be their specialities, deemed it an honour to make their essay in Latin verses, so it is-that to confirm their reputation for learning, they (the Pandits) compose poems which are, in reality, as much works of science as of imagination. The Pandit Tarkaratna is no exception to this rule. Santipur, his native village, is one of the centres of Vishnuism and Brahmanical culture in Bengal, and we have seen above that the study of many Shastras was hereditary in his family. He himself is now editing in the Bibliotheca Indica, the Sri Bhaibya---the commentary of Ramanuja of the Vedanta Sutras, -- and he is the author of two original works on these very Sutras. As a jurist, versed in the Smriti, he took a prominent part in the controversy occasioned by the Age of Consent Bill, the recent Act by which the Anglo-Indian Government tried to remedy the most crying evil of early marriage; and by his intervention in favour of the Bill exposed himself to the malice of orthodox fanaticism. Lastly, for many years, he did the major portion of the work of numbering and classifying the Sanskrit manuscripts of Bengal, conducted by the late Rajendralala Mitra, and it is, in a great measure, owing to his long and laborious researches that the volumes of the Novices, published under the the auspices of the Asiatic Society of Calcutta have become the most useful, one may say the only useful work of its kind executed in India by natives of the country. It is not necessary for me to dwell here on the disgrace which he has since suffered at the hands of this very Society, nor the controversies which this disgrace has given rise to. My sole object in describing this multifarious activity also been to show that the Pandit has not departed from the traditions of his fathers. "He has not blackened before them the face of Saraswati,", and he has remained faithful also to this tradition in composing his "Triumph of Vasudeva." In this last act of fidelity he has a double merit. In former times the profession of the poet not only brought him honour but gold of Kalidasa, it has been chiefly of the Nalodaya. But he has also. The Rijas had open hands to pay for a dedication. Nowa-days, those that have retained a shadow of power, have their Budget supervised by a British Resident; those that have sunk into private life, employ, no doubt, their funds in a more useful way, although it may be only as shareholders. There is no dedication at the commencement of the "Triumph of Vasudeava." The profession does not any longer pay, notwithstanding the renewed favour resson does not any longer pay, notwithstanding the renewed lavour now being enjoyed by Sanskrit studies in India. These studies are now pursued on other lines, and it is easy to foresee that authors of Mahakavyas will be rare in the tuture. All the more reason why they should make haste, who are curious to see how literary forms survive, and how some new elements may permeate the most petrified of these forms."

A. BARTH.

STARVED INTO MUTINY.

A FAMOUS mining on shipboard came to pass in this way : When the A FAROUS mirrory on supposite came to pass in this way: When the sing, which had sailed from London, was well down the Channel, it was found that the provisions intended for the use of the ciew were rotten and, of course, uneatable. The men complained to the captain war promised to pur into into some near port and exchange the back stores for good. He fixed to keep his word, and as the poor sailors couldn't sail the sinp 10,000 miles on empty stomachs, they killed the captain and mate, height themselves in the cabon provisions, best beautiful. condult's sail the ship. Io,000 miles on empty stomachs, they killed the captain and mate, helped themselves to the cabin provisions, held high pinks for a few weeks, and finally scuttled the ship, put off in the boars, and were all lost but three. The captain could have prevented all this file had chosen to; but perhaps the owners and he had put up the bad job on the men. Very likely, and got served out for it. They were both criminals and fools.

But there are ships that must needs sail to the end of the voyage with only the original stores. Come what may, they can't go back or put into any port. Some are well found and others badly; and so voyages differ.

To modify the illustration, the latter kind of vessels are human put into any port. Some are well found and others badly; and so voyages differ.

To modify the illustration, the latter kind of vessels are human beings. At birth we sail on a voyage, which by rights cught to be sevenly years long. But how many of us continue on the Sea of Life that long? Very few computatively. Most of us go down sooner. Why? Because we reckiessly, carlessly, or ignorantly waste the stock of vital force with which Nature endows us at the start. There are no meat shops or bakeries on the Atlantic, nor are there any places after birth whice we can beg or buy more 't/e'. This is perfectly plant to me. Is it plain to you? I am aftaid it isn't. Let's see whether a little incident will throw light on it.

Mr. Henry Fish had been a fortunate man. His forbears had done well by nine. Up to the Autumn of 1890 he could say, "I have always been strong and healthy." For thirty years he had worked as a painter for one employer. He must have been not only a healthy man, but a group pinter. So far his "vitality," his constitution, had been equal to an demands on it. It had endured a lot of hard work, resisted the weather, and digested his food. Then it refused to go on. It struck work. It wouldn't make sail or pull an oar. In plan English the symptoms or signs of the trouble were these: Loss of appetite, but daste in the mouth, terrible pains after eating, yellow eyes and skin, and themantic gout in the feet. His legs and stomach became featurily swoilen, and his heart palpitated and thumped frightfully nearly ail the time. On account of the distress given him by solid food he could only eat slops, and not much strength can be got out of them.

By-and-only the best he could do was to hobble about on crutches. He could not he abed at all, because he couldn't draw his breath when lying down. For over a month he snatched what sleep he could wen supported duright on his crutches. Just think of that, and be thankful

He could not be abed at ail, because in conduct oraw his mean when bying down. For over a month be snatched what sleep he could when supported upright on his contribes. Just think of that, and be thankful it wasn't you case. He wasn't able to lift his hand to his mouth, and had to be nursed high and day. He got so low (in spite of dictors attending him) that he didn't expect to live, and didn't desire to. One doctor said he had neut disease, and that his heart was big as a doctor said he had neut disease, and that his heart was big as a attending min) that he didn't expect to live, and didn't desire to. One doctor said he had neart disease, and that his heart was big as a bittock's winch was nonsense. During all this illness Mr. Fish had a professional nurse from a convalencent home. When he had saok so tow as to make it a wonder how he kept alive at all, he first heard of the medicine worch findly cured him. To concluding his letter he says, "After beginning to take Mother Segel's Curative Symp I never looked behind me. I got stronger every day, and have ailed nothing since. This medicine sived my life, and I want the public to know it. (Signed) Henry Fish, Great Malvern, County of Worcester, January 12th, 1893," 21th, 1893.

Only a word more. We snoke of men and women being like ships that have to sail to the end of the voyage with what supplies they start with. By that we man, not supplies of food, but supply of power to digest food. You see the difference? Bread and meat are no better man lead and leather if you could digest them. In Mr. Fish's case it was not food that fuled, but power to use it. He had indigestion and dyspepsia. The wonderful remedy discovered by Mother Seigel stopped the waste of vitality caused by the disease, and enabled Nature to use food to build up the perisoning body. He will now proceed, we hope, towards the port of Old Are, with favouring winds.

Yet, save for timely rescue, he would doubtless have gone down, as millious do, leaving but a momentary eddy over the spot where they disappear.

[.] Though the author uses here the most free metre of the

There are specimens of this kind,—a very small mumber in Vasudeva Vijayam; but the permeation is in so strong a dose, that it looks incongruous; for example, the sort of hymn to liberty, to independence, and to union, which Indra recites in canto XIII, and the universal exhibition in Amaravati. Here is seen new wine put into old bottles. One can, for once in a way, conceive of a Mahakayya having for its theme the Electric Telegraph; it will not be more modern for that.

NOTICE.

CHEQUES presented for Customs dues are always to be returned for the bankers' acceptance to be enfaced thereon with the addition of the words "payable at the Bank of Bengal."

F. H. SKRINE, Offg. Collector of Customs.

Custom House, Calcutta, August 21, 1895.

NOTICE.

AN application for clearance having recently shown "Guam," a coral formation of the Ladrones, as the port of destination of a certain Lacrones, as the port of destination or a certain steams, enquiries were made, and it was as-certained that it is an old practice to declare this island when the real destination of a vessel is to be kept secret. Shipowners and Agents are informed that it is an offence under section 63 and section 167, clause 17 of the Sea Customs Act to enter a fictitious port as that of destination in an application for cleatance, and renders the Agen-and Master in question hable to a penalty of R .. 1,000.

F. H. SKRINE. Offg Collector of Customs

Custom House, Calcutta, August 21, 1895.

FOR SALE-Calcutta Customs Annual

FOR SALE—Calcutta Customs Annual Report for 1849 45.
Two hundred folio vols., in boards, giving a complete history of the year's external trade in Bengal in about 7,000 p.ig-x of statistics Price Rs. 20 cash. Apply early to the Assistant Collector in charge of the Import Department, Custom House, Calcuta.

, POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Naive, English Colomes, are bought of India, Name, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest pirces, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by A. Welszk, Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.
61, Regent Street, London W.
Bankers: The London & County Bank.

IN THE PRESS

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE, late Editor of "Ress and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, Cs.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, will consist of about 600 pages and contain, inter alia, I. A portrait of the Doctor.

2. A Biography, illustrated by copious notes

About 225 pages of original essays from 3. About 225 pages of original essays in this british pen.
4. Selections from his correspondence.

PRICE :

To registered subscribers paying in Rs 5 purchases ... Rs. 6

After paying the expenses of the publication the sturbus will be picced wholly at the dispensal of the family of the deceased man of 10.

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Ucknor Dutt's Lane, Wellington

Press, I, Ucknor Duti's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta. Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman"

Subscribers to the Essays by will be communicated with. To ensure accuracy and avoid all mischance, some such form may be used as,—Please enter my name as a subscriber for copies of "An Indian Journalist." The amount, cheque has been remuted permoney order

To be legibly (Name.....

written Tne

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIO PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical listitutions of the

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Philmsis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities and indiseases brought on by irregularities and indiseases brought on by irregularities and indisease must full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

THE WORKS OF DR. JOGENDRA

NATH BHATTACHARIEE.

Commentaries on the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Marriage, Adoption, Wills &c.* Price ... "No student or practitioner should

be without a copy of this GREAT

(Sd.) Nana Bhai Haridas," Bengah translation of the Dyabhaga and the Mitakshara,† Pice ...
Bengah Translation of the Dattakachandrika.† Price ...

The Evidence Act with notes in Bengah.† Price ...
The Civil Procedure Code with

The Civil Procedure Code with notes in Bengal, † Price ... 4 O Principles of Zemindari Manage-ment and Book-keeping in Bengah o 10

First Lessons in English for Ben-gali boys. Price Bharat Sasan Pranali*

IN THE PRESS.

The Philosophy of Religion from the point of view of Common Sense. Price Rs. 5.

CONTENTS

Historical Analysis of the evolution of Historical Analysis of the evolution of religious systems. Definition of the term "religion." The problems of the philosophy of religion and their solutions, old and new. (a) Why do Hindus believe in ten Avatars or incarnations including in the series three that are believed to have series three that are believed to have appeared in the shape of a fish, a tortorse, and a boar.

(b) Why is it that all ancient systems recommend the sacrifice of animals, and the burning of ghee or incense.

&c. &c. &c. &c. &c. The weapons offensive and defensive of religious teachers.

The power of fine words.
The art of becoming a prophet.
The cumulative effect of hardswearing for ages.

Specimens of Puranised history.

Brahminical and Christian priestcraft compared. The attificial miseries of men caused by religion.

religion.
Tyranny and taxation of religion.
The good man's adversity is the sharp man's opportunity.
Swindling as a fine art.
New Superstitions that may be suggested for the benefit of the priests.

The great prophets of the world and their doings.

Probable origin of the Saiva religion.

Tantric mysticism and abominations.

* To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink &

Co., only.

+ To be had of Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., and also at the Suradhani Agency No. 11, Raja Nabakrishna's Street, Calcutta.

CAUTION!

IT having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are lequested to see that the retail prices, (viz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 ahnas or 1s. 11/2d. and Rs, 2 or 2s. 9d.) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really ate.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Buima and Cevlon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUTTA.

NOTICE.-Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies, the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee rates plus V P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

BY SARADA PRASAD BANERIEE. SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE For 1895.

Having the largest sale of all similar works,

ENGLISH PREPARATORY COURSE

FOR 2nd & 31d CLASSES

This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th Classes.

INDIA READERS NO. 1 FOR 6th & 7th CLASSES.

These books are of remarkably simple style

and quite suited to Indian students.

The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P. and Oudh, the Punjab, Madris, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Burma, invited to the above publications of un que merits.

erits.
To be had of
S. K. LAHIRI & Co.,
College Square, Calcutts.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF

	MEMORIAL FUND.	n .
3.	His Highness The Maharaja o Dui-
3.	hhanga K.C.I.E.,	2,000
	anagram, G.C.LE., His Highness the Nawah Bahadur of Moorshedabad, Amirul Omra, G.C.I F	,000
3.
4	G.C.S.I G.C.S.I	500
5.	His Highness the Maharaja Bahadui	500
6.	of Cooch Behar, G.C.L.E Nawab Bahadur Sir K. Abdul Ghani,	,
	K C.S.I., and Nawab Bahadur K Ashan Ulla, C.I.E Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur Nawab Azau Yar Jung Bahadur Shams-nl Uluma Syed Ah Belgram	500
7. 8.	Nawah Imad Jung Bahadur	500 500
9.	Shams-ol Uluna Syed Ali Belgrami	500
10.	Vizier to the Nawab of Junagach	ر 30
11.	Maharaja Bahadur Sir Jotindra Mo- han Tagore, K.C.S.I	250
12.	Babu Iodu Lat Mullick	200
1 3. 14.	Messrs, Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosein Ali	200
15.	Muza Bahadur Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab	150
•	Sved Zamul Andm Khan Bahadur	• • •
ıó.	Feraz Jung Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee, C.S.I The Houbble Mr. Justice Chandra	140 100
17.		100
18.	Prince Muza Sir Jahan Kadar Bahadur, K.C.I.E., The Hon'ble P. Playfair	100
19.	The Hon'ble P. Playfair	100
20. 21.	Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir	100
23.	HoBrackenbury, K.C.B., Babu Jar Gobind Law	100
23.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Guru Das	100
24.	The Honble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose	50 51
25. •26.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan	50
	Bahadur, C.S.I Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna	50
27. 28.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve-	50
29.	lyan The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar	50
	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of	50
30.	Calcutta	50
31. 32.	Calcutta	50 50
33. 34	The Houble W C Bonneyee	50 50
35.	Nawab Syed Ameer Husein	50
36. 37.	Hakeem Gholam Raza Khan	50 50
38. 39.	J. G. Ritchie, Esq. C.S., Sir Alexander Miller	50 50
40.	F. J. Rowe, Esq	32
41.	Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba- hadur,	25
42. 43	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy Kumai Dinendia Naram Roy	25 25
44.	Babu i Pashupatty Nath Bose	25
45. 46.	Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose Raja Su Sourindra Mohan Tagore,	25 25
47.	CIE	25
48. 49	Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury	25 25
50.	Raja Sreenath Roy	25 25
51. 52.	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar R. Belchambers, Esq	25 25 25 3 25
53. 54.	R ga Suga Kanta Ach ujee Chowdhur Rai Budieedas Mukim Bahadur	y 25
55	Bibii Gopal Lal Seal	25 25
56. 57.	A. T. Apcar, Esq	25 25
58. 59.	Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E.,	25
60. 61.	Muushi Gholam Rasool	25 25
62.	F. H. Skime, Esq. C.s., The Hon'ble H. J.S.Cotton C.S., C.S.I.	25 20
63. 64	Prince Mahomed Bakhtvar Snah	20 20
66.	Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry , Aukhoy Kumar Ghose Mouly: Imadd Ali	20
67.	Ru Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar	20
68 69.	D. Panioty, Esq Chowdry Manomed Arjamand Khan	20
70. 71.	H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-lay Moulvi Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed,	v 20
	Khan Bahadur	. 17
42.	1. 109115. P.SO. C.S. 4	16

72. T. lugits, Esq., C.S. ...

73.	A. H. Giles, Esq.			16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq , C	.s.	• • •	16
75	The Hon'ble Moutes	Suajul	Islam
, ,	Khan			16
76	Moulvi Serapudeen		•••	15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,			15
78	H. A. D. Pumps, Esq.	., C S.	•••	10
79	Baboo Kuan Chunder		•••	10,
Só.	E. N. Baker, Esq.			10
81.	Baboo Doyal Chand I		•••	10
32	" Madan Mohuu			10
3 3.	, Kanat Lal Knar			10
34.	Mouly: Syud Akram H			10
35.	Mouly: Az z Anmad			10
36.	Ra Kinyetai Day Bah			10
37	H. Hornwood, Esq.			10
88.				10
	Baboo Chakkanlai Roy			5
ιó.	" Sarodaprasau Gi			5
	thscriptions will be that		ecenied
he	Honorary Joint S∗cretar	100,
	RAJ KUMAR SARVADE		BAHADU	JR,
	4. Benesa Juntan
	and A. F. M ABDUR

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATOH. Rs. .

Barrister-atLaw, 16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, smill, open-faced, nickel silvern, keviess, short winding, pitent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel surern, keviess, short winding, pitent, 'NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, seconduland, for Doctors, onnamental hold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Rous more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others seil at double our latest Ore watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mi. Juo, Duckson of Hapittal Rulway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. X Di. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Pomanmallee says:—I soid it for Rs. 16. X Pre. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regiftom Dundum says:—I have soid it for Rs. 20. X Mi. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department siys:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1–8–0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, and silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pre G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infanty from Purandha says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I soid to a Seige int for Rs. 28 × Pte. II C. Bishop of I. F. L. Right from Kamptee says:—A Copoial official Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open laced, kyless real volid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed for 6 years. Mind they are guranteed for 6 years.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO. BOMBAY.

- "CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Doaness.

A NEW BOME FREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the mose and eutsachian tunes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that y... 20

... 20
... 20
with a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications much at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphilet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½ d stamp by A. HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St.

17-8
TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure reite; from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has ariven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering: white in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single applica-In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of nomes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemis s throughout the world

Agents in Calcutta . Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Batingate & Co. Limites.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPEH

AND

Remew of Politics, Literatur RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION
It paid in savance,

	•	•••	• • • •	1/2	4.0
Itali-vearly			•••	,,	7
Quarterly				11	4
Montaiv				Ŕ-	3.1
Single or sa	mple	Copy	• • •	Ans.	8-0
	li not	paid in a	avance.
Yearly .		•		Rs.	18
Hair-yeariy.		•••	•••	,,	10-8
Quarterty .		••.	•••	,,	6-0
Monthly .			•••		2-4
Single or sa	mple (Copy		Ans.	0-12
No auditi	ona. c	mange for	postage	or p	cot.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (turee columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annay a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each inser-

4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each inser-tion. The lowest coarge for any advertisement, is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the towest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

LITERATURE REVIEW OF POLITICS AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1805

WHOLE NO. 692.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE.

BY JAMES HUTCHINSON.

. CANTO FIRST.

Tis something, in the dearth of bliss, The something, in the dearth of blice, To dream, at least, of what hath been; That low The resting place, between Our infant wees, and the abyes Of those, that wait our liper years; Till they deny the bless of tears; When first the mutual pledge is given, And heart to heart, and eye to eye, Respond in sweetest sympathy, Of love on earth; —of love in heaven,

com Stamushille the oing and as he tres away? He casts a parting smile, on all below, Bursts thro' the clouds, in streams of radiant glow A martyr's halo, round the dving day; While thin' the west, the dappl'd sombre grey To golden sands is burnished, as they flow; And many a fury Isle may ney show, Washed by its tranquil tide, in lake, and bay, But grieved to leave, he duk us in his ire, Yet veils it, in his lovely rambow train . Hangs on the verge, a dusky globe of fire, And nature all is hushed, in mourning- when He sinks beneath, and bids the day expire, And night, in twilight hues, resumes her reign.

11.

Go, seize that hour, to view on nature's page, The far-sought home of India's Pilgrimage, The sacred Gyah, where the holy Smad'h Hath power to make the parted spirit glad *, To full our kindled, in their final rest, And blend then Manes, with th' already blest f

* The shradh of the Hindoos somewhat resembles the Wake of the In stracts of the riminous somewhat resemines the wake of the Irish, or perhaps still more, the mass said for the dead. It is a rejigous ceremony performed, for the final test of the decembed. When, the Shrad'h happens to be that of a wealthy person, liberal presents are made to the Brahimus, and considerable sums of money distributed mong the poor; on some occasions of the sort, the crowd is so great, that serious accidents occur to the poor creatures, thus collected.

† The Hindons would appear to believe, in an intermediate state, † The Hindons would appear to believe, in an intermediate state, somewhat retembling the purgatory of the Roman Catholics; and the purgatory of the Roman Catholics; and the purgatory of the Roman Catholics; and the blending or union of their spirits, with those of their ancestors, already blest. The ceremony, I believe, is supposed to be performed with most effect, by a son of the deceased, and the Hindons are all accordingly desirons of male offspring; but in cases, in which that blessing has been denied, as non may be adopted for the purpose, inheriting, at the same time, the wealth of the deceased, or the ceremonies may, I believe, be performed, by a grandson, or other near male relative.

Behold I the plain extend, an open waste, The knolls rough-scattered, as in nature's baste, More near,-the city shunbering on its height, Warm in the rays of day's expiring light; The spires with foliage blent of richest dyes, The white walls glist'ning, o'er the housetops, rise, And higher yet, Rimgy th's lonely hill,

The white walls glist'ang, o'er the housetops, use,
And higher yet, R mugyth's lonely hill,

The precise number of shrines, at which religious ceremonies must be performed, to entitle the parties to the ments of the pilgitimage, I do not excitly recoiler; but I thus, they are about thirteen, and the period of time, which is thus occupied, about the same number of days. The following account of the concluding ceremonies performed on the last and principal day, at the Archabut, is taken from a small work of fiction, but is sufficiently accurate for the general reader.

"Meanwhile, the accustomed ceremonies of the pilgitimage proceeded slowly, but regularly. The Rijah had made his offerings to the god, and had offered up prayers, for the repose of the Manus of his ancestors, at the several shunes, and these were not a few for there is stocky a didly experient. Young the place, that is not 'endecrated by cond's veried tradition. He had passed through the subtretraneous presses, on the top of the control. Bournpount, typical of the second birth of man; when his resources in the Sourapanti or temple of the sun, and at the sacred impress of the foot of the god Vishnoo, as he stamps on the breast of a monstrous, and destructive demon. It now only renumed for him, to pay his parting orisons, at the Archardar By this time his resources had been so deeply drawn upon, by Gy owals, (he highest order of priesthood belonging to the place). Achargees, Damers, Solwas, Pindimoshes, and a whole host of people, in virtuous religions garbs, who prev on the vitals, or rather on the pin early of the particular article of appared on which essentially a subtion of the god vishor of the pidgims, that Ason in Sough found himself constrained to stipulate with his Gyrawal, the am mit, which he should pay, at the containing ceremony; for if that is not nerformed, the whole of those previously gone through are said to be for now. The sound pay, at the containing determiny; that Ason in Sough found himself constrained to shir in the propose o

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar ap lances entirely superseded. Addless THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMILERS 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Crowned with its gorgeous tree, more lonely still,* The farry scene o'ertopping with its boughs, Like diadem, on beauty's matchless brows ; While vengeful Doorgab, throned on either hand, From mountain shrines, beholds her fav'rite land,t Her hundred pennons flung abroad, and given, In every hue, to woo the breath of heaven ; ‡ Behind-Myheer's far distant hills are roll'd, Their summits glowing, in their tints of gold ; Approach more near-the Fulgo sweeps along His world of waters, beautiful as strong, Lo! where he comes, on the horizon's verge, The half-hid groves scarce, o'er his wave, emerge; § His sloping banks with fruitful promise bend, And distant crags their wilder grandeur lend.

Such is my own, my native vale, And Oh ! believe, I loved it well, But never more, chall foot of mine Leave impress, on its sacred soil, Or stand unshed, before the shrine, Of that famed Princess' costly pile ! Where Vishnoo, as our Ved'hs attest, ¶ Stamps on the grant-demon's breast : Such thought, thou see'st, is idle now, For death is marked, upon my brow ; But were his threats and terrors vain, I dare not venture there again ; I need it not .- each nook and glen Is as familiar to my ken; Tho' ten long years have passed away, As I had left them yesterday; And once, right dear they were to me. And dear to me they would be still, But for that fatal memory. That rises oft, against my will, And will not, with my wish, depart It hath such mastery o'er my heart. Yes! I have eaten of thy salt, Kind stranger ! and I will unfold To thee my tale ; tho' every fault, And crime must there be shown, and told, (To be continued.)

* Raingysh is a small detached hill, sutmounted by a gorgeous wide spreading tree. It is situated, on the right brok of the Fulgo, immediately opposite the old town of Gyah, and has altogether a very picture-que appearance.

- The temples, on the tops of the Ramsillah, and Bhurmjouin, on each side of the town, are those here alluded to.
- The Brahmins are in the habit of hoisting pennons, or small flags of different colors, on the spires of some of the Hindoo temples in India; at Gyah this is particularly the case. These pennons seem from a distance, particularly, if the temple be on an elevated situation, or be in other respects romantically situated, add much to the picturesque effect.
- § The appearance, here endeavoured to be described, is very remokable in the degrat or great Garges, where, in looking from one side of the invert to the other, the manyo topes or groves seem half submerged in the river; for the same reason probably, that the full of a vessel is not 'visible at sea, while at any considerable distance
- If The temple of the Bishun Pud'h, (or Vishnoo's foot,) built at in expense, I think, I was told by the Brahmins, of nine lakks of opens, by that celebrated Mharatta Princess of the house of Holkar, supers, by that celebrated Mharatta Princess of the house of Holkar, Abhiliah Bhaee, of whom so interesting an account has been published by Sir John Malcolin, in his memoir on Central India. The structure, which is handsome for a Hindoo Temple, is composed entirely of a dick compact grante, or perhaps speaking more correctly, of what geologists call syenite. The principal object of adoration is the impress of the foot of the god Vishnoo, as he stamps on the hreast of a fabulous denon of enormous size, whose head is said to be under the great temple at Boodh Gyah, and lower extremities under two hills named the Ramsillah and the Pittillah. A statue fir image of Abiliah Bhaee heiself has found a place, beside some of the neures, in an adjoining temple; thus bringing, within our own cognizance, in instance of the apothesiss of a goddess, or the canonization of a saint,—I believe the former to be the more correct expression, in the present instance. present instance.

The Veubs or Bedshs, the sacred wittings of the Hindons, are, I believe, of the two descriptions, the Bedshs being the scriptimes themselves, and the Shasters a sort of commentary, little less sacred, than the original.

WEEKLYANA.

THE Gazette of India of September 7 contains the three following Proclamations by the Governor-General in Council, They are numbered 1697-E, 1698 E and 1699-E, being all dated Simla, the 6th September 1895, issued from the Foreign Department over the signature W. J. Cuningham, Secretary to the Government of India.

"Whereas the territories known as the South Lushai Hills are part of the dominious of Her Majesty the Queen, Empress of India, part of the dominious of Her Majesty the Queen, Empress of India, and whereas the said territories, although intherto administered as appertaining to the Lower Provinces of Bengal, have not been formally declared and appointed to be subject to any Presidency or Leutenant-Governoiship, and whereas it is expedient that such formal declaration and appointment should be made in respect of the said territories:—Know all men, and it is hereby proclaimed, that the Governor-General in Council, in exercise of the powers conferred upon into by the Stainte 28 and 29 Vict., Ch. 17, Sec. 4, and with the said to the Stainte 28 and 29 Vict., Ch. 17, Sec. 4, and with the said to the said territories to be subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and further to direct that henceforth they shall be included within the Lower Provinces of Bengal."

"Whereas the territories known as the North Lushai Hills are Lower Provinces of Bengal."

"Whereas the territories known as the North Lushai Hills are part of the dominions of Her Majesty the Queen, Empress of India, and whereas the said territories, although hitherto administrated as appertationing to the Province of Assam, have not been formally placed under any defined administration, and whereas it is expedient that the said territories should be formally placed under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Assam: "Know ill men, and it is hereby proclaimed, that the Governor-General in Council, in exercise of the powers conferred upon bin by the Statute 17 and 18 Vict, Ch. 77, Sec. 3, and with the sanction and approbation of the Secretary of State for India in Council, has been pleased to take the said territories under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Assam, and further to direct that henceforth they shall be included within the Province of Assam."

"Whereas the territories known as the Chin Hills are part of the in the Province of Assam."

"Whereas the territories known as the Chin Hills are part of the dominions of Her Majesty the Queen, Empress of India, and whereas the said territories, although hitherto administered as appertaning to the Province of Burma, have not been formally placed under any defined administration, and whereas it is expedient that the said territories should be formally placed under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Burma: "Know all men, and it is hereby proclaimed, that the Governor-General in Council, in exercise of the converse offered more home by the Scaute Landid Store Characteristics." proclaimed, that the Governor-General in Council, in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the Statute 17 and 18 Vict., Ch. 77, Sec. 3, and with the sanction and approbation of the Secretary of State for India in Council, has been pleased to take the said territories under his immediate authority and management and to place them under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Burma. and further to direct that henceforth they shall be included within the Province of Burma.

We have quoted the three orders in full in order to point out the distinction in the wording of the first from that of the two last. In the first the transfer is duect, in the other two it is a secondary process. The Governor-General takes up the administration himself and then makes it over. Regarding the first, we will only remark that Sir Rivers Thompson had cried himself hourse that the territories under the Lieutenant-Governor were too large for one ruler.

STORMS and floods are reported from the Bombay Presidency. The railway was breached and traffic suspended :-

"The south-eastern district of the G. I. P. Railway between Barsi and Wach has suffered severely from the cyclonic storm and heavy floods during Friday might and Saturday morning All traffic is at a standstill between Barsi and Ghangapur, and reports tend to show that the Nizam's and Southern Mahratta Railways have also suffered extensively. The rains had been much wanted for the district crops for some time, but the rainfall became excessive at Sholippur, where 17 inclies fell in 24 hours, at one time to inches being registered in seven hours. High winds of a cyclonic character accompanied the storm and great destruction has been done to railway and other property. Accurate deating are at present not to inches being registered in seven hours. High winds of a cyclonic character accompanied the storm and great destruction has been done to railway and other property. Accounte details are at present not known, as both the railway and Government wires are destroyed in many places. So far as can be found, the damage to the G. I. Pline is far greater than that which resulted from the floods on the north-east line last year by which the Mondwa bridge was carried away and the ghat terminosis were blocked in the Deccan. No fewer than four bridges are stated to be damaged or carried away, and the repairs to them will cental a large cost. Between Bars and Pakin, at mileage 268, near Mohol, the Seena masoniy bridge, twelve spans of 40 feet each, has been half carried away, no fewer than six spans having been thrown over by the force of the swollen torrent; and close by mileage 267 the line has also been breached, but the latter has since been repaired.

The Seena bridge was carried away, the others were swept away or damaged, during Friday night or early on Saturday morning, At mileage 318 the Boil bridge, which is a compartatively new structure, has been completely swept away. It was massive, and boilt of masonity with iron ginders, and consisted of 20 spans of 30 feet. Storm water rising to 30 feet is said to have wrecked it. Passing Dudni next, the damage is at Beneseru Bridge, which consists of six spans of 60 feet each. This bridge has been damaged on three previous occasions, and at present the information tends to show that two spans and their piers have been thrown down. The Marijee embinkment near Ghangapur is reported to be extensively damaged through Design scored away by the swiftly flowing tivet, but hope being scored away by the swiftly flowing tivet, but hope are entertained that the flood piers and girders of the briege are

THE Pain a had livelihood prosecution has ended for the moment. The rule issued by the High Court at the instance of Rai Isir Persad has been made absolute. The Chi-f Justice delivered an elaborate judgment. He thus interpreted section 123 of the Code of Criminal has been made absolute. The Chi-f Justice delivered an elaborate judgment. He thus interpreted section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure:

"It has been contended by Mr. Pugh on the part of the Crown that the proceedings in this case having been referred by the Migurate for the orders of the Sessions Judge under the provisions of section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court ought not to interfere at the present stage, but should leave it to the Sessions Judge to revise the proceedings and make such order as he may deem necessary. It appears, however, that the bond which Ru Ishii Pershad was indired to excine his been executed by hum, and int he is not, and has not been detuned in prison in default of executing such bond. In it he may so, it appears to us that it was not necessary to subout the proceedings for the order of the Court of Sessions under section 123, and that the Court of Sessions has no purisdiction to interfere with the order made by the Migustrate authorised to enquire into the conduct of an habitural offender of the classes therein specified to show come why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with sincites for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years as the Migustrate thinks fit to fix. Then section 123 rims as follows—"If any person ordered to give security under section 106 of section 118 does not give such security in or before the date on which the period for which such security is to be given commences, he shall, except in the case next hereins after mentioned, he committed to prison, or, if he is already in prison, he detained in prison, until such period expires, or until within such period he gives the security to the Court of Magistrate who made the order requiring it, on to ne officers in charge of the juli in which the period he gives the security to the Court of Magistrate who made the order adjust as general, and provides that except in the case the period for which security is to be given commences. The first clause is general, and provide viction. But this is only the beginning of the trouble and ruin that await Rai Isri Persad. He has escaped the present prosecution, after a hard and costly fight. But the district authorities do not believe in his innocence.

M.R. S. Jacob being placed on special duty from the 15th Septemher, that is being deputed as a witness before the Royal Commission on India, Mr. A. F. Cox, on privilege leave, is Gizetted Comptroller and Auditor General and Head Commissioner of Paper Currency, Mr. G. E. Manisty, Accountant-General, Bengal, acting, in addition to his own duties, till relieved by Mr. Cox, as Comptrollet and Auditor General and Head Commissioner of Paper Currency. ••

MR. H. G. Cooke has obtained furlough for one year. The Hon'ble Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt, CI.E., officiates for him as Commissioner of the Orissa Division and Superintendent of the Tributary Muhals, Orissa. This is Mr. Dutt's second appointment as officiating Commissioner of a Division.

THE following is supposed to be the rext of a letter a littersed by the Queen-Empress to Maharaja Duuleep Sing, while the latter was coquetting with Russia. It is given to the world by M. Elice de Cyon in his new work entitled "Histoire de l'Entente Franco-Russe." "Windsor Castle, July 6, 1886.

Ober Miharajah,—I hear extraordinity tenoits of your resigning voir allowance and of your intending to trusfer your alleginize to Russia I Lannat believe this of your arbo always professed such loyalty and devotion lowerds me, your truest friend, and who I may say took a material interest in you from the time when, now thirtiwo-years ago, you came to England as a be untility a charming boy! I wriched your life with true interest, tad thought your home with your annible wife and fine children was a pattern to all Indian Princes. But there the death of your really true and devoted friend, Colonel Ouphant, bad and false friends have surrounded you and put things into your head and heart which I am suce never could, under other cucumstances, have entered them. entered them.

Let me appeal to all that is noble in you, and abundon wild ide is and Let me appeal to all that is noble in you, and abundon with me is and plans, which can only panage you into deener difficulties and lead to disastrous consequences. Think of me as your best friend and the god nother of your dear son who nears my more. Trusting that you may be able to give me assurance that those reports are notice.

Believe me always, your true friend, Victoria, I.R."

WE read the following in a morning contemporary:-

"A stimulus seems to have been recently imparted to English journalism abroad. Paris has long been well supplied. We heard the other day of a projected English newspaper in Berin, and another is now reported to be stitting in Conenhagen. This latest venture is to be called the Copenhagen. Hera d."

Englishmen cannot live without their journal. Considering the number of Englishmen residing at Copenhagen, the Herald achieves a desideratum.

THE following is going the round of the press : -

The following is going the round of the piecs: "
"When 'Uncle Fom's Cibin' was written, "Mis. Stowe's husband advised her to sell it for a black silk dress, or Ltom money. More by chince than design, she chose a royalty instead. Eight piesses never stopped dry and night once the holk was in the market, and very soon the publisher hinded a cheque for £2,000 to the author and her husband on account of royalties. 'They seemed dazed'—it least, so their publisher says. Authors are not so innocent as to be dized now under such circumstances; not were the Stowes by the time, the second cheque for £2,000 was handed to them. More than 3,20,000 copies of the book were sold during the first year. first year

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS

SIR Thomas Martin has informed Renter's Agency that the Amir and the Shithzida are nighly gratified with the latter's reception in England, especially by the Queen and the members of the Royal family. The Shanzida his been profoundly impressed with the greatness of England as evidenced by her manufactures and commerce. He commented frequently on the absorption of Englishmen in peaceful affairs, and their unconcern in military matters. The Prince was of opinion that while the military displays he witnessed were imposing spectacles, they would have equally impressed him that England was a initiary nation even if the aspect of the troops had been less decorative. Sir Thomas Mutto does not doubt that the visit will be productive of infinite good, as the Afghans will now understand that India is only one of the jewels in the British Crown. Mutual suspicions will be eradicated, and he is of opinion that when the time arrives the British Government will find a way to arrange for the diplomatic representation of the Amir in London.

THE American Government has resolved to hold a separate enquiry into Chengta riots, and has selected Consul Read and the American Naval Attaché at Tokio to conduct it.

THE Porte has informed the Foreign Analysisadors of various con- The cup of his bliss is not, however, full. He will not be allowed to essions which will be included in the Armenian reforms, comprisme the admission of Christians to the smaller offices, the creation of a rural police, and permission to the Diagomans to communicate directly with the Reform Supervision Committee sitting at the Porte.

THE imports into the United Kingdom for August show an increase of nine per cent, and exports ton per cent,

A RESCRIPT has been issued by the Emperor of Germany, in which he appeals to the people against the enemies who know no Fatherland, and who at times of national enthasiasm like the Sedan fêtes revile the memory of the great Emperor.

LORD Roberts has arrived at Stettin en route to the German autumn mancovers. He dired with the Emperor William, the Emperor Francis Joseph, and other notables. Political importance is attached to the presence of the two Emperors at the manœuvres.

SIR West Ridgeway has been appointed Governor of Ceylon. He had been in the Indian Foreign Office, and, after the recall of Sir Peter Lumsden, was put at the head of the Afghan Boundary Commission. For his services in this connection he was knighted and made Under Secretary for Ireland.

THE Lord and Lidy Hilyoress of England have been well received in Paris. At a banquet given in his honour, Su Joseph Renals strongly emphisized the friendship of the English people for the French. The French Minister of Justice, in replying, spoke of the commercial fraternization between the two countries as exhibited by the visit of the Lord Mayor. Both countries, he said. have like interests, notwithstanding that political prophecies are to the contrary

THE Czar received Prince Hobenlobe, the German Chancellor, and was extremely gracious. The Prince had a prolonged interview with His Milesty.

SIR Nicholas O'Conor, Monster at Pekln, replaces Sir Frank Lascelles as British Ambassador at St. Petersburg.

IN a letter Mr. Gladstone states that his views on himetallism are unchanged, and that he regards the currency movement as a passing hamour of the hour which is, however, doomed to nullity and disappointment.

LIE Khedive dined with the Sultan on the 12th and started for Egypt the next day fiff fight over the Bhigilpur election for the Bengal Legislative Council has ended disastronsly. Neither of the two candidates proposed has been accepted by Government. Fae putizans on either side carried the contest to extreme bitter end, with, unyielding spirit, and the Government, to keep uself clear of the fight, has just Gazetted Mitharita Bahadur Su Rayaneshwu Prosad Singh, KCLE, of Gidnour, in the district of Minghyr, a member of the Council of the Lieuten int-Governor of Bengal for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations in the Bengil Division of the Presidency of Fort Wilham. Dacca was wiser. The interpretation of the rule unider which East. Bengai was given a second chance, could not apply to Bhagalpur, for the delegates had exhausted the time allowed for the election.

As we have already innounced, Mi T. A. Pearson, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and Judge of the Court for the trial of Pilots, goes on leave for one month and twelve days. During his absence the Hon'ole Nawab Syed Ameer Hossem, C. I. E. the other supendiary Presidency Magistrate, will act as Chief Magistrate preside at the Court of Mr. Pearson but be confined to his own of the Northern Division. A European barrister-at-law, Mr. Bonnaud, will do the contine duties of the Chief Magistrate. Nevertheless, the Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossem will have the paper dignity of the Chief of Presidency Magistrates. Properly speaking, he is the first Native to hold that post. If Mr. Justice Ameer Ah had had the same honour, he was more. He was a barrister at-law. Michomedan community cannot but be grateful to Sir Charles Efficit for the honour done them in the present appointment.

THE fifth Judgeship of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes is a temporary appointment and is now held by Mr. Abul Hassan. After the holidays, when Babu Jodonnath Roy retires, Mr. Hassau will get a lift to the fourth judgeship and Mr. Panioty be confirmed as Registrar. The vacancy in the temporary post will be filled up by Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman.

THE High Courts do not always agree. In Bengal, an examination fraud is not punishable under the Indian Penal Code. In the N-W. P as also in Madras, they take a different view of the law. Lately the Sessions Ludge of Lucknow sentenced one Sneo Pershad to fourteen mont he' rigorous imprisonment for committing forgery at the Middle English examination held in Lucknow in April 1893. It was found that in collusion with a clerk, who was pardoned having turned approver, he had exchanged his own answer papers with another's and thereby passed the examination. The Additional Judicial Commissioner has just confirmed, on appeal, the conviction and sentence.

In the Midras High Court, before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Parker the Public Prosecutor applied for a rule against the editor of the Madras Mail to show cause why he should not be dealt with for contempt of court in that he had published an article on the K dugamalai riots case, commenting on its ments when sub judice. The Prosecutor filed an affidavit showing that the appeal was filed in the High Court on the 25th of August, and that the alleged comment was made on the 28th of August when the case was still pending. He cited English authorities, and referred specially to the case of Surendianath Banerji, wherein it was held by the Calcutta High Court and the Privy Council that High Courts in India had the same powers as High Courts in England. He stated further that during the Sessions trial of the case a number of objectionable letters had appeared in the Madras Mail, and that in the article referred to it was stated that the Sessions Judge had gone out of his way to notice these letters, which were incapable of being contradicted M Powell suggested that the article was either communicated or inspired by persons connected with the appeal. The Chief Justice observed that the matter was of importance, and as it was not necessary to read the article in court he would take time to consider what steps should be taken. Ultimitely he decided not to take any. He indeed agreed with the Public Prosecutor that it was undestrable that any remarks should appear in a newspoter concerning a case sub judice. But the judges did not think that the remarks were intended to influence them in the hearing of the appear, and that this was not an occasion which called for the exercise of the Court's extraordinary power to nunish for contempt. At the same time the Judges regretted that such an article should have been published with respect to a case which must come before a Criminal Bench. The rule asked for was refused. In the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, the Counsel for Ameer Kuan, the late Mr. Anstey, had complained of similar conduct in a Calcutta daily, but nothing came out of it. In the Jain defamation prosecution in the Calcutta sessions Mi Justice Pigot strongly remarked on the discussion in the newspapers of a particular evidence and threatened punishment for repetition of the offence. It is time, however, that the antiquited and absurd doctrine of sub judice should formally be knocked on the head. To say the least, it is an impediment to justice. The better class of British Judges are gradually shaking off the old ideas respecting contempt. Counsel may argue on both sides and seek to mislead a Judge as regards both the facts and the law involved in a case, only when a newspaper editor takes it up for dissection, judicial impartiality incurs a serious danger. The Judge can no longer be sure of preserving his mental balance. Newspiper comments on cases sub judice are regarded as contempts on no better grounds than these. The contempt charged to the Bengalee was admitted by the accused and there was no argument. The Englishman's contempt, in the days of Sir Baines Peacock, in what is called Taylor's case, was fully argued. It was then shown that the hauling up of the editor and the printer could not be supported by any English precedent that was not three hundred years old. A power which no English Court had exercised for three centuries ought to be held as no longer existing. The non-exercise of power for such a long period, could not be due to the absence of occasions, especially in a country noted for the freedom of its press. The law of contempt in India ought to be placed on a satisfactory footing, by express legislation, if necessary, instead of being left to be gathered from musty precedents of the Tudor period.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deatness, Noises on the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fail particalors, including many any distilled testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Aidress, Airal Specialist, Aibinv Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

HERE is a metrical translation in English by Ram Sharma of the Suiskrit lines by Pandit Rumnath Tarkaratna on the death of Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee:—

For that I could not through mischance
Unto thy dying bed repair,—
A life-long sorrow, like a deadly arrow,
I must within my bosom bear

And joy is cheerless,—Home is dreat—All—all is blank to deep Despair;
There's gloom around,—the world is poorer,
'Reft of a gem so bright and rare!

Of nature pure, and cultured mind,
Ah! Sambhu Chunder gifted --wise!
Ah! brother! why art thou,—thy friends forsaking now,—
An early pilgrim for the skies?

Goddess of Song! Oh, wing thy flight
To heaven, where Sambhu now doth rest!
That so thy wreaths may not be touched—
Ay, rudely touched by hands unblest!

All Indian Journalist being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambliu C. Mookerjee" by Mr. Skrine will be published on Monday. Subscribers who have paid will be supplied with the first copies. Subscribers to the "Essays by a Brahman" may have copies of this book on their remitting the difference of price and will be reckuned as paid subscribers to the "Journalist."

MR. Skrine, who deeply sympathises with the Beng dis, is as useful in Calcutta as he has been in the mofussil. There is hardly a subject of whatever importance in this great city which does not arrest his attention. Nor does he speak without authority or knowledge, nor rush into print without due enquiry. His ripe experience too is of

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow-Bizar Street, Calcutta. (Session 1895-96.)

Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lai Sucar, on Thursday, the 19th Inst., at 7-30 P.M. Subject: Laws of Magnetism concluded.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAI. SIRCAR, M.D., Honorary Secretary.

September 14, 1895.

great value. On Wednesday, he delivered his second lecture to the Society for the Higher Training of Young Men. It was based on his forthcoming book or rather the subject thereof, on two or three points of whose remarkable career he expititited at great length for the education and benefit of young men. We publish the lecture in its entirety elsewhere. It was well suited to the place, and was a masterpiece of its kind. It reminded us of the glorious days of the Bethune Society when really good paners were read and able addresses delivered by master minds with thorough grasp of their subject It was a thoughtful paper and the result of long cultured experience which the young men to whom it was addressed would do well to study and act upon. Unlike many of his class, Mr. Skrine would not dissuade them from Government, service to learn self-reliance in other fields of labour for their daily bread. He put before his audience the comforts and discomforts of service and pointed out how difficult it was for the friedless to get on in it. The plodding and the intriguing have always the best chance. The bright and the brilliant must go to the wall. That is a curse of service, everywhere and in every clime.

HERE is how the Majaraja of Patiala enjoyed his late trip to Bingalore :--

"His Highness the Maharajah of Patiala is not likely in carry away many kindly recollections of his visit to Southern India, as far as the Bangalore portion of it is concerned. Only the other day we were informed by a local paper that at a performance in the Cubbon Rooms, the Prince on arrival found his reserved seat occupied by a British officer who refused to give it up, and the Prince left the hall after protesting against the discourtesy shown him. In the Polo Tournament His Highness was one of the uniques in the match between the Ooty Gymkhana and the Guiners, when the Artillery team, according to a local report, rebelled openly against his decision. His Highness delivered up his whistle and left the ground in high dudgeon, taking his departure from the station the same evening. It is impossible, of course, with the information to hind, to say who was to blame for such an unpleasant contretemp; but that it was most regretable every one will admit."

The Maharaja frequently forgets himself as regards the company he keeps. He may be said to court such finsults by mixing too freely with everybody capable of riding a horse. Why, the labouring men of Fairport and its vicinity, who named E he Ochiltree their arbitrator on a disputed point connected with one of their rough gimes, paid the king's gaberlunzie more respect than English "gentlemen" have paid to the Maharaja-umpire of their own choosing. If the Maharaja-umpire of their own choosing. If the Maharaja-umpire of the day, his verdict would have commanded respect. It won't do for even crowned heads in India to interfere with institutions and games that are peculiarly European.

A QUESTION has been asked whether Mr. Gladstone is not the oldest man who ever made a speech? Mr. Gladstone will be eighty-six on the 29th December next. The Emperor William in ide speeches at a greater age than this, and so did. Motike; but then it is said their addresses ought not to be classed as speeches, for they are only military harangues. The parallel suggested is that of Moses. Fue chief of the children of Israel was a young man of eighty when he bade the slaves of Pharaoh despoil the Egyptians and match to the desert During their forty years' wanderings in the wilderness he sometimes admonished his followers. So Moses may be taken as an orator. Surely, the glamour of greatness dims the vision of the writer. Gladstone is undoubtedly great and would be so if he had no similarity of any kind with the biblical celebrity.

The death of Mr. Satyendra Nath Palit, a chip of the old block, the youngest son of the famous Mr. T. Palit, barrister-at-law, is truly to be deplored. A junior membry of the Indian Civil Service, he had shewn capacity to rule and fell a martyr to duty. The death of such men at an early age, is, in a sense, a general loss, and that is the only consolation that we can offer to young Palit's sorrowing parents.

MR. Justice Norris left Calcutta on Tuesday. At the Howiah Railway station, there was a large gathering to bid him good bye. The Anti-Vivisection Society, of which he is President, took the opportunity to present him with a farewell address. We give his reply:

"My dear, my good friends, I need hardly say that I feel flattered by the kindly words expressed in the address you have been pleased to present to me on the eve of my departure for England. I know that ____ I little deserve all the kind things you have said about me. You have spoken of my career as a Judge of the High Court. In this connection I can only say that I have striven to the best of my ability to fill that high office and to fulfil its functions with impartiality to fill that high office and to fulfil its functions with impartiality fairness and mitegrity. In relation to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Anti-Vivisection Society, I have absolutely done nothing to reproach myself with. I have left mothing unifore to forward their objects, and I believe that my labours have not been in vain. The Anti-Vivisection Society was in its infancy when I first joined it, and it at once gained my warmest support. I found it composed of earnest men whose desire it was to protect the lower animals from cruelty and tortune. I believe that vivisection is against the highest laws of the Cieator. I hope your efforts to prevent such cruelty will be crowned with success. I am far from strong—it is ill-health that takes me away from this country, and I have had to brace myself up to meet you to-night. I leave you with feelings of forems. I have made many friends during my sojourn in this country, and I quit it and them with feelings of sorrow. I wish you all health and happiness and hope that the blessing of God may you all health and happiness and hope that the blessing of God may abundantly rest upon you all."

SHEIKH Bhola of Bhowampur, who was charged with the murder of his infant wife aged it years by cutting her threat and neck with a knife while sleeping, has, on conviction by the jury, been sentenced, by the Alipore Sessions Judge, to be hanged. The sentence is, of course, subject to the approval of the High Court. The prisoner confessed his guilt, and said that he had done the deed because of suspicion of unfaithfulness in the wife whose parents had wished to take her away. His pleader took the plea of insanity. The jury unanimously found the husband guilty of the murder of the wıle.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, September 14, 1895.

JOURNALISM BY WAR.

If the utterances of the Indian Mirror be believed, it would seem that the British Government of India very often incurs dangers that threaten its very existence. Luckily, the dangers all pass away, as quickly as they arise, without the Government feeling the necessity of making any preparations, general or especial, for combatting or warding them off. The Viceroy and his Councillors might not have known it, but the information possessed by the Mirror, obtained, no doubt, at first hand, enabled it to announce with great solemnity that the Indian Government, having insulted the whole Japanese nation, stood on the brink of a precipice, for Japan, whose military strength at the present moment is as great as that of any of the first class European Powers, might not coolly bear the insult. The readers of the Mirror, however, are often treated to such dangers, and hence they went through the usual routine of their daily duties without discovering any evidence of internal agitation. The stock-market betrayed no sign of unquietness. The quotations did not go down. Fund-holders were in no hurry to sell, and none of the speculators were known to give large orders for purchase. The authorities of the Fort did not mount a single additional gun on the ramparts. The Navy did not receive any orders to watch the archipelago-for an early sight of Japanese iron-clads. The British Consul in Japan was utterly ignorant of the storm that was brewing in the retreat in Mott's Lane, Calcutta, guarded by cold lions on the gate. The citizens did not gather in groups and knots for discussing the latest general order respecting the movement of troops. There order respecting the movement of troops. There was no excitement among even the "devils" of the printing establishment in Dhurmtolla Street. For there was danger to the empire. The Mirror had espied it, though it was not bigger than the hand as it appeared on the horizon.

hant of Budh-Gya to offer to Japan by not allowing the image of Buddha which Japan had sent to be enshrined in the Temple. Every man, woman, and child in Japan was interested in the sacred image, six hundred years old, of the founder of the Buddhist faith. All Japan was watching with keen anxiety the fate of that relic. It was an unsolicited gift from the people of Japan. The Mohant, in his ignorance, did not know what he was about. The consequences of his refusal were simply dreadful. Mr. H. Dharampal, in his single person, represented the vast numerical strength of the Buddhist world. At least, all Japan was, for the nonce, embodied in him. Opposition to the will of Mr. Dharampal was opposition to the expressed wishes of Japan. The Mohant might think it safe to prevent the enshrinement of the sacred image but the British Government of India ought to have known better. The Indian Empire of Britain, if it did not stand by the sufferance of Japan, could not safely provoke Japan, especially after the glorious feats recently achieved by her army over the well-ordered and vast military strength of China. The councils of the British Indian Empire, it must be held, were inspired by folly instead of that wisdom which the Mirror had the right to expect, considering that it was the Mirror which took upon itself to advise the authorities every day on all questions connected with the administration. The Government had no business to sit with folded hands and quietly contemplate the dire insult offered to a powerful nation by one of its own subjects. Impregnable, however, as the case was which the Mirror had put forward, unfortunately, it was Dharampal himself who, by certain needless disclosures from the witness-box, materially weakened it. The poetry of the situation was lost. It is no longer possible to invest the denouement with a tragical character. The affair has sunk beneath even the requirements of a comedy. It has degenerated into a downright farce. Read the following from Mr. Dharampal's account of the image, as elicited in cross-examination :-

"The idea of enshrining a new image in the Mahabodhi Temple first struck me when I was in Japan in the year 1893. I suggested the idea to the Japanese. The idea was my own, suggested by reading a passage in the Venayapushamala. That is an old Buddhist book, several centuries old. I read it for the first time in Japan. It was quoted in the Mahabodhi journal.

"Question.-Thereupon you requested the Japanese, Mr. Asahi, to give you the image?

"Answer.—I suggested to the Buddhists there and to the Right Reverend Asahi, High Priest, that it would be better if an image be sent to the Mahabodhi Temple at Gya, as there was no proper image of Buddha. The Japanese were not unwilling to part with the image. They gave it with great delight and at the same time with sorrow.'

So, it was Mr. Dharampal in whose fertile brain the idea of enshrining a new image in the Temple had first arisen. It is not known what representa-tions he made to the High Priest, Mr. Asahi, for inducing him to part with the image. Of one thing we may be certain. Mr. Dharampal never informed the Japanese priest of the difficulty there was in the way of the enshrinement of the image. than the hand as it appeared on the horizon.

The casus bells was nothing less than the affront the British Government of India permitted the Mo
Buddhists that entrusted the image to Mr. Dharmpal feel vexed or indignant at its not having been placed as yet within the Temple, the proper object of such sentiment would be Mr. Dharampal himself and not the Mohant. It was Dharampal who, by a singular act of indiscretion, invited the High Priest of Tokio to court an insult, it insult it is, which premises the restoration of the image to those very people that have parted with it sorrowfully. Read, however, in the light of these facts, the following extract from a leading article in the Indian Mirror:

"The armed resistance of the Mohant to the setting up of an image of Buddha in the Mahabodhi Temple, and that after he had once definitely consented, is an event from which very serious complications are likely to arise. It cannot be that Japan will quietly bear the gross insult, offered by this Hindu priest, and not only the Japanese, but every Buddhist, will consider the insult as given to Gautama's entire flock. When the news of the outrage reaches Japan, her indignation will be something which we would not like to picture to ourselves. The insult will be considered as given not only by a Hindu priest or the Hindu people, but also by the British Government of India. If the Government take no immediate action in the matter, it will at once alienate the sympathy of Japan, China and Siam, and political consequences may ensue for which it is not prepared. After the recent occurrence at Budh-Gya, the continued possession of the Mahabodhi Temple by a Hindu Mohant will lead to dreadful results."

We do not know which to admire most in the above passage, its rhetorical cleverness or the assurance of the writer in thinking that his sentences would really frighten the Government into immedrite interference with the management of the Temple. The Mohant's opposition to Dharampal is nothing less than "armed resistance." He had never consented to the placing of the image within the Temple. Yet the poor man is represented as having aggravated his offence by resist ance after having once definitely agreed to the scheme of enshrinement. Mark the excitement into which the writer works himself as he proceeds. At first, the "armed resistance,"-which, if we are to believe Dharampal, consisted of the Mohant's mukhtear having gently touched Dharampal's shoulder for calling his attention to what he was shoulder for calling his attention to what he was saying,—is spoken of as likely to cause "serious complications." Soon enough the resistance takes the form of a "gross insult to Japan," which Japan "will not quietly bear." The picture of Japan's wrath, it seems, does not satisfy the writer. Probably, it is not sufficiently frightful. Hence the bringing in of every member of "Gautama's flock" as having been insulted by the insult to Japan. Even this seems to be tame. The "insult," therefore, undergoes a quick transformation. It becomes "an outrage" pure and simple, and Japan, instead of pure and simple, and Japan, instead of quietly bearing it, will, we are told, discover "an indignation" such that the writer actually fears "to picture it" to himself. One would suppose that the writer must have been the victim of Japanese indignation, at least once in his life; that Japan is noted for having invaded Bengal at least once, carrying fire and sword before her, and raising pyramids of human heads like Tamarlane; otherwise the refluctance of the writer to even picture to him-self the indignation of Japan would be thoroughly inexplicable. Having succeeded in frightening himself very satisfactorily, -to a measure which the whole Theosophical brotherhood may be expected to approve,—the writer veers round and strives to show who the real culprit is to whom the outrage should be ascribed. It is not the Hindu priest that is the author of the outrage on the Buddhist world. No; not even the Hindu people of India, Japan, in her wrath, will never think so. On the other hand, that great military empire of the East will identify the British Government of India with the outrage. We are not told the reason why Japan would take such a truly logical view. Never mind: the fact is there, Japan will view it in such a light. And then? Why, the Government should immediately interfere; else, "political consequences may ensue for which the Government is not prepared." Probably, the Mirror is in direct communica-tion with the Mikado. Not content with this, which for such a weak Government as that of Britain in India ought to be sufficient, the writer winds up his observations by telling the Government that the continued possession of the Temple by its Hindoo owners, will simply "lead to dreadful results."

Surely, India ought to be proud of such journalism!

DR. SAMBIIU C. MOOKERJEE.

[A Lecture delivered, on Wednesday, the 11th September, hv Mr. F. H. Skrine, I. C. S., at the Society for the Higher Training of Young Men.]

Books console: but they do not teach, said a great novelist: Experience must come of ourselves. There is truth in the dictum with regard to fiction at least: but it cannot be held to apply to biography. It is possible to gather useful lessons from the career of a good and great man, faithfully recorded. Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerje, whose life I am about to publish, merited both epithets: and if he did not rise to supreme excellence the fault lay, not in his intellectual powers but in a defective moral and physical training.

It may be said with perfect truth that the most important factor in Mookerjee's complex character was his pride of birth and race. He was a Brahman of the Brahman, and refers again and again in his letters to his illustrious descent, his claim to represent the Rishis of old. I am not one of those who underrate the advantages of good birth. A distinguished family is an organic growth. Each of its members lives in long past times when he glances back at his ancestors and looks forward to surviving in his descendants centuries after his little life is sped. Thus he enjoys an eternity of the zgo and death is robbed of half its terrors. There are few sensations so strange or so profound as those evoked by a succession of family portraits, when we find traces of the same passions, the same experiences as sitr our own individuality in some well ruffed gallant of Queen Bess's days or in some divine of the last century tricked out in the majesty of a full-bottomed wig.

or in some wine of the last century theke out in the majesty of a full-bottomed wig.

The old French nobility, which as a social and political power, was annibiliated by the Revolution, affords a "typical example of the advantages and drawbacks of an aristocratic system. Their most impressionable years were spent in sumptuous and artistic surroundings and in early youth they came into contact with all that was worth knowing or contemporary society. They had a lofty if somewhat narrow conception of public duty leading them to abandon the grandeur of Versailles and the intellectual delights of Parisian jalom for the sordid hardship of war; and pour out their life blood without stint at the bidding of their sovereign. But growing up as they did in an atmosphere of servile flattery, they naturally enough regarded all outside their pale as made of coarser materials than themselves; A story is told of a great lady in those old days, who in the course of a morning call on a wealthy commoner, said that mankind resembled cups and saucers. The nobility was fine porcelain; the middle classes, ordinary China, and the lower common pottery. This brilliant apothegm was overheard by a footman, who when told a few minutes afterwards by his mistress that her ladyship wished to see the children of the house, bawled out at the top of his voice from the hall so as to be overheard in the drawing room, the process of the course of the parts that the read-Parealie it?

"Here Pottery, bring young China to be kissed by old Porcelain!"
This mental attitude was affected by King Louis the Fourteenth and his great grandson the fifteenth of that name. Alfieri, the Italy, visited Paris towards the close of the latter monarch's interminable reign and was presented at court. He tells us in his memoirs that he never forgave the air of lofty pride and asolence with which the Most Christian king received him. It was as if a Brobdignagian were to look down on a mortal of ordinary stature and ask "what curious insect may this be?" Let those who are well born or of high caste vigilantly check the growth of sentiments which lessen their sympathy with others doomed unlike themselves to live a few years of sorrow and then to be clean

Another drawback of high inherited position is the absence it involves of any stimulus to exertion. John Bright defined happiness as "congenial occupation with a sense of progress" and we must all remember that there is no standing still in this world. We are lated to progress, or to fall behind in the race. It was said by a wit of the last generation that no being in the world was more to be pitied by a thinking mind than a young, rich, healthy and handsome Duke, for he had nothing to wish or strive for. When the storm of Revolution began to rage, there was no one in power, from the unhappy King Louis XVI downwards, who had enough resolution and power of initiative to attempt to control it, and dominion slipped from the impotent hands of men paralysed by self-indulgence to those of the dregs of the people. The Reign of Terror and the guillotine which have eternally disgraced our civilization were the inevitable result.

Elucation of the highest type can alone give the required breadth of view. The noble who has had that inestimable advantage weighs his own infinite littleness in the great scale of creation. His heart goes out to his fellows less favourably placed, and he lives under an ever present sense of the colligations he owes society which has given him such enormous onigations no ower society which has given missen can be power for good. I was much struck by a remark made by the late Earl of Derby when asked how he could spare so large a portion of his time to public affairs. "I consider", he said, "that men like me are amply paid in advance for anything they can do for their

To those who enjoy the still greater advantages of being born in a "golden mediocrity," alike removed from the temptation attending great wealth and great poverty, I would preach the necessity of clearing their minds of snobbery and prejudice. Learn to judge clearing their minds of snobbery and prejudice. Learn to judge men as they are, apart from the accident of birth and riches. A menial servant who does his duty is more worthy of respect than the highest noble who neglects it.

the highest noble who neglects it.

Civilization, as it advances, continually broadens the circle of our perception and sympathies. From the family they extend to the community in which we are born. And with Mookerjee, pride of race was nearly as strong as pride of birth. The former is a quality of which I would fain see a good deal more in Indo-Aryans. It is at the root of all national greatness. Without it the consummation of the Congress's wildest dream would bring only bitter disappointment. How can men be expected to work their own political salvation when they are constantly having it drilled into them that they are a people devoid of truth, honesty and courage --when they meekly acquiesce in the reproach, and do nothing to redeem it ! Remember, that you are the descendants of a conquering race which once gave laws and science to the eastern world: and strive to live up to the high standard attained by your ancestors. Personal and national self respect have enabled the inhabitants of a small group of islands in the icy North to overspread the world. I have long endeavoured to foster this feeling in Bengalis, and my forthcoming book will be a protest against the impeachment of an entire people by Lord Macaulay. It is with this object that I have consistently encouraged the indigenous drama. There is nothing which tends more to emobling thoughts, or removes the soul more completely from the sordid surroundings of daily life than the taking part, either as actors or spectators, in plays based on national history and traditions. No education is more effective or more easily acquired. The greatness of England at the commencement of this century was in no small measure due to the devotion of the people to the magnificent historical dramas of Shakespeare. They sound as a clarion call to deeds of glory.

So much for the inherited influence, which did so much to ape Mookerjee's career. I will now pass to his early training.
Mankind is an epitome of nature, which we see eternally convutsd by the contending influences of good and evil. On searching the depths of oar own hearts, each of us must be conscious of the truth of this remark. But we are all creatures of habit: and in early youth, while the mind is still plastic and impressionable, we early youth, while the mind is still plastic and inhibits another, we may be trained into a habit of acting and thinking sanely. By constant vigilance a child may be taught to repress his inherited bias towards evil temper, untruthfulness or love of self, and acquire bias towards evil temper, untruthfulness or love of self, and acquire almost instinctively the opposite qualities. Children are not playthings but citizens in embryo. I have lived to see a complete revolution in their treatment. When I was a bov, the spirit of the Middle Ages still ruled in the nursery. Children were almost instinctively the opposite qualities. Unitaren are not playthings but citizens in embryo. I have lived to see a complete revolution in their treatment. When I was a boy, the spirit of the Middle Ages still ruled in the nursery. Children were relegated to a distant part of the house and the society of menials.

They entered their parents' presence on sufferance, as it were, and on condition of being "seen and not heard" as the saying ran,
At very tender age they were sent to a boarding school where the rations and discipline were more than Spartan. Lord Albemarle when a child at Westminster school, awake on a bitter winter's morning to find his bed covered with snow which had drifted in from the broken windows. My grandfather was also at Westminster and I remember his narrating how, detected in pilfering jam in a sixth form boy's study, he was solemnly tried and sentenced to be thrown out of the window. The height was fifty feet from the ground and a row of spiked palings awaited him below. And so the child was thrust into space. He clung desperately to the widow sill and one of his tyrants hammered his little hands with a dictionary to make him let go! Happily for him and me, a master was attracted by his piercing shricks and intervened at the nick of time. The result of the stern discipline which prevailed in the nursery and school-room two generations back was that the weaklings were killed off: the sensitive crushed to semi-idiotey: but a virile race survived whose exploits are the brightest page in our annals.

are the brightest page in our annuss.

In the present day the pendulum has swung in the opposite direction: childhood is ideally happy: and the little ones are perpetually in the society of the elders. I cannot but think that this theory of education is as far removed from the true one as was the obsolete rigour. The capacity for enjoyment, for forming new impression is now exhausted before the teens are reached: and priggery is and leads to anti-social excesses. The effect on the physical nature of indulgence and pampering is equally far-reaching. To this cause is due the excessive mortality from enteric fever amongst those who are entering active life. Sir W. Hunter once remarked to me, "The present generation of Englishmen is not great because they have never learnt to suffer.

In Bengal the treatment of children has always been akin to that which now dominates Europe. And in the case of an only child it is the strongest character alone that emerges unsathed from the ordeal. How rarely have parents the moral courage to punish a child for glaring disobedience: to withhold indulgences which their own common sense tells them are injurious. It is told of Charles James Fox that when a boy, his father, the first Lord Holland, showed him a beautiful gold repeater watch of rare and costly workmanship. "Father," said the lad, after listening entranced to the melodious chimes rung out by the mechanism, "I should so like to smash that watch?" Should you, my dear?" said Lord Holland. "Then smash in "Should you, my dear?" said Lord Holland. "Then smash it by all means!" And so the future statesman flung the unoffending watch on the marble floor and trampled it under foot with ferocious glee. That Fox's genius was dimmed by degrading vices and that he sank into the grave ere his prime had been passed, was due to this criminal indulgence. How many moral wrecks do we see around us from the same cause! In Mookerjee's case that waywardness which marred his highest effort and led him to mistake his true vocation in life till he was well on in middle age, was due to the defective home influences. But if Mookerjee was unfortunate in this respect, the disadvantage was almost neutralized by his happy school career. At the Oriental Seminary he came in contact with lads more advanced than himself and literature for its own sake, and not as a key to worldly position. I have often regarded the curriculum of the class room as a sort of scaffolding round a building in course of erection. The scaffolding enables the structure to assimilate and make the best use of materials brought to it; but it does not support nor is it a part of that which it surrounds. The most precious and enduring lessons which a youth can learn are those which he acquires outside the walls of his school and education should be to a great extent cooperative. Mookerjee's taste for letters was formed by associating with school fellows who had already acquired one: and his great intellectual gifts enabled him to outstrip them. Had he enjoyed the advantages which this Society offers, depend upon it his progress would have been still Society offers, depend upon it his progress would have been still more rapid. Logic, precision, eloquence, all can be gained insensibly by discussions in hours of freedom; and in no other way. An influence still more benign was shed on him by the Principal of his next school---the Metropolitan College. It is touching to find of his next school---the Metropolitan College. It is touching to find in his letters written forty years afterwards, repeated references to the obligations he was under to this teacher of genius. He calls him his "gutu" and acknowledges that his passionate love of poetry, his keen appreciation of style in prose were due to Captain Richardson's informal lectures on English literature delivered to all his pupils who cared to attend them at his home out of school hours.

I have already asked you to observe the radical changes which a generation has effected in the surroundings of childhood. An equally marked revolution has taken place in the relations between teachers and pupils. In times within my memory there

These strained relations, to put it mildly, were due to the theory on which education was based -an unspiring use of the rod. Dr. Keate of Eion was a typical headmaster of the last age. A orilliant scholar and an admirable teacher for lads of exceptional parts, inflexibly just, he was also inflexibly severe.

On one occasion, when he discovered that a school mutiny On one occasion, when he discovered that a school mutinv was brewing, he had sixty boys dragged from their beds on a winter's night, and administered to each in succession a hearty flogging Nor was this severity confined to those of tender years. Young Nor was this severity confined to those of tender years. Young men who had actually obtained His Majesty's commission were thus ignominiously punished. Many a young sputt was broken by this brutal seventy. Charles Reade, Captain Marryatt, the novelists, and a host of others bear testimony to the fact that the cruel discipline of their school days east a shadow on their whole career. It is to Dr. Arnold, the Headmaster of Pagety school that boxs of the present day over the Rugby school, that boys of the present day owe the lifting lives. He was a man of genius with the exquisite sympathy which genus alone can give. These qualities prompted him to step down from the pedestal of the schoolmaster, to treat hovs as reasonable beings with a sense of honour, and to seek their friendship. His overtures were at first received with suspicton, so accustomed were his pupils to the opposite theory of education. But perfect love finally cast out test: and Atnold not easy lives in the hearrs of his old boxs, but he profoundly influenced the whole scholastic system of England. Happy are his mitarors, and thank God, they are many! There are no friends so delightful as the young Napoleon the First told a court lady that, in his experience, we begin life with a roseate lady that, in his experience, we begin life with a roseate valover our eves and, that, as years went on, it grow darker and darker. The great Captain's own cateer is an instance of the trath of this remark. We all set out with generous impulses, with optimistic views of men and things, and end our journey disappointed, disillusionised and fortunate it we are not sourced by the with and buffaring men include. trials and buffering we undergo. There is no surer preservative against the selfishness and cynneism of middle age than association with minds yet unspoiled and open to noble sentiments.

There was a fatal defect in Moskerjee's training, however. was one-sided, comtemplating only a stimulus to the mental faculties and neglectful of the "casket of the soul." Blucation, says Milton, should fir a man to play his put successfully in war as well as peace. His thews and sinews mist be hardened, and his physical burage developed by out-door games and the assiduous exercises of contage developed by out-moor games and the assistances exercises of the gymnastum. If the Greeks have given the world almost every ting that we have worth possessing, it is because their education was conducted on broad and scientific lines. A perception of this fact appears to have extered the mind of our modern pedigogues, ending them to encourage sports by every means in their power, But with our national proclivity towards excess in all we attempt this devotion to cricket, football, rowing, &c., is in danger of being overdone. Play, says Herbert Spencer, is a redundance of ant are these faculties that severe watchiulness alone can keep them within due bounds and prevent what should be a relaxation becoming the main business of life. Why are G main slowly costing Englishmen from many markets of the world? Because t'eir youth does not spend morn to dewy eve in tennis, goll or cricket, but works persistently with an eve to the main chance. I his swing of the pendulum towards athletics is another of t e silent revolutions which our generation has s en in matters s holastic. In Bengal, fifty years ago, such things as games or manly sports were confined to the English population, and the most that was tolerated in native schools was dandryd, a sort of rudinentary cricket. Mookerjee's leisure was spent in study, omnivorous reading and discussing knotty literature with his school fellows. Thus sedentary points in literature with his school habits were formed and muscular and organic digeneration set in at an early period of his life. H: was always a weakling, subject to ing, subject to severe illness, and he did long before intering the confines of old age. His fare was shared by complete others of his and the succeeding gineration. For, it is only within the last few years that Bengali school and College students have been inoculated with a healthy bias towards I regard it an era of the most hopeful signs of the times, this keen interest in cricket and football which I see on all No important match fails to artifect a dense throng of spectators of the etudent class, and it is pleasant to note agerness with which they watch the varying fortunes of the minute war. I sincerely trust that the Marcus Square Playground which Young Calcutta owes mainly to the far-seeing sympathy of your founder and patron, His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, far-seeing sympathy will include a well-equipped gymnasium amongst its attractions. It systematic drill formed a part of every school's curriculum and the cost of a cricket and football ontfit were deemed as legitimate a charge on its funds, as blackboards and maps, we should soon see the reproach of effeminacy removed from the inhabitants of The brain must be nourished with healthy blood; sinews developed by constant use, and sourage sustained by games of strength. I am persuaded that studies would not suffer from the new departure. There is nothing so destructive to all the powerof body and mind as the habits engendered by "loafing" during hours of recreation.

Well, I have carried my hero through the most critical part of his life and shown him—to have been but imperfectly—equipped for the coming struggle. He had now before him—the all important—question—of the election of a career; and as it is one which must be perplexing the majority of you at this moment, I—will devote the short remainder of my lecture to discussing it.

discussing it. What shall we do with our sons? is the fathers' exceeding great and bitter civ throughout the civilized world. The operation of the law first chunciated by Maltinus that population tends to outstrip the meins of subsistence has produced a congestion in all professions open to a youth who has received a sound general education. Here the field of choice received a sound general education. Here the fill of choice is even more limited than in the countries of the west lake England for instance. A pater familian in that happy land can weigh the chances of success for his young hopeful presented by the "libral professions," as they are still called, namely, the Army, Navy, Church, Law and Medicine. He can make his son an architect, a civil engineer dealing with the mechanical, marine or electric branch. Commerce offers a score of avenues to success in life. He can train the boy as an artist or an actor or journalist. Lastly, and it is a bad last, in his estimation, there is the Civil Service of the Crown. In Bengil, for various reasons which I cannot well enter into here, the field of choice was and still is, much more restricted. It is practically narrowed down to the legal profession, medicine, commerce and the civil service of the state. As regards the first, access to the so called higher branch is barred, in the case of orthodox Hindus, by the necessity of crossing the Black Water and living for years amongst mhehibut on forbidden food, involving the loss of caste and the degrading ceremony of praymetata. Cynte declate that importence is the best passport to success as a barrister, and cunning smooths the upward path in the solicitors calling. I am not one of those who level cheap sarcasin at an indipensable, and if properly exercised, an honourable calling. This kind of thing, for instance exercised, an honourable calling. This kind of thing, for instance, from a home paper . "On Siturday last, a shark was east ashore at Plymouth. The attorneys of the town wept over him and buried him with all the honour due to a member of their profession !" The great drawbacks in the case of attorneys are the interminable period of probation and the heavy cost attending it, as well as the fact that there are at least twice as many solicitors in Calcutta a the volume of litigation really demands.

This criticism applies with at least equal force to the pleaders' profession. There is not a bar library in the Province, and hardly a sub-divisional headquarters that does not contain a crowd of briefless ones, soured by the heart sickness of deferred hope. Thus, in many cases, when success comes, the mind has bot its elasticity and enthusiasm and is equilly unfitted to make the best of opportunity or to enjoy its task. Medicine I regard as a still nobler profession, but here special apprindes and a paraitar plus scal formation are necessary. In India all medical men must be what are known at home as "general practitioners" equally adept at composing a prescription and wielding the lancet. Now the physicalness, science has not advanced greatly since the days of Hippocrates. His pharmacopeia is infinitely wider and great improvements have been introduced of late years in the mythols of a liminstering drugs; but treatment is still more or less emotic and the causation of disease is still wripped in mystery. It is far otherwise with the surgeon's craft; and those whose professional entities in his calbed them to surmount the horrors of the dissecting room of the prating amphitheatic archapts in bonging to a profession which grainless the artistic sense of him who past toss in, with a lessons the volume of human misery. But for the mijority of men the ordeal is too severo

I happy in b longing to a profession which gratifies the artistic sense of them who pea trees it, will be lesses the volume of human misery. But for the majority of men the ordeal is too severand medicine as a profession in much like to be ever crowded.

Commence requires cround, which is by no means abundant in the modelle and upper middle closses. The competition of European (not necessarily English) troders is dealy growing keener and profits are proportionately reduced. Nor is money alone the snew of war in the career Judgment B called for, calmness, knowledge of men and that which the French call flare, an invitinct which leads its happy possessor to distinguish be ween good and bad "business" with unerring accuracy. The more I we of the world the more convinced I am that what is commonly called "luck" B can immense riffus ice on our career. How often lowes see very ordinary people, of whom it is said that everything they touch turns to gold! On the other hand, there is a class which seems to be persecuted by an evil destiny. The first Baron Rothschild, who must be admitted to have been a good judge, raid, "whatever yould, have no concern with an unlucky man. I know many, gifted with every quality which ought to ensure success, who are walking about London with stockings showing through their boots!" I may be keepeled than we see at present, for telegraph. Commerce, lifty years ago, was still conducted in the leisurely and austocratic fashion which the Honourable Company Times have changed, and not wholly for the better.

There remains the service of the State : which is the great aim and object of our vouth. Here, the field has widened enormously within the last forty years. I have uncarthed, amidst the mountain of rubbish which encumbered my office, a copy of Thacker's Directory for 1855, the very year in which my subject was meditating a plunge into active life. I find that there were only 159 natives then employed under the Bengal Government in posts which we should now call "gazetted," and the pay in very many of them was under 100 per mensem. I have not had time to wade through the last issue of the Civil List, or to extract figures for comparisons; but I should say roughly that at least ten times as many appointments of analogous grades are now held

This is a subject on which I may speak with the assurance of intimate knowledge. I have been for nearly a quarter of a century in the service of the Crown and my Indian career is drawing to a close. Looking back on it I may honestly say that with many shortcomings it has the approval of my own conscience, which is more to be desired than that of all the world besides. I have been privileged to do great good to those entrusted to my care. Having no ambition connected with office; in spite of many disillusions and disappointments, I am not a disappointed man. It is only right that I should state these facts, in order that you may not be under the impression that the remarks I my about to make rather to my right.

am about to make refer to myself.

am about to make refer to myseit.

In deciding whether you will seek to serve the state, you must ponder well on the personal equation. Now, as the old Romans taught us, civilized man is a double entity. There is the man himself with his habits, tastes and passions, and there is his legal and social garb which they called persona and we should loosely translate as his antecedents. If you are proud, sensitive and passionate, without unusual power of self control, shun public service, for many and bitter will be the shocks to your amour propre and your spirit may be crushed for life. If you have brains and energy beyond the common herd, beware of letting them shine too brightly. The mediocre, who form the bulk of any community, resent the possession of either as an insult to themselves. You will thus avoid making enemies, even if you make no friends: though Lavater says that he who goes through life without making a friend or foe is a very poor creature. supposing your mental hide is tough as the rhinoceros's, that your disposition is phlegmatic, your methods cautious in the extreme, vou must still pause before seeking to serve your country.

For, to succeed, you must either have what Philistines call "interest," or join a mutual admiration clique. The first is more important than most people suppose, and ere I leave India, I may be induced to make public some very curious in-stances of brilliant success due solely to this potent factor. If you have relatives or connections high in office, and reads, with you have relatives or connections high in omee, and ready, with the infinite family affection of Indians, to hold out a helping hand, then you begin life with the same advantages over a triendless lad as a swimmer with a curt belt has over him who trusts to his unaided muscles. The one is supported in spite of his shortcomings: the other beats the waves till he sinks exhausted.

Cliquism and "log rolling" are powerful aids to advancement:
but they involve a sacrifice of one's self-respect and a weakening of one's principles; and men of the highest type prefer failure to suc gained by such means. Amongst aids to success as a public servant, I may enumerate commanding talent plus opportunity. The one is uscless without the other. Napoleon the Great must have turned his sword into a pruning-hook or died a half-pay officer but for the marvellous chances of the French Revolution. am not addressing an assemblage of intellectual giants, I will glide over this branch of my subject with precipitance. Having this enumerated the externals of an official career, I will conclude by stating its more salient effects on the individuals. In the first place, the constant sense of power strengthens the will and elevates the personality. Micaulay tells us that authority is as respectable in a constable as a sovereign: and servants of the Crown, whether engaged in dispensing justice or in executive functions, feel the triesistible force of the empire. This is magnificent training, especially it one gets to look at all power as a trust for the public good. The receipt of a fairly adequate salary and the assurance that the evening of life will be spent in comfort and that that those dearer, perhaps, than life can never suffer want, removes the most carking of cares, those connected with money matters, and enables a man's best energies to be devoted to his duty. These are the chief advantages of office; the drawbacks are the confusion which it brings into one's morals. There is a vulgar proverb regarding the imperviousness of a corporation to the calls of conscience which I will not quote here: but which applies with equal force openings were more abundant and people had not been killed by the | to public servants. Such develope in time an official conscience which is of the most elastic description : leading them to commit actions which are not in accord with the canons of homour, and in a private individual would be severely reprobated. Friendship is difficult, if not impossible, in a service where seniors are regarded as depriving one of earned promotion and unpleasantly constitutes that juniors have much the same way of looking at things. I might mention the irksomeness of being tied by hide-bound rules as to leave and the discomforts of the nomad life which an official leads. But time fails inc; and I will conclude by expressing an earnest hope that you will all purchase Mookerjee's life, in order to see how far he succeeded solving the difficult problems involved in the choice of a career.

SIZE AND STRENGTH NO DEFENCE.

HIRE's a point for you to think over 'Size and dene opment have nothing to do noth health. A man in systand six feet two inches has his stockings and have the muscles of a prize fighter, and yet be an essentiacy inhe dily man. His feat-looking whe may be really the hetter of the couple; she may easily do more work, endure more exposure, be it more givef and worry, and outlive her hig husband. There is a mystery in this that nobody can see into. It is a matter of virility and organisation—not of dimensions.

Take, for example, the case of Mr. I. B. Staples, of Oakwood, Ont. He is a blacksouth; and I well remember how, when a buy I used to regard a blacksouth with awe and wonder on account of his strength. It was fersome to see him swing those mighty naminers and pick up a heavy cartished as though it were a child's used to regard a blacksmith with awe and wonder on account of his strength. It was fersome to see him swing those mighty harmones and pick up a heavy cartiwheel as though it were a childs hoop. Yet I saw only in p of and understood in p of.

"Some twelve years ago," writes Mr. Stoples, "I became aware that the dreided disease, dyspepsia, had chosen me for one of its many victure. It is hardly necessary for me to try to describe all the different feelings that came over me. I have talked with many people suffering with dyspepsia, and they have all had about the same experience. Among the symptoms on which we agreed are the following: Bud taste in the mouth; fulness and deadness in the stomath after eating; getting no good from one's food; headache and palpitation of the heart; gas and som fluids from the stomach, dizziness, especially when one rises up suddenly, or bends over his work; loss of appetite; pains in the chest and back, and the we always to the rise of the rise of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties. The properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties. The properties of the properties o ait the laughter out of his days.

"Well, after the dactor's medicine failed, I kept on taking anything and everything that was recommended to me in hopes of relief. Yet none of them went to the root of the trouble. Sometimes I would feel a little better and sometimes worse, and this the way things went on with me year after year, a dreary and emiserable time. There's no money could hire me to live it over again.

"I was still in this condition when a friend, that I had been talking to about myself, advised me to my Mother Seigel's Curative Syrop. I didn't know the merits of the Syrop then, but being anxions to try anything that might help me, I bought a bottle from Messis. Hog Brothers, and commenced taking it. All I can say is, that I found relief innordately, and by continuing with it a short time, all my had symptoms aboated one by one, and I found myself completely id of the dyspepsis. Since then I have never had a touch of the old complaint. If there is any other medicine in the world that is able to core indigestion and dyspepsia as Mother Seigel's Syrup does it, why I have never heard of it. I have recommended the Syrup to other suffectors, and they have been more than pleased with it; and I write these histy lines in hope the publication of them may come in the nick of time to be useful to others still. Yours very tinly (Singned). Thos, B. Staples Oakwood, Ontario, February 25th, 1895."

We need add but few words to Mr. Staples' intelligent and manly letter. The disease which afflicted him attacks both sexes, all ages, and all classes and conditions of humanity. Neither youth nor strength is proof against it. I imitates other complaints, and so leads to fatal mistakes in treatment. If you are wise you will acquaint yourself with its character, as described in Mother Seigel's almanack, and know what to do in time of need.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by A. Weisz, Wholesels Stamp Design

Wholesale Stamp Dealer. Established 1880, 61, Regent Street, London W. Bankers: The London & County Bank.

READY To be published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE : Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE, late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

BY

F. H. SKRINE, LCS.

The volume, uniform with Monkerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of about 500 pages and contains PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR.

DEDICATION.

HIS LIFE STORY.

Emerson on biography. Why is it popular? His ancestry.

His ancestry.
Birth.
Early education.
At Garanhatta School.
Youthful dialectics
The Hindoo Metropolitan College.
Teachers and associates.

Essays in journalism.

Harish Chandra Mookerjee.

Mutiny pamphlet. British Indian Association. His asthma how caused Relieved by opium. American honours.

American honours. Faults of training. Sub-editor of the "Patriot" Story of the "Patriot" Attacks the Income Tax. Scathing strictures. Lessons of the Mutiny Removes to Lucknow A love of music. A rolling-stone. Torriduced to the Nazim. Palace intrugues.

Palace intrigues. Baffles his enemies.

Baffles his enemies. Journalism again. Becomes a schoolmaster. A Private Secretary. A serious delemma. Disinterested friendsing. "Mookenjee's Migazine." Dallies with the law.

The Maharaja of Jaipur.

When Toppera

Work in Tippera. His application suppressed. Becomes Prime Minister.

The water question.
Thwarted by intrigues

Thwarted by intrigues
Resigns his post
The "Repule Press."
A commissioner of partition
Founds "Reis and Rayyer"
"Travels and Voyages in Bengal."
A teast of reason.
Postprandial oratory.
Breaking im.

Breaking up.
A serious illness.
The end. His character.

Broad sympathies. A fee to fanaticism.

Love of justice.

Charity.
Consideration for others.
Scorn of money.
Disinterestedness.

Disinteresterness.
Love of animals.
A poetical nature.
An admirer of Byron.
Diswbacks of journalism
Mookeijee's "Essays."
His letters.

His correspondents. Aim of this work.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR S. C MOOKFRJEE to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir I C.

Aikinson, the late Mr. E.F. L. C.S. to Baneijee, Bahu Jyonsh Chunder from Baneijee, the late Revd Dr. K. M.

to Banerjee, Babu Sarodaprasad.
from Bell, the late Major Evans.
from Bhaddaur, Chief of.
to Buaya Krishna, Raja. to Chilu, R to Bahadur Ananda.
to Chatterjee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarke, Mr. S.E.J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Auckland.
to, trom Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of.
from Evarls, the Hon'ble Sir Guffith H.P. to Gunguli, Babu Kisari Mohan.
to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
to Ghosh, Babu Kith Prosanua.
to Ghosh, Babu Kith Prosanua. to Ghosh, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
from Guffin, Sir Lepel.
from Guna, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hume, Mr. Redward
to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.
to Kunght, the late Mr Robert.
from Lingthe the Navab Sir Salar.
to Kunght, the late Mr Robert.
from Lingtone, the Marquis of.
to Live, Kunur Kristodas.
to Lyon, Mr. Percy C
to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
to Mallik, Mr. H. C.
to Marston, Mrss. Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mina, the late Raja Dr. Rajendralala. to Mookerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala. to Mookerjee, Mr. J. C
from Mi'Neil, Professor H. (San Francisco).
to, from Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.

to, from Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
from Nayaratua, Mahamahapadhya M. C.
from Osborn, the Late Colonel Robert D.
to Rao, Mr. G Venkata Appa. to Rao, the late Su T. Madhava. to Rattigan, Sir Wilham H.
from Rosebery, Earl of.
to, from Routledge, Mr. James.
from Rosebery, Earl of.
to, Row, Mt. G Syamala. to Sastri, the Horbbe A. Sashiah. to Sinha, Babu Brahmananda.
from Sintar, Dr. Mahendriala.
from Sintar, Dr. Mahendriala.
from Sintary, Dr. Mahendriala.
from Sintary, Lord, of Alderley
from, to Townsend, Mr. Meredith,
to Underwood, Captain T. O.
to, from Vambery, Professor Arminius.
to Vencataramanich, Mr. G.
to Vizianagram, Mahataja of.
to, from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie. to Wood-Mason, he late Professor J.
LETTERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, fron to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. LETTERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from

B TIERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, I Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A K. M. Ameer Hossem, Hon'ble Nawab Syed. Ardagh, Colonel Sir J. C. Binerjee, Babu Manmathanath, Binerjee, Rai Bahadur, Shib Chunder. Barth, M. A. Beith umbers, Mr. R. Deb, Babu Manahat. Dutt, Mt. O. C. Dutt, Babu Prosaddoss. Egin, Lord.

Datt, M. O. C.
Datt, Babu Prosaddoss.
Eigin, Lord.
Ghose, Babu Norendra K.
Ghosh, Babu Norendra K.
Ghosh, Babu Kid Prasanna.
Graham, Mr. William
Hall, Dr. Friz Edward
Haridas Vihairdas Desai, the late Dewan.
Lyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami.
Lumbert, Su John.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed
Mitta, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, Babu Sadheshur
Mookerjee, R. ja Pearry Mohan,
Mookerjee, R. ja Pearry Mohan,
Mookerjee, R. ja Dearry Mohan,
Santi Labu Sarat Chunder,
Sanyal, Babu Dinabundho,
Santi Labraty,
Toppera, the Bara Thakur of Ja
Vambery, Professor Arminius, Vizzanagran, the Mahanaja of,
POSTSCRIPT. POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surpline will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Urkoor Duit's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

It is in contemplation to publish the "Essays by a Brahman" separately, with a preface by Dr. Mookerjee's biographer Mr.

A Wonderful Medicine. BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally an mitted to be worth A mutted to be worth a Gunnea a box, for Bilmus and Net rous
Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick, Headache, Gudduness, Fulness,
Swelling after Meals,
Dizmess and Drowciness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite. Shortness

Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness of Preparties Shortness, Scurvy, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Die ims and all Networs and Trembling Sensation, &c. The first lose will give relief in twenty minutes.

Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one box of these Pills, and they will be achieved the be-

knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off at humours, and bring about all that is required. No female should be without them. There is no mediume to be found equal to Beecham's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use.

For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

human machine.

The Natives of India will find Beechan's Pils the finest medicine ever introduced to their notice; the European residents also will find them of great value for cooling the blood. For throwing off tevers and preventing inflammations in hot climates, they stand without a tival.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debinated by BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the

As a remedy for Cough Pills,
As a remedy for Coughs in general, Asthma, Bronchial Affections, Houseness, Shutmess of Bireth, Fightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheezing, &c., these Pills stand mirrivalled. Let any person give Beet ham's Cough Pills a tital, and the most violent Cough will in a Short time he removed.

in a short time be removed.

Beecham's Tooth Paste
Will recommend Juself being effications and economical; it is packed in near antight
collapsible Tubes.

NOTICE: G. Atherton & Co. will forward
on receipt of letter, samples at the following sites size 9½d. at 8 annas per box; 1-1½d.
size 12 annas per box, 25, od. size 2 rupees per box; 1 ooth Paste 12 annas per Tube, these rates do not include the cost of postage which will be added to the amount.

Sale Wholesale Agents for India,

will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India,
BURMAH & CEYLON.
G. ATHERTON & CO.,
3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET
CALCUTTA.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF

	MEMORIAL FUND.
,	His Highness. The Maharaja of	13	Rs.
	bhanga K.C L.E.,		2,000
2	. His Highness The Maharaja of '	Vizi	1,000
3.		ır 0	f .
4	Moorshedabad, Annual Omra, G C His Highness the Nawab of Junag	. I E.	, 8oo
4	G C.S.I		. 500
5.
6.	N iwab Bahadui Sir K Abdul Gh	an,
	KCSA, and Nawm Bahadur	K
7 8.	Ashan Ulla, C.1 F Nawao Imad Jung Bahadur		500
8.	Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur Nawab Azun Yar Jung Bahadur Shams-ul Ulama Syed Ali Belgr		500
10	Kum Bahadar BharBanauddin, C.	ΙE.,
	Vizier to the Newab of Junagadi Meneraje Bahadur Sir Joundra	и Мъ	30)
	han Tigore, K C S I	٠.,	250
12.	Babu Jodu Lai Mailick Messis, Mackinnon Mackenzie &	 Co	200
14.	Prince Wala Kadr Syed Hosein	Αlı	200
15	Muza Bahadar Shujaul Muik Asafad Dowlat Na		150
٠,	Syed Zunnl Abdm Khan Baha	dur
15.	Feraz Jung Raja Pe ay Mohan Mookerjee, C		140
17.	The Hou'ble Mr. Justice Chah	dra	100
18.	Madhah Ghose Prince Muza Su Jahan Kadar Ba		100
	dur, K.C I.F.,		100
19. 20	dur, K.C.L.F., The Hon'ble P. Playfair Haji Kasim Anif		100
21.	Lieutenant General the Hon'ble	Sir	100
22.	II. Brackenbury, K.C.B., Babu Jai Gobind, L. cw	•••	100
23.	The Houble Mr. Justice Guru l	D.is
24.	The Honbie Dr. Rash Behary Gh		50 51
25.	Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt. Shahibzada Mihomed Obidulla Kl		50
20.	Bahadur, C.S.I.	han	50
27.	Maharejkum u Benoya Krishna		50
28,	The Hon'ble Mr Justice E. J. Fre		50
29.	The Hon'ble Mouly: Abdul Jab Kban Bahadur	bar	-
30.	The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop	of	50
31.	Calcutta Maharaja Dunga Charan Law, C.t. Nawab Jahunda: Meerza Nawab Huzour Muza The Houble W. C. Bonnerjee Nawab Syed Armer Husein Syed Naul Bud, E. G., C.S. Hakeen Ghulon R. G. Khan L. C. Ruther R. a. G.		50
32	Nawab Jah indar Meerza		50 50
33. 34	The Houble W. C. Bonnence	•••	50 50
35	Nawab Syed Ameer Husein		50
36. 37.	Hakeen Gholan Riza Khan	•••	50 50
38.	J. 17 101001111, 1514 C 7, .	• • •	50
39. 40	Sir Alexander Miller F. J. Rowe, Esq	• •	50 32
41	Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan I	3
42.	Kuma Radha Prosid Roy	• • •	25 25
43	Kumar Dinendra Naram Roy		25
44 45.	Babu rPashupatty Nath Bose Kumar Doulat Chandra Roy	···•	25 25
46.	Babu Guru Prosonno Ghose		25
47.	Rija Sir Sourindra Mohan Tago	· e,	25
48.	Raya Jounday Nath Chowdhury	•••	25
49 50.	Rata Sceenath Roy	•••	25 25
51.		• • •	25
52. 53.	Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdh	 wry	25 25
54.	Ra Budreed is Mukim Bahadui	• • •	25
55. 56.	Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam		25 25
57. 58.	A. I. Apcar, Esq	•••	25
59.	Lord William Berestord, K.C.I.E.,	•••	25
60 61	Munshi Cholam Rasool		25
62.	F. H. Skrine, Esq. C.S., The H orble H. J. S. Cotton C.S., C.S. Prince M thomed Bukhtyar Shah	ı	20
63. 64	Prince M thomed Bukhtyar Shah Bahoo Surendri Nath Pil Chowdry.	•••	20 20
65.	" Aukhov Kumar Ghose .	• • •	20
66. 67.	Moulvi Imadd Ali Ru Suib Chundei Nundy Bahadar		20
68.	D. Panioty, Esq ,		23
69. 7 0 .	Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Kha H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Burnster-ar-l,		20 20
71.	Mondyi Sved Ashruffuddin Ahme	d,
72.	T luch. Fra ce	•••	17-8 16 (

73	A. H. Giles, Esq	16
74.	F. Handiey, Esq., C.S	10
75.	The Hon'ble Moury Strajul Islam	- 1
1	Kuan	16
70.	Mourvi Serajuadeen	15
77.	Abut Hasin, Esq.,	15
78.	H. A. D. Pontops, Esq. Cs	10
79.	Baboo Kiran Chinder Roy	10
80.	E. N. Boker, Esq	10
81.	Bapon Daval Chand Bose	10
82	" Madan Monan dose	10
83.	"Kumar Lat Kuma	10
84.	Moulyi Synd Aki on Hossain	10
85.	Moulyi Az z Annud	10
86.	Ra Kanyetat Dev Bahadoor	10
37	H Hotmwood, Esq	10 :
88	Biba Harry Monan Chander	10
89.	Baboo Cnakk mlal Roy	5
90.	" Strod present Guose	= 1
Sı	thscriptions will be thankfully received	bv 1
the.	Honoray Joint Secretaries,	1
Ru	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI BAHAD	UR.
	4, British Indian Street, Cacart.
	and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMAN, Esq.
	Bunserallos

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WAIJH. Rs. .

Bartister-atLaw, 16, Taltolla, Calcuita

Guaranteed three Years,

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open faced, makel silvero, keviess, smot winding, patent, where Stylle IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" witch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Dourns, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an exita glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Wairanted to stand the toughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time E-csly repairable. Others seif at double our rates. One witch free for the purchase of 8 at a time, Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal R tilway, from Ceylon says.—It keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and pelks. × Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamaliee says: I sold it for Rs. 16.× Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Region model and the sold of Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Ptina Opium Department says: —I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Ptina Opium Department says: —I be watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1–8-0. Real

parment says: The watch you sent me some seven yet ago its still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real
Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real
Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased good chain Re. 18-0.

Fashion the electro cased Gold Ring set win scientific diamonds, Rouse, Emeralds, at Re. 18-0. Mr. G. Smith, S.d. Inspector from Samkuta, says: "A German vained the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at R. 30." K-y winding, Government stamped, solid silver hinting case, Koyd watch with extress and full three years! goir interfinents is and full three years! goir interfinents in Pre. G. Hawkers of 2nd Vork Laght. Intanty from Puranthur says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Seage into fr. 8, 28. Pre. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt, from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very some witch Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold width Rs. 30; Laffee' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real so id gold. No agents kept, all goods, sent only by its from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO,

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO. вомвау.

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian times. Microscopic research, however, has moved this to be a furt, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and perform an endirection of the properties of t

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All wno suffer and sure reites from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-heidessness and sufering wine in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and sufest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous renef in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of FOOTHACHE? A single application will teneve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Fry this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Baim is used by the best Phy-The Oriental dath is used by the best chief-steams in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of nomes. By its intrinsic virtue, it it is achieved a wide-sine of populative which no similar preparation has ever before attained

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world

Agents in Calcutta Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co and Batigate & Co Limited

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPEH

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION If paid in savan e,

early				k.	12
Halt-vear		•••			-
Quaren	' …				4
Montany				15-	1-8
rogle or	samme	CODI		Aus.	U-8
	li no	t pard in ,	idvance,
Yearly	•••			R٠.	18
Half-year		•••	•••	٠,	10-6

Quarterly , oMonthly 2Single or sample Copy ... Aus. oNo auditional charge for postage or peoul ... " 0-0 ... " 2-2 ... Aus. 0-12

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annay a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domesuc Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and pamphiles

Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE . I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LIFEARATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 693.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE.

BY JAMES HUICHINSON.

CANTO FIRST.

(Continued from $ 434.)

IV.

I, then, had little cleikly lore;
For I was of the warrior caste,*
And oever wished to have been more,
Bit for her sake;—but that is past.
I say, I was a soldier born,
And I was one, in thought and deed,
And in the heyday of our morn,
The iess we rick of caste, and creed;
And so it was—a mud I loved!
Ah! me, that I should live to tell
The secret tale of guilt, and hell;
She was a Brahumi's child 't
And this alas! the cause hath proved
Of all that's dark, and wild.

- * The tithe of Khettree, Chittee, or Rajpoot, the caste inferior only to the Brahmins. The persons belonging to this caste are, by no means, remarkable for their learning, or literary attainments; on the contrary, they more resemble those ancient Barons, and warriors of our own country, who despised learning, and could scarledy even sign their own names. To this day, in those pairs of the east, in which I have resided, it is not customary for persons, of any rank, to sign their names to letters or other documents. To supply the deficiency, persons, of the soit, are all provided with a signet ring, which they wear on the finger, on all necessary occusions, this is digit in these scals generally near the name of the person, and probably some affix, as Bindoon, (simil or our Esquire), and the date, on which the seal was cut; after the death of the person to whom it belonged, the seal is either destroyed, or taken good care of, by his hens, for very obvious reasons.
- † The laws or customs relating to marriage, among the Hindoos, vary considerably, in different castes. In some, marriages can only ne contracted between parties of the same tribe or family, beyond of course certain degrees of consangunity; in others, the contracting parties must be of different tribes of family cucles. In some of the lower castes, it is considered lawful for the hisband of one sister to have children by another, and agoing some of the mountain tribes of Cuttack, I have been informed, that the custom adverted to, in scripture, of several brothers taking the same wife, in succession, previals. In all the sacred writings of the Hindoos, and in the opinion of the people the meelives, it is degrading and disgraceful in the males of the longher, to have connexion with the females of the longer, to have connexion with the females of the lower castes; but for a male of inferior caste to defile the daughter of a Brahmin,—is death; it is seculage, and from having committed this deadly offence, spring the whole of the miseries, which afterwards assail the Sonyassee, in his progress through life.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Circ for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-druins and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPION BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON. V.

Thou knowest, it is a deadly sin,
For those, who hold the Hindoo creed,
To love or wed, except within
The pale of caste, which is their meed
Such sin was inne, and mine such blame,
I saw but her, nor thought of shame;
Yet sometimes, I have tried in vain,
To think less harshly of my guilt,
No blood of mine flowed, in her veins,
No blood of hers, by me was split,
'Tis idle all—she heard my vow,
She trusted,—and where is she now?

VI.

I was an idle stripling then, With scarce a down, on hip or chin, But smooth of face, and strong of hand, With aim well fitted for the brand; With free, and well expanded chest, That typered to my slender warst, And limb as strught, and fleet, as ere, Yet bore a hardy mountaineeer ! * Such was the outward tenement. To the undying spirit lent, And that was soft, yet proud and shy, And ye might trace it to my eye, The' not one furrow marked by brow, Of all, that there, thou sees't now; But these are foolish things, which yet, We cannot :-- if we would forget

VH

Twas summer, and the drought was high, The Fulgo's bed was bare, and dry,† And often, I would seek the bank, Still fresh, and green, of a lone tank Where Palm, and Tamarond mingling, made, From montide heats, grateful shade.

- *It may perhaps be thought, that I have been unnecessarily minute, in describing the personal appearance of the Suny issee in his youth, but it is to be necollected, that when not diessed, for some particular occasion, the inhabitants of Bengal, and Hindowsthan go shout, on the ordinary affairs of life, dressed as described in the text; that is, rather more scantily, if any thing, than an English puglish, when stript for a rencounter.
- † The Fulgo is considered one of the vost sacred rivers in India It flows past Boodul'h-Gyah, within about two hundred yards of the great temple; six miles lower down, it runs under the walls of the sacred city of Gyah itself. It is one of the objects of Hindoo adoration. In summer, its bed, which is nearly a mile broad opposite to Gyah, is often almost, if not interly dry; but in the range season, it is a bold, sweeping stream, and would be considered a fine river, in any country, in which large rivers are uncommon.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postat money orders, it possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

There rose, with feathery less
The Banian, with its set
And graceful Betely.
Till scarce a ray could pe
All these, in wildest order characteristics of the lake,
The tangled, and umbrageous brands
Seemed framework of some mirror vast,
Hiding it, from each valgar guest,
Till scarce a ripple stirred its breast;
While, in its glassy depths below,
The picture smiled, with mellowed glow.

VIII.

Twas there, I loved to muse an honr, And watch the damsels sport, and cower, Amid the cool, and fucid tide. That mellowed, what it could not hide. The blushing charms, that half revealed, Their clinging drapery ill concealed; And there, I saw my Lilloo first, A day both blessed, and accurst, Amid them all, she had no peer, From rival, she had nought to fear : In all the charms of youth, she stood, fust budding into womanhood-Her stately form, I marked her well, Was taper, as the cypress tree, And graceful, as the wild gazelle, And all, a woman's ought to be.

IX.

Like Gunga, rising from the wave, Or Rhemba, from her ocean cave,t With diamond dew-drops spangled o'er, Tired of the bath, she sought the shore-She wrong the moisture, from her hair, That down her back, in ringlets, fell, Hiding her shoulders, like a veil, Then spread it, to the sunny air ; The Saree's graceful folds put on, And soon her simple toilet done,! She placed her pitcher, on her head .--Her milk-white robe she closer drew, Around her face; then with a tread, So light, so buoyant, and so true, Might wake, in courtly dames, a sigh, I saw her homeward hie !-- §

(To be continued)

MEEKLYAMA"

THE Civil Courts are at rest. The High Court, Original Side, closed for the annual vacation including Mahalaya, Durga, Lukshuii, and Kali Pujas, and Bhrairiditya and Jagadharri and Kartic Pujas, on and from Wednesday, the 11th of September. It will resume its sittings on Thursday, the 21st November. There is no continuous long holiday for the Insolvency Court. It will sit on Saturday, the 5th of October, and Saturday, the 30th of November. The office of the Court, Original Side, closed for general business from Wednesday, the 18th of September, to be re-opened on Monday, the 18th of Novembe. General business does not seem to include taxing of bills, for the Registrar, as Taxing Officer, was working on the 19th September. One Judge will temain in town for urgent business and airangements have been made for the attendance of such superior and subordinate officers as may be required for the purpose.

The general holidays, for all but the excepted offices, are from the 23rd September to the 4th October inclusive. The Public Debt Office, the Government Sivings Bink, and the Government Account Department at the Bank of Bengal will be open for the transaction of business and for the receipt and payment of money on Government account on the 23rd, 24th and 30th September and 1st and 2nd October. The Paper Currency Office and the Comptroller-General's Office will also do business on the above dates. The Custom House will partially observe the holiday on the 25th, 26th, 27th and 28th September and 3rd and 4th October, when it will be open free of charge (on a day's notice being given) from 11 A. M. to 12 noon for entering or clearing vessels and for the use of bills of entry or shipping bills covering free goods from or to the same, the Treasury being closed. Mr. Skrine's book just published-" An Indian Journalist being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambhu C Mookerjee" gives some unpublished private conrespondence on the subject of the Long Holiday, in the year 1889 when it was decided to keep certain offices open. Colonel Ardagh, Private Secretary to the then Viceroy's letter (Sept.) to Dr. Mookerjee, who championed the movement for the closure of offices, explains why Lord Lansdowne gave his sanction to the cuitailing of the Puja vacation, for which the Bengal Chamber of Commerce had agitated for years without success.

THIS week the English mail was delivered in Calcutta on Tuesday, and left it the next day. This change of the departure of the inail from Tuesday to Wednesday will continue for the present.

THE Law Member is spoken of as the next probable Chief Justice of the Bengal High Court.

Santoo Mather, a leper of Watgonge, like many of his class, lived by begging. But his disease assuming a formidable shipe he was obliged to keep home. To rid himself of his alments, the more so as he was deprived of the only means of subsistence, he cut his throat with a kinfe to end his existence. The wound was not deep and he recovered under medical aid which was forthcoming. He was won back from death that he might be tried for attempting suicide. He was then adjudged Her Majesty's guest at the Appore jail for two months, after which period he will be sent out to beg his bread, if able, or attempt another self-destruction.

THERE are three John Wilsons, two George Joachim Goschens, two William Abrahams, and two Robert Wallaces in the House of Commons. While the Goschens are father and son, the other gentlemen who are namesakes are quite unconnected with each other. One Abraham is a Welsh, the other an Irish, member. Both the Wallaces represent Scotch constituencies, and are English barristers. Mr. Robert Wallace, the member for one of the divisions of Edinburgh, is a Scotchman by birth and training, who held at one time a chair in Scotch University, but Mr. Robert Wallace, Q. C., the newly-elected member for Perth, is an Irishman by birth, antecedents, and education.

WE read .

"Mr. Humphry Ward tells a good story of Huxley in one of his letters to the New York Tribune. Wining to a young kinswoman after he had been to Osooine to be sworn in as a memoer of the

^{*} All these are trees very common in India, more particularly in Bengal. The palm, the date, and the tomarind must be familiar even to the western reader; the banian is the Ficus Religiosus of botanists, it grows to a great size, and from its branches sends down shoots, which again take root in the earth, thus giving the appearance of arcades, where the tree is very large, which however is not always, nor very often the case. It is held in great religious estimation, by the Hindoos. The betel or soparee is the tree, which produces the hetelinit;—it is a species of palm, rises to a great height, and is exceedingly slender and graceful.

⁺ Gunga, the native name of the Ganges; in the present instance, it means the goddess, who presides over that sacred river. Rhemba is the ocean Venus of the Hindoos.

the ocean venus of the Finados.

† The Sure is the dress of the Hindon women. It consists of one piece of white cloth, just as it came from the hands of the weaver, about eight or ten yards long, and sometimes a little ornamented at the ends. It is wrapped two or three times round the waist so as to allow the lower border to hang down, a little below the calf of the leg; a fold of it is taken from the waist, over the breast and head, which forms the only dress of the upper part of the body, among the ordinary classes. The Moosulmanee females wear paijamas or trowsers, and their toilet is altogether considerably more complicated.

§ The futures of the Hundon women residual to the property of the property of the state of the state of the future of the Hundon women residual to the property of the property

[§] The figures of the Hindoo women are light, and, though perhaps rather small, are symmetrically formed, and their walk is, at the same time, light, eavy, buoyant, and stately; in short, it is the very opposite of cloiddish or inelastic. When they go to draw water, for domestic purposes, they carry the gui rah or pitcher, which is a globular vessel of brass or earthen-ware, contracted at the neck, and agrin widening at the mouth, either on the head or resting on one hip. These vessels are made of all sizes, but those, in general use, contain about half the quantity of an English bucket or less.

Privy Council, Huxley said:—'I intended for your benefit, to have a good look at Her Majesty, but I could not because I found, to my great discomfiture, that Her Majesty was constantly looking at me.' And well she might for among the emment lawyers, professional politicians, and broad-acted nobles who gathered around that sacred board, it is not to be supposed that she had so often seen a face so stuking, or looked upon a man whose discoveries, thoughts, and words had made so deep a mark upon his time."

•.

MOULVI Abdus Salam, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, has fined the proprietor of a Dispensary Rs. 5 for having sold an ounce of brandy to a customer. The facts have not been properly reported, so it does not appear whether the spirit was sold, under a medical prescription, for the use of a patient. The excise law heing very sweeping, the Deputy may be technically right. But surely it is a hardship to punish small sales, by registered dispensation, of unlicensed spirits, for purely medicinal purposes.

•.

THE following, hearing on the execution of the beautiful Charlotte Corday, the girl who despatched Marat to the other world, is going the round. Attempts have been made to discover the real motive that impelled her to the deed. At one time it was believed that she simply avenged the death of her lover who had been executed through Marat's accusation. The current theory is that it was her country's wrongs that urged her to the bloody act. We ought not to be so blind to the claims of morality and justice as to demand admiration for the girl, although it was a monster whose heart felt the point of her dagger. For all that, it is difficult to withhold pity from one who became an assassin from the highest of motives that can influence earing humanity.

"An Executioner's Diary.—On this day, Wednesday, July 17, first year of the one and indivisible Republic, I executed Charlotte Corday, On reaching her cell in the Conciergerie, we found her writing. She looked in my direction and asked me to wait. When she had finished, she took off her cap and told me to cut her hair. Since M. de la Barre, I had not seen courage equal to hers. We were mall six or seven men, whose profession was anything but softening, and yet she was less moved tinan we were. When her hair was cropped she gave part to the arrist who had taken her portrait, and some to the jailor's wife. I gave her the red shirt which she arranged heiself. As I prepared to pinion her, she requested to keep on her gloves because when she was arriested the cords were so tight that her skin was broken. I said she could if she liked but that I could do it without huiting her. She smiled, and saying, 'To be sure you ought to know how to do it,' held out her naked hands. These was thander and rain when we reached the quays, but the crowd was thick. At a window of the Rue St. Honoid I saw Robespierre, Camille, and Danton. They looked attentively at the colpit. I myself often looked at her. Not on account of her personal beauty, great was that was; but it seemed impossible that she could remain so calm and comageous. I said: 'You find the way long, I fear?' 'No matter,' replied she, 'We shall reach the scaffold sooner or later.' When we reached the Place de la Revolution, I tried to hide it from her by standing up. But she said: 'I have a right to be curious; this is the first time I see it.' She ascended the steps mubbly. One of my men suddenly standing to prolong the point gives better the capy, I thought it barbarous to prolong the point gives wiferings for an instant. I made a sign to my man, and he pulled the roje."—Charles Henri Sunson's Diary.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

-

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

.....

THE heavy and continuous shipments of gold from New York to Europe are causing measuress in the American city. The Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American silver party has stated that if business continues to improve the silver question is dead. In New York this is regarded as an important interance.

OWING to the temporary suspension of their labours in the Pamirs, consequent upon a disagreement between the Commissioners, the Russian Commissioner, M. Schweikovski, announced that he was returning to St. Petersburg. But the disagreement has been settled by reference to London and St. Petersburg. The latest information is that delimitation is complete and only awaits ratification. The Turkestan Gazette rebukes the Novoe Viennya for stirring up illfeeling between the Russians and the British by publishing inaccurate reports.

FRANCE and Russia are willing to morally support Great Butain, but are decidedly reluctant to join in coercive measures to compel the Porte to accept the proposed Armenian reforms. The Powers, especially Great Butain, are dissatisfied with the Porte's concessions in Armenia. It is probable that further pressure will be brought to bear on the Porte. It is understood that Lord Salisbury intends to insist on the Viceroy and the other high officials who are answerable for the Kucheng massacre being brought to account. He will bring pressure to bear on China for this purpose.

MUCH electoral excitement has taken place at Limerick, where Mr. O'Keefe, an anti-Painellite, has been elected member of Parliament in place of the dynamiter Daly, defeating Mr. Nolan, a Parnellite candidate, by eighty-seven votes. Rioting went on for five hours on Saturday, and fifty of the rioters were injured. The police made twenty arrests.

THE French Commercial Mission to China has sailed.

THE Russian Government have established a Consulate at Turfan, in Chinese Turkestan, and an escort of Cossacks will be attached to the Consulate.

CHOLERA has appeared at Tangier.

THE Lord Mayor of London was, on Sep. 15, entertained at luncheon by the Paris Municipal Council. The Marquis of Dufferin and Ava was present. Cordial toasts were drunk, and cordial speeches made.

THE Mandarins continue to obstruct the work of the Kucheng Commission. A rebellion has broken out on the borders of the Fokien Province. The officials have fled to Hengneng, leaving the district at the mercy of the insurgents. Troops are advancing to the district.

GERMANY is negociating with the Viceroy of Tientsin for the cession to Germany of a piece of land on the Peiho, similar to the English and French concessions.

GERMANY has decided to support the Russo-French measures to hasten the Japanese evacuation of the Liantung Pennusula.

MR. W. R. Greene, M. P., has received a letter from Uganda, which states that Capitain Lothaire shot one hundred of the late Mr. Stokes's followers because they refused to join him.

A SERIOUS Native rising is reported to have taken place in different parts of the Congo State even where the Belgians were hitherto strongest, and Captain Pelizer has been murdered by his own troops. King Leopold has instructed the officers of the Congo State never to execute any foreigners, but to send them to Boma, the seat of Government, for a proper trial.

THE King and Queen of Italy have arrived at Rome to attend the fêtes in commemoration of the twentieth return of the entry of the Italian troops into the city. Much national enthusiasm is being displayed.

THE Duke of Cambridge, speaking at Easingwold, on the 18th, affirmed that his successor would find the Army equal to the needs of the Empire. He thanked God for the existence of the Volunteer Force, and said that the country would be miserable if conscription was introduced.

railway from Shanghai to Nanking.

AT Cairo, two Armenians strangled a Turkish soldier whom they overheard boasting of having tortured their relatives at Lasun. They have since been arrested.

PRINCE Lobanoff, Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is at present staying in France, will attend officially the great review of troops at Mirecourt in the presence of Piesident Faure. The French press regards this as a conclusive mark of the Franco-Russian alliance.

THE book of the month is "An Indian Journalist being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee, late editor of Reis and Rayyet, Calcutta, by F. H. Skrine, I. C. S." It ought to gladden the hearts of all Bengalis, for it is the first instance in which a European member of the Indian Civil Service attempts, for noble purposes, a biography of one of their own race who never sought the service of Government, and enters a protest against the calumny by the heedless rhetorician, Lord Macaulay, of their national character. Educated Indians, well off in life, who were expected to behave better, have remarked. What was Mookerjee that Skrine should grieve for him? To such his book is the reply. If they are prepared to lay out five rupees they will know better and be benefited. For only the dedicatory preface, the book, apart from its other merits, ought to find a place in every Bengali home. It will add a zest to the festivities of the season. May Durga shower her blessings on Mr. Skrine and his !

ORDERS have been passed to pay, on preaudit, the salaries for September, in the Government offices at Calcutta before the holidays, which commence from next week.

AT the hext St. Andrew's Dinner, Sir Charles Elliott will be the chief guest.

THE Indian Daily News says :-

"Since Six Antony McDonuell went to rule at Allahabad, there have been hardly two possibilities as to the Belvedere succession, and the news from Simla that Six Alexander Mackenize is to be the next Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal is the mere statement of a foregone conclusion. That the question is definitely settled betimes, however, is matter for congratulation, if only in that it will calm the turbulent imagination of the native press, which loves nothing better than to run rule over what may be on the long of the goods for Bengal is gination of the native press, which loves nothing better than to run riet over what may be on the lap of the gods for Bengal. Sir Alexander has done conspicuously good work in Burinah, and will doubtless assume office in Bengal with the full knowledge that he takes up much more difficult and exacting duties. In Lady Mackenzle, Belvedere will have a charming and accomplished hostess."

They are all, all able men, conspicuous for good work, and their sweet consorts also are all, all charming. Of that there is no doubt. But why indulge in a needless fling at the native press? As a matter of fact, it is the Anglo-Indian press that is distinguished for its forecast of future appointments. To such an extent did the former Friend of India use to indulge in it that it was popularly said that the Friend had men to nominate for every post under the Government, from the Viceroy down to the Treasury peon or the Public Works duftry. Those capable of reading between the lines can understand that the paragraph in the News has its genesis in certain rumours, first voiced in Anglo-Indian cricles, about the Belvedere succession, which have disturbed our contemporary's forecast as quietly settled by him long ago.

ADVERTING to the rumour about Mr. Cotton's filling the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces, the Indian Daily News remarks,-"We can hardly suppose that Lord Eigin would place the author of 'New Indic' to an independent charge, without serious reflection on the probable consequences, especially with so many far safer men available." If the authorship of "New India" were the only objection, we can assure our contemporary that it is not worth a minute's thought. Mr Cotton, notwithstanding his coquetting with educated Indians, his mystical worship of Humanity, and his Positivism, is as sympathetic as Sir A. P. MacDonnell with the people of this country. The veneer of liberalism to the contrary, it has always been known, so far as action is concerned and not profession, that the Hon'ole Mr. Cotton of the Bengal Council | Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

THE Emperor of China has sanctioned the immediate building of a and the Secretariat is the same individual who, years ago, in the columns of the Indian Observer, spoke of the educated natives of India as "the untoward offspring of English folly."

> In reply to a correspondent who had enquired what books he generally took with him on his campaigns, Lord Wolsely is credited with having answered as follows :--

> "A General has but very little time for reading-at least, I never can find time-when in the field. During the Mutiny and the China War I carried a Testament, and two volumes of Shakespeare that contained his best plays; and since then, when in the field, I have always carried

> > Book of Common Prayer. Thomas à Kempis Soldier's Pocket Book,

-depending on a well-organised postal service to supply me weekly with plenty of newspipers.

The book that I like reading at odd moments is 'The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius.

When I am going on any distant expedition for a lengthened time, I should add to those I have mentioned the following books :-History : Creasy's Decisive Battles.

Plutarch's Lives. Cæsar. Voltaire's Charles XII. Cæsar, by Froude. Hume's England.

Fiction: Macaulay's History of England and his Essays."

The inclusion of Micaulay's "History of England" under the head of fiction, a contemporary remarks, is "distinctly hard on Macaulay." The fact is, Lord Wolsely is not singular in his opinion. Many persons believe that, notwithstanding their popularity, the volumes of Micaulay have not much historical value. Highly meritorious as the production is, Croker succeeded in pointing out its blemishes, many of which are, no doubt, serious. The biographer of Macaulay, his own nephew, while noticing the perfect furor of ipplause and admiration with which the work was greeted on all sides, brushes Croker aside as an insignificant assailant unworthy of serious notice. Those, however, whose acquaintance with Croker is at first hand, know how formidable an antagonist he was in the arena of literary controversy. No writer was more careful of his facts than Croker. His review of O'Meara's book charging Sir Hudson Low, the Governor of St. Helens, with having incited him to poison Napoleon in his exile, was a most brilliant performance. His review of Thierhistorical works was scarcely less so. In spite of his critique in the Edinburgh Review on Croker's edition of Boswell, in which he charged Croker with numerous inaccuracies respecting names and dates, Macaulay, in one of his letters to his sister, owned the ments of the book he had publicly condemned. The fact is, the brilliant rhetoric of Macaulay has blinded many Indian students to the worth of Croker as a periodical writer. His review of Macaulay's History may be perused with delight and profit by every one. Considering the age at which Croker wrote that review, it was a marvel. He had been deprived of vision. He was assisted by an amanuensis in reading and making extracts from manuscripts in the British Museum. Despite all these disadvantages, Croker, as already said, pointed out many historical inaccuracies. His remarks, above all, on the mannerisms of Macaulay, were characterised by great humour. It was Croker who first pointed out that Macaulay's cavalry always came "pricking fast." They blunder also of Macaulay, that Croker pointed out regarding the account of Queen Elizabeth's address to her soldiers at Tilbury, was a serious one. For all that, it is nothing but eccentricity to class both the History and the E-says of Macaulay under Fiction.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria THE Viceroy, Lidy Elgin, Ladies Christian and Veronica Bruce, with Singeon-Colonel Franklin and two Aides-de-Camp, pass the Puja week at Nukhanda.

PRIVATE Thomas Stewart, Highland Light Infantry, was executed at the Fyzabad jail on the 12th September. The prisoner, reports an Anglo-Indian contemporary, bore himself with fortitude, singing as he was marched to the scaffold "Just as I am, without one plea." It also publishes the following letter to shew that Stewart while maintaining to the last that he had no intention to commit murder admitted the justice of the sentence passed on him.

"Corporal MacMath, I have asked Mr. Elliott to write you these lew tines to tell you how very sorry I am for hutting you. You never did me any wrong. I fired my rifle off without meaning to kill or nuit any one, and I did it when in drink. I know no one will believe this, but it is the truth, I know I deserve to die for what I have this, but it is the truth. I know I deserve to die for what I have done. I deserve no pity from any one, and don't look for it. I look only to God, against whom I have most sinned. I feel He has for given me. I am ready to die, but I want to see you very much before I am executed, to tell you how sorry I am for hirting you, and get your forgiveness."

It is a touching letter, whatever the man in whose name it is given, This is not the first letter of the kind. Other Privates have spoken to the same tune.

A WILD rumour has been for sometime affoat in town that Moulvi Abdul Jabbar Khan Bahadur, C. I. E., who had been with his family, on a pilgrimage, to Mecca, was in custody and, some went so far, that he was killed. On the 7th he wrote from Aden to say that he was safe and was on his homeward voyage per S. S. Sultan. It took him 24 days from Mecca to Medina and from Medina to Mecca on camel's back under most trying circumstances. Last Taursday he left Colombo. The friends of the Moulvi will be glad to hear that he is expected in Calcutta in the middle of next week. Arrangements will be made to welcome him back at the Koila Ghat.

THE Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta, being asked by the Government of Bengal for an expression of their opinion, submitted an earnest protest against the provisions of the Pilgrim Ships Bill. They sent up also their President the Hon'ble Prince Sir Jahan Kadar Muza B chadur to represent the views of the Mahomedan community at the Legislative Council. The Prince at first took up his quarters at Mayville, but it being too high up the hills, the Viceroy offered him the Villa of Armsdell.

RA! Annada Proshad Gnose Bahader, first Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, retires from service this day, at the age of 61 years. He began, in the year 1856, as a Daroga in the old Police, on Rs. 50 per mensem. In seven years, he rose to be Court Inspector at Midnapur. In 1864, he was drafted from active service to the cherical, being appointed head clerk and sheristadar at the Midnapur Magistracy. His next appointment, three years after, was as Assessor under the License Tax Acr. While so employed, he appeared at the first competitive Examination for deputy magistracy held in 1868, during the administration of Sir William Grey-Having passed, he was admitted to the Subordinate Executive Service on the 21st July, 1868. By May, next year, after departmental examinations, he was confirmed in that service. He was soon promoted to the fifth grade over the heads of many of his compeers. His rise was so rapid that the late member of the Board of Revenue the Hon'ble Mr. Reynolds, then Collector, noticed the matter thus: "Accept my congraturations upon your well-deserved promotion to the titu grade. I do not tunk I remember any member of your service. who has risen so rapidly, as you have."

Down to the year 1870, we find him employed in the districts of Hooghly and Howran. He was then transferred to the Orissa Division, where he made his mark and completed the intricate and long-pending settlement of the Town Khasmahal to the satisfaction of the Collector and the Commissioner. In 1874, he was deputed on special duty in connection with the Behar Famine. Mr. Rivenshaw, the then Commissioner of the Orissa Division, was unwilling to part with him. He wrote: "I am exceedingly sorry to lose Babu Annada Proshad, who is an exceptionally good officer, and who has now acquired very considerable experience in Orissa, and is by cast and temper peculiarly well fitted for duty in the Division. I will deem it a favour, if, when Babu Annada Proshad is no tune, of this formidable disease.

longer required for special duty, he may be allowed to resume his work in Cuttak." After the Funine operations closed, he was appointed officiating Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of the Orissa Division. Confirmed in that post in 1881, he continued as such in three Divisions-Orissa, Burdwan and the Presidency till the last, except for two brief intervals, for 14 years. Commencing with Rs. 50, he ends with Rs. 800 in the first grude of the service, retiring with a well-earned pension and the distinction of Rai Bahadoor. In his long official career of forty years, he was never found wanting in duty, and though not brilliant was always highly useful. He had five extensions of service and the last Commissioner to whom he was Assistant had strongly recommended him for another. Like Mr. Westmacott, Mr. Beames too had a great liking for the Baboo.

THE following extracts, from an advance proof from Pandit Abinash Chandra Kaviratua's Charaka, bearing on the characteristics of quacks, will be read with interest. It would seem that they, in all ages and climes, present the same features.

"They that are possessed of opposite qualifications are compinions of disease and destroyers of Life. These men, we tring the robes of physicians, are the thorns of the world. Behaving after the manner physicians, are the thorns of the world. Behaving after the manner of those whom they innitate, those persons, through the heedlessness of kings, move about in all countries.

This is their special indication, viz., clad in the robes of physicians and indulging in self-praise, they walk along the public streets, in expectation of calls.

expectation of calls.

"When they hear of anybody's illness, they run towards his neighbourhood, and in the hearing of that person's friends londly proclaim their own skill and accomplishments as physicians.

These men frequently proclaim the shortcomings of the person whose treatment they take up.

They wish to win over the friends of the ailing person by doing what would gladden them, by stories and conversation, and various small

They proclaim their own disposition to be pleased with a very little

Obtaining a case for treatment, they constantly keep their eye on all things, desirous of concealing their ignorance by desterity.

Unable to alleviate the disease, they accuse the patient as unequipt with desirable necessaries, as disposed to transgress the directions of with destration ecessaries, as disposed to transgress the directions of the physician, and as having no control over his inclinations.

Beholding that the last stage has come, they fly away, leaving the patient's presence and reparing to some other place. If pipening to be present in assemblies of ignorant or common men, they proclaim their own skill in treating disease, betraying their ignorance the

Manifesting their own ignorance, they censure the knowledge and wisdom of physicians that are truly wise.

Beholding an assembly of men that are learned and wise, they avoid it from a distance, like travellers avoiding a wilderness where there is cause of fear.

If anybody be ever cured, by these physicians, of any light disease that cure is always referred to by them in class where the treatment that effected the cure is mapplicable or where an altogether different kind of treatment is required.

They do not desire to consult any one (in respect of anything connected with the medical scriptures). Nor do they desire to be consulted by any one.

They fear any one who wishes to consult them as one fears death itself. No one knows who their preceptor is, or who their disciple, or who their fellow-student.

(Here are some verses.)

Those men who, wearing the girb of physicians, seek to gratify afflicted persons like fowlers seeking to capture birds in the woods by having recourse to their nets or surviges, "bose men who are unendued with scriptures, experience, (knowledge al) curative operations, time, measure, and place, smould be avoided. They walk on the earth like the followers (messengers) of Death.

A wise patient should always avoid those foolish men with a show of terraining who for errors their sustainance, interested to the happens of terraining who for errors their sustainance, interest to the happens.

A wise patient should always awar those coulso men with a show of learning who, for earning their sustemane, pretend to the honour of being physicians. They are like snakes subsisting on air."

To the above, the translator adds the following interesting notes "It is evident that the Rishi was for suppressing quacks by penal legislation. Unfortunitely, the question is not easy of solution as to who are quacks. Under most Governments, Homosopathy is still regarded as a form of quackery. In India, under British rule, the system propounded by the Rishi himself, is regarded as quackery. Kavirajes are classed in State-returns as herbalists ;- a fine instance of the appreciation in which the Hindu system of medicine is held by the rulers of the country! The fact is impossible of disproof that thousands of chronic cases, given up by European physicians as hopeless, are cured by these despised herbalists. Dysentery, when it attacks a European, generally proves fatal in India. Yet those Europeans who place themselves under Kivirajes, get themselves cured, in no "It would be curious to ascertain what the dress was of physicians in ancient India. To this day, many physicians, who have no calls, pass and repass along the public thoroughfares in their good and handsome carriages drawn by excellent steeds, to create the impression that their practice keeps them engaged for the whole day."

When success does not attend their labours, nothing is more common for incompetent physicians than to accuse the patient of disobedience and other faults. Then, again, the comparison between quacks and snakes which subsist on air, is a very happy one, for quacks, although they have ostenishle practice, and, therefore, income, succeed in keeping up appearances. Sometimes, having made money by trade or mother ways, they invest it in lofty building, for creating the impression that their practice is very large and lucrative. In large towns where next-door neighbours do not know each other, this often succeeds in extending the practice of incompetent physicians. The matchity to name who their preceptor and fellow-students are forms another characteristic of quacks. When pressed, they name sometimes this university and sometimes that as their alma mater, although the records of the institution afford no trace of their names.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, September 21, 1895.

THE PILGRIM SHIPS BILL,

AN ANTICIPATORY MEASURE.

THE Pilgrim Ships Bill, as was to be expected, has created considerable commotion among Mahomedans. We have already commented on it. Notwithstanding all that has been said in various quarters that it is a measure in the right direction and that it was not intended to annoy the religious, the belief still prevails that it will interfere with Haj and that the poor pious Mahomedan will find his way to the holy shrines of Mecca practically closed to him. The Bill has been introduced not because the Government of India see any necessity for it, but because France believes that outbreak of cholera in Europe is due to the annual pilgrimage of the Faithful. This is clear from the speech of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the member in charge of the Bill. The hands of the Government of India are completely tied. We have here another example of Legislation by Mandate. The Government of India are almost sure that the pilgrimage of the Indian Mahomedans to the Hedjaz has nothing whatever to do with the spread of the disease in Europe. They emphatically declare that cholera travels by way of Russia and not through Arabia and Egypt. But all that goes for nothing. Great Britain has entered into a convention with the Continental Powers and to give validity to it the Pilgrim Ships Bill must be passed and hundreds of Mahomedans hindered in an act which they regard as the key to heaven: As will be explained afterwards more than two-thirds of the pilgrims will have difficulty in performing hereafter the Haj, which even the most sceptical Moslem is not prepared to ignore,

It is impossible for Europeans to realize the intensity of religious feeling of an Asiatic. In spite of the civilization which is growing around him, an orthodox Hundu or Mahomedan blindly sticks to the outward forms of his faith. The Mahomedan in particular zealously guards them. He has still the old faith—senseless you may call it but its existence is a fact which to ignore would be a grave mistake. Educate the people if you will, educate them in science and sanitation, but it is impolitic to press upon them a measure which is sure to be misunderstood and misinterpreted by ignorant Mahomedans.

Another strange fact in connection with this piece of legislation is that the Government of India were not properly represented in the conference held at Paris, of which it is the outcome. They deputed Surgeon-General J. M. Cunningham, on the understanding that matters regarding the sanitation of only the Red Sea ports were to be discussed. They had no knowledge whatever that any question about Indian pilgrims would be raised. According to what has been said by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in the opening speech, had they known it they would have sent some other gentleman better qualified to deal with the political aspect of the question than a mere professional. But whether they knew it or not, they must swallow the bitter pill. On June 7, 1894 the Secretary of State sent them a copy of the Convention and ordered them to at once change the law according to its terms. The Secretary of State wills it, and it must be done.

Criticism on the details of the Bill is obviously useless. The Bill was matured in London, if not in Paris, and is going through a mere routine form in the Supreme Council. Even if the Mahomedans were far more enlightened than what they are and the whole country had cried out against the proposed legislation, it would have been impossible for the Government to yield to public opinion. The English Government has entered into a contract with the other European Powers, which the entire strength of the Government of India cannot shake off. But all the same the attitude of the British Government is bardly explicable. It accepts the resolutions of the conference and thereby pleases France no doubt but at the risk of displeasing, nay wounding the feelings of millions of its own subjects.

Though any examination of the details will be unavailing, it may be of use in pointing out the radical changes introduced by the measure. The most important sections are 4, 18 and 27. Section 4 defines pilgrims and includes in the term all persons of whatever age. Section 18 empowers the Governor-General in Council to prescribe the number of superficial and cubic feet to be allotted to each pilgrim and by executive order Government intend to fix it at 16 sq. ft. According to the existing Act it is only 9 sq. ft. There is another important innovation in the section which requires that the upper deck unavailing, it may be of use in pointing out the radical the section which requires that the upper deck of a vessel should be reserved gratuitously for passengers. The effect of these two sections is obvious enough. The ship agents are not going to allow themselves to suffer by this legislation. If the legislature require an entire ship to be reserved for a few men, the ship-owners would be glad to comply with this demand, but they would, to be sure, exact as much from the few as they did before from many. With a change of 16 to 9 feet, the entire upper deck not counting as legal space, all children counting as full pilgrims and with hospital accommodation of 5 per cent. of the pil-grims on board at the rate of 32 sq. ft., per head, they must considerably enhance the fares. And what does this little fact signify? It means that twothirds of the pilgrims would be left at Bombay and thence return to their homes miserable and wretched. "Kill us on board," they would cry, "but allow us to embark. We would reach Paradise." Section 27 of the Bill empowers a medical officer on sus picion of a man's having been on attendance on or in I contact with a cholera-striken person to forbid his embarkation. The discretionary power hereby vested is too great and may on occasions be arbitrarily used. It is not improbable that an enthusiastic medical officer may interpret contact in such a way as to exclude hundreds of healthy devotees.

Since the above was in type Sir Alexander Mackenzie last Thursday presented the report of the Select Committee on the Bill. We take the following telegraphic summary from the Englishman:—

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in introducing the report of the Select Committee on the Pilgrim Ships Bill, made a long speech. He said that full reports had been received from Bengal and Bombay, and memorials from numerous Mahomedan associations Some said that the speaker had put forward suggestions which were impossible to accept, and show an entire want of appreciation of the position the British Government occupies in relation to the other Powers of Europe and Turkish Government in the Hedjaz. And while some measure as an interference with religious liberty, others were remarkable for their clear grip of the situation, and the practical common sense they being to bear on the Bill and its rules.

Some, indeed, give a hearty welcome to legislation as calculated to mitigate materially the sufferings of the pilgrims, and scout the idea that it interferes with their faith. Sir A. Mackenzie then quoted various opinions touching on the attitude of Government towards the Paris Convention. He could absolutely deny the truth of the postulate that cholers is imported into the Hedjaz by Indian pilgrims, but there was no disputing the fact that a large number of pauper pilgrims fill the Hedjaz with a population who fall easy victims to the disease there engendered. We cannot force Turkey to treat Indian pilgrims in an excep-tional manner. They must submit to Turkish rule as modified by international agreement, and all that Government can do is to secure all reasonable protection and concessions. Sir Alexander Mackenzic alluded at length to the vexed question on the probability of increased cost of passage, the matter of deck space and sanitary taxes, and concluded an excellent speech as 'The Council will perceive that the Bill on becoming an Act is not to come into force at once, but on such a day as the Government-General may appoint. This will enable Government to recast its rules, which will not now be materially altered. On the important question of 'tween deek space and hospital accommodation, after due consideration of the suggestions and criticisms of the authorities who have reported on them, no one can, I think, object to the Bill, as it now stands. It is practically an enabling measure, leaving over details as to rules, in framing which Government will do its best to meet the reasonable requirements of its Mahomedan subjects. For the rest the Bill emodies valuable safeguards and is an undoubted boon for intending pilgrims, the necessity of which is admitted, and which would have been desirable had the Paris Convention never been devised. I hope the Council will see no reason why it should not be passed into law at the next meeting.

Prince Jehan Kadir made a very able speech, in the course of rince Jenan Katir made a very anic speech, in the course of which he said: "We are graceful to the sanitary experts of the West for the interest taken in the welfare of pilgrims to the Hedjaz, but would wish that that interest were less feverish and better informed. I would respectfully suggest that representations be made to the Secretary of State for modifications to be adopted whereby the discontent and disattsfaction of the Mahomedans at some of the present conditions of the Bill may be allayed. speaker alluded to the universal opinion that medical examination hefore embarkation of pardanashins should be conducted by women, and expressed satisfaction that Sir A. Makenzie was of opinion that a sanitary tax should not be levted in Bombay. In regard to the definition of "passenger" and the proposal to extend the definition to every Mahomedan passenger of whatever age, he found it impossible to approve of it, and rejoiced that the provision was to remain in abeyance for the present. Regarding the increase in the amount of between deck space quoted by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, he was heartily glad that the law would remain on the present boting. Finally he argued that the employment of Mihomedan cooks and waterman proposed by Sir A. Mackenzie be made compulsory on pilgrim ships, and concluded by saying that he made computery on prigrin strips, and concluded by saying that he felt it his duty to draw attention to the very grave effect the enactment of the Bill as originally proposed was calculated to produce on the pooter members of the Mahomedan community, stating emphatically that it directly conveyed the impression to the ignorant classes that Government intended to operate adversely to the religious duty which induced pilgrims to visit the Hedjaz. Any increase in the cost of the journey was a most serious matter, and he requested the Government to see that such misapprehensions were not revived, and that this aspect of the case be submitted to the Secretary of State.

Dr. Lethbridge made an exhaustive and highly important speech on the Bill. He said that the question was dealt with inadequately by the Convention whose representatives were little qualified by practical experience to deal with the matter. As to the rules regarding space, he said as a specialist who had had many opportunities of becoming acquainted with the practical side of the question, that to maintain the space now demanded was unreasonable, and he still hoped that the consent of the European Powers may be obtained to the reduction of the space to 12 feet. Turning to the matter of increased cost the speaker went very fully into the question, quoting figures obtained from Bombay regarding nine steamer employed in the pilgrim traffic, and proving that if one-fifth were added to the cost of the passages in the case of three steamers and one-third or one-half in the case of the others, owners would be compensated for the loss involved by the increased space conditions. Dr. Letthridge also touched at length on hospital accommodation and food supply, and said that the Select Committee had done all it reasonably could to meet the wishes of the Mahomedan community."

The Bill will be passed at the next meeting shorn of certain objectionable provisions. Not because the Government admit the validity of the objections raised, but because the Convention has not been ratified. They, however, prepare themselves to carry out orders whenever received by taking power beforehand. The Bill has been based on the Convention. The ground failing, the Bill is not to be abandoned. It has been said that it is only an enabling Bill. To our thinking, that is the most serious objection against the measure.

DR. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE.

[This letter addressed to the biographer of the deceased Doctor, has been sent to us by Mr. Skrine for publication....En., R. & R.]

September 13, 1895.

Sir, --- Although I have not the honour of being personally known to you, yet, considering the nature of the subject upon which I am going to address you, I do not think I need make any apology in approaching you with this note. Being one of those who for miny years enjoyed the privilege of associating with the late Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee as an admiring assistant and collabor ateur, it is impossible for me not to take a deep interest in the biographical work which you are about to bring out. I perused carefully the sketches that appeared last year in the National Magazine and, despite the risk of offending you by presuming to pass an opinion on your work, I cannot help observing that I was much surprised at the ability displayed by you in compiling the facts and putting them together in due perspective. There is only one point about which the view propounded by you may, it seems, be misunderstood, without a little further explanation than what you have given. In your second article on Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee in the National Migazine, you speak of the Doctor as one whose natural impulsiveness was never subjected to the regulating influence of a good moral education, and who to the end of his life retained many of the characteristics of a spoiled child. As I never saw the Doctor in a sub-indinate position, I am not prepared to say, from personal knowledge, whether there was or was not in him a natural impatience of control. But from what I have heard about his harmoniously acting as a Sub to Hurrish Chandra Mookerjee, it does not seem to me that our esteemed friend was in capable of submitting to the guidance of a superior.

Dr. Sambhu Chunder betrayed, no doubt, a great want of steadiness in the choice of a profession. As you observe rightly we find him "everything by turns and nothing long." But that was because his talents and temperament were more suited for a literary career and for ourting poverty than for the high offices he was obliged or induced to seek for that wealth, power and position which they offer. When he accepted service first, he had not, perhaps, the remotest idea of the difficulties that he would have to cope with. The experience that he acquired subsequently satisfied him that it was neither possible nor worth his while to devote to the service of an Indian Prince a genius that was meant for mankind. With this idea ultimate!y as an independent journalist. In that sphere he found a position of stable equilibrium.

You have yourself shown that the failure of the lamented Doctor to maintain his footing at Murshidabad or Tippera was not due to any fault on his part. In my view his great mistake was to accept service under Indian Princes wihout the resources and qualifications necessary for success in such service. Perhaps, at the beginning his idea was that, with such ability as he possessed, he was bound to flourish in any sphere in which he would be placed. But if that was his dream in the morning of life, he was before long rudely awakened to its realities. I may here, withjout incurring the charge of egotism, tell you that my own k experiences in life were very similar to those of the Doctor, and ¿ we used sometimes to pass many long hours in comparing notes. On one of these occasions, the Doctor gave expression to the result of his official experience in a pithy epigram which may he regarded by some as misanthropic, but which only propounds an important truth. He observed that success in the court of an Indian Prince, of the ordinary type, was attainable only by men endowed by nature with an innate depravity. However disagreeable it may be to all good and virtuous men, it is one of those rugged maxims hewn from life that are worth much more than tons of schoolbook lore. Innate depravity alone may not suffice to make one a successful courtier, but it is a sine qua non, and as a man of learning and real ability must generally be without it, he is sure to be out-witted by those masters in Machiavelism that abound in every Indian Durbar.

In order to prove the truth of his doctrine, our lamented friend mentioned to me some particulars of his experiences at Murshidabad, which I think are likely to interest you as his biographer. The department of the Nizamut in which the prevailing laxity was most lamentable, and which most urgently called for reforms, was that called the Karkhana Matalag, and which, with the chief enuuch, Nawab Darab Ali Khan, at the head, had charge, among other things, of the stables. The finest elephants and horses belonging to the Nizamat were literally starved to death in order that the wretched and heartless fiends at whose mercy they were placed, might eke out an extra income by depriving them of their fodder in their life-time, and by being deputed, after their death, to purchase other animals of the same kind. To prevent this sort of cruelty to the poor animals, and the consequent loss to their master, the minister appointed an extra officer who was a Mahomedan, and who had made a good impression on him by his Arabic learning. The new officer tried hard to justify the choice of his patron. But his appointment and his vigilance gave great umbrage to the powerful Darab Ali and his underlings. The Nazim did not like the cunuch personally. But he was an old man and an official of long standing. So the Nazim could not deny him a hearing, and, with such tricks as he and his followers had, it was not very difficult for him to obtain the sanction of his master to whatever he insisted upon. Next to innate depravity, the most important qualifications of a courtier are Zenana connection and histrionic power, and of these the eunuch, as a matter of course, possessed an abundance. He was, no doubt, not related as a brother-in law to his master. But as the chief eunuch he had far greater influence than any Queen's brother ever had. In addition to this he could express his joys and sorrows, at the required temperature with the exquisite delicacy of a scientific instrument. After the appointment of the aforesaid Moulvi he did nothing hastily, but took about a month to watch the course of events, and to mature his scheme. When the time for action came, the veteran Groom of the stables presented himself one day before his master in a very dejected mood. Upon being asked as to the cause of his distress, he burst into tears and only blubbered out the remark that he was levelled to the dust. The Nazim was naturally deeply impressed on his mind latterly, we find him settled down affected by the artistic weeping of the old man, and anxiously pressed for being enlightened with an explanation. The cunuch only continued to shed tears and his tools, who were also present at the time, then found their opportunity. They explained to the Nazim that the old man had very good reason to feel insulted by the appointment of a pauper who virtually made him functus offices, and who openly boasted of his having done so by saying that he had levelled to the dust such a big official as the eunuch Nawab Darab Ali. The Nazim inquired whether there was any evidence to prove that the new officer of the Karkhana Matalag really made the remark alleged against him. Darab Ali had, of course, a partisan present at the place to swear to the truth of the allegation. The victim of the intrigue was sent for and asked to state what he had to say. Unfortunately, in denying the charge, he took an oath by the blood of Imam Hossain. This gave an opportunity to the intriguers to rouse the sectarian hatred of the Nazim against the poor Moulvi. He was a Sunni while the Nazim was a Shia. So Darab Ali and his infamous crew at once cried out that the oath taken by the heretic was not a very serious one to him. As a Sunni it was his usual business to drink the blood of Imam Hosain. This was the crowning stroke, and it sufficed to induce the Nazim to dismiss the good Moulvi at once. The humiliation that the minister felt on the occasion can be easily imagined. What evidently pained him much more was the extinction of his hopes to save the noble animals of the Nizamat stables from the cruelty that was practised on them. The eunuch who allowed them to be starged to death had all the essential qualifications of a courtier. and he triumphed. Our lamented friend lacked those resourcess and he was easily driven to the wall, despite all his learning and administrative ability. The only ground on which he can be said to have had the characteristics of a spoiled child, lies in the fact that he surfeited himself with every kind of literary delicacy for which he took a fancy. He could never reconcile himself to the drudgery of chewing and digesting those dry bones of technical subjects which alone can qualify a man for practising with success any of the liberal professions. I believe this is all that you mean when you say that the Doctor's career was marred by impulsiveness and want of self-control. But I fear you have not been sufficiently explicit, and the observation made by you might be misunderstood. When your Life of the Doctor first appeared in the National Magazine, I did not communicate my views on the subject to you in the belief that some other friend of the Doctor, personally known to you, would draw your attention to the matter. But from the tenor of the lecture delivered by you, in the hall of the Society for the Higher Training of Young Men, on Wednesday last, it seems that nothing has happened yet to lead you to express your views with the necessary qualifications so as to preclude the possibility of your being misunderstood. Hence, though a stranger to you, I take the liberty of addressing you this note.

Yours truly. JOGENDRA NATH BHATTACHARYA.

Official Paper.

THE BHAGALPUR ELECTION.

From H. J. S. Cotton, Esq., C. S. I., Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal,---To the Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division,---(No 432-A/D, dated Darjeeling, the 7th September, 1895.

Sir,---lt was reported by you on the 25th of July, 1895, that the electoral representatives of District Boards of the that the electoral representatives of District Boards of the Bhagalpur Division had met on that date, in accordance with the requisition of Government, to elect a representative for the Bengal Council, and that the delegates were unable to make any recommendation in the manner prescribed by Rule V (c) of the Regulations made under section I (4) of the Indian Councils Act, 1892, i.e., to recommend by a majority of votes any person for nomination by the Lieutening Governor as Member of the Bengal Council to represent the Division. It was found that there were two votes recorded for Mr. George Hennessvol Mutharapur in the Malda district, and two votes for Rai Surji Mutthasput in the wasta distinct, and two votes for Kai Guiji Narain Singh Bahadur of Bhagalpur, and the delegates placed it on record that it was impossible for them to select any candidate on whom the majority could agree, and that they were quite conmeetings would be useless, and that no vinced that further other result could be obtained.

In these circumstances it devolved on the Lieutenant-Governor under Rule VII of the Regulations --- a period of more than two months having elapsed since the requisition was made----to nominate a person belonging to the class which the District Boards of Bhagalpur are deemed to represent.

Upon receipt of the report of the delegates, the Licutenant-Gov ernor made an attempt through you to assertain the number of Board members who had supported either Mr. Hennessy or Rai Surji Narain, and it was hoped that by this means it might be possible to determine which of the two candidates for election had received the largest number of votes from the electing body. But after considering your report and the reports of the Chairmen of the District Boards your report and the repersonal discussion with both the candidates, Sir Charles Elliott found it impossible to come to any satisfactory conclusion regarding the voting power in favour of each candidate. Both Mr. Hennessy and Rai Surji Narain claimed to have received a majority of votes throughout the Division, and owing to the fact that there were several other candidates for election on whose behalf votes were given, and that in the districts of Purnea and Malda votes were recorded for delegates only, and not for candidates, it was not found possible to decide on whose behalf the largest number of Board members had voted. The Lieutenant-Governor enquired into this matter personally on the occasion of his recent visit to Bhagalpur, and satisfied himself that no nomina-tion for a seat in Council made on this basis would give general

His Honor then considered whether he should order a re-election by the District Boards, or assertain from every individual member of Boards for whom he wished to vote, but he regrets to say that the Bhagalpur election proceedings have been marked by so much ter-giversation and breach of pledges, by so much wire-pulling and improper influence brought to bear upon the voters, as well as by electoral dodges; some of which were not of a creditable character, and occasionally, he fears, by practices which would not be tolerated under the law in England, that he does not consider that it would now be possible to assertain, or desirable to enquire, for which of the candidates the members of the Boards who did not record their votes at the elections of June and July would actually have wished to record them. Moreover he is convinced that it would be unwise so to re-open the whole question at a time when public feeling is much excited on the subject. It is most important that the strong and bitter feelings which have been roused by this election should be allowed to subside, and that no steps should be taken which would tend to resuscitate them.

Another alternative was carefully considered by Government, viz., to disfranchise the Division and transfer its right of election to another Division. But such penalty seemed too heavy, remembering that this is the first occasion on which a failure to nominate has occurred, or corrupt practices have been suspected; and be sides it is a course which had not been provided for in the Regu-

It is equal to the section t (4) of the Indian Councils Act.

It seemed better, therefore, to fall back on the course prescribed by Rule VII of the Regulations, and in order that the District Boards of the Division might be suitably represented in Council, the Lieutenant Governor submitted the name of Maharaja Bahadur Sir Ravaneshwar Prashad Singh K.C.I.E, of Gidhaur, in the district of Mongher, to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, with a request that the appointment of the Maharaja to a seat on His Honor's Council might be approved. The sanction of His Excellency to this nomination has now been communicated to the Bengal Government, and the appointment will be made in due

I am to request that you will communicate a copy of this letter to the Chairmen of the District Boards in your Division, and also to Mr. Hennessy and to Rai Surji Narayan Singh Bahadur.

GRIEVANCES OF BRITISH INDIAN SUBJECTS RESIDING IN AFRICA.

- There are over 100,000 British Indian subjects residing m South Africa i.e., in Cape Colony, Natal, the South Africa Republic (Transvas), and the Orange Free State. These may be roughly divided into four main classes as follows:

assets valued at £100,000), about 2,000 hawkers, and 1,500 domes tic servants.

- The Indian traders by their thrifty and simple mode of life have become strong competitors in trade with European settlers. This has aroused jealousy and bad teeling among the other colonists, who appear to be treating the Indians in a spirit of persecution and vexatious tyranny; and more especially by means of their preponderating voice in the several South African States, to be making a determined effort to lower the status of those British subjects who happen to be natives of British India.

 3. The following are some of the matters in which it is attempt-
- ed to impose restrictions upon British Indians, by the several Governments of Cape Colony, Natal, the South African Republic (Transvaal), and the Orange Free State :---
- The acquisition of Real Property. (1)
- The possession of the Franchise.

 Freedom of locomotion both by day and night.
- The granting of Trade licenses (which are necessary for all engaged in trade).
- Freedom of choice as regards places of residence and places of business.

Early in this year the Cape Assembly passed a Bill authorising the East London Municipality to legislate with a view to compel British Indians to reside in locations and to take out passes should they want to leave their homes after 9 p.m. Generally, an at tempt is being made to treat all Indians, whatever their caste and position, as "coolies," i.e., labourers (generally assisted emigrants whose indentures have expired); and further to class all coolies ' with kaffirs and other native races, however uncivi-

Trade jealousy is at the root of this hostile treatment, but 4. Trade jealousy is at the root of this hostile treatment, out other pleas are put forward, namely, that the Indians are uncivilised barbarians, and more particularly that their insanitary mode of life is a standing menace to the health of the community On this latter point, however, the evidence appears to be all the other way. Vide post, para. 9.

5. The most urgent matter is perhaps the attempt which is being made to compel the Indians to confin: themselves both for purposes of residence and of trade to certain fixed "locations," necessarily inconvenient for trade, as being away from the actual town, and possibly dangerous to health, as being in a situation for which no one has any particular use except it may be the deposit of town refuse. [Such a case actually occurred in 1893, and elicited a strong protest from the British Agent against the action of the Transvaal Government. Vide Green Book No. 11. of 1893.] Such an unreasonable restriction on liberty can at the best mean nothing less than financial ruin to a merchant.

6. What appears to have taken place in the Franswall is this. The Convention of Pretoria, 1881, clause 14, and the Convention of London, 1884, between the South African Republic and Great Britain, alike provide that equal treatment in the eye of the law shall be received by all persons residing in the Republic save and except natives of the place. These conventions did not save and exept natives of the place. I need conventions are not confer any status on the Indians or any other British subjects. They merely safeguarded that "footing of equality with all Her Majesty's other subjects" upon which successive Secretaries of State for the Colonies have desired that the Queen's Indian subjects should be treated.

Cause 14 of the Convention was amended by law 3 of 1885 in the direction of allowing British In lian subjects to be required to reside and trade in separate "locations." But to this Law Her Majesty's Government refused assent, stating most emphatically in the course of the correspondence on the subject that separate streets might be set apart for the Indians in the interests of the public health, but that they could not be compelled to trade in certain fixed parts only of the towns.

8. In 1886 an amended form of his 3 of 1885 was passed, and the then High Commissioner, Sir H. Robinson, in withdrawing his opposition thereto made it clear that even in its amended form this departure from the Convention was only permitted on what this acparture from the Convention was only permitted in what had been represented to him as urgent sanitary grounds. In his letter dated 26th September, 1886, at p. 46 of Green Book No. I of 1894, he says, "Although the amended law is still a contra vention of the 14th Article of London, I shall not advise Her Majesty's Government to offer further opposition to it in view of your Honour's opinion that it is necessary for the protection of the public health." It is to be regretted that Sir H. Robinson did not take steps to ascertain for himself whether or not the state of things in existence at the time justified the opinion of the Head of the Republic as expressed to him.

9 The assumption that any sanitary necessity exists for this curtailment of the liberties of British Indian subjects appears to be singularly ill-founded. The following three certificates from European doctors resident in Pretoria and Juhannesburg speak for themselves:---

"I hereby certify that I have practised as a general medical practitioner in the town of Pretoria for the last five years.

During that period I have had a considerable practice amongst the Indians, especially about three years ago, when they were more numerous than at present.

I have generally found them cleanly in their persons, and free from the personal diseases due to dirt or careless habits. dwellings are generally clean, and sanitation is willingly attended to by them. Class considered, I should be of opinion that the lowest class Indian compares most favourably with the lowest class white, i.e., the lowest class Indian lives better and in better habitation, and with more regard to sanitary measures, than the lowest class white.

i have, further, found that during the period that small-pox was epidemic in the town and district, and is still epidemic in the district, that although every nation nearly had one or more of its members at sometime in the lazaretto, there was not a single It dian attacked.

Generally, in my opinion, it is impossible to object to the Indian on sanitary grounds, provided always, the inspection of the sani-tary authorities is made as strictly and regularly for the Indian as for the white.

H. PRIOR VEALE, B.A., M.B., B.C. Cantab.

27th April, 1895. PRETORIA, Z. A. R.

JOHANNESBURG, 1895.

This is to certify that I have examined the residences of the bearers of this note, and that they are in a sanitary and hygienic condition, and in fact such as any European might inhabit. I have resided in India, I can certify that their habitations here in the Z.A.R. are far superior to those of ther native country.

C. P. Spink, M.R.C.S. & L.R.C.P. (London).

Having frequently occasion to visit the better class of the Indian population of Johannesburg (merchants, etc., coming from Bomboy) in my professional quality, I give as my opinion, that they are as clean in their habits and domestic life as white people of the same standing.

Dr. Nahmmacher, M.D., etc.

OHANNESBURG. 14th March, 1895."

10. Here, however, the matter was not allowed to rest. Difficulties again arose on the subject of the British Indian subjects and further correspondence took place between the British Government and the Republic, the result of which was that sometime ago the differences between the two Governments were referred to the arbitration of the Chief Justice of the Orange Free State to whom power was given " to decide either in favour of the claims put forward by Her Majesty's Government or by the South African Republic, or to lay down such interpretation of the ordinances, read together with the despatches referring to the question, as shall appear to bim to be correct."

11. The Chief Justice has made his award, but if the text of

- it as given in a petition to the Secretary of State for the Colonics the British Indian subjects residing in the South African Republic is correct then certainly he has not decided the principal question referred to him. He was required to lay down such intertpretation of the ordinances as should appear to bim to be correct. He has not done so, he refers to law 3 of 1885, and its amendment in 1886, and says that the Republic is bound and entitled to give full force and effect to this law subject in case of objections " to sole and exclusive interpretation in the ordinary course of the tribunals of the country." The law and the tribunals of the country were in existence before the reference to the arbitrator, and both the disputants were well aware of the fact. What they wanted was the Chief Justice's interpretation of the law read with the despatches, and not the interpretation of the law by the tribunals of the country, He has not given it to them, and there can be no doubt but that the award, apart altogether from its unsatisfactory character, is not binding on either party, and the controversy remains where it was when the reference was made to the Chief Justice.
- 12 So far the British Government would seem to have acted in the interests of their Indian subjects, but hitherto their action has not borne fruit, and the grievances remain unredressed. The first step towards this end is the repeal of the unconstitutional amendments to clause 14 of the Convention of London.
- 13. From information which has come to this country it is clear that an attempt is being made to disfranchise British Indian subjects throughout South Africa by means of new legislation imsubjects throughout south Africa of means or new regination imposing conditions which are a practical bar to Indians retaining or obtaining the Franchise. As regards Cape Colony, it appears that an Act, namely, Act 9 of 1892, was passed by the Colonial Parliament, and promulgated on August 16th, 1892. The Indians objected to it as being in effect a disfranchisement Act so far as they were concerned, and they petitioned the Crown to withhold its assent from it; the reasons on which the petition is based are contained in a letter sent by the Indians to the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated October 24th, 1892. As regards Natal also, a disfranchising Act was passed in 1894. The Indians protested and, failing in the Colony, sent a petition to the Secretary of State for the Colonies praying that the Act might be disallowed by Her Majesty. There is reason to believe that this petition has not yet been disposed of by the Colonial Office.

14. The matters above dealt with are of extreme gravity.
They touch directly the well-being of British Indian subjects in South Africa, and indirectly the rights and privileges of such sub-jects emigrating to other parts of Her Majesty's dominions. It is hoped that they will receive earnest and sympathetic consideration on the part of the authorities at home, and such steps taken as will ensure to the British Indian subject the privileges which he enjoyed before the measures complained of were taken in hand.

DADABHAI NAOROJI.

28th August, 1895.

SIZE AND STRENGTH NO DEFENCE.

SIZE AND STRENGTH NO DEFENCE.

HERE'S a point for you to think over: Size and development have nothing to do with health. A man may stand six feet two inches in his stockings and have the muscles of a prize fighter, and yet be an essentially inhealthy man. His frail-looking wife may be really the better of the couple; she may easily do more work, endure more exposure, bear more givef and worry, and outlive her big husband. There is a mystery in this that nobody can see into. It is a matter of vitality and organisation—not of dimensions.

Take, for example, the case of Mr. T. B. Staples, of Oakwood, Ont. He is a blacksmith; and I well remember how, when a boy I used to regard a blacksmith with awe and wonder on account of his strength. It was fearsome to see him swing those mighty hammers and pick up a heavy cartiwheel as though it were a child's hoop. Yet I saw only in part and understood in part.

"Some twelve years ago," writes Mr. Staples, "I became aware that the dreaded disease, dyspepsia, had chosen me for one of its many victims, It is hardfly necessary for me to try to describe all the different feelings that came over me. I have talked with many people suffering with dyspepsia, and they have all had about the same experience. Among the symptoms on which we agreed are the following: Bad taste in the mouth; fulness and deadness in the stomach after eating; getting no good from one's food; headache and pilpitation of the heart; gas and sour fluids from the stomach after eating; getting no good from one's food; headache and pilpitation of the heart; gas and sour fluids from the stomach keep the body going. All these things I had; and you can imagine how bad they are for any one; particularly for a man who has got to earn his living by day hard work, as in ny case.

"After I found out what was the matter with me I consuited a doctor at once, and began to take the medicine legave me. I am sorry to say it did me little or no good. Although thous, as in my case.

"After I found out what was the matter with me and everything that was recommended to me in hopes of relief. Yet none of them went to the root of the trouble. Sometimes I would feel a little better and sometimes worse, and that's the way things went on with me year after year, a dieary and miserable time. There's no money could have me to live it over again.

with me year after year, a dreary and miserable time. There's no money could hive me to live it over again.

"I was still in this condition when a firend, that I had been talking to about myself, advised me to try Mother Seigel's Corative Syrup I didn't know the merits of the Syrup then, but being anxious to try anything that might help me, I bought a bottle from Messrs. Hogg Brothers, and commenced taking it. All I can say is, that I found relief immediately, and by continuing with it a short time, all my bad symptoms abouted one by one, and I found myself completely rid of the dyspepsia. Since then I have never had a touch of the old complaint. If there is any other menicine in the world that is able to cure indigestion and dyspepsia as Mother Seigel's Syrup does it, why I have never heard of it. I have recommended the Syrup to other sufferers, and they have been more than pleased with it; and I unit these hasty lines in hope the publication of their may come in the nick of time to be useful to others still. Yours very tinly (Singned) Thos. B. Staples Oakwood, Ontario, February 25th, 1895."

We need add but few words to Mr. Staples' intelligent and manly letter. The disease which afflicited him attacks both sexes, all ages, and all classes and conditions of humanity. Neither youth not strength is proof against it. It initiates other complaints, and so leads to fatal mistakes in treatment. If you are wise you will acquaint yourself with its character, as described in Mother Seigel's alinanack, and know what to do in time of need.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the DOSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colomes, are bought in any quantity, at the highest pirces, either or Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ,

Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.
61, Regent Street, London W.
Bankers: The London & County Bank.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE:

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. V. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credu Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE.

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, I.C.S.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR.

DEDICATION.

HIS LIFE STORY.

Emerson on biography.

Why is it popular?
His ancestry.
Birth.
Early education.
At Garanhatta School.
Youthful dialectics.
The Hindoo Metropolitan College. Teachers and associates.

Essays in journalism.

Hurish Chandra Mookeijee.

Mutiny pamphlet. British Indian Association.

His asihma how caused. Relieved by opium.

Relieved by optium.
American honours.
Faults of training.
Sub-editor of the "Patriot"
Story of the "Patriot."
Attacks the Income Tax.
Scathing strictures.
Lessons of the Mutiny.
Removes to Lucknow.
A love of music.

A rolling-stone.
Introduced to the Nazim.
Palare intrigues
Baffles his enemies.
Journalism again.
Becomes a schoolmaster.
A Private Secretary.

A Private Secretary.

A serious dilemma.

Disinterested friendsmp.

"Mookerjee's Migazine."

Dallies with the law.

The Maharaja of Jaipur.

Work in Tippera. His application suppressed Becomes Prime Minister

The water question.
The water question.
Thewated by intrigues.
Resighs his post.
The "Repule Press."
A commissioner of partition.
Founds "Reis and Rayvet."
" Travels and Voyages in Beogal."

A terra incognita.
A feast of reason.
Postprandial oratory.

Breaking up.
A serious illness.
The end.
His character.

Broad sympathies.

A foe to fanaticism.

Love of justice.

Charity.

Currosity. Consideration for others.

Scorn of money.
Disinterestedness.

Love of animals.

Love of animals.

A poetical nature.

An admirer of Byron.

Drawbacks of journalism.

Mookerjee's "Essays."

His letters.

His correspondents.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C., to Arkinson, the late Mr. k.f. T., C.s.
to Banerjee, Babu Jyonsh Chunder,
from Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.

to Buneijee, Bubu Sarodaprasad.
from Bell, the late Major Evans.
from Bhaddaut, Chief of.
to Bunaya Krishna, Raja.
to Chrlu, Ruo Bahadur Ananda.
to Chatterjee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarke, Mr. S.E.J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Auckland.
to, from Dufferm and Ava, the Marquis of.
from Evans, the Hon'ble Su Griffith H.P. to Gaught, Babu Kistan Mohan.
to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
to Graham, Mt. W.
from Griffin, Sir Lepel.
from Ghad, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Firz Edward.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hunter, Sir W. to Jong, the lite Nawab Sir Salar. to Kught, Mr. Paul.
from Kinght, the late Mr. Robert,
from Lansdowne, the Marquis of.
to Live, Kuniu Kirstodas.
to Lyon, Mr. Percy C.
to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
to Malik, Mr. R. D.
to Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhmaranjan.
from Mede, Jee, Late Raja Dr. Rajendialala. to Mookerjee, Jate Raja Dakhmaranjan. from Mede, Jee, C.
from Mischerjee, Mr. J. C.
from Mischerjee, Mr. J. C.
from Mischerjee, Mr. J. C.
from Muschidabid, the Nawab Bahadoor of.

from Mokeijee, Mr. J. C. from Mokeijee, Mr. J. C. from Mokel, Professor H. (San Francisco) to, from Mushidabid, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
from Nayaiatina, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osboin, the late Colonel Robert D. to Rao, Mr. G. Venkata Appa. to Ratigan, Sir William H. from Rosebey, Eal of. to, from Romeledge, Mr. James. from Russel, Sin W. H. to Row, Mr. G. Svamala. to Sastri, the Houble A. Sashiah. to Sinha, Babb Brahmananda, from Sircat, Dr. Mahendialal, from Stanley, Lord, of Alderley, from, to Townsend, Mr. Meredith. to Underwood, Captain T. O. to, from Vambeity, Professor Arminius. to Vencataramanish, Mr. G. Vizianagiani, Maharaja of, to, from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie, to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. Lefters & Telegram, Moduly A. K. M.

Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A K. M.
Ameer Hussem, Homble Nawab Syed.
Ardagh, Colonel Su J. C.
Baneijee, Babu Mannanthanath,
Bineijee, Rai Bahadur, Shib Chunder,
Barth, M. A.
Belchambers, Mr. R.
Deb, Babu Manahar.

Dutt, Mr. O. C. Dutt, Babu Prosaddoss

Dut, Bain Frosadons, Elgin, Lord Ghose, Babu Kut Presanna, Graham, Mr. Wilham, Hul, Dr. Fuz Edward, Hardis Vihandas Desai, the late Dewan, Iyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami, Iver, Mr. A. Krishnaswami,

Lunbert, Sir John
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed,
Mitra, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, B. bun Sidheshur
Miokerjee, R. ija Peary Mohan,
Mookerjee, B. on Surendia Nath, Mirishid bul, the Nawab Bahadoor of Routledge, Mr. J. unes.
Roy, B. bu. E. C.
R. v. Babu Saat Chunder.
S. nv. I. Babu Diaabundho.

S. ny 1, Babu Dinabundho, Sayan Library, Tippeta, the Bara Thakur of, Vaint cry, Professor Arminius. Vizini igram, the Maharaja of. POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of Olders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

It is in contemplation to publish the "Essays by a Brahman" separately, with a preface by Di. Mookerjee's biographet Mi Skine.

NOTICE.

I IST of Unclaimed Goods lying in the Custom House Wharf,

Remarks
Description of Packages	1 Case. 2 Fadsks. 3 Gase. 3 Gase. 4 Gase. 5 Cases. 6 Cases. 7 Cases. 8 dle. 8 dle. 1 Shall pkt
Marks and Nos Description	well A Ren t, A Ren t, 1893 1893 co
Vessels	h S.S. ". Rewa" B. L. Gup in ". "Serdan" Mons. L. Mons. L
Date	1895. an. 7:h y 10:ll y 20:ll feby, 4th fin. 22:ud Feby, 21:- fin. 23:li fin. 24:li fin.

The above will be sold if not cleared on or before the 5th October, 1895.

F. H. SKRINE,

F. H. SKRINE,

Offic. Collector of Customs

Calcutta Custom House,

The 13th September, 1895. an's

Botanic Medicine Co., 8, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

CAUTION! It having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fixed in connection with the 4 anna box lately mitroduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (mz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 9½d, 12 annas or 15 1½d, and Rs, 2 or 2. Od) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fixed to which attention is drawn as that when one of the two smaller sizes the prices in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Ceylon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET.

CALCUITIA.

NOIICE.—Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee rates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF MEMORIAL FUND. 1 His Highness The Maharaja of Dur-Monshedabad, Amrul Omra, 6.C FF 800 His Hignness the Nawah of Junaganh, GC S.I. ... His Highness the Maharija Bahadur of Cooch Behar, G.C LE Nawab Bahadur Sir K. Abdul Ghan, N iwib Bahadui Sir K Abani Guang KC ST, and Nawub Bahadur K Ashan Ulia, CT E. 500 Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur ... 500 Nawab Azani Yar Jung Birdur ... 500 Shamsali Uliani Syed Ali Belgianii 500 Kuan Bahadar BharB ihanddin, CT Es, Vizier to the Newbo f Juna (alth ... 30) Man riga Bahadar Sir Joundia Mahar Tagore, K C st. ... 250 Baou Jodu Lai Muhick ... 200 Pince Wala Kuri Syed Hosem Ah Muza Bihadur ... 150 Shujaul Muik Asafid Dowlat Nawib Syed Zamul Audin Kuan Bahadur Feraz Jung 140 R 134 Pe ny Mohan Mooketjee, C.S.L 100 The Hon'ble Mr Justice Chaudra Madhan Ghose 100 Prince Muzi Su Jahan Kadar Bahadur, K.C L.F., 100 The Hon'ble P Playfur. . . . 100 Banetjee ... The Honble Dr Rash Behary Ghose Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Ki.... Shahibi ida Manomed Obidulla Khan Bahadur, CSI Maharajkum u Benoya Krishna ... The Hon'ble Mr Justice E. J. Treve-The Hon'ble Monita Abdul Jabbar Khan Babadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta ... Maharaja Durgu Chur in Law, C.I.F., Nawib J dhandar Meetza ... Nawah Haroor Muza ... The Horbite W. C. Bonnergee ... Niwah Syed A neer Hasem ... Syed Nurul Huda, E.q., C.s. Hakeem Ghol on Ray Kina ... J. G. Rictine, E.q. C.s. ... Su Alexander Multa ... F. I. Row E.a. Kuma Radha Prosad Roy Kuma Pamenda Natan Roy Rama Dimenda Natan Roy Babu (Pashupatty Nath Bose Kumar Donfat Chandra Roy Baba Gar (Posonno Ghose Raja Su Sourindra Mohan Tagure, 25 Raya Joundaa Nath Chowdhury Baba Rama Nath Gnose. 40. Moulyi Sy of Abdon S clain A. F. Apa of Eq. B. Luttur of Jonason, Eq. C.S. Land William Bergsford, K C.I.F., Munshi Ghodam Rasod ... F. H. Skrine, Eq. C.S., The Horbie H. J. S Cotton C.S., C.S.I. Prince Mahouned Bakhiyar Shah... Baboo Surendra Nath P. d. Chowdry... Ankhoy Kumar Ghose Moulyi Infadd Ah Rui Shib Chounder Nundy Bahadau... D. Panioty, E.-q. Chowdry M thomed A (Januard Khan H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-ut-law

H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister- u-law 20 Moulyt Sved Ashruffuddin Anned, Khan Bahadur 17-3

T. Inglis, Esq , C S.

3	A. H. Giles, Esq		16
4.	F. F. Handley, E.q. CS.		16
75.	The Hon'ble Mourer Strajul	Islam
٦.	Kn m		16
76	M mivi Serajundeen		15	i
77.	And Hism, Esq.,		15.	į
78	H A D. Pumps, Esq. C s.		10
79	Banno Ku in Chuager Ray		10
80.	E. N Baken, E-q		10	1
8 t.	Baoon Daval Chand Bose	•••	10
83.	" Madan Mahan Bose		10	i
83	" Kanar Lar Knan		10	ļ
8 i.	Monter Synd Ake on Hossam		10	1
85.	Moulyi Az z Anmad		10	1
აე.	Ru Kinyelal Dev Bahadoor		10	1
87	H Homwood, Esq		10	Ì
88.	Babu Hurry Monus Chunder		10
8a.	Baboo Cnakk mlal Roy
09.	" Strod (pr. 15 to Ghose		5
٠,٠,	abscriptions will be thankfully			i
	Honor by Joint Secret mes,			1
I v	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHAD	OR,
	C. Bones Lunin Street.	Cacutte	ι. ΄

4. Bruish In nan Street, Caratta, and A. F. M ABDUR RAHMAN, ESQ, Barrister--at Low, 16, Taltolla, Calcutta.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCA. Rs. .

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, telestivern, keviess, short winding, patent, Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, micket silvern, keviess, stort winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, otnamental bold did, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box, and full three years' guarantee. Wait inted to stand the roughest use. Runs more time 28 home with one winding. Will list a life time. Easily reputable, Others sed at double out rares. One witch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Hapital Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps splendid time and never stopied although at sustained hard knocks and jerks. X. Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Pomamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. X. Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regit from Dunchum says.—I have sold it for Rs. 20. X. Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Optium Department siys.—I new warch you seat me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time. Jewellod Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13, Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Feshion-ble electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubres, Emeralds, it Re. 1-8-0 Mr. G. Smith, Still Inspects from Sunkuta, says. "A German valued the diamonal ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infinity from Panandnai says.—Fen the flist one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Senge int for R. 28 X Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Rg. from Kumpter siys.—Fe the flist one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Senge int for Rs. 28 X Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Rg. from Kumpter siys.—Fe the flist one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Senge int for Rs. 28 X Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Rg. from Kumpter siys.—Fe the flist one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Senge int for Rs. 28 X Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Rg. from Kumpter siys. —A Cappital with extra sum guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are gurinteed to be of i.e. soud gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by as from Bountry per V. P. micket silvern, keviess, short winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

NIW HOME TREATMENT.

Someria and not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are dise ises are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the liming membrane of the nose and enstaeman tibes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fict, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cared by a few simple applications made at home by the nitient once in two weeks. A pamphile explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2 ½d siamo by A. HUFTON DINON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONFO, Canada.

10 | Scientific American "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer find sure relies from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest, and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous renef in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is atmost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the of TOOTHACHE? A single applica-In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar pre-paration has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at I Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta; Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Batagate & Co. Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

. AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION If paid in advance, Yearly ks 12 11 utstanty

Quar dy			•••	,,	4
Monta iv				K.	1-8
Single or	sample	Conv	•••	Ans.	ს-წ
	lí no	t paid in ac	tvance.
Yearly				Rs.
Han-yea	ı)y			71	108
Quarterly	y	•••		11	6-0
Monthly			•••		2-1
Single of	sample	Copy		Ans	0-12
No au	анопа	charge for	postage	or p	eoı.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three commiss to the page and 102 lines of 12 inches to the commiss and charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inche each insertion. The lowest change for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5. Business. Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Lurrary Communications and manager. Advertisements (three commus to the page

Communications and nones and paintables (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 694.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE. BY JAMES HUTCHINSON. CANTO FIRST. (Continued from p. 446.)

I watched her, almost day by day, And when, by chance, the passing breeze, That woke the leaves, upon the trees, A moment, tossed her veil away, I saw her face, so beauteous fair The tresses of her raven hair ; L saw her large black eye ! A something in it seemed to say, Not, that I should not vainly sigh ; But that she felt compassionate, And took an interest, in my fate ; I grew more bold ; I tried to speak, But could not, I had grown so weak ; I know not how, I breathed my pain, And found.-I was beloved again ! Perhaps, I may not tell it right, But this believe, nor deem it light, Mine was the fault, howe'er it seem. For she was pure, as Ganges' stream. Ere it hath burst, from the Gowinookh,* And, of the earth, a stain partook.

XI.

We met in secret, night by night, And ye may fancy the delight, I felt, to be with her alone, Without an eye, to mark or tell, The what it had, or had not known, The how, or where, that it befell. Such joy was mine, by the Moon's light, And in these lands, they have such moons, So clear, so beautiful, and bright, They look, like sisters of their suns ; If this were joy, oh ! fancy then, The rapture, which I felt, and feel, When, I recall that dream again, Which time; or change can ne'er anneal; When first, I clasped her to my breast, When first, her lip to mine was prest;

A joy, indeed, well, worthy heaven, Is the first kissen that says, given; Life hath nought regeter to the says, So pure, so gentle, and reflaed, No rapture, that the heart can know, And yet, it leaves no sting behind ; Compared to ecstacy like this. How, more than poor, is vulgar bliss ; But there is that, within the heart, And there, we seem to be accurst, That preys, and gnaws, nor will depart, Till it hath known the best, or worst; And in our passion, and our pride. When she, we love, is by our side, We little reck what may betide, In such an hour ; tho' thou mayst smile, And deem, that I could ne'er beguile, I sat with her, beneath a light, That seemed to chide the gloom of night. Shedding its beams, in silvery shower, That, o'er the heart, had secret power, And the' unskilled, with hope to please, I sang to her such notes, as these.

Ah! sure this hour, was made for love; While other hours are but to live; You glorious orb, that rolls above,* She knows our hearts, and will forgive.

From bough to bough, with devious flight, You insect sparkles, as it flies : What is its fitting, fitful, light, To that, which speaks, in thy black eyes?

I questioned not, nor sought to speak, I felt the burning of her cheek ; As on my neck, her head she hung. As her heart's throb replied to mine, While round her form, my arms were flung,
And hers, around my neck, did twine : Once, such things were ; but they are past. How could those maddening moments last; But graven deep, in meicy's sake, Their memory, in my heart, is traced, And now, the mirror first must break, Before that image be effaced.

^{} The Gowmookh is a rocky cleft or gorge, through which the Ganges bursts, from the Himalaya chain of mountains, into the plains. It is called Gowmookh, from a funcied resemblance to the mouth or face of the cow, the most sacred of animals, in the estimation of the ^{}Chandra, the moon, or the goddess who presides over that luminary, is worshipped by the Hindoos. She is represented seated in a two-wheeled car or chariot, drawn by an antelope, while a pennon indicates, that it is against the wind. By this emblem, the Hindoos may be supposed to typify the irresistible nature and fleetingness of time.

Tho' sweet, the Jasmine's rich perfume, Tho' sweet, the dews, the wild bees sip, Tho' sweet, the new-blown rose's bloom; What are they, to thy sweeter hp?

As, from the dusky shades of night,
You splendent Moon seems doubly fair,
Even so, thy beauteous face of light
Seems fairer, from thy raven hair.

Say! why this sad, tho' witching grace?
What sorrow clouds thy lovely breast?
Oh! turn to me that angel face,
And I will kiss thee, into rest.

Dry up my Love! the precious tears,
That gem those beauteous eyes of thine;
Oh! cease to form these idle fears,
Or thou wilt break this heart of mine.

In other lands, these lights will shine,
As fleet, this moonlight hom will glide;
When I am thine, and thou art mine,
Then, what were all the world beside.

XIII

But why conceal; each dell, and grove
Was witness to our midnight love;
And many a lovely spot is there,
Down, by th' Atchaibut's sainted shrine; *
Or where Bhurmjonin, high in air,
Its temple rears, the sacred sign
Of our new buth; † the promise given;
Whereby, the twice-born hope for Heaven;
Or, by Ramsillah's wonded hill, ‡
Or, by Ransillah's wonded hill, ‡
Or, where the Fulgo's waters swell,
When he holds his yearly jubillee.—

 The Atchabut is one of the principal temples of Hindoo worship at Gyah. It is there, that the concluding ceremonies of all the pilgrimages are performed

† The Bhurmjoum is the name of a lofty conical peak, among the hills, in the immediate vicinity of the town of Gyah. It is surmounted by a Hindon temple, and has altogether a very picturesque and romantic appearance.

Within a few yards of the temple, on the top of the mountain, there romantic appearance. Within a few yards of the temple, on the top of the mountain, there is a subterraneous cleft in the rock, and through this, I was given to understand, the pilgrims pass, by way of being boin again or regenerated, or as it is expressed in Brahiminical language, of being twice-boin. It would appear that ceremonies similar to, or with the same object in view, as the baptism of the Christian faith, were performed prior to the time of our Saviour. In the Hindon scriptural writings the word twice-born is of common occurrence, and in our own scriptures, we read of persons of the Jewish futh being baptised unto Moses. John the Baptist likewise baptised, previous to the time of Jesus Christ. The Hindons endeavoured to imitate the process of being born again, more literally, and they forced themselves through clefts in rocks, which had become sanctified by time; or they dug subterraneous caves, in the earth or rock, for the same purpose. I have been informed, that a natural cleft, perhaps similar to those above mentioned, exists somewhere in the vicinity of Dumfries in Scotland, and that it still goes by the name of the Maiden's Bower, I believe from its being considered a criterion, in doubtful cases, in which that delicate point is to be determined. Can this be some stray tradition, that has come down to us, straggling through the mist of ages, till it has lost its way? Those, who have not hid the advantage of personal observation, in the East, may derive a good deal of information, on this subject, from the beausal of Mr. Q'Brien's work, on the Round Towers of Ireland.

† The Ramsillah is a detached hill, covered with brushwood, and surmounted by one or more Hindoo temples. It it situated, on the left bank of the Fulgo, immediately below the town of Gyah, and is held in great religious veneration by the Hindoos.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

XIV.

That time is now ;-the rains from Heaven, Descend :-- his waters proudly flow. With force, and speed, like arrow driven, By manhood's strength, from bended bow. Thou see'st you small, and rocky isle, Near the Ramsillah's base, So fresh, and green, it seems to smile. As, in mid-stream, it lays; Aye ! once indeed, it might have smiled, It held my Lilloo's home, And still her father calls his child; She comes not,-cannot come ! The moss-grown temple, mid the trees, The shrine, at which her parent prays, The hut, in which she dwelt, are there ; But where is she?-oh! where, oh! where?

XV.

We met, as we had done before,
I rowed her to, and from the shore;
Until that fatal night,—that night,
When moon, and stars withheld their light,
That night of darkness,—dark indeed,
Aye, dark even, as the grave,
That night, I saw my Lilloo bleed,
And saw,—and could not save.

Twas midnight, and the stream its course,

XVI.

Pursued with more, than wonted force. Boiling in eddies, here and there, That downward sucked the drafting wrack, And shricking, as if fiends of air, To aid its will, were at its back ; Twas then, my skiff approached the land, Behind a rock, her father stood ! Just as it grated, on the strand, He hurled her, in the roaring flood. " Now go," said he, "and take thy fill, " Aye go, and stroll with her, at will; " For impious love, the fittest bed " Is secret dwelling, with the dead, " What craven ! I had thought thee brave, " And fear'st thou then, to share her grave?" I heard no more; I plunged in, I followed, and I searched in vain ; Yet once, I saw a speck of white, Or thought so, by that feeble light, And once, oh God ! I heard my name, But, in such accents of despair, As tenderness were mixed with blame, They still are ringing, in my ear ; No! not to save, from years of pain, Would I those wild shrieks hear again.

XVII.

Worn, and upfit to struggle more,
'Tis all I know, I reached the shore,
I followed, by the river's side;
With Lilloo's name, I rent the air;
I listened, but no voice replied,
An echo mocked, at my despair.
I heard the Jackal's piercing cry,

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simulateratment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Airal Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, Londou, S. W.

Twas plaintive, as my own, and yet* I hated it, I scarce knew why ; I thought of what might be her fate. And shuddered, and his lust of gore Seemed then, more hideous, than before! What? tho' to glut his fierce desire, Were but to rob the stream or pyre ; † The thought, that she had ceased to breathe, Had, in it, agony and death; And so, I followed on, untired, Tho' scarce a ray of hope inspired. (To be continued.)

WEEKLYANA

WE quote Hope :--

"We have received a copy of "An Indian Journalist," being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, late Editor of Ress and Raspet, Calcutts, by F. H. Skrine, I. C. S. Calcutta: Thacket, Spink and Co., 1895. The volume covers about 500 pages, crown octavo, and is deeply interesting from start of finis, as we can say from a few havy glances we have had through its pages. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee was, as we have often said, a man in a million, a prince among journalists, a nobleman to the backbone. His life and letters should therefore be read with care and thowshi such as we have not ver had time to vive. But we backhone. His life and letters should therefore be read with care and thought, such as we have not yet had time to give. But we hope to publish a detailed review of the work as soon as we have uone so. The name of Mr. Skime is a sufficient guarantee for the excellence of the body of the volume before us, while the letters and correspondence of Dr. Mookeijee, some of which we have read, are of rare interest and value, not to say highly instructive. As the proceeds of the sale of the book will go to the late Doctor's family, we would recommend to all educated men, European and Native, to buy the book and read it. Mr. Skrine deserves the thanks of all India for his labour of love and notting will show that thankthiness except a practical and substantial demonstration. The book is picced Six Rupees and is thoroughly worth that sum."

To make the book purchasable by many, the cash price has been fixed at Rs. 5, postages &c., 4 annus, per V P. P., Rs. 5 6. Rs. 6 is the credit price.

We read in an old journal .

"Haydn and Mis. Billington.—Every real lover of music must like Haydn's expressions to Reynolds when shewn the picture of Mis. Billington. 'Yes, like, very like, but you've made a sad mistake!' 'How?' You've made her listening to the angels; you should have made the angels listening to her.' Mrs. Billington sprang up, threw her arms around his neck, and kissed tim."

It is related of Raja Rajkrishna of Sutanati that, ravished by the music of a songster, he kissed him, mistaking him for a songstress. The Rija had refused at first to give him audience, because he excelled in lighter airs and sang tuppe which came most fittingly and sweetly from woman's hps. After repeated and earnest entreaties, he agreed to hear him from the next room. Notwithstanding, the music was so enchanting that the Righ forgot houself and did what he had long

THE delightful Eden of modern times is surely Luimaw, one of the smallest of the Southern Snan States "The soil is good and it is well watered; and the population is as thick on the ground as the land will carry, and they appear very flourishing. The old Newegunhmu is the father of eight grown-up children, and may be described as the father of his people as well. The population is entirely agricultural, and crime is unknown. A happy and contented family party, who are not overassessed but bear their fulr burden towards the general tribute with the rest of the States." Such is the description of the place by Mr. Hildebrand. Is the Superintendent of the Shan States any descendant of the Nestor of German romance?

HERE is a process of renovating old trees, recommended by a gardener who for many years largely supplied the London market with fruit.

with fruit.

"It is generally found that after an apple-tree has borne for a certain number of years, it becomes comparatively unproductive. It has been usual in such cases to remove the old tree, and replace it by a younger one. This may be obviated by reingrafting the old tree; and according to the testimony of the gardener, the older the stock, the better is the quality of the fruit. He had scarcely a tree of any age, among several hundreds that his orrehard contained, when the writer visited it, that had not undergone this process, and in some cases more than one. There were trees whose trunks were so hollow as in some parts to be little more than as shell, which had been subjected to this operation the season before, and, judging from the vigorous appearance of the grafts, with perfect success. The plan he adopted was the following:—The ends of the branches were sawn or cut off where they were about the size of a man's wrist, or rather less, and two or more scrous inserted in each, according togeticumentances. By this means, in the course of three years he obtained a large, full-bearing tree. The principal difficulty was to protect the new grafts from damage in high winds. This was overcome by ingrafting the half of the tree at one times principal difficulty was to protect the new grafts from damage in high winds. This was overcome by ingrafting the half of the tree at one time, and leaving the other to form a shelter; and completing the other half when the grafts were sufficiently grown to return the shelter. It is scarcily necessary to add, that this precaution did not supersede the usual appliances for giving the scions support, by means of poles attached to the branches. It may also be remarked, that the productive powers of apple-trees are frequently impaired by the want of sufficient attention in gathering the fruit. The greatest care should be observed in removing the apple, that the bearing spur be not broken or injured thereby."

IN Australia they have a simple and rapid method of converting the whole carcass of an animal into tallow. It is called "builing down" and thus described in Bush Life in Australia :

down" and thus described in Bush Life in Australia:

"The whole carcass, having been cut to pieces, and thrown into large cast-iron pains, each capable of containing several bullocks, is boiled to tags, during which operation the fat is skimmed off, until no more rises to the surface. The boiled meat is then taken out of the pains, and after having been squeezed in a wooden press, which forces out the remaining particles of tailow, it is either thrown away or used as food for pigs, wast numbers of which are sometimes kept in this manner in the neighbourhood of a boiling establishment. The proprietor of these places will either boil down the settler's sheep and cattle at so much per head, or purchase them wholly from him in the first instance, and convert them into tailow at their own risk. The value of an animal for this purpose depends of course entirely on his condition, and usually varies from 30. to 3.7 tos."

In Calcutta, all sorts of dead and decomposed animals are "bulled."

In Calcutta, all sorts of dead and decomposed animals are "boiled down " for ghes of the ordinary market, which is repugnant to both the Hindu and the Mahomedan. We are not sure that prosecutions for sale of adulterated articles of fond have been able to stop this nauseous manufacture.

THE acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay in the Revenue Department, under date Bombay Castle, 13th S-prember 1895, writes to the President of the Eighth Provincial Conference :-

to the President of the Eighth Provincial Conference:—

"In reply to the Memorial addressed by the Eighth Provincial Conference to the Government of India on the subject of the proposed rules for regulating admission to the Bombay Provincial Civil Service, I am directed to state that the first, second and fourth of the requests in the Memorial are identical with (2), (1) and (5) respectively of the prayers contained in paragraph 8 of a Memorial on the subject addressed to the Government of India by the Poons Sarvayanuk Sabha, and that the orders of that Government in regard to those prayers are contained in the accompanying extracts from a letter from this Government to the Sabha. I am to add that in the opinion of His Excellency the Governor-General in Council the Memorial from the Conference does not advance any sufficient ground for a reconsideration of these orders. I am further to state that the Governor General in Council is unable to accelle to the third request of the Conference."

The extract paragraphs alluded to in the letter are :-

"2. As regards the first prayer of the Sabha that Mamlatdarships may be included in the Bombay Provincial Civil Service, I am to add that the Governor-General in Council has fully considered the matter on this and previous occasions and is altogether unable to apply to

^{*} The call of the jickal is occasionally plaintive in the extreme, resembling the cries of a female, in agony and distress; at other times, its yells or hootings are, on the contrary, savage and ferocious.

[†] It is almost superfluous to semind the reader, that the Hindoos hum their dead, the very prorest classes sometimes only half burn the body, and then push it into the stream. Some particular tribes buy their dead; of these, the Albeers of Gwallahs are one—perhapter only one. The Mohunts or religious superiors of Bood'h-Gyahane likewise builed; but their cemetery is the only thing approaching to a Hindoo build ground, that I recollect to have seen. The Ginges, and its tribucary streams may be said to be all but the universal grave of that portion of India, through which they take their course; where there is no river near, a tank or lake supplies the deficiency. A Hindoo funeral, generally speaking, is attended by no circumstances of pomp or outward show. Four of the male relatives or friends of the deceased take up the charpoy, or low light stretcher, on which the person has died, and on which the body continues to lie, on their shoulders, and convey it to the river side, towards sunset. Firewood has been prepared, and the body is consumed to ashes, which are thrown into the river. On other occasions, persons are taken to the banks of the river to die, when they are considered, to be in a hopeless state, and scenes, on such occasions, are said occasionally to be enacted, which are interly inconsistent with our ideas of humanity.

Suitees or self-immediation on the piles of their deceased husbands, by Hindon women, it is now, no doubt, generally known, were utterly shoulded by Lerd Win. Bentiock, to his unmortal bonor. + It is almost superfluous to remind the reader, that the Hindoos the Bumbay Presidency a different rule from that which has been accepted in other Provinces where the line of demarcation between the Provincial and Subordinate Civil Services has been drawn, in accordance with the recommendation of the Public Service Commission, as to include in the latter service officers of the Tahsildar class to whom the Mamlatdars correspond. The Governor-General in Council, without any under-valuation of the worth of the Bumbay Subordinate Civil Service, does not consider that it possesses any better claim to a higher relative than the Subordinate Civil service in some of the other Provinces; and for this and other more general reasons it would in his opinion be impossible to apply to that service in Bombay any more favourable measure of treatment than is elsewhere approved.

3. On the question of admission of the preferential claims to where approved.

3. On the question of admission of the preferential claims to Deputy Collectorships of graduates in the Revenue line who entered that line under the terms of the notification of this Government No. 5055, dated and September 1878, as modified by the notification No. 7105, dated and September 1885, which the Sabha has urged upon the attention of the Government of India, I am to observe that the general principle is that the scheme for the Provincial Service which has for its primary end the establishment of the public service on a basis of thorough efficiency and for its secondary aim the reasonable recognition of the claims of important sections of the community should be introduced with due regard to the vested interests and to the qualifications and the reasonable expectations of individual officers who may be affected in carrying it out.

4. With regard to the second prayer of the Sabha that the competitive test may be raised at least to the level of the B. A. examination of the Bombay University, I am to state that the Government of India agree with this Government that the system of competitive examination proposed in the draft rules referred to by the Sabha should receive a fair trial. Under this system not only have graduates a better chance of being successful than candidates of lower educational attainments, so far as the obligatory subjects of the proposed competitive test are so far as the obligatory subjects of the proposed competitive test are concerned, but in view of the optional subjects included, they will have all the advantage over the latter that they can properly claim.

6. With reference to the last two prayers of the Sabha concerning the recruitment for the Executive Branch of the Provincial Civil Service, I am to observe that they relate to matters which are still under consideration and which will be dealt with by the Government in accordance with the instructions of the Government of India with due regard to the principle enunciated in paragraph 3 of this

THE Governor-General in Council is pleased to announce that the Secretary of State has sanctioned the extension of the scale of pensions laid down in Article 712 of the Civil Service Regulations to officers appointed from England to the Geological Survey Department. In announcing the sanction, the Governor-General in Council lays down:

"The provisions of that Article are accordingly extended to the officers in question; but inasmuch as the existing rules (Articles 518 to 520 of the Civil Service Regulations) now applicable to officers of the Geological Survey Department are in certain contingencies more advantageous than the scale laid down in Article 712 of the Regulations, His Excellency in Council is pleased to allow every office of the Department appointed from England, now in the service, the option of choosing between the two scales of pension, and to direct that the new scale shall not be extended to any officer who prefers to remain under the existing rules of his service.

All officers annowed from England to the Council Service.

pension, and to direct that the new scale shall not be extended to any officer who prefers to remain under the existing rules of his service. All officers appointed from England to the Geological Survey Department in India, who are now in the service, are accordingly required to state, within a period of six months from the date of this Resolution, whether they prefei to remain under the existing rules which govern their pension, or elect the scale in Article 12.0 of the Civil Service Regulations. In the event of an officer electing to remain under the existing rules, the privilege of retiring under those rules will be reserved for him so far as he is concerned, and the new scale will not apply to him. In all other cases the old scale of pensions will cease to apply.

The decision arrived at by each officer in India as to the scale of pensions he prefeis to abide by should be communicated by the Director to the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

Agricultural Department.

Arricle 503 of the Civil Service Regulations will apply to members Affice 503 of the Covid Service regulations will apply to members in the Geological Survey whichever scale of pension may be elected; and should any change beteafter be made in respect of their superannuation, no difference will be made between officers on the different

NOTES & LEADERETTES. OUR OWN NEWS.

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

PRINCE Lobanoff, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and General Dragomiroff met with a tremendous reception at the French manceuvies at Mirecourt.

The London papers recognize the presence officially of the Prince at the manœuvres as a proof of the tightening of the alliance between the two countries, which strengthens France militarily and Russia financially.

MRS. Langtry's jewels, valued at £40,000, have been stolen from the Union Bank of London by means of a forged order on the Bank to deliver the jewels to bearer.

ADVICES from Cuba state that the Spanish cruiser Barcaistegus has been sunk after collision with another steamer, off Havana, and that an Admiral, four officers, and thirty-six of the crew were drowned. The rest on board were rescued.

THE French have ordered the people of Kiangtung to either accept the French authorities or cross over to the right bank of the Mekong.

A MONUMENT to Garibaldi was unveiled at Rome on Sep. 20 amid intense enthusiasm. Signor Crispi in a speech insisted that His Holiness the Pope was freer without temporal power, and that Italy would never renounce her hard-won unity.

A TRAIN conveying a Saxon regiment from the German manœuvres to Zwickan collided with a goods train. Thirteen soldiers were killed and sixty injured.

SEVERAL cases of cholera have appeared at Constantinople.

THE engagement of the Duke of Marlborough to Miss Vanderbilt is announced.

THE Times' correspondent at Hongkong states that at the annual examinations at Canton for literary degrees and honours the Chancellor distributed to the students rhymed versions of a former Imperial decree enjoining them to kill Christians like beasts,

REPORTS by mail concerning the state of affairs in Madagascar continue to be of the most dismal character. Nevertheless the French advance guard hopes to reach Antananarivo on the 30th instant. The War and Colonial Ministries are openly disputing regarding the responsibility for the mismanagement of the Madagascar expedition Further letters from Madagascar describe the sufferings of the French Army as terrible. Their numbers are daily dwindling, and the hospitals are crowded, over three thousand men being sick Currespondents state that the grouns of the coolies are fearful. The French advance column marching on Antananarivo surpused the Hovas on the 15th in a defile at Tsmainontiry, where six thousand men and nine cannon were posted. The French carried the position with a trifling loss, while the Hovas lost eighty in killed and one cannon.

THE British, French and Russian Ambassadors have addressed a strong note to the Porte, repeating their demands for the payment of an indemnity for the attack made lately on the Consuls at Jeddah, and the punishment of the offenders.

THE Portuguese man-of-war Vasco-de-Gama has been despatched to Goa in consequence of the revolt there.

MOROCCO has officially recognised the British Vice-Consul at Fez.

THE latest advices from China state that a German mission station near Swatow has been looted. Considerable excitement prevails throughout Germany over. The pipers urge the sending of cruisers to protect the station.

The whole of the province of Shekiang, especially the city of Kinhua, has been posted with anti-foreign placards.

THE relief expedition with Lieutenant Peary and his companions has returned to St. Johns. Lieutenant Peary and his companions, when discovered, were in a pitiable condition and almost starved to death.

NOTHING is known at the India Office of the report published in the Yorkshire Post that Lord Eigin will lesign next year, possibly in the spring.

THE New York Government bond syndicate has been dissolved, leaving the Treasury to its own resources.

THE Fimes, in discussing the Blue-Book on sanitary measures in India, refers to the ravages of contagious diseases in the Army, and says that it would seem to be one of the first duties of Government to consider how far their responsibilities to the Army and the Nation have been adequately discharged under the present system.

THE Times discusses the agitation against the Pilgrim Bill, and says it is not surprising that Indian Mussulmans are deeply stirred in the matter. This, the article states, is another example of embarrassment caused to the Indian Government by measures dictated from Europe. The expansion of Indian legislature has greatly increased the difficulty of passing laws disapproved by the Indian people.

This is the last of the four grand days of the Doorga Pooja. Notwithstanding the order of recent years to keep certain offices open at stated hours, Europeans, Mihomedans and Hindus are all on holiday bent. The town is deserted. All business is suspended. The general holiday ends on the 4th October, but the civil courts will not reopen and foil business resumed until the 21st October. The Anglo-Indian weekly journal of commerce of this capital will not be issued next week. Having worked till now, with greetings of the day, we take our annual respite of two weeks. There will be no issue of the paper on the 5th and 12th October. The next Reis and Rayyet will appear on the 19th October.

LORD Elgin leaves Simla on Thursday, the 24th October. During the tour he will hold Levées at Agra on the 25th October, Poona, 11th November, Hyderabad 13th November, Bangalore 19th November, Trichinopoly 2nd December and Madras 7th December, the hours being 9-45 P.M., except at Poona, where the presentation will be at 5 P.M. The other places to be visited are Gwalior, Bhopal, Rozah, Mysore, Madura, and Tanjore. The Viceroy will arrive at Calcutta on Friday, the 13th December

All Civil and Military Officers and Native Officers of the Native Regiments at the stations where Levées will be held are invited to attend. The Notification goes on to say that His Excellency will also be glad to receive other Gentlemen, who should submit their names to the Commissioner of Agra, the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, the Resident at Hyderabad, the Resident at Mysore, the Collector of Trichinopoly, and the Militiry Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Madras, as the case may be, who will issue cards of admission, which should be shown to the Aid-de-Camp in watting before the Levée, if required. The dress prescribed is Full or Evening. It is not desirable, however His Excellency the Vicerov may be willing to receive them, to issue cards of admission to each and every applicant. The distinction ought to be reserved for only the admissible. Government House Lists are already inconveniently crowded with ineligible names. An attempt ought to be made to purge them of these.

THE Raja of Cochin Su Vira Kerala Varma, K. C. I E., is dead. He was born in 1846 and succeeded in the guidee in 1888. His was, therefore, only a seven years' reign, if reign it could be called when he had not the power of the purse which is in the absolute control of the Resident. A mere pensioner, with a weak minister, subservient to the Resident, the Raja of Cochin is a non-entity in his own dominions.

THE little Kyastha community of Dacca is cast in gloom on account of the death, at the early age of 34, of their Chief, Baboo Annoda Prasad Roy Choudhury of Kashimpore. Master of an estate yielding an income of a lakh of rupees, he was charitably disposed and was never satisfied with doing good. He was the idol of all his relatives and familiar acquaintances.

FOLLOWING the example set by the N.-W. P., the District Superintendent of Mymensingh, Bengal, Mr. K. B. Thomas, has started a fund for the aid of indigent ex-convicts of his district. The promised aid amounts to Rs. 7,665, but he requires at least double the sum to start operations. He writes to a local contemporary:— start operations. He writes to a local contemporary:—

"In your issue of the 23rd July you kindly published copy of a circular letter issued by me to all Zemindars and leading gentlemen of this District, regarding a Fund for the aid of indigent exconvicts of the District. At the meeting held on the 3rd ultimo and in reply to my letter Rs. 2,465 has been promised, which brings the amount up to Rs. 7,665: This I need hardly say is not nearly enough to enable me to start the Fund, and unless a sum of at least Rs. 15,000 can be raised, I am afraid I shall have to give up all hopes of seeing the scheme started. A large number of my letter have not even been acknowledged by gentlemen who have large estates in this district. I trust their vilence does not mean they do not wish to assist, however I trust they will now give me a reply. Attached is the list of subscription promised at the meeting."

The Police is generally accused of high-handedness. But here is

The Police is generally accused of high-handedness. But here is an instance of meekness and helplessness. The Zemindars are now-a-days not disposed to part with their money in aid of a project which has not the support of very high authority and gives no prospect of distinction. Nor is it possible for every one of them to so easily comply with a request of the kind as the District Superintendent wishes. Oftentimes they are Zemindars in name only. A mere reply, again, unaccompanied by a cheque, will not satisfy the Superintendent.

THE Statesman of Tuesday reproduces from Harper's Magazine an account of the execution of John Palm, a book-seller of Nuremberg, under the orders of Napoleon. The man was perfectly innocent and the story of his unhappy fate became widely known over not only the continent but the British Isles, as well. To adopt the words of the writer in the Magazine, "it kindled into patriotic fire the smouldering embers of German nationality." In England, it created almost no impression, although the English press was ever on the watch for giving the widest publicity to incidents furnishing evidence of the cruel disposition of the French Emperor and his utter disregard of considerations of justice. In the literary circles of London the execution of poor Palm was treated with a sort of heartlessness that is painful to contemplate. Wits seized it as even reflecting credit on Napoleon and proving his sympathy with authors. The poet of Hope in particular, he who wept so nobly for fillen Sarmatia and for the dusky militons that were oppressed by the rising Butish Power in India, himself laughed over this heart-rending execution and caused others to laugh over it. Read the following from Curwen's History of Book-sellers, the old and the new. " Poor Compbell had suffered much from the publishers. His 'Pleasures of Hope' had been resected by every book-seller in Glasgow and Edinburgh; not one of them would even risk paper and printing upon the chance of its success. At last, Messrs. Mundelt and Son, printers to the University of Glasgow, with much reluctance undertook the publication, upon the liberal condition of allowing the author fifty copies at trade price, and, in the event of its reaching a second edition, a gratuity of ten pounds. A few years afterwirds, when Campbell was present at a literary dinner party, he was asked to give a toast, and without a moment's hesitation he proposed 'Bonapurte.' Glasses were put down untouched, and shouts of 'The Ogie!' resounded. 'Yes, gentlemen, said Campbell gravely, there is to Bouaparte; he has just shot a bookseller I' Amid shouts of applause, for the dinner was in 'Bohemia,' the glasses were jangled and the toast was drunk, for the news had but just arrived that Palm, a book-seller of Nuremberg, had been shot by the Emperor's orders." Let us hope Campbell did not know the details of the case.

Here is the narrative from Harper's -

"In the summer of 1806, the year of Jena, there lived in the picturesque old town of Noremberg a much respected bookseller named John Palm. He received, one day, in the usual course of husters, a package of books consigned through him to other booksellers of his neighbourhood; these books were done up in separate packages, addressed to the respective consignees, and John Palm had no other connection with them than arranging for their safe delivery.

Amongst them happened to be one entitled Germany in Her Day of Shame; it was a short anonymous work commenting severely upon the manner in which the French military administration pressed upon the name of Bayasia.

the manner in which the French military administration pressed upon the people of Bavaiia.

One copy was consigned to a bookseller in Augsburg, who allowed to lead it; through them, however, it fell into the hands of some French officers who were quartered upon the pastor of a neighbouring village, and thus it became known to the higher French authorities. On the 7th of July, 1806, Napoleon ordered John Palm to be tried by court-martial and shot.

This respectable booksteller was so convinced of his own innocence and had such complete proof that he was not the author nor the publisher of the book, and did not even know what the book was about that he refused the abundant opportunities he had of avoiding arrest by escaping into Austria or Prissia.

On the 22nd of August he was locked up in the fortress of Braunau, an Austrian town, garrisoned by French troops, about 200 miles from Nuremberg. He had taken leave of his wife and children, promising a speedy return, and felt confident that his trial would be merely a matter of form, and so it was.

He was given two short hearings. No one was allowed to plead for him, and within two days of entering the fortress he was sentenced to be shot.

At 11 o'cluck on the 26th of August he was notified that he was to be shot at 2 o'clock, leaving him barely time to write a few letters to his family and most intimate friends.

The good people of the town begged mercy for him at the knees of the French commandant, ignorant of the fact that this officer was acting not as judge, but as executioner.

At the appointed hour John Palm was placed upon a peasant's cart, and escorted beyond the walls of the town under a strong military escort. His wrists were tred behind his back, and six French soldiers stepped forward, aimed, and fired. Five of the shots missed him; the sixth brought him to the ground with a cry of pain. He strugied to his feet to receive another volley, which ag in brough him to the ground, crippled and helpless, but not yet dead. Two soldiers now ran quickly forward, placed the mizzles of their muskets against his head, and finished the task with disgusting thoroughness.

The story of John Palm's execution went from mouth to mouth muzzles of their muscers against ms nearly and monitor to with disputing thoroughness.

The story of John Palm's execution went from mouth to mouth all over Germany, kinding into patriotic fire the smouldering embers of German nationality. Even the Court of Prussia was made to feel that there was in Germany such a thing as public sentiment."

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, September 28, 1895.

JURY TRIAL IN INDIA.

In noticing, two years ago, the now famous lecture, at the Chaitanya Library, of Sir Alexander Miller on the origin of trial by Jury, we had ventured to say that it was evidently a feeler put forth for guaging the measure of veneration cherished by the people of this country for jury trial. Without following Sir Alexander into the devious paths of the early legal history of England, we did not hesitate to point out that the Law Member of the Viceregal Council had committed some grave blunders in his account of the celebrated case of the Seven Bishops In the first place, he had spoken of the accused as having admitted publication. As a matter of fact, however, publication had been denied, and the Crown had the greatest difficulty in proving it and could not prove it without violating the royal pledge. Then, the collective nature of the petition had nothing to do with the criminality charged against the Bishops, although Sir Alexander seemed to think that the fact of their having signed the document together had formed one of the elements of the offence. He even went so far as to suggest an analogy between the charge against the Bishops and the rule which is in force in India against collective petitions by Government servants. He had, again, named Hallam and Macaulay as his authorities for the version he gave of the secrets of the jury room, although, as we pointed out, the learned historian of the British constitution has not, in any of his works, devoted a single se itence to the details of that case, very properly referring his readers to general histories of England, an I although Macaulay's account is totally different from the lecturer's. We openly doubted whether Sir Alexander had really read Macaulay, for it was impossible to believe that anybody, after having perused, even once, the brilliant and highly pic-turesque narrative of Macaulay could so far forget it as to actually confound, after the manner of Sir Alexander Miller, king James' brewer with as had chosen to express themselves on the question the butcher of his own conjuring and ascribe at the time of the previous amendment of the the verdict of "not guilty" to the butcher's pertinacity when, as a matter of fact, it was the brewer,-or the butcher if Sir Alexander would have it so,—that had displayed the dogged determination of convicting notwithstanding the wish of all his colleagues to acquit. Such a derangement of epitaphs was scarcely possible for a scholar and jurist like the Law Member to indulge in, especially while delivering a public lecture at a native Institute, with the Chief Justice of the Calcutta Institute, with the Chief Justice of the Caicutta High Court presiding. Sir Alexander Miller had the candour to explain, in a letter he addressed, not to us but to another journal, that he had not read Macaulay "for the last forty years." Indeed, he cried "peccavi "and admitted some of his blunders, passing over others in silence. He sought, however, to qualify his admissions and minimise the gravity of the blunders by the remark that they in no way affected his general argument. We did not think it fit to join issue with him on this, content with his admission that "trial by jury, as it exists in India, is less detrimental to the due administration of justice than it is in the United Kingdom." The learned Law Member denied the correctness of our surmise that his lecture had been "intended as a manifesto sent forth to cover the Elliottic blunder and to prepare the way for a similar change in Bombay and Madras." To every word of this, he gave " the most emphatic contradiction that the laws of politeness admitted." Unfortunately for us, we were not prepared for the acceptance of this emphatic disclaimer. We did not doubt the veracity of Sir Alexander Miller in the least. The situation, however, was such that even if Sir Alexander did not act from any such intention, he fairly laid himself open to the charge. The whole country was in a ferment about Sir Charles Elliott's blundering notification. It was being denounced from both the platform and the press in every quarter. The cultured section of the European community in India sympathised with the natives in their alarm and anxiety. At such a juncture of affairs, the Law Member of the Supreme Legislative Council of India thought it fit to deliver a discourse, under the presidency of the Chief Justice of the Bengal High Court, in which, among other things, he laboured to establish the points that, after all, trial by jury was not a very ancient institution, that it did not come from the free air and the forests of Germany, that "the idea, now so deeply rooted in many minds, that there is some natural connection between trial by jury and British liberty, is negatived by antecedent history, that it was really an institution of which the English people could not very well be proud, and, lastly, that there was a ridiculous incident connected with the history of its turning point inasmuch as it was a burly butcher whose obstinacy alone could be said to have saved English liberty. The whole country, with a unity of voice that was remarkable, was arguing for establishing the importance of trial by jury, for showing the dangers to which the community would be exposed if such trial were withdrawn, and for pointing out that there was a peculiar cruelty in taking away the privilege after having generously accorded it to the people and that at a time when no evidence was forthcoming to prove that the privilege had in any way been abused in the enjoyment. They were fortifying their assertions by citing the opinions of such among the judicial officers of the realm Code of Criminal Procedure. There was a peculiar unfitness in the selection of that time by the very head of the legislative machinery of the empire for telling the people that it was, after all, a mere toy upon whose acquisition they had set their hearts. Sir Alexander Miller might have discussed the question as one of mere speculative interest. Indeed, after his emphatic asseveration that it was even so, no one that was not absolutely a boor could possibly refuse to accord him the fullest credit. Sir Alexander Miller, however, it cannot be denied, showed an absolute want of judgment in delivering even a speculative discourse on what was the burning question of the hour. Our surmise was one of the direct consequences of that absence of judgment on his part. The time, the subject, the manner of treating it, were all against the supposition that the Law Member of the Government of India intended to offer the public only an academic thesis without the slightest possibility of any of his conclusions being practically adopted for the amendment of the existing

The Bill introduced by Sir Alexander Miller into the Supreme Council for amending the provisions, in the Code of Criminal Procedure, on trial by jury, contains views which were first set forth by Sir Alexander Miller in the speculative lecture to which we have referred. While admitting, without the slightest reservation, that Indian juries are less detrimental to the due administration of justice than juries in the United Kingdom, the present effort of Sir Alexander Miller seems to be rather Quixotic. As the head of the legislative machinery of this extensive empire, Sir Alexander is evidently ambitious of improving juries to an extent not yet reached in the British Isles. Half the evils of India are traceable to this ambition of Indian officials to achieve something in their respective departments that has not been achieved as yet in their mother country. The mechanism of administration in the United Kingdom is such that no man there is able to tamper with any institution by seeking to reduce his own fads into practice. In India the case is different. This is the land of experiments, the country where bricks are attempted to be made without straw and sun beams sought to be extracted from cucumbers, and where officials make themselves miserable in view of ills as remote and imaginary as those that moved the men of science of Laputa. The Law Member has sketched his progamme for enhancing the usefulness of juries. But the main question has not yet been answered to the satistaction of the public, however satisfactorily Sir Alexander Miller may have answered it to himself, the question, viz., whether that plan will not really inprove juries off this dependency of the British Crown? The Law Member seems to imagine that juries should not have the power of bringing in general verdicts in criminal trials. It is the old, old controversy that raged in England for many years till it was settled by Fox's Libel Act of 1792. Those who are acquainted with the history of that controversy know that while servile judges and courtly lawyers held the view that in prosecutions for libel the function of the jury was simply to find the fact or otherwise of publication including the filling in of innuendos, the question of libel or no libel being determinable by the judges alone, 'others of great name in our jurisprudence," to quote the words of the historian of the British Constitution, "and the majority of the public at large, conceiving that this would throw the liberty of the press altogether into the hands of the judges, maintained that the jury had a strict right to take the whole matter into their consideration, and determine the defendant's criminality or innocence according to the nature and circumstances of the publication." How the doctrine, at once servile and inimical to the liberty of the press, had to be given up notwithstanding its support by Lord Mansfield and Thurlow, is wellknown to the student of legal history. Lord Campden, a name more glorious than that of Lord Mansfield, who was the author of the Bill introduced by Fox, vigorously knocked it on the head. Soon after Lord Mansfield's charge to the jury, affirming this opinion in the case of Rex. v. Woodfall which arose upon the publication of Junius's Letter to the King, Serjeant Glynn and others exposed its mischievous consequences in the powerful speeches they made in the Lower House of Parliament. Sir Alexander Miller's project is nothing less than to deprive, in effect, Indian juries of the power of returning general verdicts not only in cases of libel but in other cases as well that are, under the Indian law -which really means the will of the Executive Government for the time being as expressed by notifications in the Gazette,-triable by juries. Among the amendments proposed by Sir Alexander Miller the most important one is contained in Section 3 of the Bill, by which power is given to the judges to dispense altogether with general verdicts and require juries to return what are called special verdicts on particular questions of fact which the judges shall present to them. Can there be a doubt that, armed with such powers, judges, when they choose to differ from the jury as regards the criminality of the accused, will always insist upon the return of special verdicts? The fact is, Sir Alexander Miller's ideas regarding the utility of juries in criminal trials are unquestionably different from those generally entertained by the soundest of jurists, British or Continental. That the Home Member of Lord Lansdowne's Government, who was only an Indian Civilian, should misunderstand the true functions of the jury and class it with those institutions that exist under all Governments for the repression of crime, was no wonder. Indian Civilians, with rare exceptions, are not noted for their proficiency in law or legal history. Mr. Hutchins, in particular, was not known to have made criminal jurisprudence a special study. It is one thing, however, to find an ordinary Indian Civilian misconceiving the true functions of the jury in criminal trials, and quite another to see a lawyer and jurist of Sir Alexander Miller's reputation commit the same blunder. The fact is, in most civil-ised countries, after the commission of a crime and a preliminary investigation by the Police ending in an accusation against a particular individual, the real task that the Crown undertakes, when it puts the accused person before a Court of justice, is not simply to shew the existence of facts inconsistent with the supposition of his innocence but to satisfy a definite number of men endued with ordinary intelligence that the prisoner standing before them has actually committed the offence charged against him. It is one thing to think a man guilty and another to prove him so legally. Juries do not exist for repressing crimes. Their function, on the other hand, is to ments and very prejudices, and mingling with the mass of the people after its temporary duty is discharged, the jury not unoften stands between the Crown and the people in state prosecutions where the object is to break a publicist or politician obnoxious to the administration for the time being. Whether arising out of the provisions in dog Latin of the Magna Carta, or owning an origin traceable to the tree air and the forests of Germany, no better safeguard could the ingenuity of man devise against the oppression of power. Obvious as these considerations are, they are frequently ignored in India. They were ignored on the last occasion by the Home Member of the Government of India, On the present occasion they are ignored by the learned Law

Under the existing law, the verdict of the jury in India is not final. The trying judge, when he sees reason to differ from the jury, is at liberty to refer the case to a higher tribunal. That tribunal, again, has the power of taking up the case as one in appeal. It is not hampered, in even the slightest degree, by the verdict of the jury, from going behind it and weighing quite independently the evidence for and against in its own scale. These are sufficient safeguards against any miscarriage of justice. So great is the respect paid to the verdict of the jury in the United Kingdom that there judges are bound to accept it however perverse. No machinery exists for correcting those perverse verdicts. In India, it seems, that those responsible for her laws are not satisfied with even the existing safeguards. They must proceed further. They are for effecting the impossible, viz., the absolute prevention of miscarriage of justice in every case. In seeking to effect that object, they do not mind how they degrade the jury.

An obvious effect of the proposed amendments will be the reluctance of men, with ideas of self-respect, to serve on the jury. One serving on a jury has the right to know as to whether he is trusted or not. There ought to be but one answer to his query. Either trust him completely or dismiss him to attend to his own affairs. A certain series of facts constitute the offence of theft. The removal, with dishonest intention, of movable property belonging to another, is the essence of the offence. a jury can be trusted with finding the facts of removal and intention, there is no earthly reason why it should not be trusted with the power of saying whether those facts do, in its estimation, actually amount to the commission of the offence stated. The analogy, drawn from the functions of the jury in civil cases in the United Kingdom, does not at all apply to its functions in criminal trials. The laws of property and personal status are often very intricate. Take, for example, the simplest cases, vis, those arising out of the law of Limitation. A jury may be asked to find as to whether the plaintiff has or has not resided for 12 years in the house claimed by him. Supposing the finding is the negative, the inference does not follow that the plaintiff's rights have been barred. Possession in law is a highly complicated question. One may be in legal possession of one's house, although not residing in it for the statutory period. The fact, again, of one's having gone through a ceremony of marriage with another may be proved or found, yet the legality of the marriage may not follow from such finding. The most intricate considerations of law may have to be disposed of before the marriage can in legal possession of one's house, although not be declared legal or otherwise. Then, in civil causes. the same facts are very often relied upon by both the plaintiff and the defendant, and inferences diametrically opposed to each other, are often drawn from them. Under such circumstances, juries cannot very well be asked to return general verdicts for this or that side. They should return only special verdicts affirming the existence of certain facts. How often are those special verdicts relied upon by both sides as favouring their view of the law cannot be unknown to a lawyer of Sir Alexander Miller's reputation.

It is difficult to remove the impression, that has become rather general, that the trial of criminal offences by jury in India is an eye-sore to officials of a certain class. The constant endeavours to tamper with the institution are responsible for that impression. How often we hear people say that, unable to repeal it openly, all sorts of insidious attempts are made to take away the substance and leave only the shadow !

INDIA AND CHITRAL. THE TALE OF THE BLUE-BOOK.

In a despatch from the Government of India to the Secretary of In a despatch from the Government of shuffs to the Secretary of State, dated June 11, 1877, it is related how the Mehtar of Chitral tendered allegiance to the Maharaja of Kashmir, and how the representatives of Chitral and Yassin formally confirmed that tender at the Delhi assembly. The Khan of Dir wished at the same time to become tributary to Kashmir, but he afterwards proposed time to become tributary to kashmir, but he afterwards proposed obedience to the Amir of Kabul. The Mehtar communicated this fact to the Maharaja, and said all the neighbouring Chiefs were submitting to the Amir, and that he himself was left too isolated and too weak to resist without assistance the pressure which he expected from a Kabul agent then on his way to Chitral.

RESISTING KABUL

The despatch says: In reply His Excellency in Council authorized the Maharaja to instruct the Chitral Chief to resist the claims of Kabul and to furnish him with the means of doing so, relying, if necessary upon the support of the British Government. At the same time, under the instruction of His Excellency in Council, a letter was addressed by the Commissioner of Peshawar Council, a letter was addressed by the Commissioner of Peshawar to the Amir at Kabul, warning him against any endeavour to assume sovereignty over Bajour, Swat, Dir or Chitral, and reminding His Highness that as the British Government had never recognized his claim to allegiance from those States, to enforce it without the assent of that Government would be regarded as an unfriendly assent of that Government would be regarded as an unfriendly act. In a despatch dated February 28, 1879, the Government of India said: Our object is to acquire through the ruler of Kashmir the power of making such political and military arrangements as will effectually command the passes of the Hindu Kush. With this object we shall take every opportunity of strengthening our control over the country lying south of the mountain slopes, and of attaching the Chiefs, through Kashnir, to British interests. It was added that the Chieral engagement with Kashmir would be drawn as close as possible, and the despatch concluded: Although we desire to realize our plans gradually by pacific means, we shall we desire to realize our plans gradually by pacific means, we shall nevertheless consider it from the first incumbent upon the Government of India to prevent at any cost the establishment within this outlying country of the political preponderance of any other Power, nor do we anticipate that any such interference with our legitimate authority will be attempted in earnest so soon as it shall have become known that we have marked out a clear and consistent frontier, and that we intend to maintain it.

DEALING WITH UMRA KHAN

Later despatches show how the Gilgit agency was established, and describe the course of events in Hunza, Nagar, Chitral and Bajour. Attempts to open negociations with Umra Khan are mentioned, and in a despatch, dated December 28th, $892, it is said:--Umra Khan has been told that the Government of said: In regard to Chitral it has been the consistent policy of Government of India to exclude from that country not merely the control but even the influence of the Amir of Afghanistan; but apart from the evils which might result from Chitral falling under Afghan influence or domination, it is obvious that the near prospect of the Russian occupation extending to the north bank of the Punja, which is less than a day's march from the Chitral frontier, renders it a matter of importance to us to be able to control the external affairs of Chitral. I cannot agree that it would be a wise policy to give the Amir succrainty over Chitral. It would be unjustifiable to deprive Kashmir of her acknowledged right of suzerainty over that State in order to hand it over to an Afghan ruler. Lord Kimberley at this period said: It would be premature to decide on the permanent political and military arrangements for that part of the frontier. This view was confirmed in a despatch from the Secretary of State dated August 3rd, 1894.

THE RELIEF OF CHITRAL.

Telegraphic despatches of March, 1895, follow, showing how the 1st division was mobilized to effect the relief of Dr. Robertson's party in Chitral Fort. The Secretary of State on March 30th wired: As soon as present trouble is over, policy with regard to Chitral and neighbourhood will have to be fully and regard to Chitral and neighbourhood will have to be fully and carefully reconsidered. Meantime our hands should be kept perfectly free. I hope therefore that you will take care that nothing is said or done to commit Government either way with regard to making new roads or retention of posts now occupied or occupation of new posts. In a long despatch, dated April 17th, the Government of India gave a narrative of the events which led up to the situation at that time.

VIEWS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

On April 18th they wired that they were agreed that a military occupation of Chitral supported by a road to the Peshawar border was a matter of the first importance. If such road was not opened they had not unanimously come to a con-clusion in regard to the expediency of occupying Chitral, but they were unanimous in asking the permission to enter into negociations with the tribes with a view to obtaining their consent to the opening up of this road when, in the opinion of the Government, an opportunity should arise in connection with Sir Robert Low's advance. In their opinion it would be a serious mistake to lose that opportunity.

MR. FOWLER'S REPLY.

The Secretary of State in reply pointed out that recent events had shown the peril of maintaining a British officer with an escort in Chitral, so long as he could be only supported via Gilgit. He continued: I wish you to consider and advise me whether the strategical and political importance of Chitral is such, in your opinion, as to render it desirable in the face of these difficulties in the way of the main objects of our past policy in Chitral, which, as I understand, were to control its external affairs in a direction friendly to our interests to secure an effective guardianship over its northern passes, and to watch what goes on beyond them. Also whether you can suggest any method of securing these objects less costly and less hazardous than that lately in In a telegram, dated April 25, the Secretary of State said he had no objection to the tribes being sounded as the terms and conditions on which they would consent to the opening up and maintaining of the Peshwar-Chitral road should this road be hereatter decided upon, but he did not wish to be committed to the policy of a military occupation of Chitral; or of maintaining a British officer there permanently, with or without the support of this road, until Her Majesty's Government had had an opportunity of fully considering detailed views and arguments.

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE.

The Viceroy telegraphing on the same day, said: Narrative of events indicates complete withdrawal under present circumstances impossible, as it would leave the country to complete anarchy and would render a settlement more difficult. In our opinion we must . Iso keep open the road from Peshawar for some time, probably three or four months at least, whatever the ultimate decision may The Secretary of State on April 27 wired that he did not he. The Secretary or State on April 27 wired that he did not object to any temporary arrangements which the Government of India considered necessary. On May 8th the Government of India sent a despatch, in which they said that two alternatives were placed before them—they must maintain their position in Chitral, or change their policy, and abandon the accempt to keep any effective control over the external affairs of the State. this despatch they said: It seems to us to be demonstrated that the maintenance of our influence over Chitral is a matter of the first importance; that to abandon Chitral to the possibility of the first importance; that to abandon Unitral to the possibility of loreign occupation would involve a risk which we ought not to run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; that giving the country over the Afghanistan does not run; the following day the estimated expenditure to the end of June beyond the provision in the Budget and of the monthly expenditure were ignore our pledges to preserve the suzerainty of Kashmir. Events have, however, greatly changed the conditions under which we cannot hope to maintain that influence.

THE CASE OF SHER AFZUL

Sher Afzul, an aspirant to the Mehtarship, has ostentatiously Sher Aszul, an aspirant to the Mchtarship, has ostentatiously departed from the policy of his predecessors in not placing himself under British protection and guidance. He came trusting to the strength of a foreign invader, Umra Khan of Jhandol, perhaps to the power which he believed to be at that invader's back, and ventured to dictate his terms to the British Agent, and to offer his friendship as a favour. Together they raised the country against us, attacked our troops, and cut them off in the defiles, where nature lent strength to their attack; entrapped our officers by treachery and deceit and laid vigorous seige to the our officers by treachery and deceit, and laid vigorous seige to the last strongholds in the country whether any of our troops maintained themselves. The events which have culminated in the gallant defence of Chitral and the costly measures taken for gallant desence of Chitral and the costly measures taken for relief, both from the north and the south, render it, in our opinion, impossible that we can ever think of maintaining British influence in that country again without the presence of British troops. In concluding this despatch of Government said. We are fully conscious that the course which we recommend may involve the Government in expense which the finances of India can ill afford, and in an increase of responsibilities with the tribes on our north-west frontier which we would fain avoid. It may be possible to lessen these objections. If amicable relations can be established with the tribes, not only would it be easier to retain them for the autonomy which we should desire to conserve, but the cost of thus securing the defence of our frontier may be greatly reduced. In any event the interests are so large that it is our plain duty to lay before you the conclusions at which, after full consideration, we have arrived.

MR. FOWLER'S DECISION.

On June 13th the Secretary of State telegraphed : Her Majesty's Government have given most careful consideration to the question of the future policy in regard to Chitral, and to your letter of 8th May. They fully appreciate your point of view and it is with regret they find themselves unable to concur in the opinion of your Government too which in all matters, they attach great weight. They have decided that no military force or European Agent shall be kept at Chitral that Chitral shall not be fortified, and that no road shall be made between Peshawar and Chitral. It will follow that all positions beyond our frontier now held in consequence of recent relief operations should be evacuated as speedily as circumstances allow, but dates and details are left to your discretion. As regards Chitral State, they request that in view of the decision above stated you will telegraph what are the arrangements which you would recommend for the future. Any proposal which you may make will receive most careful attention from Her Majesty's Government.

THE VICEROY'S REGRET.

The Viceroy wired on July 14: We deeply regret, but loyally cept your decision. We are earnestly considering questions accept your decision. We are earnestly considering questions placed before us. On June 22nd the Viceroy wired the arrangements proposed for evacuation. Their proposals were to divide Katur from the Kushwakht country, but to maintain the suzerain rights of Kashmir over both; to withdraw Shuja-ul-Mulk, as his life would not be safe if he were left behind, and to bring him to India; to invite the Katuri headmen to elect a Mehtar, excluding the candidature of Sher Afzul, on account of the grave suspicions of his complicity in acts of treachery as well as of hostility; to propose to the Kushwachtis to elect a separate man; to with the Assistant British Agent from the Katur country when Chitral is evacuated and from the Kushwakht country as soon as circumstances permitted; to maintain control of the country cast of the Shandur Pass by Kashmir troops; and to reserve the question of retaining Kashmir troops in Mastuj until a form of administration had been determined for the Kushwakht country. The despatch concluded: It will be necessary to reward the chiefs of the tribes who have befriended us in the advance from Peshawar to Chitral. who have detriended us in the advance from Feshawar to Chitral. Sir Robert Low proposes giving the Khan of Dir 50 sniders, some ammunition, Rs. 25,000, and Rs. 10,000 per annum. We propose to approve of the annual allowance being only paid if the Khan can, without our assistance, maintain his position in Dir. We have asked for a report with regard to other chiefs and Jhandol. These proposals, if sanctioned, will admit of our taking immediate action, and we consider delay in every way most undesirable.

THE QUESTION RE-OPENED.

The next telegram was from the Secretary of State after the change of Government at home. It was dated July 2nd, and ran: Present Government must consider Chitral question. How long asked for. The Government of India, replying, said the troops could not be withdrawn in any case till September. The estimated expenditure to June 30 was 145 lakhs beyond the Budget provision. The monthly expenditure was 22 % lakhs.

LORD G. HAMILTON ASSENTS TO RETENTION.

On August 1st the Secretary of State asked : Assuming satisfactory road arrangements and a good fortified position, what is the minimum strength of the proposed garrison of Chitral? What is the minimum force you would leave at Mastuj supposing Chitral were evacuated? The Viceroy replied that open negotiations with the tribes had been avoided, but the reports received warranted the confident expectation that a peaceful arrangement for the road could be made. A garrison was proposed of the strength which has since been made known. The road was to be held from Chakdara since been made known. The road was to be held from Chakdras to Drosh by levies, probably 250 from Swat and 500 from Dir. The bridges at Chakdara and Chutiatan were said by General Low to be sufficient, with minor additions, to last seven years. The despatch added: The Commander-in-Chief assures me that this scheme was drawn up to meet all eventualities, including even the necessity of holding the road in force next year while the supplies and reliefs are going up, though he thinks this unlikely. No addition to the Army is asked. As to Mastuj, it was said that the Commander-in-Chief concurred in the objections to garrisoning it if Chitral were evacuated. On August 9th the Secretary of State telegraphed his assent to the proposals made, but said: "Make no permanent arrangement for a cantonment on the Malakand and neighbourhood until fuller details both of cost and numbers can the Proclamation." On August to the Viceroy wired: "We have informed General Low of the decision of Her Majesty's Government, and have authorized the commencement of negotiations with wat Khans and the Khan of Dir, assuring them again that all we wish is to open the road, to insist on order being maintained along it, but to leave to the people their independence, and not annex their country.

STATEMENT OF REASONS.

The Blue-book concludes with a despatch from the Secretary of State, dated August 16th, in which the whole position is reviewed. Referring to the proposals made when Sir Henry Fowler ordered the evacuation, it is remarked that it was clear that the policy of abandonment would not cease with the mere evacuation of the territory of Chitral. One of the main objects of the establishment of the Gilgit Agency was the facilities it would afford in watching over and keeping under control to the Chitral and Mustuj valleys, which lead to the easiest and most important passes over the Hindu Kush. To abandon these objects would be to deprive the Gilgit Agency of its main value, while the cost of its maintenance would be as heavy as before. Gilgit and its Agency would, under these conditions, cease to be worth maintenance, and the whole country would probably lapse into disorder and disturbance.

The delimitation of the frontiers between the Indian empire and neighbouring Governments has of recent years been more accurately defined, and it seems more than probable that if your Government had in these districts by its retirement announced Its nability to discharge its previous functions, other authorities would step in and undertake the duties thus cast off. This was the state affairs which Her Majesty's Government had to consider on taking office, and the serious objections involved in your alternative proposals, illustrating as they do the difficulties inseparable from giving effect to the policy of abandonment, have led Her Majesty's Government again to examine the proposals contained in your telegram of April 18th the letter of May 8th. It seemed to the Government that the policy which has been continuously pursued by successive Governments in their relations with Chitral ought not lightly to be abandoned unless its maintenance had become clearly impossible. Your Government had said before that to abandon Chitral was to forego the advantages of that policy, and that no middle course was possible; and it is certain that the alternative course proposed in your telegram of June 2 id would not have sufficed to secure those advantages, and indeed was open to much of the objection which, in your letter of May 8th, you attach to abandonment. Nor did it seem to Her Majesty's Government that recent events had in any way decreased the the necessity for adhering to the above line of policy.

A WATCHPUL POLICY NECESSARY.

If it was neccessary, owing to the situation on the frontier in 1892, to strengthen the Chitral Agency for the express purpose of keeping a closer watch on the Chitral frontier, the neccessity of maintaining that watch is no less obvious at the present day. The receiping a cioner water on the Chitral frontier, the necessity of maintaining that waters in o less obvious at the present day. The advance of Russia to the line of the Oxus, and that of the Amir to the eastern border of Kafristan are not likely to diminish the tension which has in past years prevailed on this part of the frontier. Moreover Her Majesty's Government stached considerable importance to the argument that our withdrawal at such a moment could scarcely fail to have a demoralizing effect, not only upon the tribes concerned, but throughout the whole frontier, the population of which would ascribe our retirement to inability to maintain the advantage who had gained in the recent military operations. The Secretary of State goes on to say that doubt was felt as to the possibility of opening up the Peshawar-Chirral road by peaceful means, and maintaining it without an intolerable burden of expenditure being imposed on Indian finances. That doubt had been removed if the officers of the Government of India had rightly estimated the conditions, and with its removal the main obstacle to the acceptance of the unanimous recommendation of May Sth had been cleared away.

A FEW INCHES OF PLAIN ENGLISH.

NOWADAYS men are doing all sorts of wonders by means of electricity, both in mechanics and in chemistry. I see by the papers that they expect to be able to produce real diamonds by it. Perhaps they may; marvels never cease. But we will want till they do before we crow over that job. Up to this time, anyway, everything that is both valuable and useful is the fruit of haid work. Even dramonds they may; marvels never cease. But we will want till they do before we crow over that job. Upto this time, anyway, everything that is both valuable and useful is the fruit of hard work. Even drimminds are mostly got out of tocky mines. And, within reasonable limits, it is good for us to have to work. Ten shinings housestly earned is better for a man than twenty in the shape of a legacy.

The best condition of things for any country would be when fair wages could be earned straight along, without loss or deduction for any reason. But in the present aspect of human affairs this is impossible. Whose fault it is we cannot now discuss.

One source of loss, however, is plain enough, and some remedy for it ought to be found. In England and Wales every working man averages ten days of illness per year, making the total loss of wages from this cause about £16,000,000 a year. We are talking of the average, you see. But masmuch as all working-men are not ill every year, this everage does not fairly show the suffering and loss of those who care ill. In any given year many will lose no time at all, while others may lose individually from ten days to six months each. No charity, no savings, no income from clubs,&c., can make up for this—even in money alone to say nothing of the pain and the misery.

Alluding to an experience of his in 1888 Mr. George Lagdon says, "I had to give up my work." How this canne to pass he tells us in a letter dated from his home in White House Road, Stebbing, near Dunmow, August 24, 1892. He had no inherited disease or weakness, so far as he knew and was always strong and well up to April of that year—1888. Then his strength and energy began to fleave him. He felt tired, not as from work, but as from power gone out of him through some bodily failure. He sat down to his meals, but not with his old eagerness and relish. There was a naxy copper-like taste in his mouth, his teeth and tongue were covered with slime, and his throat clugged with a kind of thick phiegin, difficult to "hawk up" and eject.

to believe that it would end in my taking the one journey from which no traveller returns.

"It was now July—summer time, when life to the healthy is so pleasant and full of hope. At this time my sister in law got from Mr. Linsells (Stebbing) a medicine that I had not time gyet. After having used one bottle I feli better, and when I had used the second I was cured, and have not last an how's work since."

The reader will notice that between the date of his taking this medicine and the date of his letter there is an interval of four years. We may, therefore, infer that his cure was real and permanent. The medicine, by the way, was Mother Seige's Curative Syrup. It is not likely he will forget its nume nor what it did for him. His disease was indigestion and dyspepsia, the deadly enemy of every labouring man or woman under the sun, no matter what they work of or work work—hands, brains, or both.

or work with—hands, brains, or both.

Is it necessary to draw a "moral"—school-book style—from these facts? No, it is not. We have talked plain English, and that is enough.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other atticles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ,

Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.
61, Regent Street, London W.
Bankers: The London & County Bank.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. V. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE, late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," F. H. SKRINE, I.C.S.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR.

DEDICATION

HIS LIFE STORY.

Emerson on biography. Why is it popular? His ancestry

Birth.

Birth,
Early education,
At Garanhatta School,
Youthful dialectics,
The Hindoo Metropolitan College,

Teachers and associates. Essays in journalism.

Marties. Hurish Chandra Mookerjee.

Hurish Chandra Mookerjee Mutiny pamphlet. British Indian Association. His asthma how caused. Relieved by opium.

American bonours.
Faults of training.
Sub-editor of the "Patriot"
Story of the "Patriot."
Attacks the Income Tax.

Scathing strictures.
Lessons of the Mutiny
Removes to Lucknow
A love of music.

A rolling-stone.

Introduced to the Nazim.

Palace intrigues

Palace intrigues
Baffles his einennes.
Journalism again.
Becomes a schoolmaster
A Private Secretary.
A serious dilemnia.
Disinterested friendship
"Mookerpee's Migazine."
Dallies with the law.
The Maharaja of Japur
Work in Timpera.

The Manaraja of Japur Work in Tippera.
His application suppressed.
Becomes Prime Minister.
The water question.
Thwarted by intrigues

Inwarted by intrigues
Resigns his post.
The "Reptile Press,"
A commissioner of pacintion
Founds "Reis and Rayyer,"
"Travels and Voyages in Bengal."
A terra mognita
A tenst of reason.

Postprandial oratory Breaking up, A serious illness. The end.

His character.

Broad sympathies, A fee to fanaucism. Love of justice.

Charity. Curiosity.

Consideration for others,

Scorn of money.
Disinterestedness.

Love of animals.

A poetical nature.

An admirer of Byron.

Drawbacks of journalism.

Mookerjee's "Essays."

His letters.

His correspondents. Aim of this work.

PRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEF, ETTERS

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.,
to Atkinson, the late Mr. EFT., C.S.
to Banerjee, Babu Jyoush Chinder,
from Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.

to Bueijee, Babu Sarodaprasad, from Beil, the late Major Evans, from Bhaddaur, Chief of to Binaya Krishna, Raja. to Chiu, Ruo Bahadui Ananda. to Cuatterjee, Mr. K. M. from Clarke, Mr. S.E. J. from, to Colvin, Sir Auckland. to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of. from Evans, the Honbile Sir Gufffith H.P. to Guigult, Babu Kisari Mohan.
to Ghosh, Babu Kisari Mohan.
to Ghosh, Babu Kali Prosanna. to Giaham, Mr. W. from Griffin, Sir Lepel, from Gutla, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O. from Hume, Mr. Allan O. from Hume, Mr. Allan O. from Munter, Sir W. W.
to Jenkins, Mr. Edward.
to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.
to Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Lusdowie, the Maiquis of to Liw, Kunan Kristodas.
to Lyon, Mr. Percy C.
to Mahk, Mr. H. C.
to Maiston, Miss Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mitta, the late Raja Dr. Rajendralala, to Mookerjee, late Raja Dakhinaranijan, from Mookerjee, Mr. J. C. from Mookerjee, Mr. J. C. from Mookerjee, Mr. J. C. from Myell, Professor H. (San Francisco) to, from Marshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of, Mayaratia, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to, from Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of, from Nayaratna, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to R.o., Mr. G. Veuktia Appa., to Ratigan, Sir William H. from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, E. irl of, to, from Roschery, Irl of, from Sircar, Dr. Manendralal, from Sircar, Dr. Manendralal, from Siraley, Lord, of Alderley, from, to Townsend, Mr. Meredith, to Underwood, Captun F. O. to, from Vambery, Professor Arminus, to Veneatarananich, Mr. G. Vizanagram, Maharaja of, to, from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie, to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. LETIERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A. K. M.

Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A K. M.
Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A K. M.
Ameer Hossein, Hon'ble Nawab Syed.
Ardagh, Colonel Sir J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
British J. C.
Dutt, Babu Prosaddoss.
Egin, Lord.
Ghose, Babu Kith Prasanna.
Grah on, Mr. William
Hill, Dr. Fitz Edward.
Hill Dr. Fitz Edward.

Grah on, Mr. William H. dl, Dr. Fuz Edward.
H. tirdas Viharidas Desar, the late Dewan. Iyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami.
L. umbert, Sir John Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mr. a, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, Babu Sidheshur
Morketjee, Rija Peary Mohan.
Morketjee, Rija Peary Mohan.
Morketjee, Rija Distrendri Nath.
Mr. Shul Babu Sirendri Nath.
Mr. Shul Babu Sirendri Nath.
Krish Babu E. C.
R. y, Babu E. C.
R. y, Babu Sarat Chunder.
Sinyal, Babu Dinabundho.
Savitit Library.
Trippera, the Bara Thakur of.
Vannary, Professor Arminus,
Viz.magram, the Maharaja of.
POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the dis-posal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

It is in contemplation to publish the "Essays by a Brahman" separately, with a preface by Dr. Mookerjee's biographer Mr.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally ad-A RE universally admitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Bihous and Nervous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick, Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness of Breath, Construences, of Breath, Construences, of Breath, Construences, Sciery, English Dreums and all Network and Trembling Sensation, &c. The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes.

Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one box of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be

WADJULT

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off all humours, and bring about all that is required No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beetham's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use. For a Weak Stomach, Imputed Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

The Natives of India will find Beecham's Pills the finest medicine ever introduced to their notice; the European residents also will find them of great value for cooling the blood. For throwing off fevers and preventing inflummations in hot chinates, they stand without a rigid.

mations in not conneces and a tival.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guaranters to the Networs and Debitated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy for Coughs in general, Asthma, Bronchial Affections, Houseness, Shormess of Breath, Eightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wherzong, &c., these Pills stand unrivalled. Let any person give Beecham's Cough Pills a trial, and the most violent Cough will in a short time be removed.

Beecham's Tooth Paste
Will recommend itself being efficacious
and economical it is packed in neat airtight and economical it is packed in neat airright collapsible Tubes.

NOTICE.—G. Atherton & Co. will forward on receipt of letter, samples at the following rates: size 9/2d. at 8 annas per pox: 1-1/2d, size 12 annas per box; 2-1/2d, size 12 annas per box; 2-1/2d, size 12 annas per box; 1-1/2d, size 12 annas per Tube, these rates do not include the cost of postage which will be added to the amount.

Bole Wholesale Agents for India,
BURMAH & CEYLON,
G. ATHERTON & CO.,
3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET CALCUTTA.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF MUMORIAT PUMP

•	MEMORIAL FUND.	n.
ı.	His Highness. The Maharaja of Dur-	Rs.
		,000
2	anagram, G.C.I.E,I His Highness the Nawab Bah idur of	,000
3.	His Highness the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad, Amirul Omia, G.C.I E.	800
4	His Highness the Nawab of Junagadu,
5.	His Highness the Maharaja Banadur	500
	of Cooch Behar, G.C.LE Nawan Bahadui Sir K Abdul Gham, K.C.S.I., and Nawan Bahadui K Adam Illia et K	500
6.	KCSA, and Nawar Bahadur K
-	Ashan Ulla, C.I.K	500 500
7 3.	Ashan Ulia, C.F.K	500
9 10	Knan Bahadar BhaiB mauddin, C I E.,	500
11.	Vizier to the Nawab of Junagadh Minaraja Bahadur Sir Joundia Mo-	30.7
41.	han Tagore, K.C.S.L	250
13	Babu Jodu Lai Muthek Messrs, Mukimnon, Mukenzie & Co.	200 200
14	Messrs, Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. Prince Wala Kadi Syed Hosem Ali
15.	Shujaul Mulk Asafad Dowlat Nawab	150
. ,	Sved Zamul Abdın Khan Bahadur
16	Feraz Jung Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee, C.S.I. The Hon ble Mr. Justice Chandra	140 100
17	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandra Madhab Ghose	100
18.	Prince Mirza Sir Jahan Kadar Baha-	100
19.	dur, K.C.I.E., The Hon'ble P. Playfair	100
20.	Haji Kasim Ariff Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble Sir	100
21.	H. Brackenoury, K C B., Babu Jai Gobind Law	100
22	Babu Jar Gobind Law The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Guru Das	100
	Banerjee	50
24. 25.	The Houble Dr. Rash Behary Ghose Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kt	51 50
26.	Shahibzada Mahomed Obidulla Khan
27	Bahadur, C.S.I Maharajkumar Benoya Kushna	50 50
28	The Hou'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Treve-	50
29.	The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jabbar	30
30.	Khan Bahadur The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of	50
31.	Calcutta Maharija Durge Gharau Law, C. E., Nawah Jahandar Meerzale Nawah Huzon Muza The Horbie W. C. Bonnerjee Nawah Syed Aneer Husen Seed Musil Harls Rev. Co.	50
32.	Nawab Jahandar Meerza	50 50
33.	The Horble W. C. Bonneriee	50 50
34. 35.	Nawah Syed A neer Husein	50
36. 37.	Syed Nurul Huda, Esq., CS., Hakefin Gholam Raza Khan	50 50
38 39.	J. G. Ritchie, E-4, c.s., Sir Alexander Miller	50 50
40.	F. J. Rowe, Esq	32
41.	Moulvi Mahmudeen Nabi Khan Ba-	25
42. 43	Kuma Ridha Provad Roy	25 25
44.	Rabu r Parkunatte Nath Bore	25
45. 46.	Kumai D ullat Chandra Roy B ibn Guru Prosonno Ghose R ija Sir Sourindra Mohan Tagore,	25 25
47.	Rija Sir Soumudia Mohan Tagore,
48.	Raya Joun ha Nath Chowdhury Babu Rama Nath Ghose	25 25
49. 50	Bahu Rama Nath Ghose Raja Sreenath Roy	25 25
51.	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar	25
52. 53.	R. Belchambers, Esq Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowdhui	25 y 25
54. 55.	Ru Budreed & Mukim Bahadur Bahu Gopal Lal Seal	25 25
56.	M ulvi Syad Abdus Salam	25
57. 58.	A. T. Apear, Esq H. Luttman Johnson, Esq. Cs	25 25
59.	Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.R.,	25
60.	F. H. Skune, Esq. C.S., The Honble H. J. S. Cotton C.S., C.S.1. Bruce M. showed Bushtrar Shuh	25 25
62. 63.		20
64.	Baboo Surendra Nath Pal Chowdry	20
65. 66.	" Aukhoy Kumar Ghose Moulvi Imadd Ah	` •n
67. 68.	Rai Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar	, 20
69.	Chowdiy Manomed Artimand Khan	320
70. 71.	H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-line Mouly: Syed Ashruffuddin Ahmed,	20
	Khan Bahadur
72.	T. Inglis, Esq. CS	16

13	A. H. Giles, Esq	16
74.	F. F. Handley, E-q., C.S	16
75.	The Hon'ble Mouter Strajul Islam
•	Khan	16
76	Moulvi Serajuddeen	15
77.	Abul Hasan, Esq.,	15
78.	H. A. D. Pmlips, Esq. Cs	10
79.	Baboo Kiran Chunder Roy	10
Зó.	E. N. Baker, Esq	10
ßı.	Baboo Boyal Chand Bose	10
32.	" Madan Mohun Bose	10
3.	" Kanai Lai Khan	10
šű.	Mouly: Synd Akram Hossain	10
35.	Moulvi Aziz Ahmud	10
36.	Rai Kanyelal Dey Bahadoor	10
37.	H. Hatmwood, Esq	10
88.	Babu Hurry Mohan Chunder	10
19.	Baboo Chakkanlal Roy	5
10.	" Strodaprasad Ghose	5
Sı	abscriptions will be thankfully received	by Honorary Joint Secretaries,
	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI BAHADI	UR.
	4. British Indian Street, Calcutta
	and A. F. M. ABDUR RAHMAN, Esq.
	Barrister at Law,	•
	16 Taltolla, Calcutta.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WAICH. Rs. .

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nicker silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-Strong, accurate, pietty, snrii, open-taced, incke silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more tnan 28 hours withone winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo, Dickson of Haputal Rulway, from Ceylon says: -It keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamablee says:—I sold it for Rs. 26. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Depirtment says:—I he watch you sent me some seven years up is still keeping very good time. Jewelled Ring Ro. I-8-O. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. I-8-O. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. I-8-0 Mr. G. Smith, Silt tospector from Sankutta, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." K-y winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13 Pie. G. Huwkes of 2nd York Light Infairry from Purindhar says:—For the first one I gold Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28 x Pie. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid cold watch Rs. 24, a both with extras and offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentle-men's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch men's open Laceta, keyinsa eta biri sana guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real soud gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., ROMBAY

CATARRH Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these districtions are are and the sample and pera simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pumphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2%d stamp by A.
HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St.
TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American. "IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF." All who suffer and sure relies from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

*It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout

after years of semi-helplessness and sufferarter vears or semi-helplessness and suffering: while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITS LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy or these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE Are you subject to HEADACHES and the

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of FOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommend-

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself,

The Oriental Bahn is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of nome. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar pre-paration has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Batngate & Co. Limited.

REIS & RAYYET (PRINCE AND PEASANT,

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND niew of Politics. Literature, and Sa RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. Society If paid in advance,

Han-vearly	•••		,,	7
Quarterly	•••		٠,	4
Montaiv	•••		K+	1.8
Single or sample	Copy	•••	Ans.	0-8
If no	et paid in a	ivance.
Yearly	•	•••	Rs.	31
Half-yearly	•••	•••		10-8
Quarterly	• • • •			ó-0
Monthly	•••	•••		2-4
Single or sample				0-12
No adamonai	charge for	postage	or p	EOI.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the spacetaken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest carge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the is 8, 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the inwest charge for wince in 8a, 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and pooks and pamphets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

Reis Rayyet

PRINCE & PEASANT)
WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

REVIEW POLITICS LIFERNTURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 695.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE.

BY JAMES HUTCHINSON.

CANTO FIRST.

(Continued from g. 459.)

XVIII.

Oh ! how I longed, for morning's light, . To banish the dark clouds of night; I had small thought, if it might wake All nature, fresh delight to take, Bright'ning the mountain tops, and vales Bearing their fragrance, on its gales, Bidding the bird, on wanton wing, Its sweet, and cheerful carol sing, The flower unfold its bosom fair Such thought are of the heart year And had no place or home, in mine, I thought but of it, as a thing, That some relier, from doubt, might bring. It came at last ; I gazed around, But not a gleam of solace found; The stream told nothing, and the shore Left all uncertain, as before ,-I struggled on, and sought to cope,

With failing strength, and failing hope;

With faltering steps, my path pursued;
But still, in purpose, unsubdued.

XIX.

At last, the sun set ;-and with him, The ray, that cheered my heart, grew dun ; Just then, I reached a barren place, An almost herbless waste of sand, But strewed instead, with many a trace Of drift, and wrack, along the strand, And farther on, with murky glare, I saw the red flames beat the air, And high, their flickering columns throw, And figures moving, to and fro, Dark, and of more than common height, That seemed to aid, and feed their might-More near-a single tree there giew, Or blighted stood, that high in air, Its leafless branches threw, The raven, and the volume there, Sit perched, upon one bough ;

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how gevere or long-standing, wil he sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

The huge crane too; while down below, The jackal, and the wild deg wait * With watchful eye, and supplient gait.

XX.

Twas then, my spirit sank, and fell; Soon, as I saw that fatal fire, That twilight blaze, I knew it well, It was a Hindoo's funeral pyre ; But whose, I was afraid to ask; For so my heast foreboded was ; At last, I ventured, on the task, And heard, what most I feared to know. They said, the corpse the river bore, And cast it, on that lonely shore, And, that it wore the female form, Youthful, and lovely, even in death, Without a trace of pain or harm, maik, how it had ceased to breathe s And enors, that in its goutle band, It still held fast a flowery band; Such garland, of the Champuc's flowers, I gave, that night, in our last hours ; † Yet still I tried to hope retain, Vain hope! she came no more again!

XXI.

They said, that for some silly dream,
Or to fulfil some augury,
That they had sought the flooded stream,
And finding there, a corpse left dry,
Without a friend, or kindred tres,
They had performed its obsequies.
I gazed a moment, on the pile,
All I all I was o'er—the flame was low,
But still the quivering embers glow;
I thought me of the lone, green isle,
Then turned away, and wept.
As to the fountains of the eyes,
The heart's own tear drops seemed to rise,

^{*}The huge adjutant bird, (the argeela,) is here allinded to Sceneslike that described in the text, if not more horrible, are by no means uncommon; indeed, between Calcutta and the mouth of the Hooghly, they may be daily witnessed. Perhaps a dog and some vultures are disputing over some carciss, human or other, the crows keeping at a respectful distance, or displaying their activity, by swatching a hasty mouthful, while two or three adjutants, already gorged and sated, are perched aloft, on the topinost boughs of the tree adjutent. Some times, a copies is to be seen rapidly carried along by the stream, while a solitary vulture goes passenger, busily employed, in making a heavy meal, as he sails along.

[†] The Champuc is a sweet smelling flower, held in great estimation by the Hindoos. It is of a veilow color, and the tree, which bears it, grows to a large size, or at any rate to one larger, than that generally attained, by flowering shubs. These garlands the natives of India make by stringing the flowers of plants, generally of one particular plant, on a thread, in the same manner, as we make a necklace or rosary.

::.:

And still, out-pouring kept. Her ashes, all that now remained, Of her I loved, I gathered there, And mingled them, with spices rare, And with my tears that rained; Then gave them to the passing stream, And I alas I have mourned her weil, As many a lonely hour can tell, Since that, too fatal, dream.

XXII

Broken in heart, and worn with pain, I sought my former haunts again ; But with a hope, that time would prove A softener of the guef, I bore, Or, that it might perhaps remove. What it bath, since, but fixed the more. Cursed with a spirit, proud and shy, I had few friends, might vex or bless; I had enough, nor sought to try; If I might make them, more or less ; For my own mind, with dreams was rife, Of scenes, and forms, from mimic life, And sought companionship from none, But mused on times, and tales by gone; Still I could see, that of the few, I had, the number still less grew ; As if, there were some mystery, Some guilt or shame, they knew not what : Nor cared,-so they had cause for hate. Or sought to have, -which is the same ; I scorned them, nor would undeceive; What could the foolish men believe, That I would link my Lilloo's name, For their regards, with scorn or blame? 'Tis true, I panted to avenge Her cruel, and untimely fate, But I could trust to my revenge, That day should come, or soon or late .--Their follies I could laugh to scorn ; But vainly sought to find rehef, For my own heart, that mly torn, Bled, o'er its first, and deepest grief ; Each scene, I saw, recalled the past, And that, the one which was her last; Tho' foes might, well, have pitted me, From friends, I met but calumny; Heft the place, but mly swore, That I would visit it, once more, (To be continued.)

WEEKLYANA.

THE largest plant in London is the Victoria Regia water-lity at the Rotanical Gardens. It covers a surface of ago square feet and has ten gigantic leaves measuring over seven feet in diameter

THE half-a-dozen richest men in the world, according to the New York World, are Li Hang Chang. John D. Rockfeller. The Duke of Westminster. Col. North. Cornelius Vanderbilt. Woh Oua.

The last, like the first, is a Chinaman and is a tea merchant. Of the remaining four, two are Americans and two Englishmen.

THE Viceroy will arrive at Calcutta by R. I. M. S. Warren Hastings, about noon on Friday, the 13th of December. The arrival will be private, without any guard of honour. Only the Commissioner man, and all by the simple but mysterious application of electricity.

of Police and the Chairman of the Calcutta 'Corporation will receive him at Prinsep's Ghat. Of course a salute will be fired. A detachment of the GovernorGeneral's Bodyguard will escort Lord Elgin to Government House.

THE Levée will be held on Monday, the 16th December, at 9 30 P. M. Cards should be sent to the Aid-de-Camp in Waiting not later than Wednesday, the 4th December. A change is announced as regards new presentations. It has been recently ruled, though that rule is not strictly enforced, that, as in Drawing Rooms, presenters at Levées should themselves be present. The eligibility of new Durbaris is indeed enquired into, but the supervision has not always been thorough, it being usually left to the Police to pass or not a new comer. For want of time presenters could not always be informed of the fate of their nominees. Thus the unaccepted were left free to bow to the Viceroy though to be ignored in the published List. The new regulation is perhaps intended to absolutely exclude from Government House the ineligible, "Gentlemen who propose to present others must send in writing the names of such gentlemen to the Aid-de-Camp in Waiting, in order that they may be submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy for His Excellency's approval, when presentation cards will be forwarded." The restriction cannot but be salutary. We would also suggest an official publication of the Levée List after the ceremony.

The new rule is also made applicable to Drawing Rooms. The Viceroy and the Countess of Elgin will hold the next Drawing Room on the night of Thursday, the 19th December at the usual hour of 9-30. Cards must reach the Aid-de-Camp in waiting by Monday, the 9th of December.

Another regulation confirms what has grown to be a practice, "Clergymen being University graduates and other gentlemen entitled to wear robes or gowns on account of judicial or academical office or status should appear in such robes or gowns." The Judges of the Calcutta High Court used to appear in scarlet gowns. But they recently held that black would do as well. The Military Secretary's notification insists on no particular colour.

Wgdo not understand the emphasis laid on written names for new presentations. Does it exclude printed cards? These are certainly more convenient than written names.

THE Honourable Colonel John Pennycuick, Royal Engineers, Chie Engineer and Secretary to the Government of Madras, Public Works Department, and an Additional Member of the Council of the Governor of Madras for making Laws and Regulations, has been created out of season, a Companion of the most Exalted Order of the Star of India. It may therefore be taken as a double distinction. The occasion for the honour is the completion, of the Periyar irrigation works which were opened by Lord Wenlock last week.

THE old gradation of seniority in the Punjab Chief Court, where the senior Judge stood heir to the Chief, has been done away with. At its sitting, on the 17th instant, on the motion of the Extraordinary Member the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, the Supreme Legislative Council empowered the Governor-General to select the directing head.

THE same Council declared ex-King Theebaw incapable of making contracts. His past indebtedness will be enquired into by a Commission. He must make over to his creditors, what little he may still call his own, maintain himself by what the British Government will pay him and not run into debt.

DOI TORS Lawrie and Jordon of Hyderabad have found that Laveran's malaria crescent is nothing but altered white blood cells whose vitalmy is impaired or crippled by malarious fever. This, it is said, explains the action of the drug in reducing malarial spicen, also probably its action as a tonic. Is the discovery of any immediate practical use?

SINCF Monday, a New Zealander, a patented Professor from Australia and New Zealand, is electrifying Calcutta society. He professes to cure all ills the human flesh has imbibed since the creation of The range of his operations includes both man and woman, but no boys, little girls, babes at arms, and objectionable persons, whatever that may mean, for we find from an advertisement that these were not to be admitted to the lectures preparatory to the cures. There is no fixed charge for the treatment, but it depends upon the state of the patient or perhaps the length of his purse. The Professor "undertakes to cure, in any part of India, Ruleis, Princes, Princesses, Governors, who may be afflicted and given up as incurable." The Government of India may well utilize his stay in this continent to put to rights all afflicted Local Administrations and Native States. The spell of the Enchanted Chamber at Chowringhee has, however, been broken by A Clergyman in the nearest printing establishment,

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS.

THE WEEK'S FELETRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

-insularum

THE Times publishes a telegram from Constantinople stating that the Sultan accepts the reforms for Armenia as proposed by the Powers, but, to save the appearance of yielding to pressure, declines to promulgate them at once, Reuter's correspondent telegraphs that the Ambassadors of the Powers and Said Pasha, the Foreign Minister, on the 15th, agreed to a modification of the proposed reforms including the appointment of a Christian Commissioner, who will be charged to execute the same. The Sultan has issued an irade approving of them It is feared that this acceptance does not settle the question from the Armenian point of view, while at the same time it increases the discontent existing among the Mussalman liberals.

It is reported from Lebanon in Asiatic Turkey that excitement prevails there, and that fatal conflicts have taken place in that region between the Druses and Matuali Druses. The latter complain of Turkish injustice.

CHOLERA has broken out at Damietta, with eleven cases and three deaths up to date. The Egyptan Government has appointed a Cholera Committee similar to that which sat in 1883.

THE French captured Farafatta near Tamatave on the 10th instant, The Palace at Agtananariyo was struck by a shell during the fighting on the 30th ultimo. A French gattison has since been installed at Antanquarivo, and the Premier and several Malagasy officers are held as hostages for the disarmament of the country.

IN consequence of the British ultimatum to the Chinese Government, eighteen of the prisoners found guilty of the massacres at Kucheng have been executed, and the Commission has been empowered to try and execute the remainder

THE Pujis over, the country is preparing for the National Congress to be held at Poona.

THE celebration of the Dewall, in Calcutta, on Thursday night, was marked by the absence of the green only insects to destroy which the illumination seems to have been devised. How to account for it?

SIX Beharts have been arrested at Monghyr with implements for manufacturing Queen's coins. The musical Bengali who for the same offence was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by the Calcutta High Court, has been released from fail and is in society again.

A SUGGESTION has been made for introduction of female ticket collectors in changing stations on the E. I. Railway. The Oudh and Robilkhand Railway and the N.-W. Railway, both State lines, have such an establishment. Why, it is asked, the E. I. should be without it? We are, however, not told how the system has worked in the other Railways.

THE Hou'ble Mr. Alan Cadell, C. S. I, I. C. S., Acting Lientenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces and Chief-Commissioner of Oadh, Mr. John David Rees, C. I. E., F R G. S., M R A. S., I. C. S., and Mr. George Peter Glendinning, Minager for the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation, Limited, it Ringoon, and one of the Commissioners for that Port, have been Gizeited Additional Members of the Governor General's Council. The Hon'ble Su G H. P. Evans, K. C. I. E. Barrister-at-Law, Officiating Advocate General, Bengal, has also been renominated an Alditional Member. His repeated nomination, in uninterrupted succession through several vicerovalties, has, for that repetition, ceased to cause surprise. We believe Mr. Cadell does not join the Council till after he ceases to be Lieutenant-Governor.

ORDERS have been passed for mounting the Post. Office dome with a clock at a cost of Rs. 10,000. The question that is now being discussed is what find is to be it the charge—the Post Office or the Imperial? Mr. Sindell, Comptroller, Cilcuita Post Office, objects to the Postal accounts being saddled with the sum, as the clock will not add to the income of the Post O fi e, but be an ornament to the Capital. He may as well claim a payment for allowing the use of the dome for the particular purpose. A cleverer head is sure to shift the burden to the Municipality, for the clock will be an attraction of the city.

THE Pilgrim Ships Bill was passed on the 3rd of October, and received the assent of the Governor General the next day. The Act comes into force on such day as the Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gizette of India, appoint in this Lehaif. The Convention of which it is the outcome, not having been signed, the Government of India is in no harry now. It has taken power to do at any intoment whitever may be required of it. The opposition of the Indian Mussulmans has had such attention paid to it as was open to Government, and Prince Sir Jehan Kidr, on behalf of the Michomedan Literary Society of which he is President, and his community in general, accepted the Bill as finally settled. It had also the support of Monivi Abdul Jubbai who had just returned from Hij. The initial objection to the new law still remains—that it is an enabling Act and as such transfers the power of the legislature to make laws or regulations to the Executive Government.

THOSE of his co-religionists who would, in self-interest, make the Hap deed, must have looked small when, during the holidays, he arrived at Calcutta, with all times, who had accompanied him, safe, They would even now send him away from Calcutta by offer of service in the distant mofussil. Now that the Moulvi is free from the transmets of office and does not mean to take to service again, we hope he will publish his experiences of the prigrimage for the benefit of others

THE Bengal Government, from very honourable feeling, having decided not to further interfere with active gambling dens, because the European saloons can not be suppressed, the Calcutta Police have commenced a crustele against obscenity in print. During the holidays the name of a Mahomedan curer of all diseases, painted on walls of houses bordering on public thanauthfires, was scraped our There is now pending in the Northern Division Police Court a prosecution of an herb dist for fuscious description of his medicines

In this connection we may say that Verax's Social Evil has done much good in the Southern Division and is expected to do more

THE H n'ble D. R. Lyall is alternately spoken of as the nex. Superin tendent of the Cuch Behar State and a Mamber of the Governor General's Council.

THE Bipit Commission report his been disposed of thus --

THE Bipit Commission report his been disposed of this —

"The Commission appointed to inquire into the charges of certiption and extortion preferred against Mr Wisudeo Sadashive Bapat, assistant to the Survey and Settlement Commissioner have submitted their report and proceedings to His Highness' Government.

2. The Commissioners have inquired into twelve charges of corruption and extortion. They have found eleven out of the twelve charges proved and one not proved. They have also inferred systematic corruption on the part of Mr. W. S. Bapat.

3. On receipt of the report and record, His Highness desired the Chief Justice of the Varishta Court and the Nab Dewan, Judicial Branch, to study the papers submitted by the Commission together with the papers which were withheld from the Commissioners as confidential. On their submitting the result of their study of all the papers, His Highness in addition to his own independent study of the cases discussed the evidence with the two efficers and also with the Monister and a Judge of the Varishia Court.

4. Accepting in the inspirity of cases the unanimous advice of these four efficers and in the remaining cases, the advice of three out of the four; and taking these and other reasons into consideration. His Highness has come to the conclusion that Mr. Wasudeo Sadashiv Bapat be freed of the charges.

5. Looking, however, to all the circumstances connected with the affair, His Highness does not think it destable that Mr. Wasudev Bapat should be retained any longer in the service of the State. His Highness therefore orders that his services are dispensed with and that he be informed accordingly.

that he be informed accordingly

October,

(Sd.) Jaisingrao Angria,

Action Description 1895 Acting Dewan.

The result is not a surprise to the knowing. The enquiry was started when the Gaekwar and the Head of the Survey Department were absent from India. The accused was confident of what the end of the Commission's report would be. As a most loyal assistant, he was strong in the strength of his chief. The Gaekwar satisfies all parties by pronouncing the accused not guilty and sending him away. It is yet to be seen whether he is punished at all. The final proceedings suggest the query-Why was the Commission sanctioned and expenses incurred if the Commissioners were to report on Incomplete papers and imperfect evidence? Or is it that they went beyond their powers to be overruled? After all, there may be substantial justice in the order

THE following letter (dated Calculta Custom House, August 27) over the signature Francis H. Skrine, F. S. S., Officiating Collector of Sea Customs, appeared in the Times of September 17.

"The reimposition of the duties on cotton goods has evoked a storm of disapproval in the producing districts at home. The apposition is about to take a definite shipe, and will be directed by an organization with Pathamentary influence and all the devices known to agitators at its command. The defence is proverbidly weaker than the attack. In this controversy the disproportion is more marked than usually reason of the vast difference in the resources of the contending parties. To a solid phalaix inspired by self-interest, the most powerful motive known to human nature, and able to make itself heard both in Parhament and without, we can oppose only a disjointed body with few things in common, divided in counsels, and apporant of the machinery of political warfare. Here public opinion and representative institutions exist only in embryo; and, in spite of all that has been said felate as to the incleased speed and punctuality of communications with India, it is still a very distant country, and the echo of event is as a quantité nég igeoble.

Again and ag un have our interests been sacrificed to the exigencies of party warfare or the home exchequer. Those who are on the side or trint and pistice have found a powerful any in the Times. It is not the instruction of the wark against the storm additional back against the storm and have entered the attent as a discussion on which you, sit, have entered the attent as a "The reimposition of the duties on cotton goods has evoked a storm the first occasion on which you, sit, have entered the areina as a champion of the weak against the strong, and have carried the day in spite of trained on solds. But warfare demands munitions, and facts must be suppried enabling the profit to form a correct judgment on issues la fore it.

the issues before it.

Manchester, to give the word an extended sense, alleges that the cotton duties infinge a principle of free trade by operating as a protection to It dain producers. Free trade resembles liberty as apostrophized by Mine. Roland, for it has been made, an excuse for many of those blooders which are worse than crimes. In this case, however, the fetish does not come into play at all. Cobblen himself did not the fetish does not come into play it all. Cobden himself did not disapprove of the taxation of in outfittited goods, provided that is object were purely fiscal. That India stands in urgent need of money doubt; and it will be not very officult to prove that the duties on corton wares levied at Indian ports are not protective.

cotton wares levied at Indian ports are not protective.

Had the receives been the case, a permanent shimkage in the volume of exports from Manchester must have resulted from their operation. Such is the invertable consequence of a really protective tailff. Now, on examining the recent satisfies of exports of cotton goods from Manchester, what do we find? A temporary their following on the imposition of the duties succeeded by a recovery to something more than the normal volume. The first was inestable. It is never possible to discount the immediate effect on markets of any fiscal change, and importers invariably contract their operations in such cases until they are in a position to gauge their position and the probable future of the trade in which they are embarked.

The following statement compares the exports of plain and coloured cortons from Manchester to Calcutta during each of the years 1893 94 95. The last six ciphers, as well as fractions, have been consider. The most is, of course, the standard yard.—

	1893.		1894.		1895
Month	Plan	Coloured	Plain	Coloured	Plan	Coloured
Jan.	59	6	93	11	66	4
Feb.	47	6	100	15	49	2
March	04	6	95	13	62	3
Appl	++	4	81	14	54	2
Mıy	69	8	56	9	71	7
Jone	17	6	72	10	73	8
July	85	13	79	12	95	9
Average	63	. 7	82	12	67	5

So much for Calcutta, the port in which I am personally interested. Let us now glance at the exports from Manchester to the four principal ports of the empire. My figures are taken from the monthly circular of Messrs. Strobes, Straker, and Co., who are generally regarded by the trade as tustworthy guides. They appear to include exports down to the end of the first week in August; hence they do not exactly tally with those recorded by the statistical branch of my As in my previous statement, millions are omitted and yards In 1 to Aug. 7, 1895.

Port.	Average (or nve years.	Jan. I to	Aug. 7. 189
•	Pian	Coloured	Plain	Coloured
Calcutta	492	55	459	37
Bombay	234	83	218	58
Madras	45	16	64	19
Rangoon	18	9	25	9
Tota	ıl 789	163	766	123

Thus the temporary depression has been filled up, and Manchester has no reason to fear the effect of the cotton dunes. The fact that a revival of trade has set in is admitted in the last report received here of that very useful and energetic body the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. In the face of these stubborn facts who shall say that our export duties have the faintest flavour of protection?"

Mr. Skiine is a man of versatile talents, wonderful energy and strong sense of duty. He has laid the Bengah community under a deep debt of gratitude by his recent book. He is no less minoful of the interests of the Indian continent. In that letter to the Times he exposes the fallacy of the English agitation against the Indian cotton duties. It has, as it was bound to do, made much stir in Manchester. Even against the practice of the London press, other journals reproduced it, and it has been widely discussed. They admit that Mr. Skrine's figures are accurate, but urge that those for 1893 with which he compares those of 1895 were exceptionally low from exceptional causes-strikes at Oidham, &c. The main point of the letter, however, remains unchallengednamely, that the exports of cotton goods from Manchester, after a check in the beginning of the year, railied to more than normal, taken over a series of years, in June and July.

If his letter can stem the tide of opposition to the cotton duties, Mr. Skime will have done no small service to the Government of India. It is difficult to believe that a man with such a strong sense of duty and justice would be wanting in the ordinary discharge of official work. Yet, for no other offence than of sparing an old officer an indignity in his old age, Mr. Skrine is found fault with in the administration of the Department in his charge, by men who resent his activity in an arena where they are accustomed to lord it, who mistake his celerity, for imperiousness, who cannot forgive him his impatience of stupidity, and denounce him because he is the victim of displeasure of a questionable high quarter.

PANDIT Shamir Kushna Varma who only the other day succeeded the late Haridas Viharidas Dosai as Dewan of the Junagadh State has gone back to Oodeypore as member of the Mahendraj Sabha or State Council. The new Dewan is Sardar Behechardas Vibaridas Desai. We do not know him, but as younger brother of our much esteemed friend the late Dewan Harrons, we give him welcome.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, October 19, 1895.

SAKTI WORSHIP AND MISSIONARY PAMPHLETEERS.

THE present being the season of worship of the great Sakti goddesses, it may not be inappro-priate to give an account of the origin and nature of the Sakta cult, and to draw attention to the current erroneous notions on the subject. According to the popular view, Sakti worship is the name of the cult which attaches greater importance to the adoration of the consorts of Siva than to that of any other deity. The word Sakti literally means "energy" or "power," and, taking into consideration what is recorded in Tantric scriptures, it seems to be used in the sense in which the word "power" is used in English when a person is spoken of as a political or spiritual power. Some of the Babu exponents of modern Hinduism have been led to believe and preach that the soldiers and their commanders were led by their the Sakti of the Tantrics denotes the same thing as the Sakti of the Fanthes denotes the sakti of the Fanthes denotes the terms 'energy" and 'force' of modern science. Such misuse of scientific terms by men of religion has been common enough in India from remote antiquity. Its prevalence among the Hindu graduates of the Calcutta University is somewhat of a marvel.

In Bengal, Sakti worship is usually identified with that of the goddess Kali, who has not only many permanent shrines in this part of the country, but is worshipped temporarily also on certain red letter days of the Hindu calendar, especially on the night of the new moon of October. The form given her must be well-known to every one who has ever been in Bengal, but its meaning is not known to any except the learned in the Shastras, Dr. Murdoch, in his pamphlet entitled "Swami Vivekananda on Hinduism," describes the goddess thus:

"She is represented as a black woman, with four arms. In one "She is represented as a black woman, with four arms. In one hand she has a weapon, in another the head of the giant she has slain; with the two others she is encouraging her worshippers. For carrings she has two dead bodies; she wears a necklace of skulls; her only clothing is a girdle made of dead men's hands. After her victory over the giant, she danced so furiously that the earth trembled beneath her weight. At the request of the goods, Siva asked her to stop; but, as owing to the excitement, she did not notice him, he lay down among the slain. She continued dancing till she caught sight of her hasband under her feet; upon which, in Hindu tashion, she thrust out her tongue to express which, in Hindu fashion, she thrust out her tongue to express surprise and regret."

This is the popular explanation. The true meaning is very different. We certainly do not approve of the spirit in which Dr. Murdoch has commented on the doctrines and practices of the Hindu religion in this and other passages. If the image of Kali, for instance, represented nothing more than what he has described it, the tone of contempt pervading his remarks could well be regarded quite unjustifiable. As a matter of fact, the image has a far worse significance. Though it may sometimes be necessary to lay bare its imperfections, yet we must not be taken to admit that there is any religion which stands on a higher platform than our ancient faith. In our view, almost all the religious systems which men have been taught to follow, have the same character, the difference being only in the degree of development.

In its essential nature, Sakti-worship is the counterpart of Siva-worship. The latter is, probably, a more ancient cult than the former. This chronology is about them but also by a priori considerations. The researches of artiquarians have established that Saiva worship, disted in India before the commencement of the Christian era. But the history day. Above all, one beautiful feature of the of Sakti adoration cannot be carried back to a very early period. If Ananda Lahari be the work man and man in a loving and affectionate e of Sankaracharya, then Sakti-worship may have existed in some esoteric form during the early centuries of Christ. But its more overt forms, such as time after that day, will bow, the junior Doorga, Kali and Jagatdhatri, are more or less of senior, and embrace each other in a spliit recent growth. The Doorga Paja, which is the and love. The Vijaya pronam or salutation c priests to celebrate the worship, on a grand scale, of the goddess of forts. If this view be correct, then the worship must have commenced at a time when the country was ruled by Hindu kings. If, again, it had its origin in the town of Nadia, then it cannot be of an earlier date than the ninth century of the Christian era, as that was the earliest period when the great seat of Sanskrit learning in Bengal was also its metropolis.

The suggestion that Nadia was the birthplace of the greatest Hindu festival of Bangal, is supported by various facts and circumstances. To begin with: the most important materials for the Puja are obtainable more readily in Nadia and its neighbourhood than in any other part of India. Then, again, the Puja is celebrated with the greatest eclat in and around Nadia, and is hardly known even by name in the frontier districts of the province. view stated above is, to some extent, established by the tradition, preserved in a doggerel, according to which the Rajas of Dinajpore were the first in wealth, and while the House of Nator owed its pre-eminence to its public works, and that of Burdwan to gifts of rent-free lands, the Nadia Rajas surpassed them all in the magnificence of their Doorga Puja. Though these observations apply to the state of things existing in the last century, yet it does not seem unreasonable to regard them as warranting the supposition that, in celebrating the Doorga Puja with unusual pomp, the ancestors of the present Raja of Nadia followed only the tradition which they inherited from their predecessors. Lastly, the fact that Raghunandan of Nadia was the first of the human authors, who have written about the ritual of the Doorga Puja, goes also a great way to establish that the inspired writers on the subject, who originated the worship, were also of the same place. The Pauranic myth about the worship of Doorga is that Rama, finding it extremely difficult to conquer Ravana, the demon King of Lanka, invoked Doorga unseasonably, that is in autumn, although the usual time for worshipping that deity is the spring. To this day, in Bengal and several other parts of India, Doorga is worshapped in a few families in the spring season. But the practice is more general of worshipping her in autumn. It is said that after the conclusion of the worship, that is on the fourth day, Rima slew borne out not only by the historical data obtainable the great enemy of gods and men. Hence that day Vijaya is a highly auspicious day with the Landus Great undertakings are generally commenced that day. Above all, one beautiful feature of the vijava is the burial of all animosuties of the year Tace. Relatives meeting relatives, friends meeting inds. acquaintances meeting acquaintances, for ti seace most ancient of the three, had, in all probability, ence, and the Vijaya ashirbad or blessing. Is in the its origin in the town of Nadia, when it was the most attractive feature of the Doorga Pooj . That metropolis of Bengal. The name of the deity, the name of the last day of the Puja, and the general and should have gradually superse of the ritual prescribed for its celebration strongly spring worship, seems to point to the fact of some support the inference that she was worshipped by bold innovator having set the practice as an comple the Hindu kings and their military officers as the presiding goddess of forts. In the rainy season, all military operations necessarily came to a stand-to a date within the memory of living mea, canceAs to Kali worship in the form which prevails in Bengal, a tradition ascribes it to Krishnanand Agam Bagish of Nadia, who lived in the fifteenth century of the Christian era. The Jagadhatri is well known to have been introduced by the Nadia Rajas of the last century.

Quite irrespective of historical data, it may be readily conceded that the adoration of the female principle is a more recent invention than Saiva To the mendicants and priests who introduced both, nothing could be more agreeable and politic than to maintain an attitude of passiveness and indifference, and to lead their fair votaries to seek for them. But experience evidently showed them that, in spite of the constant utterance of the formula, Sivoham, by which they claimed to be the god Siva incarnate, it was not possible to make their followers worship them as such, or adore anything beyond only a stone or clay emblem. The Sivite cult imposes a policy of masterly inactivity. Sakti-worship allows more aggressive proceedings and has, therefore, in many parts of India, superseded Saivism more or less. Sakti-worship is not of a more refined character than Saivism, and so both are being thrown into the shade by the cleverer device of Radha-worship, which proves far more effective by appealing to the imitative spirit of its votaries.

The adoration of Sakti, in its primary form, being, from its very nature, too much for the unsophisticated, is very rare in practice, though not quite unknown. The most prevailing forms are the adoration of the yantra, and of the clay or stone image of a woman in dishabille mounted on an image of Siva equally draped. The first is a triangular plate of copper or brass forming part of every Sakta Brahman's penates. In absence of the plate, the Sakta worshipper would offer his daily adoration to a triangle painted on a salver. The worship of the plate and the painted triangle is, of course, esoteric. By the great mass of the uninitiated, Saktl is worshipped in the form of a clay or stone image of Kali mounted on Siva, both being "sky-clad" to use the usual Sauskrit mode of expression. According to the scriptures of the sect, the best form of adoration is to make the offerings to a breathing statue. The next approved object of Tantric worship is the emblematic geometrical figure. The worship of in-animate images and paintings is the least meritorious of all.

In the image of Kali usually seen in Bengal, the goddess is placed in a standing posture on the breast of her lord. That, however, is not the proper attitude of the detty to which the Sakta is required to bow down. It is the nearest approach to the Shastric pose which the devout, always better than his religion, can exhibit before the public. Those acquainted with the Dhyana or the descriptive hymn that the worshipper utters either mentally or aloud, know what the characteristics of the image are as laid down in the scriptures. It is said that Agam Bagish himself invented the image that we see.

THE ORIGIN OF THE QUARTERLY REVIEW

A VERY good hand-book of the history of English Inerature is Mi. Fromas B. Sriw's, edited with notes and illustrations by Dr. William Smith, and published by John Murray. The book has passed through many editions. That of 1889 was the seventeenth. A mass of valuable information has been circfully compressed within a biref space. The volume is deservedly popular. The criticisms are for the most part sound and agree with the accepted verdicts of literary.

men of reputation. Here and these the author speaks in the first person singular. On such occasions he always makes some instructive observation that visibly adds to our stock of knowledge. For even grown up men it is impossible to read the remarks on the great productions of English genius in different departments of interature without feeling the desire of renewing their acquaintance. In the case of young students, those observations are sure to whet their curiosity and lead them to take up the original works for study and examination. The Calcutta University has acted wisely by including this excellent volume in the curriculum of the higher examinations.

Carefully edited though the work has been by Dr. Smith, who, perhaps, has worked more earnestly than others for the students of schools and colleges in both England and the colonies, some assertions have found a place in it that do not exactly accord with facts. One such is to be met with in p. 527. Referring to the establishment of the Quarterly Review, it is said, "The influence which the Edinburgh Review soon acquired was exercised in favour of political principles opposed to those of the existing administration; and its authority in matters of literature and taste became almost paramount. Under those circum stances the late Mr. Murray, after consulting Mr. Canning and other distinguished politicians and men of letters, determined in 1809 to start a new review to counteract the danger of those liberal opinions which seemed to be menacing the very integrity of the constitution This new periodical, which was called The Quarterly Review, was warmly welcomed by the friends of the Government, and immediately obtained a literary reputation at least equal to that of the Edinburgh." As a matter of fact, it was not in 1809 but in 1807 that John Murray first thought of bringing out a periodical in the Tory interest. On the 25th of September 1807, Murray addressed a letter to Canning. That epistle was first published in the Autobiography of Barrow who was one of the most active contributors to the Quarterly during the first few years of its life. Here is the document in full.

"Sir,—I venture to address you upon a subject that is, perhaps, not undescriving of one moment of your attention.

"There is a work entitled the Eninburgh Review written with such unquestionable talent that it has already attained an extent of circulation not equalled by any similar publication. The principles of this work are, however, so radically bad, that I have been led to consider the effect which such sentiments, so generally diffused, are likely to produce, and to think that some means equally popular ought to be adopted to counteract their dangerous tendency. But the publication in question is conducted with so much ability, and is sanctioned and circulated with such high and decisive authority by the party of whose opinions it is the organ, that there is little hope of producing against at any effectual opposition, unless it arise from you, Sir, and from your friends. Should you, Sir, think the idea worthy of encouragement, I should, with equal pride and willingness, engage my arduous exertion to promote its success, but as my object is nothing short of producing a work of the greatest talent and importance, I shall entertain it no longer, if it be not so fortunate as to obtain the high patronage which I have thus, Sir, taken the liberty to solicit.

"Permit me to aud, Sir, that the person who thus addresses you is no adventurer, but a man of some property, including a business that has been established for nearly half a century. I, therefore, trust that my application will be attributed to its proper motives, and that your goodness will at least pardon its intrusion.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, &c., &c., ac., "John Murray."

Canning, it is said, read the letter, and laid it aside, without honousing it with a reply. Two months before the date of Murray's letter, Scott and Southey had been corresponding about the Edinburgh Review, Southey saying that he felt hinself insable to keep up his connection with a periodical of such political views, and Scott heartily agreeing in condemning the general tone of the Review in both politics and literature. Early in 1808, a very severe article came out in the Edinburgh Review on Marmion which had been recently published. Constable was owner of three-fourths of the copyright of the new poem, yet that fact had no weight with Jeffrey in reviewing it fiely and severely. Indeed, the perfect freedom with which every subject was handled and the utter independence of the trade which the Edinburgh displayed on all occasions, were the causes of its remarkable and immediate success. As regards Jeffrey himself, his sensibilities not having been at all delicate, he did not think that he had done anything at which Scott could be offended. He even sent talent in literature and in art that London then possessed. There it the article to Scott with a note stating that he would come to dinner l on the day he name i. Sport, though wounded, concealed it. Mrs. Scott, however, was very cold in her manner, and as Jeffrey was taking leave, she broke forth, numble to restrain her pique, in her broken English,-" Well, guid nign, Mr. Jeffery; dey tell me you have abused Scott in the Review; and I hope Mr. Constable has paid you well for writing it" Marray, on reading the atticles felt that Scott could not continue his connection any longer with a periodical that treated him so harshly and, as he thought, so unfairly. An active correspondence was the result between Murray, Scott, and Southey. The arrangements were made silently but earnestly. Gifford, the biting satirist of the Baviad and Maviad and brilliant editor of the Anti Jacobin, was selected for editing the Quarterly Review as the new magazine was called. It was believed that he would ourreal Jeffrey. It was on the 1st of February, 1809, that the first number came out. To the second number Canning contributed. As the Edinburgh had been taken as the model, especially in the liberal payment of all contributors, Canning had to accept the payment of ten guineas per sheet for his article. It should be known, however, that in the preliminary arrangements that led to the establishment of the Quarterly, Canning had played a very inferior part. In fact, long after the receipt of Mr. Murray's letter, all that he did was to write to a personal friend of his, and that at a time when the rebellion against the Edinburgh and Jeffrey had already drawn to a head. The conspirators had formed their plan, without the slightest reference to Canning.

The following extract regarding the success of the first number of the Quarterly may not be uninteresting, "According to tradition there were high jinks at Murray's shop in Fleet Street when the first comes arrived from the binders; a timmobal column of the books 'was raised aloft in solemn joy in the counting-house, the best wine in the cellar was uncorked, and glasses in hand John Murray and assistants danced jubilant round the pile. The pile, however, did not long remain, as so many famous columns have done to mock the hope of their builders, but the whole issue was sold almost immediately, and a second edition was called for."

It should be remembered that it was leffrey who first raised the connection of literary men with periodicals and newspapers to one of dignity and emolument by insisting on a liberal payment to every contributor. No contribution was admitted that was not paid for. Constable, who for his liberality to authors, had earned the title of "Czar of Muscovy," never interfered with Jeffrey in the conduct of the Edinburgh and always accepted his recommendation about the honorariums to be paid to contributors. It was by following this rule of liberal payment that the Quarterly succeeded in riv I ing the blue and yellow. The following extract gives the internal history of the Quarterly: "Barrow was introduced (to Gifford) and contributed, in all, no less than one hundred and ninety-five articles 'on every subject, from China to Life Assurance' After Birrow and Croker, Southey was, perhaps, the most prolific; to the first hundred and twenty-six numbers he contributed ninety-four articles-many of them of great permanent value-and to him Murray uniformly exhibited a generosity almost without parallel, For an article on the 'Lives of Nelson,' he received twenty gumeas a sneet, double what Southey himself acknowledged to be ample, and h- was offered £100 to enlarge the article into a volume, and having exceeded the estimated quantity of print, Murray paid him double the amount stipulated, adding another 200 guineas when the book was rea sed for the 'Family Library.' For the review of the 'Life of Wellington, Southey got £100, and he thought the sum so large that he himself calls it 'a rid culons price ;' yet this ridiculous price he continued to receive, and he was in the habit of saying that he was as much overpaid for his articles by Murray as he was underpaid for the rest of his works for other publishers. 'Madoc, of which he had great hopes, brought him £3 19x. td. for the first twelvemonth, and the three volumes of his 'History of the Brazily' scarcely paid their expenses of publication."

The Owarterly gave Murray at once a pre-emmence in the London trade, by bringing him into contact with the chief Conservative statesmen, and with the principal literaty men in England Like Constable, his generosity was rewarded by the title of " Emperor of the West." He soon removed from Fleet to Albemarle Street. His drawing-room, at four o'clock, became the favourite resort of all the

was his custom to assemble together such men as Byron, Scott, Moore, Cimpbell, Southey, Gifford, Hallam, Lickhart, Washington Irving, and Mis. Somerville. He invited such artists as Laurence, Wilkie, Phillips, Newton, and Pickersgill, to meet those literary hons and to paint them that they might hang on his walls. The dinners of Murray were highly spoken of. They rivalled those of kings. Byron makes Murray say, in his mock epistle to Dr. Palidon-

The room s so full of wits and hards, Crabbes, Campbells, Crokers, Freres, and Wirds, And others, neither bards nor wits, My humble tenement admits All persons in the dress of gent, From Mr. Hammond to Dog Dent. A party dines with me to-day, All clever men who make their way : Crabbe, Malcolm, Hamilton, and Chantrey, Are all partakers of my pantry.

My room's full-we've Gifford here, Reading M S with Hookham Frere : Pronouncing on the nouns and particles Of some of our forthcoming articles

Murray had business talents of a high order. In this he excelled his great rival of the North, for Constable never liked to look at a balance sheet. Accordingly, when the great crash of 1826 came, which swept away both Constable and Scott, John Murray was comparatively unaffected. The only unsuccessful venture in which Murray had engaged was the Representative Seeing that the Quarterly had succeeded as a Tory organ, it was resolved to start a high class Tory daily. Though well informed and well-written. it gave up the struggle after a brief existen e of six months. The Times proved the victor. When any young speculator, after this, proposed to Murray to start a daily paper, he used to point to a ledger on his book-shelves and say grimly, " Twenty thousand pounds he buried there."

Although the Quarterly succeeded in realising the expectations of its founders, yet even in its palmiest days it was but a party organ. Even its literary criticisms were coloured by party considerations. It was professedly an antidote to the poison of the Edinburgh. That poison, however, without being neutralised by the antidote, proved to be of immense service in curing the nation of many grave maladies. We shall close our reference to the two great periodicals by an extract from Sydney Smith. The picture, though coming from the pen of one of the original projectors of the Edinburgh, is not at all overdrawn. Writing in 1839, he said:—

"To appreciate the value of the Edinburgh Review, the state of England at the period when that journal began should be had in remembrance. The Catholics were not emancipated—the Corporation and Test Acts were unrepealed—the Game Liws were horribly oppressive—Steel Trops and Spring Gins were set all over the country—Prisoners tried for their Lives could have no Counsel—Lord Eldon and the Court of Chancery pressed heavily on mankind—Libel was punished by the most cruel and vindicative improvingents—the principles of Political Economy were little understood—the laws of Debt and Con pracy were upon the worst possible footing—the enormous wickedness of the Stave Frade was tolerated—a thousand evils were in existence, which the talents of good and able men hive since lessend or removed; and these effects have been not a little assisted by the honest boldness of the Edinburgh Review."

"AN INDIAN JOURNALIST*."

(From the Bombay Gazette, September 28, 1895.)

would not have been necessary to pen the series of articles which appeared in our columns some time lick on the Native Press, if instead of being conducted, as is too often the case, by ill-qualified men, disappointed at their inability to obtain Government employment, it was carried on by men like the late editor of Rets and Rayyet, Dr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee. The life, letters and correspondence of this cultured and broad-minded man have now been published under the title of "An Indian Journalist," by ^{*} An Indian Journalist: Being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee, late Editor of Reis and Rayyet, Calcutta. By F. H. Skrine, I. C. S. Calcutta: Thacker, Spink & Co. 1895.

Somk and Co). Dr. Mookerjee was well worthy of the dis-tinction accorded, so far as we know, to no other Native journalist in India, of having an English Civilian for his biographer, but the honour is well in keeping with the life of its subject, who for many years enjoyed the personal friendship of distinguished civilians, of Provincial Governors, and of successive Viceroys. Mr. Skine has performed his self-imposed task in no patronising manner, but in the spirit of one who while delighting to do honour subject of the biography was not free from (aults, and Mi. Skrine does not attempt to make him App ar otherwise. We are glad to note that in dedicating the boot so. author raises his voice against the "persistent viruperation" heaped upon the race from which Di Mookerjee sprang. Some years ago Sir F Monat, one Inspector-General of Jails, told the London Statistical Society that he considered that in the matter of truth and honesty the Bengalis were neither better nor worse than many nations boasting of a higher civilization or a purei-laith; and that they "in no degree mutted the wholesale condemnation with which they were generally visited by those who write and talked much but really knew very little of them." Mr. Skiine is evidently of the same opinion and puts these detractors of the Bengelis into two classes, those who know no thing of them and have been dazzled by "the brilliant sophistries of Macauliv"; and those who judge the race by the "cringing sycophants who dance attendance in high officials' ante-rooms or belong to temples who during a century of intercourse with us in the circul have lost some of their native virtues without acquiring out." For more closely Englishmen are brought min acquiritance with the Bengili language and character the less likely they are to fill into these errors. But on this side of India people form their estimate of the inhabitants of the Lower Provinces not so much ton Ma aulay's bulliant sophistries as from what they have and read respecting the vernacular prints of Bengal, which, how yer, repres at the views of writers bent on doing their little b at to throw mud on the British administration rather than the true public opinion of Bengal. The basis of the estimate is therefore a wrong one, and it should not be forgotten that there are papers and papers and that as much difference exists between some of the tabil Calcutta prints, and the paper which Dr. Mookerjee founded as between darkness and light. Reis and Rayyet has always been remarkable for the mingled whilty, candour and churitableness of its criticisms, and the periodical has enjoyed a degree of influence approached by no periodical has enjoyed a logical managed by in-other native weekly. The paper was so well managed by its founder as to attract general notice and bring him into confidential t Lecions with the makers of history. In the words of his biographer, "it sobered his judgment, and deepened his sense of responsibility"—two qualifictions which the native journalists whom Dr. Mookerjee has left behind, should cultivate as being essential to those who, exercising a formative influence over their fellows, desire to use their influence aright.

Phere was in the mind of Di. Mookerjee a constant struggle between the liberal impulses born of his learning and his wide knowledge of literature on the one hand, and his inherited prejudices on the other. It is characteristic of the largeness of his heart that in this struggle it was the restrictions which hampered his usefulness to his fellows that succumbed, than those which went against his own personal empyments. True to his Bia'um in descent he abstained for the greater part of his life from animal food and even from fish, and deterence to the persistent entreaties it his friends that in the closing years of his career he adopted the more stimulating his medical advisers considered necessary. His belief in the brotherhool of man and his desire to lighten the burdens of others showed themselves in innumerable directions. In his morning wilks he would often stop and onverse with the Municipal sweepers, and would question them respecting their caste and social customs. In the same way he would when relieving "losfers" enter into earnist conversation with them. It is related that on one occasion he kept a great waiting for supper for some time, while talking to a palki-better. He deemed the comfort of his servants of greater importance than his own; and when they had retired to rest be would never allow them to be disturbed on any pretext. He would spend his time, brains and money in the interests of his friends without stint, and indeed found it impossible not to make a liberal response to the calls of friendship or of distress. From this cause he was prevented from making anything like the provision for his family which as Mr. Skrine remarks " is every day effected by men without a tithe of his mental gifts, but also without a tithe of his milk of human kind-Rank was repeatedly pressed upon him, but his sturdy independence led him to refuse it; and his high-minded contempt of mere sordid gain caused him to neglect his many opportunities for acquiring wealth. He was no mere sycophant, and his friendship with men filling the exalted places of the land was due to no self seeking endeavours to thrust himself upon them but to

Mr. F. H. Skrine, of the Indian Civil Service (Calcutta: Thacker, Sonk and Co). Dr. Mookerjee was well worthy of the distinction accorded, so far as we know, to no other Native journalist with voice and pen of inversements, having for their object the present India, of having an English Civilian for his biographer, but the honour is well in keeping with the life of its subject, who for carried the personal friendship of distinguished evillans, of Provincial Governors, and of successive Viceroys. Mr. Skrine has performed his self-imposed task in no patronising into the proposed task in no patronising into the proposed task in no patronising into the following proposed task in no patronising into the following proposed task in no patronising into did not lead him to encourage in the slightest degree the faitteeth chories of the Cow Protection societies. Neither civilians, of Provincial Governors, and of successive Viceroys. Mr. Skrine has performed his self-imposed task in no patronising into the long pour divisions and knew foll well that the advancement of his fellowing to do known to a great and good man does not hide his foibles. The subject of the biography was not tree from faults, and Mr. Skrine does not attempt to make him appear or therefore sprang. Some verse of justice. He was naturally of warm and impulsive temperament, and when he heard a tale of wrong, he would, as author raises his voice against the "persistent vituperation" heaped on men and measures which talm reflection showed him to be in ownsy deserving of censure."

The greater part of this most interesting biography of one whom India could ill-afford to lose, is occupied with extracts from the correspondence which Dr. Mookerjee had with all soits and tions of men. These letters have been placed at Mr. Skrine's disposal by the triends of the deceased journalist, and he has made a most judicious selection of them. He has exercised a wise restraint in the case of the letters of the Marquis of Dufferin, Sir Auckland Colvin, and Sir Charles Elliott for, to use his own words, the time has not yet come when opinions expressed by these administrators in unguarded intercourse should be given to the world. A few letters from living administrators which there is no reason to hold back are, however, given including one Lord Dufferin wrote to Dr. Mookerjee, from the Embasso at Rome in 1890, in which he says: "that Lord Lansdowne should like and appreciate you was certain, and I am sure that your admination for him will increase as you become better acquainted with him." Lord Lansdowne was the last Viceroy whose friendship the Cilcutta journalist was destined to enjoy, for Lord Elgin had only assumed office a few days when Dr. Mookerjee succumbed to the asthmatic troubles to which he had long been a victim, and in consequence of which he had years before joined the great army of opiumtakers. Sir John Ardagh wrote a letter of condolence on behalf of the new Viceroy, which stated that his Excellency had heard with much regret of the death of one whose reputation as an able and independent writer was well known to him and as an able and independent were to a solution of the whose acquaintance he was looking forward to making. Among the many interesting remnistences with which the volumthe many interesting reminiscences with which the volum-abounds, may be mentioned an incident which illustrates the 400utus, may be mentioned an increase a many market in tendency shown by Sir Richard Temple, then Leutenant Governor of Bengil, throughout his whole career in India to allow no matter of public interest to escape his notice, and it need be his interposition. Dr. Mookeijee, who was a man of wide cosmopolitan sympathics, joined with the late Nawao Abdool Luteet in organizing a public meeting for the purpose of congratulating the Turks on their successes at Plevna, in the congratulating the Turks on their successes at Pleyna, in the early stages of the Russo-Turkish war. Regarding the demon stration as being likely to offend Muscovite susceptibilities. Sit Richard Temple interdicted it. The aggreived Mahomi aus sought the aid of Dr. Mooketjee and he advised an aip al in higher quarters. Accordingly an appeal was made with success; the mixting was held; and we suppose no one was a penaly the worse for it. Dt. Mooketjee may be placed with the still laminited Justice. Felang in the category of those mixtys and of this country who are connecting links between rulers and ruled, and who by their labours, as well as by their promal example and influence, do immense service in welding together the diverse communities of the land in the bonds of 1.1 crial brotherhood and loyalty.

(From the Pioneer, October 5, 1895.)

For much of the biographical matter that issues so freely from the press an apology is needed. Had no biography of Dr. Mookerjee, the Editor of Reis and Rayyes, appeared, an explosion would have been looked for. A man of his remarkable periodity, who was easily first among native Indian journalists, and a many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at public affairs from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivion without some attempt to peroctuate his memory by the usual expedient of a "life." The difficulties common to all biographers have in this case been increased by DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! As we may be inferring from Detifiess, Noises on the Head, &c., may learn of a wear simple treatment, which is proving very successful in complicate of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsured and newspaper press notices, will be sent pass from a location, in the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Bustoness Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mookerjee remained to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans---a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal biographer would have approvan. In consequence of this in a first original to been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathics and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written his life. On another ground one feels, after reading the volume, not dissatisfied but unsatisfied. Written so soon after the events with which it deals, the life and letters necessarily indieate the suppression of matter that would probably have been more interesting than any that has been published. Mr. Skiine has exercised a judicious reserve, the necessity for which he may regret as much as his readers, and the result is very obvious incompleteness. Unfortunately, the desire to know more is likely to remain ungratified, for interest in the circumstances will have passed away before publication becomes no longer indiscrete. Of all men the editor of a newspaper is and should be least before the public in his own person, and long after his death the scal of the editorial confessional must remain unbroken.

Of the execution of the task by Mr. Skrine it is impossible not to speak favourably in view of the difficulties he had to face. He has made the most of the materials placed at his disposal, and we cannot grumble at the restraint he has exercised. The perfect biographer is a man of the stamp of Boswil, who sinks his own personality, who has no views himself and no desire to display his learning and the extent of his reading. Mr. Skrine's is a personality not easily suppressed, nor, except for artistic reasons, would anyone wish it. It is impossible in reading the Life and Letters not to think of the writer as well as of the subject, to look in on him in his study and watch his methods of composition.
We imagine, for tustance, a carefully indexed commonplace book, which supplies on every other page quotations from "a Latin poet," the greatest of French novelists, Honoré de Balzac," "the anonymous editor of the letters of Busyy-Rabutin (Amsterdam 1738)," "an Irish member of Parliament of the last centure" (who, an irrelevant note informs us, was "Richard Lovell Edgeworth of Edgeworths-town, father of the well-known novelist Attention is, in fact, distracted from the view by the officiousness of the guide. But it this is a flaw in the biographer's art, it furnishes incidentally some information on diverse subjects, some really interesting quotations, and makes us familiar with the writer's mental furniture and opinions. His reflections on the journalistic career, for instance, will awake a comfortable f-eling of self-pity in breast of every obscure newspaper-man :---

"The man of genius who, for his sins, embraces the calling of journalist is debatted from gratifying the 'list infirmity of noble minds.' His works are written on sand. They deal with ephemeral topics; and they are clean forgotten before the broadsheets which give them to the world are dry. The English custom of anonymity is to blame for this absence of a powerful educer of all that is best in a min; and there are many who think that this drawback outwrighs its admitted advantages. A wouth who adopts this ungrateful profession must accept the invitable, and will be firtunate if, by the time he is a grey-headed drulge, his lame is known to the brethren of the quill and midnight oil. The great actor has a more enviable lot. His triumphs are equilly evanescent; but then he is sustained by the magnetism of applaines, sourred to excel himself by the cympathy of his au lience; while the traditions of his feats long survive him. Mool tipe was essentially, a journalist; and the fact places his biographer at some disadvantage. For the gentle realer—like Napoleon when the name of a candidate for employ was submitted to him—asks 'What has he done?"

Mr. Skrine's views on early marriage are his own, and are at last evidence of independent julgment. Dr. Mookerjee, it should be remarked, in explanation, was born in 1839 and was thus eighteen years of age at the time of his marriage. The event

"At a time when old England was ringing with stories of military and naval disasters Dr. Johnson remarked that public woes ettered no man from eating his dinner as usual. People marry, and are given in marriage while their country's destinies are trem biling in the balance; and Dr. Mookerjee gave hostages to fortune during the throes of the last great struggle for Empire, in 1857. His wife was a scop of the Bural Lamly of Jorasanko. This event was far from having the sinister influence on his mental development which is assigned to early marriages by self-atyled friends of Indig. They are stigmatised as the root of the decay which is consuming the country's manhood. That the children of the upper middle classes in many parts of Bengal are mere human weeds is but too evident: but the cause of deterioration must be sought for in adverse physical conditions rather than in a custom which is hallowed by the acquiescence of a hundred generations Doctrinare-reformers forget that human nature is more powerful than convention, and that the sexual instinct is far stronger and is manifested at an earlier stage of life in the tropus than in temperate regions. The institution of marriage regulates this overwhelming impulse, just as law does the equally power ful craving for revenge. Hence marriages in early life are good in themselves and a cause of good to society: and would be reformers should ponder well the lessons afforded by countless ruined careers the outcome of an undue postponement of the nuptail rites."

The lingraphy is warmly appreciative without being needless's landatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man, and in the book there is not a dull page. Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee essaved many parts, but was above all things, and almost in spite of himself, a journalist. As a boy at college he started a short-lived magazine; he was only a youth when he was appointed Editor of a daily paper in Calcutta; when he was not on the regular staff of a paper, the tich for writing made him a frequent contributor to the press. But he did not for a time realise that journalism was the profession for which he was best fitted. He was at different times Political Adviser, Nawah and Secretary to several native Ptinees, positions for which his virtues disqualified him as much as his abilities recommended him; he acted as Secretary to the Outh Taluqdars' Association, and twice he made attempts to join the legal profession, but in spite of a natural hent in the direction of the law, he failed for one reason or another to follow up his intention to the extent of qualifying himself for practice. It was a seditor of Ren and Rayyet that he chiefly distinguished himself and exercised his greatest influence. The bulk of the letters reproduced at the end of his biography belong to this period, beginning in 1882 and ending with his death in 1894. During that time he carried on correspondence with Sir Auckland Colvin, Lord Dufferin, and other men of influence, only a few passages of which, tor obvious reasons, have been published. One of these letters-from Sir Auckland Colvin—has so much personal interest that it was worth giving in full. It is dated Government House, Nami Tal, May 27th, 1802, and runs thus:—

Tal, May 27th, 1892, and runs thus:--"My dear Dr. Mookerjee,--- write to thank you for your tele gram and, although, as I see you think and as I feel, there is but little to congratulate me on, I appreciate the kindness of your message and admire its epigrammatic form.

The fact is, that after nine years as Councillor and Lieutenaut-Governor I do not feel particularly grateful for a decoration which is ordinarily given when a man is appointed (not when he ceases to be) a Lieutenaut-Governor.

My reward I look for in the results of my work a the reorganisa-

My reward I look for in the results of my work - the reorganisation of the Onth and Jhani administration; the riform of the Police; the water supply of our five great manicipalities; the success against scarcity in Kumaon and Guthwal in 1890, and again this year; the introduction of technical education, of a measure for Village Munsiffs? Court and Honorary Munsiffs; the great impetus given to vaccination in manicipalities and in the intal tracts; the commencement made in village samilation; the great and genuine extension of Femile Hospirals, the obtaining from India of the two important lines of rail from (1) Lucknow to Benares wa Rai Bareilly, and (n) from Bareilly va Rampur to Moradabad; the unravelling of the Rimpur plot; the action taken in regard to criminal tribes and reformatories; Hume finally buffetted and Wheeler condemned --these things are more satisfaction to me than the stars in many firmain its.

I was glad to see Mr. Evans knighted,

Well! all these are vanities. What is important to us all is health and sufficiency of means. I tent you lack the first, though 'Reis and Reyvet' alike contribute to the second. I take both into my retirement, and hope to avil invell of them in some form of literary work. I was born (like you) to write; and by cursed spire only went astray into practical a liministration."

A few of the letters aldr's of to Dr. Mookerjee are of such minor importance that they might have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spired.

A few of the letters Aldres of to Dr. Mookerjer are of such minor importance that they month have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. To say that he writes idomitte English is to say what is short of the truth. His diction is easy to I correct, clear and straightforwird, without Oliental luxuritates or striving after effect. Perhaps he was never so charming as when he is laying down tho laws of literary form to young aspirants to fame. The letter on page 235, for instance, is a delightful piece of criticism; it is deligated place in speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry without, one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his ardour.

repressing his ardour.

The letter from Professor Vambérv is also remarkable for its plain-sneaking. Dr. Mookerjee had written referring to the Mahomedan and Hindu communities, "My ideal is to form a nation by a harmonious social fution of the two component parts of the population under the British Crown," a statement of his views that might have led anyon: una quainted with his common-onse methods to imagine him more of a visionary than he was. Professor Vambery certainly addressed him in reply as it he had received that impression. He says, writing from Budapest in December 1889 :---

"In presenting yourself as 'an exceptional person who has always loved the Mahomedans as brethren and has carnestly tried to interpret between Hindus and Mahomedans and effect a union of hearts between two peoples whose social and political interests in India are identical,' you have certainly put before yourself a very useful, are identical, you have certainly put before yourself a very useful, but at the same time a very ardious rask. As far as my limited experience and unpretentious notions go, the solution of this problem in Asia has always seemed to me an unanswerable difficulty. You evidently know better than misself, that in Asia the partition wall between mankind is not the nationality, but religion. M shomedan scripture says--- All true believers are brethren, as well as that unbelievers are one nation, a saying which implies a strict unity between the followers of one faith, and does not admit any partition by race or nationality. I am, therefore, at a loss to understand how your idea to form a nation by a harmonious social fusion of the two component parts of the population, sublime and high minded as that idea is, could be carried out without shaking the very foundation of the respective communities. Of course you are on the best way in proposing to effect that idea under the British Crown, which has given us such a strong and equitable Government as we could never hope to form ourselves; which has advanced us to a new life, and is daily improving us, and which I devoutly pray will keep us in hand until the time comes under God's Providence when we are in a position to help ourselves. This argument speaks decidedly whole volumes in favour of the soundness of your views. The time will and must come when many of our countrymen and co-religionists will share in these healthy views, but I beg leave to say that this time is yet very, very far, and that it would be much easier to make all Europe one community of a common interest and aim, than to mould the different nationalities and creeds of Hindustan into one nation. What you have to do is to proceed on the way inaugurated by your British teachers without any premature aspirations unfit and eventually dang rous to the present stage of culture of the great mass of the peoples of India. What you have achieved hitherto under the guidance of Great Britain and assisted by the innate saladida want of the control splendid mental capacities of your people, is quite unique in the history of civilisation of mankind. Your hitherto made progress appears the best guarantee for the future development of India. You enjoy liberties which are the object of envy not only of all Asia and Russia, but also of many parts of Europe, and the benignant rays of liberty will certainly increase in the measure as the sun of enlightenment rises over the horizon of your vast and glorious country.

Dr. Morketjee's opinions on public affairs are so well known from the pages of Ress and Rayset, that it is hardly necessary to quote solated ref rences. One or two may, however, find a place. In February, 1891, writing of the Age of Consent agitation he

"As for ours lves, the time is one when everyone is bound to declare consell on one side or the other. I can only pity the handful way may have by independent thought come to the conclusion is the Age of Consent Bill interferes with the Hindu r ligion. Thank God, our religion is more clastic than that! It stands a. amount of clipping, especially in its dead twig, and leaves, 1, the interest of civillisation and our good name as a ation and the credit of our Rishis, themselves every man, who pretends to partictism and culture among us should disavow the tricks of the Garshadhanists

Of the cow projection movement he wrote in Sepimber, 1893, to a fell 5-Hindu :---

"You can to have a superstitious dread of the word special. But he at veir ease, no special laws have been rushed through the legislate s for the destruction of the cow-protectionists. was all the in existence under which Government are acting. will, you may be sure, do nothing which has not been dy done before. And what was the harm in principle or in and to if they did something special in the way of legislation and attout? Salve republicat suprema lex. That is exactly what the sand politicians are apt to forget. I respect law; and justice I reverence above everything, but we should beware of making tenshes of these and paying them blind adoration. Great as law is, my friend, and greater as justice; existence is above them all. You are profoundly ignorant of where you are. You are sleeping in the crater of a volcano. Government have already wasted much valuable time. They listened to your Bengal politicians who would lay the evil of Discord by holding brotherly meetings of Hindus and Moslems, and so forth. They would not meetings of rindus and mostems, and so forth. They would not take our stronger counsel; they were afraid of you and your friends—the parliamentary badgers. But their policy of peace-at-any price only incouraged the spirit of lawlessness, and riot upon not at last opened their eyes, and they decided to act with firmness. The effect cannot now be the same as before, specially if they adopt half measures as if they were Willing to wound and yet afraid to strike.

These are difficult matters, and I am not surprised that, in default of special knowledge of the situation, you should be at sea. What surprises me is your talk on the cow-question, your protestation of toleration, &c., all ending in the remark that the riots have been caused by the action of the officials unduly favouring the Mahomedans. But it is uscless to argue with one who at this hour says, 'a little rownlyism is needed.' It is a relief to know that you are no official. But then you would have talked differently, perhaps gone to the other pole. You are still young, Kisari, and it may befit you to b' bellicose. I am past the years of recklessness and am for peace. War, even in my time, is not so horrible to contemplate from a safe distance at home. But I have our own people, and I pray to God to avert such a calamity from us."

from us.

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrinsically it is a book worth buying and reading, and it may also be noted that the profits of the publication go to the family of Dr. Mookerjee, who were not left too well provided for. It is hoped that a second edition may be called for, and having that in view we would suggest a careful rereading for "literals" which will be found on the first page of the Dedication, and here and there through ut the hook. On page 160 we should query the word "idiotisms;" probably Dr. Mookerjee wrote "idioms." The full and useful index---Mr. Skrine in the course of his reading has marked and taken to heart Carlyle's recommendation --- should be transferred to the close of the book,

A FEW INCHES OF PLAIN ENGLISH.

A FEW INCHES OF PLAIN ENGLISH.

NOWADAYS men are doing all sorts of wonders by means of electricity, both in mechanics and in chemistry. I see by the papers that they expect to be able to produce real diamonds by it. Perhaps they my; in uvels never cease. But we will wait till they do before we crow over that job. Up to this time, answay, everything that is both valuable, and useful is the front of hird work. Even diamonds are mostly got out of rocky mines. And, within reasonable limits, it is good for us to have to work. Ten shiftings honestly earned is better for a monthant wenty in the shape of a legacy.

The best condition of things for any country would be when fair wages could be earned straight along, without loss or deduction for any reason. But in the present aspect of human affairs this is impossible. Whose fault it is we cannot now discuss.

One source of loss, however, is plann enough, and some remedy for it wages could be earned straight along, without loss or deduction for any reason. But in the present aspect of human affirs this is impossible. Whose fault it is we cannot now discuss.

One source of loss, however, is plan enough, and some remedy for it ought to be foun. In England and W. Les every working man averages ten days of thoses per year, miking the total loss of wages from this cause about £16,000 000 i year. We are taking of the average, you see. But mashinca as all working-men are not ill every year, this everage does not fairly show the suffering and loss of those who are ill. In any given year many will lose no time at all, while others may lose individually from ten days to six months each. No charity, no savings, on income from clubs,6cc, can make up for this—even in money alone to say nothing of the pain and the misery.

Alluding to an experience of his in 1888 Mr. George Lagdon says, "I had to give up my work." How this came to pass he tells us in a letter dated from his hone in White House Road, Subbing, near Dunniw, Anguet 24, 1892. He had no inherited disease or weakness, so far as he knew and was always strong ind well up to April of this year—1888. Then his strength and energy began to leave him. He felt tired, not as from work, but as from power gone out of him through some boddy failure. He sat down to his meals, but not with his old eage ness and relish. There was a nasty copper-like taste in his mouth, his teeth and tongue were covered with slime, and his throat clogged with a kind of thick philegny, difficult to "hawk up" and eject.

He also speaks of a nagging prun in the stomach, flittlency, and much papitation of the heart as having been among his symptoms. As the administ—whatever it was—progressed he began to have a hacking cough which, he says, seemed as if it must shake him to pieces. He could scarcely sleep on account of it. One of the most alarming features of his illness, however, were the night sweats, for the reason that they showed the existence of a source of weakness whi which no traveller returns.

"It was now July—summer time, when hife to the healthy is so pleasant and full of hope. At this time my sister-in-law got from Mr. Linsells (Stebbing) a medicine that I had not tried yet. After having used one bottle I felt better, and when I had used the second I was cured, and have not lost an hour's work since."

The reader will notice that between the date of his taking this medicine and the date of his letter there is an interval of four year. We may, therefore, infer that his cure was real and permanent. The medicine, by the way, was Mother Seigel's Curative Sying. It is not likely he will forget its name nor what it did for him. His disease was indigestion and dyspepsin, the deadly enemy of every labouring man of woman under the sun, no matter what they work at or work with—hands, brains, or both.

Is it necessary to draw a "moral"—school-book style—from these facts? No, it is not. We have talked plain English, and that is

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE.

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, 1CS.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains
PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR

DEDICATION.

HIS TIRE STORY.

Emerson on biography. Why is it popular?

His ancestry. Brih

Early education

At Garanhatta School. Youthful dialectics The Hindoo Metropolitan College.

Teachers and associates. Essays in journalism.

Marries.

Hurish Chandra Mookerjee. Mutiny pamphlet. British Indian Association,

His asthma how caused.

Sub-editor of the "Patric Story of the "Patriot." Attacks the Income Tax.

Actacks the Income 14x. Scathing strictures.
Lessons of the Mutiny Removes to Lucknow.
A love of music.
A rolling-stone.
Introduced to the Nazim.

Palace intrigues Baffles his enemies.

Journalism again.
Becomes a schoolmaster.
A Private Secretary.
A serious dilemina.

A serious dilemma.
Disinterested friendship.
"Mookerjee's Migazine."
Dailies with the law.
The Maharaja of Jaipur.
Work in Tippera.

work in Tippera.
His application suppressed.
Becomes Prime Minister.
The water question.
Thwarted by intrigues.
Resigns his post.
The "Repute Press,"

Founds "Reis and Rayyer"
" Travels and Voyages in Bengal."

A terra incognita. A feast of reason.

Postprandial oratory.

Breaking up. A serious illness.

The end. His character

Broad sympathies.
A foe to fanaticism.
Love of justice.

Charity.
Curiosity.
Consideration for others.

Scorn of money. Disinterestedness.

Love of ammils

A poetical nature.
An admirer of Byron.
Drawbacks of journalism.
Mooketjee's "Essays."
Hit letters.

His correspondents.

Am of this work.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEF

LFITERS

FITERS
to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.,
to Atkinson, the late Mr. E.F.T., C.S.
to Banerjee, Babu Jyotish Chunder
from Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.

Baneijee, Babu Sarodaprasad.

to Banerjee, Babu Sarodaprasad, from Beil, the late Major Evans, from Bhaddaur, Ghief of.

to Binaya Krishna, Raja.

to Chriu, Rau Bahadur Ananda.

to Chatterjee, Mr. K. M. from Clarke, Mr. S. E.J. from, to Colvin, Sir Auckland.

to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of. from Evans, the Horbile Sir Goffith H.P. to Guguli, Babu Kisari Mohan.

to Ghosh, Babu Kisari Mohan.

to Ghosh, Babu Kahi Prosanna.

to Ghosh, Babu Kahi Prosanna.

to Gaham, Mr. W. from Goffin, Sir Lepel, from Guba, Babu Saroda Kant.

to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.

from Hunter, Sir W. W.

to Jenkins, Mr. Edward.

to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.

to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.

to Kinght, Mr. Paul.

from Kinght, the late Mr. Robert, from Lunsdowne, the Maiquis of.

to Law, Kumar Kristodas.

to Lvon, Mr. Percy C

M. Momerd, Moulvi Syed.

to Marston, Miss Ann.

from Metha, Mr. R. D.

to Mitta, the late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, late Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, kale Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, kale Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

to Moskerjee, kale Raja Dr. Rajendralala.

Nayaratna, Mahamahapadhya M. C.

from Nayaratina, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to Rao, Mr G Venkata Appa. to Rao, the late Sir T. Madhaya. to Ratigan, Sir Wilham H from Rosebery, E. ol of. to, from Routledge, Mr. James. from Russel, Sir W. H. to Row, Mr G Svimala. to Sisti, the Honble A Sashiah, to Sinha, Bibin Brihmananda, from Sircar, Dr Mahendralal from Sircar, Dr Mahendralal from Stabley, Lord, of Alderley, from, to Townsend, Mr. Meichib, to Underwood, Captron T. O. to, from Vambery, Professor Arminus, to Vencatarainanch, Mr. G. to Vizianagram, Maharaja of, to, from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie, to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. LETTERS(& Tell-GENRS) OF CONDOLENCE, from Abdus Sabhan, Moulvi A. K. M.

to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. LETTERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, fro Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A. K. M. Ameer Hossein, Hon'ble Nawab Syed, Ardagh, Colonel Su. J. C. Banerjee, Babu Manuathanath Brueijee, Babu Manuathanath Brueijee, Babu Manuathanath Brueijee, Babu Manuathanath Brueijee, Rai Bahadur, Shib Chunder, Birth, M. A. Beich imbers, Mr. R. Deb, Bibu Manahar Dutt, Mr. O. C. Dutt, Bibu Prosaddoss, Eign, Loid, Ghose, Bibu Norendia K. Ginosh, Bibu Kib Prisanna, Grahim, Mr. Wilham Hall, Di. Fitz Edward Hardis Vilhandis Desia, the late Dewan, Iyer, Mr. A. Kitshnaswami Limbert, Su John Mahomed, Moulvi Sved Mitta, Mr. B. C. Mitter, Babu Sidheshin Mookerjee, Bibu Surendia Nath, Minshidabid, the Niwab Bahaddor of, Routledge, Mr. James, Ray, Bibu E. C. Ray, Babu Sarat Chunder, Sanyal, Babu Dinabundho, Savita Libraty

Roy, Babu Sarat Chunder, Sayad, Babu Dinabundho. Sayini Library Tippera, the Bara Thakui of, Vambèry, Professor Arminus, Vizina igram, the Maharaja of,

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be priced wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders will be registered by the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

OPINION OF THE PRESS

OPINION OF THE PRESS

Mookeijee's letters are matvels of pure diction which is heightened by his nervous style... The life has been told by Mr. Skime in a very pleasant manner and which should make it opiular not only with all those who are able to appreciate ment unmarted by ostentation and emissioners insponded or harshness.—The Muhammadan, Oct. 5, 1895

We may at any rate cordially agree with Mr. Skime that the story of Mookeijee's life, with all its lights and shadows, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real funda... A man of large heart and great qualities, his death from pueunoma in the early spring in the last year was a distinct and heavy loss to Indian journalism, and it was an admirable indea on Mr. Skime's part to put his Life and Letters upon record—The Time of India, September 30, 1895

his lafe and Letters upon record — The Time of India, September 30, 1805

The late Editor of Rets and Rayyet was a profound student and an accomplished writer, who has left his mark on Indian journalism. In that he has found a Civilian like Mr Skitne to record the story of his life he is more fortunate than the great Kristodas Pal himself.—The Tribune, October 2, 1895.

It is rarely that the life of an Indian journalist becomes worthy of publication; it is more rarely still that such a life comes to be written by an Anglo-Indian and a member of the Indian Civil Service. But, it has come to pass that in the land of the Bengali Babus, the life of at least one man among Indian journalists has been considered worthy of being written by an Englishman The Madras Standard, September 30, 1895

It having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box latery introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (viz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 912d, 12 annas or 15 1/2d and Rs, 2 or 25 9d.) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represent-

CAUTION!

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and

ed to be of higher value than they really are.

Cevlon. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUTTA.

NOTICE.-Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee tates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

NAWAB BAHADUR ABDOOL LUTEEF MEMORIAL FUND.

	MEMORIAL FUND.
1.	His Highness The Maharaja of	Dur.	R5.
	bhanga K.C.I.E.,	2	2,000
2	His Highness I'me Maharaja of	Vızı٠
3	Anagram, G.C.I.R., His Highness the Nawab Bahadi	اا ir of	,000
,	— Moorshedabad, Amirul Omra, G C	I E.	800
1	His Highness the Nawab of Junag
5	G C.S.I. His Highness the Maharaja Bah	ıdu:	500
	of Cooch Behar, G.C.LE		500
6.	Nawab Bahadui Sii K Abdul Gi KCSA, and Nawao Banadui	(*
	Ashan Ulla, C.I.E		500
7 8.	Nawab Imad Jung Bahadur		500
8.	Ashan Ulla, C.I.E Nawab Im d Jung B hadun Nawab Azam Yar Jung B hadun Suamsan Ullimi Syed Ali Belgi Kuan Bahadar Bahasa hadun C		500
10.	Knan B thadar BhaiB thauddin, C	I E.,	5.10
	 Vizier to the Nawab of Junagad 	h	30)
11.	Manaraja Bahadar Su Joundra han Tagore, K C S L	A1)-	250
1.2.	han Tagore, KCSI		200
13.	Messrs, Mackennan Mackenzie &	Co.	200
1 1.	Muza Bahadur	All	150
15	Muza Bahadur Shujan Mulk Asafad Dawlar Na	wab	.,,
	Sved Zanul Abdın Khan B. h.	idur
16	Feraz Jung Raja Peary Mohan Mookeijee, C	5.1	140
17	The Han'ble Mr Justice Coat	idia	100
18	Madhab Guose Pimge Muzi Sir Jahan Kadar B.		100
10	dur. K.C I.F		100
19	The Hon'ble P. Phyfair		ton
20 21.	Haji Kasim Ariff Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble	Sir	100
	H. Brackenbury, K C B.,		100
32	H. Brackenbury, K.C.B., Baou Jai Gobind, Law		100
23	The Honble Mr. Justice Gural Banerjee	Das
24.	The Honble Dr. Rash Behary Gi	 105 e	50 51
25.	Sir, Romesh Chandra Mitter, Kr.		50
26.	Shahibza la Mahomed Obidulla K Bahader, C.S.L.	han
27.	Maharajkumar Benoya Krishna		50 50
28.	The Hon'ble Mr. Justice E. J. Ti	eve-
29	lyan The Hon'ble Moulvi Abdul Jat	bar	50
	Khan Bahadui		50
30.	The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop
31.	Maharaja Durga Charan Law, C	 F.,	50 50
31. 32.	Maharija Durga Charan Law, C Nawab Jahundar Meerza Nawab Huzoor Muza		50
33 34			50
35	Nawab Syed Ameri Husem Sved Nurul Huda, Esq. Cs.	: :	50 50
36	Sved Naral Huda, Esq. Cs.	•••	50
37. e	I (. Ruchie Esa Cs	:	50 50
39.	"Sir Alexander Miller		50
40. 41.	F. J. Rowe, Esq Madve Mahmudeen Nabi Khan	ν	32
4	hadut,		25
42.	Kuma Radha Prosad Roy	÷	25
43 44.	S mar Dinendra Niram Roy B du tPashuputty Nath Bose	• • • •	25 25
45.	Kumar Doul it Chandra Roy		25
46.	Richa Gran Prosonno Ghose		25
47	Cir Soundra Mohan Tage	nе, 	25
48	Raya Joundra Nath Chowdhury
49	B du R ima Nath Ghose	•••	25
50 51	Rai Sew Bux Bogla Bahadar		25 25
52	P. Ralchambere Fra
57 54	Raja Surja Kanta Acharjee Chowd Rai Budieedas Mukim Bahadur	hui y	25
55.	Bibu Gopil Lil Seal	•••	25 25
50.	Baba Gopal Lal Seal Moulvi Syad Abdus Salam A. F. Apea, Esq		25
57 59	H. Luttin in Johnson, Esq. CS.	• • •	25
5.1	Lord William Beresford, K.C.I.E.,	· · ·	25 25
60	Munshi Gholam Rasool		25
61 61	F. H. Skime, Esq. C.S., The Hon'ble H. J S.Cotton CS, C. Prince Mahomed Bakhtyar Shah	s.i.	25 20
63	Prince Mahomed Bakhtyar Shah		20
64	Baboo Salendra Nath Pal Chowdry	y	20
65 66	Monly: Imadd Ah	•••	20 20
67	Ru Shib Chunder Nundy Bahadar		20
68 60	D. Panioty, Esq Chowdry Mahomed Arjamand Kh		20
69 7 0	H. E. A. Cotton, Esq., Barrister-at-	aw	20 20
71.	Mouly: Sved Ashruffuddin Ahm	ed,
72	Khan Bahadur	•••	17.
7.4	T. Ingirs, Esq., C.S	•••	10,

73.	A. H. Gdes, Esq		16
74.	F. F. Handley, Esq., C.S.	•••	16
75-	The Hon'ble Moute Strain		•
1	Kuan ,		16
76	Mouly: Serajundeen	•••	15
77.	Anni Hasan, Esq.,		15
78.	H. A. D. Punaps, Esq., C s.		10
79.	Baboo Kuan Chunder Roy		10
80.	E. N Biker, E.q		10
81.	Banon Doval Chand Bose		10
82.	" Madao Mohun Bose		10
83.	" Kanu Lal Khan		10
84.	Mouly: Synd Akrain Hossain		10
85.	Monivi Azis Annud		10
86.	Ru Kinyelat Dev Bahadoor		10
87	H Hamwood, Esq		10
88.	B du Hurry Monan Chunder		10
89	B theo Chakk man Roy		5
90	" Sundapiasad Gnose		5
	discriptions will be thankfully	received
	Honorary Joint Secretaries	- CCCIVELL	,
	RAJ KUMAR SARVADHICARI	BAHADU	T D
	y	"AUAD	٠.,

4, British Indian Street, Calcutta, and A. F. M. Abdur Rahman, Esq., Barrister-atlaw, 16, Taltolla, Calcutta. "IMPROVED UNDAUNTED"

WAIJH. Rs. . Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, smill, open-faced, nickel silvero, kevless, short winding, pitent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental hold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pietty box and full three years' guarantee. Wagrafited to stand the rough-est use. Ruis more tran 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily re-pairable. Others seil at double our rates. One est use. Rius more than 28 homs with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily reparable. Others seil at double on rates. One watch free for the pinchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jino, Dickson of Hapitial Rulway, from Crylon says.—It keeps solended time and never stopped although it sustained hind knocks and jeiks, × Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Pounamallies says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Reg. from Dumdum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patha Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some seven years upo is still keeping very good time. Jewelled Ring Ro. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring ser with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emer dely at Re. 1-8-0 Mr. G. Smith, Silt Inspector from Sankatia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." K-y wording, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pre G. Huskes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purindhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Seige int for Rs. 28 × Pte. H. C. Bischop of L. F. L. Right from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 in the very same watch, Gentlemen's open ticrel, keyless real told gold watch Rs. 30; Ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed to be of real soud gold. No agents kept, all goods seat only by us from Bombay per V. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the due to the presence of living parasites in the himing membrane of the nose and eustachian times. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy his been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A. HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORON FO, Canada. Scientific American.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. . AYURVEDIC PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtainted a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Puthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds, Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the Buttsh Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellers, waternes, cluttes, silks, hooks, or any other times desired given in exchange. Orders, or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ.

Wholesale Sjamp Dealer

Established 1880.

61, Regent Street, London W. Bankers: The London & County Bank.

GENUINE HOMEOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M S

Hommopathic Practitioner,
May be consulted by letter or personally
my at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street,

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT. WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND Remew of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in advance, Yearly Half-vearly Quarterly ... Montair , 7 ... , 4 ... Re. 18 Ke. 18 single or sample Copy If not paid in havance. Yearly ... Rs. 18 ... Half-yearly... ... ,, 10-8 ••• Quarterly ... Monthly ... Single or sample Copy • • •

No additional charge for postage or peor. AATIS OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and to 2 lines or 12 inches to the column), are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 minas spline or Rs. 2-2 an inch each inserting The lowest carage for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Donestic Occurrences, the lowest combinate for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphips (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1 Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington

DROST ET AVANT.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

'AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LIFERATURE, AND SOCIET

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 696

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

خون من

THE SUNYASSEE. BY JAMES HUTCHINSON. (Continued from p. 470.) CANTO SECOND.

A scorned them then I my haughty heart Could well, with their unkindness cope ; And still, that sweet delusion hope, Though fading, would not all depart. And these were stirring times, for men, Who knew the art, to welld a blide, And trust me, such will come again ; But I may, then, be lowly laid. Oh l forgot my altered state, Dreaming of times, when all elate, And youthful blood was mantling warm, I sought to test a stripling's arm.

I took my sabre, in my hand, My good shield, at my back, was slung, * My turban red, in many a band, And twist, was round my temples wrung ; I girt my loins, and took my way, † Sihall cause had I, to grieve to part, And less to dread, from robber fray, My purse was lighter, than my heart; But my good arm was stout, and strong, No longer terrible seemed death, And for the right, -perturbs the wrong, I thus might traffic, with my breath, For what, I valued then,—a name,—. Nor dreamt, what seeined a noble, aim Might end, in little less, than shame. The time seemed fit; for still, there stood Some remnants of our princely blood; And still, my country's banners waved, Tho' she herself was half enslaved ; And in my pride, I thought to try My maiden blade, in cause so high.

Ш.

That Hydra vast, the English power, Was then, but in its infancy, But those, who knew, foresaw an hour, If still unchecked, when it would be More fatal to our liberty; Already Tippoo overthrown, What state, with them, could cope, alone? Moslem he was !- yet he did well, Even, in the threshold, where he feld Of his own fort, and capital ; Even as Rajpoot might wish to fall, So fell he, and when some low hind, That should have stooped, his wounds to bind, Would strip the Baldric, from his side, All crimsoned, with life's purple tide. With dying hand, he seized his glaive, And meet reward he dealt the slave. Or sought to deal, for he was low. And weak the arm, that sped the blow. The gallant act hath cost his life : A bullet closed the, unequal strife ; And there, mid heaps of slain, he lay, Till life, and rule had passed away, And foreign standards floated o'er Each bastion, battlement and tower ! Yes! I will all forget his creed, Even, for that last, and bravest deed ; His hatred of the English name, And for my failing country's fame, Oh! that her chiefs had, but, forseen The tide of change, that since bath been ; Then had they scorned the policy, In hour of need, that spurned his call;
Aye! cursed the bid jealousy,
That sought to profit by his fall.

*Tippoo Sooltan, the son of Hyder Alee, and sovereign of the independent state of Mysore was overthrown by the Burish Government, during the administration of the Marquess of Wellesley. In the assault and capture of the Fort of Seringapatam, on the 4th of May 1799, Tippoo was killed, as described in the text, and the sovereignty of Mysore passed from his family. His descendants still reside under surveillance, at Russuh, near Calcutta.

This description is quite consistent with the manners of the East.

e Upper Provinces of India, a considerable portion of the populous armed, and very few think of travelling, without being so, equipment, described in the text, is the common one, for a person

The equipment, described in the text, is the common one, for a person on toot; the horseman occasionally carries the spenr and shield, or these two along with the subre.

To gird the loins is a very common phrase in Scripture, which is in hourly use, and is as often fulfilled in India. The kummur-bund or girdle is there worn hy all the nagives; it is generally taken off, when they wish to be at ease, and is stain had recourse to, when duty or labour calls. To appear without it, or the turban, or with the shoes on before a person of any consequence, is considered to be a great mark of disrespect offered.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria. Street, Westminster, Londou, S. W.

Next sank the Peishwa's vaunted sway, Thro' British craft, and civil strife;* He fancied, as a dotard may, A realm might stand, without its life, Strong, willing, native hearts, and hands, To point the gun, or wield their brands, And trusted, as a traitor might, His realm's defence to its worst foes, And fatal, as the deadliest blight, Soon proved the dastardly repose.

(To be continued)

WEEKLYANA.

LAST week we completed the first part of The Sunyassee. To-day we begin the second canto. The disappointed lover turns a patriot, prates on the past glory of India and her future greatness and girds himself up to free the country from the Franks. The author of the poem was a surgeon on the Bengal Establishment, Secretary to the Medical Board of the Presidency, and Private Secretary to the Honourable the President of the Council in India. The year of the poem is 1837 and it was composed in the Cape of Good Hope where the author, after an uninterrupted residence of nearly seventeen years in India, had gone to seek renewed health. He says in the preface that "the historical sketch embodied in the Poem, is strictly in accordance with what are considered the most authentic records of the times, and I have the opinion of a very competent person, for believing, that the plan of the Poem is natural, with reference to that portion of India, in which the scene is laid; and that the transition of an impetuous young man, from an unfortunate lover, to a warrior, a free-booter, and an ascetic, is in accordance, with the contingencies of fortune, in the East." The picture is substantially as true in 1895 as it was in 1837, with this difference that the Indian Continent being now disarmed by law, there is no more the patriot's call to arms, but the patriotism of the day is confined chiefly to preaching of Hinduism for the regeneration of India.

A SUBURBAN " independent weekly of Politics, Literature, and Art," with guaranteed circulation of over 7,000 copies weekly, edited by a Graduate, couples the Christmas of the Christians and the Doorga Puja of the Hindus of Bengal with the Mahurrum of the Mahomedans. The journal is truly independent-making no distinction between birth and death, joy and sorrow.

MRS. Langtry has been robbed of jewels valued, according to the bills paid, at 40,000/. While leaving England for Baden-Baden, she, as is her wont, deposited a tin box containing most of her ewellery at the Sloane Street Branch of the Union Bank. During her absence a stranger took delivery of the box on an order purporting to be from her to the Bank. On her return she was surprised to learn that the box was not in the Bank being removed in her name. A reward of 500% has been offered for recovery of the jewels.

A DARING day robbery in the streets of London is reported.

b Just before seven o'clock in the morning of September 25, the train from Wales brought to London five cases of ingot silver, consigned by Messrs. Vivian and Co., Syonsea, to Messrs. Sharp and Wilkins, Winchester Street, London Will. It appears that it is not de facto, the head of the Mharatta Government.

The circumstance, alluded to m the poem, is that of the Peishwah having made an alliance with the Bottish Government, during the administration of the Marquess of Wellesley, by which he entrusted the defence of his kingdom to the English, while he retained the Civil Government in his own bands. In the Pundariee war of 1817 the last Peishwah was defeated at Mahidpore, and subsequently surrendered himself up; he now remains a state pittoner, on a bandsome allowance, at Butoor near Camppore.

an unusual thing for these ingots to be transferred from the works at Swansea to London, and why frequently come twice a week. The lingots stolen—thirty-one in number—were enclosed in five large cases. Each case was composed of heavy timber, bound with iron bands, and the openings were secured by screw bolts. The ingots of silver were shaped like a river punt, with a flat top measuring in length 15% inches, while the ends and sides being cut off an angle left the bottom to inches in length. Each ingot was 5 inches wide at the top and 4 inches deep, and on the bottom of each ingot were the initials 'V. and S.,' together with a number. The numbers ranged consecutively from 56 upwards. The ingots varied in weight from 947 oz. to 1,271 oz., the total weight being 34,984 oz., valued at 4,800/. When the five cases arrived at S. Pancras, they were, as usual, entrusted to the driver of a waggon who was accustomed to convey them to their destination. At seven o'clock the van-driver, with his boy, left the Midland depot with his valuable load for London Wall. Scarcely had he left the station when, according to his statement, he pulled up at one of the many coffee-houses which exist for the convenience of carmen in the neighbourhood of Phoenix Street and Ossulton Street. According to the statements to hand the carman and his boy were inside the coffee-house for a space of twenty minutes partaking of an unusual thing for these ingots to be transferred from the works cording to the statements to hand the carman and his boy were inside the coffee-house for a space of twenty minutes partaking of their breakfast. When they emerged into Ossulton Street they found that the van and its contents had disappeared."

HERR is an American parson's parting benediction to his flock :-

"Brothers and sisters, I come to say good-by. I don't think God loves this church, because none of you ever die. I don't think you love each other, because none of you ever die. I don't think you love each other, because I never marry any of you. I don't think you love me because you have not paid my salary; your donations are mostly fruit and wormy apples; and 'by their fruit ye shall know them.' Brothers, I am going away to a better place. I have been called to be chaplain of a penitentiary. Where I go ye cannot come, but I go to prepair a place for you, and may the Lord have mercy on your souls. Good-by."

A FRENCH medical journal-La Mêdicine Moderne-calls the recent Medical Congresses Babels Scientifiques, Scientific Babels.

The Medical Annual for 1895, speaking of Hydrophobia, says that "Diller, in an exceedingly interesting report upon this disease, in which he gives statistics in regard to seventy-eight cases, is of the opining that many of the so-called cases are 'utterly incredible and wholly spurious. He deplores the popular agitation which has attended the establishment of so-called 'Pasteur Institutes,' which have undoubtedly led to the increase of hystero-epilepsy both in this country and France, and lays little reliance upon the statistics of the ardent supporters of the founder of the inoculation cure and his

THE Monthly Magazine of Pharmacy has the following remarks:

"The celebrated Professor Von Pettenkofer, who a short time ago, when seventy-four years of age, swallowed the celebrated commubacillus of Koch (the cholera-bacillus) in presence of many eminent bacillus of Koch (the cholera-bacillus) in presence of many eniment witnesses, and without interfering much with his general health (though he has suffered from glycosiuria for years), has dealt a severe blow to the germ theory of disease, and he has now, in Germany, a large number of followers. He does not deny that germs (bacteria) may be a factor in disease, which he calls x, but there is another factor, x, which is individual idiosyncrasy, and yet a third, y, which still remains to be determined, and the latter is the cause of epidemics. The latter attack certain districts where y exists, quite independently of x and x, and bespect other districts where y is absent. The x y z theory of Dr. Von Pettenkofer is now attroting much attention, and it is believed that when the real nature of y is discovered, it will be in our power to prevent epidemics of all kinds. The determination of y is the great medical problem of the present day."

HERE is a cure for cholera. A correspondent writes to a Bombay

"In view of the telegram from St. Petersburg respecting the outbreak of cholera in that city it may be useful to mention that a very simple specific for that disease exists, although I have reason to think it is known to few. If the sufferer is given strong pure coffee in the early stages of the symptoms I believe it to be an unfailing remedy. I must emphasize the necessity of its being both strong and absolutely pure. Add to about one-third of a cup of coffee two-thirds of boiling water, and drink as soon as sufficiently cool to take with a spoon, repeating the dose several times, and the cramp together with the pains in the abdomen will be found to gradually subside. The action of the coffee seems to be that of clearing the stomach and intestines of the cholera phison; and at the same time is middly stimulating. I have several times tried time remedy in England and once recently in Bombay with marked success in every case. I may add that during the cholera epidemic at Hamburg a few years ago it was successfully administered in hundreds of cases, and it is worthy of remark that while the doctors interesting the thore ender yours to grapple with the dread disease by means "In view of the telegram from St. Petersburg respecting the or cases, and it is worthy or remark that while the doctors afterly failed in their endervours to grapple with the dread disease by means of drugging, in no single instance did pure coffee fail to effect a core."

Will habitual use of coffee ward off the disease? Or is coffee any preventive of cholera?

^{*} Formerly the Peishwah was the head of the Mharattah empire, a confederacy not very dissimilar to that, which long existed in Europe, under the name of the German Empire. The name signifies Europe, under the name of the German Empire. The name significant of Marian and Such, the Peishwahs originally were of the Rajah of Sattarah; His Highness however prided himself more, in being the spiritual head of the Empire, and the Cois-quence was, that his house fell into comparative insignificance, and that the Peshwahs became de facto, the head of the Mhatatta Government.

CANCEROUS tumours are not infrequent in India. A cure of such a growth by belladonna is thus reported by Doctor Wingfield, in Monthly Review.

Monthly review.

"Belladona and Concer.—A woman, aged fifty, with a swelling in the right breast, which had been noticed for six months and was increasing in size, applied at the Birmingh im Hospital. The tuniour was hard but moveable, situated below the imple, which was uninstably retracted. Glands not enlarged, but much pain down right arm. It was develoded the growth was conceious, and that the breast should be removed. Preparatory to the operation, Belladonna was ordered internally, and, strange to say, in a fortinght's time all symptoms had disappeared and no trace of the turnour was to be discovered."

AN American medical journal says :-

"A correspondent of the New York Medical Times speaks very disparagingly of the clinical thermometer, a circumstance that brings to mind the fact that in Joseph Price's hospital in Philadelphia the thermometer is never used

It is notioning that this instrument is often a factor for evil—that too many practitioners to eat the thermometer instead of the patient."

Very true. Young or hasty practitioners pay much heed to the clinical hermometer. The very maid-servants of respectable families in and about Calcutta speak of fevers as registering so many degrees of hent above the normal temperature. The patient, his relatives and friends are alarmed by the family physician telling them the readings of the thermometer when, in fact, the lever is not at all dangerous.

THE following Song of the General Practitioner by Dr. J. Johnston, was sung at the annual dinner of a Medical Society in the U. S., A. Some of the inconveniences of the profession have been happily but by the writer.

"He must not walk his rounds for fear his patients think him poor, And dearly do they love to see a carriage at their door; And if his horse is fat, 'He must have little work to do,' And if it's lean, the reason is, 'He staives the poor old screw.'

Should be call upon his patients every day when they are ill, His motive plainly is, 'to make a great big doctor's bill'; If he visits them less frequently—thus lessening their expense—The chances are he'll be accused of wilful negligence.

He must work all day and half the night, and never say he's fired. For the public look upon him simply as a servant hired. And should be take a holiday, he'll find, when he comes back, Some patients have resented it by giving him 'the sack.'

Concerning money, he must seem indifferent to be, And folks will think he practices from pure philanthropy. When we hear about him boasting of the guineas that he earns, We wonder if they all appear in his income-tax returns.

About his own afflictions he must never say a word;
The notion of a doctor being ill is so absurd!
And when, perhaps from overwink, he's laid upon the shelf,
His sympathizing patients say, 'Physician, heal thyself!'

NOTES & LEADERETTES, OUR OWN NEWS.

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

ORD Salisbury has issued another ultimatum, this time to Venezuela, amanding the settlement of the long standing British claims. His reign policy has the support of the Liberal party. Lord Rosebery, Peaking at Scarboroug, congratulated Lord Salisbury on the Armenian tilement.

-ORD Dufferin having resigned, Lord Satisbury has been appointed Narden of the Cinque Ports.

CTOBER 21st being the anniversary of the battle of Trafalgar, the tading English newspapers of that morning unanimously urged the ipholding of Great Britain's naval supremacy.

AT a banquet given at Kingston in honour of Sir Richard Temple, Mr. Curzon, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, emphasized the task of the Foreign Office in providing for the nacessary and legitimate expansion of the commerce and commerce diposition of England in the Far East, where, he had reason to that the British position was affected, and is engaging special attention.

THE Times has been found tripping. The journal that brought itself into exceptional prominence by unusual enterprise regarding the hiding place of a noted statesman while the rest of the English press mounted his death, has been inisled into announcing the death of General Hugh Rowlands.

GENERAL Baratters has arrived at Makelle Riss, and Mangascia is suing for peace. It is reported at Missowah that King Meneleck wis struck by lightning in his tent, and was deprived of the power of speech

ADVICES from Antananativo state that General Duchesne will remain temporarily at Emyrna with a part of his troops. The Hova Queen has requested all her subjects who have fled from Antananarivo to return. A letter thence, dated the 4th instant, states that on the eve of the entry of the French into the capital, the mob massacred and mutilated the French prisoners in the hands of the Hovas. The excellent behaviour of the French has had a reassuring effect on the natives.

THERE is a recrudescence of cholera at Dannetta. None deaths occurred on Friday and six on Saturday. Several cases are reported at Mensurah, whither hundreds of innabitants of Dannetta fled when the outbreak occurred.

IT is understool that Prince Lobanoff, the Russian Foreign Minister. in an interview with the Emperor William, expressed the hope that the Czir would see his Imperial Mijesiy and the Emperor Francis Joseph after the coronation. Prince Labanoff said that he was con vinced that France desired to maint in peace. The prince also said that Russia was unable to tolerate the Japanese establishing themselves in Corea, where they would be a continual menace to Russia and China. We have a confirmation of this belief in two subsequent tele grams. Thus: Three crossers have been ordered to reinforce the Russian squadron in the Picific, which has been instructed to cruise off Corea to be ready for any emergency in that quarter. The Times' correspondent at Hongkong telegraphs that Russia has concluded a treaty with China securing the right of anchorage at Port Arthur for her fleet, also a right to construct and work rathways through Man churia to Viadivostok and Port Arthur, also various commercial advantages outside the most favoured nation clause

A TELEGRAM from Hongkong states that the Back Flag Chief, commanding the rebers at Taiwanfu in kormosa, has fled. It is expected that the Black Flags will now surrender, and that the Japanese will occupy Taiwanfu.

A MEMORIAL addressed to Prince Hobenlobe, the German Chancellor, regards the new German settlements at Tionson and Hankow as in adequate, and urges the Chancellor strongly to acquire the Chusan Islands regardless of the ill-will of the other Powers.

JAPAN has ratified the terms arranged with the Powers, namely, to evacuate the Liantung Peninsula within three months, i.e., at the end of January. China's payment of thiny million to its and the free dom of navigation of the Formosa Channel are to be assured. Jupan promises not to cede Formosa or the Pescadores to any Power. The agreement with Spain fixes the twentieth parallel as the boundary between the Phillippines and Formosa

REUTER'S correspondent at Constantinople states that the existence of a serious revolutionary propaganda has been discovered by the Turkish authorities at Adana and Aleppo for the purpose of enlisting young Armenians and supplying them with arms and ammunition, which have been secretly imported.

THE Standard's correspondent at Constantinople telegraphs that fifty members of the Turkish liberal party have been summarily tried and executed.

REUTER'S special correspondent at Constantinople confirms the report that many leaders of the reform party are missing. The Standard's correspondent goes further and 5.05 that the leaders were taken on board a man-of-way's boats at might and thrown overboard.

THE King of Portugal has abandoned his intended visit to Rome owing to the Pope insisting on his Majesty visiting the Vatican first on his arrival there, otherwise, his Holiness would withdraw the Papal Nuncio from Lisbon.

LORD George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India, has consented to receive a deputation of Manchester employers and operatives.

HER Majesty the Queen has approved of the nomination of Mr. J. Woodburn to the Vice egil Council

THE Maharaja of Jodhpur, His Highness Rij Rajeshwar Maharaj-Adhiraj Sir Jaswant Singh Bahadar, Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, died on Friday, the 11th of October. The funeral procession, the next day, covered three-quarters of a note in length and was swelled by 60,000 persons of all castes, creeds, and grades of society. He was born in 1837 and succeeded to the gade, on the death of Raja Takht Singh, in 1873. The next Raja is a minor, and there will be the usual Council of Regency, or the present rule of the Minister and the Resident will continue in another name. The late Maharaja had long ceased or was not allowed to take any active part in the administration, The late Rai Bahadar Hardyal Singh, Secretary to the Musahib Ala of Marway, who died in July 1804, held for a time the supreme hand in the State next to the Resident, Western Raiputna States, to be supersedd by the Maharaja's brother Sa Pratap Singh who has been practically the ruler. The outside world know him better than the Chief who has just died to the grief of his 1,750 403 subjects-Hindus, Mahomedans and Jams.

THE prosecution, at Dhulti, of the Mahomedans charged with rioting and being members of an unlawful assembly has ended. Four of the prisoners have been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, and one man fixed. The first accused, Makhanshah Valad Bhow tashah, has also been convicted for assaulting Head Constable Pandwrang Luxman in the discharge of his duty, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Vidad Makhan and Rifu Valad Khid Monum have got six weeks' rigorous imprisonment, and Abdul Kharim Valad Hoosein ud-din six months. Abdul Azir has been fined Rs, 200, in default of payment to suffer filteen days' simple imprisonment.

THE Madras High Court has held that a bicycle is a vehicle with springs, and as such tax ible by the Municipality. We may now seen revival of the attempt to tax such conveyances in Calcutta. The Calcutta Municipal Act defines a " carriage," on which a tax is imposable, as " any wheeled vehicle with springs used for the conveyance of human beings, and ordinarily drawn by an animal," any of the wheels exceeding twenty-four inches in diameter.

THE following note, extracted from the North Carolina Medical fournal of September 1895, on bicycle riding has equal interest in India where such riding is rapidly becoming general,

"This mode of locomotion, which was started a few years ago as a "This mode of locomotion, which was statted a few years ago as a pure and simple sport, has been rapidly developed into a necessity to the public—not that we could not do without the bicycle, for as we did without it once, so we can again—but it is a necessity in the same sense as the telephone and other such inventions. From the old-time bingsy-wheel affair, with it's worden spokes and from tire, which ratified down the streets like a run-a-way express wagon, the wheel has passed through the several stages of evolution until it has attained the high degree of perfection we see in the modern spider-web wheel, with its ball bearings and poeumatic tires, which enable the rider to spin'along at a rate of twelve or fifteen miles an hour without jar or noise and with a minimum of exection.

Is it any, wonder that the corner to mount the silent steed has a wear.

and conditions of people? The old man and the matron, the young and conditions or people? The old man and the matton, the young man and the maid, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the professional man and the laborer, the healthy and the sick, we see them all spinning along the streets and boulevards of the city and along the pikes and bypaths of the rural districts, casting aside all care and worry, drinking in the life-giving oxygen, their faces radiant with pleasure, as they enjoy what may well be called the poetry of otion. Numerous articles have appeared from time to time in the medical and lay papers, some of which seem to us to have been written from a projudiced standpoint. In view of the wonderful popularity of the wheel, it is but right that its effects on the people should be considered. How will it affect the health and the morals of those the wheel, it is but right that its effects on the people should be considered. How will it affect the health and the morals of those who tide? As physicans we are bound to give attention to the former. It is the tendency of modern civilization to exercise the brain and not the hody. The business man boards a crowded car and rides to his office, where he keeps himself confined until it is time to leave for home; the women pass days at a time in il-ventilated houses, the atmosphere of which is contaminated by sewer gas, and when they do go out wisp themselves in furs and ride in close carriages, if it be winter, and magnie they are taking exercise! With such sedentary habits is it any wonder that nervous and digestive troubles are so common? Men join gymnasiums and women physical culture classes, but they soon look upon this as an irknome duty and abandon it. Walking has but little attraction. Something is needed to draw these people into the open air, and from personal experience we know of no form of exercise so gentle, so universal and so peculiarly attractive as bicycling. The opposers of the exercise may be answered, we feel convinced, by the assertion that it is the abuse, and not the use, of the brivele which causes injury. The person wno wishes to ride should find out from some one qualified to judge, what would be the abuse of the wheel in his particular case, and then should avoid that abuse. The extreme stooped position is an abuse with all riders, and is nunecessary even in hill-climbing. All speed of over eight miles an hour ways be an abuse with one rider, while a fifteen-mile guit may not be with another. One may safely ride twenty-five or thirty miles, while another should not ride more tinan five or six, or even two, without resting. Each rider must have rules for himself. It would be an abuse of the wheel for some persons to attempt to ride at all. Let the beycle be ridden as it should be and it will do good to the healthy and to the invalid.

There is no more reason against a woman's riding ab and to the invalid.

and to the invalid.

There is no more reason against a woman's riding a bicycle than against her swimning. From an anatomical standpoint, it would be better adapted to women than to men. From the standpoint of experience there is every reason for her induling in the sport. Di Charles R. Townsend has studied the effect of the bicycle upon women based upon the experience and statements of eighteen ladvrulers and physicians. His conclusions are 'that bicycling is beneficial to women, not from any special effect upon the pelwic organish to because it is an agreeable, healthful form of exercise in the upon air, a form which exercises the whole body, and indirectly benefits special conditions. And the converse of this holds true, that, as a general exercise, bit ying is not hurtful to the pelvic organis, even when these are affected, unless the disease is so acute that any exercise af great as this is contraindicated.? great as this is continundicated."

At the present day, woman being equal to man, any exercise devised for him becomes her as well

BEFORE the citizens of Calcutta have heard the last of the massicie in the native quarter, another tragedy of double violent deaths has convulsed the commercial portion of the city. Last Thursday evening two not very well attended funeral processions forming one passed b this office. The hearses contained coffins covering the remains two intimate friends-Mr. W. Collingwood, aged 32, master pilot, an Mr. J. G. Pugh, aged 25, of Messis, Massey and Pugh, jute broket and Messra, Pugh, Schollay & Co., Ld., jute bailers. The first was married man with a wife, the other was a bachelor but ie pectably connected. Formerly the two friends lived together at Cama Street. Recently they removed to the top flat of the Commercia Buildings, No. 3, in the first floor of which Messrs. Pugh have the office. Mrs. Collingwood with her cousin Miss. Palmer occupie one room, the two dead occupying another. On Wednesday, after office. Mr. Pugh, as usual, went out on a walk accompanied by his dis There was no indication that anything unusual was the matter wi him. Then, as was their wont, the family of Mi. Collingwood and M Pugh dined together and, so far as is known, nothing happened then ! disturb the even tenour of their apparently happy lives. The only indent happening in the interval of the walk and the dinner, if it i any way led to the tragedy that was reserved till after the dione was the despatch of a letter from Theatre Road to the addreaccording to one account, of Mrs. Collingwood, and according 1 another, of Mr. Pugh. Shortly after ten o'clock both the friends wei dead-one at the verandah and the other at the room. Both "" weltering in blood, the deaths being violent. There is no instant tion that a stranger to the house had done the bloody deed to the land the a minimum of exercion.

Is it any, wonder that the desire to mount the silent steed has swept ver the land like a great tidal wave until it has seized upon all classes by their deaths between themselves. The head of the eight of suspicion rests on any of the servants. The friends must have con smasfied-apparently with a damb-bell that lay close by covered with blood, and the younger had shot himself dead. The presumption is that Pugh killed Collingwood and then killed himself. But why? That is a mystery which is not likely to be solved.

On the report of the gun or the report of her ayah, Mrs. Collingwood came out of her reom, and, finding her husband and her friend weltering in blood, presumably dead, ordered the garry and drove down to 8, Middleton Street, to Mr. Massey, her friend's partner in the jute brokers' business. She is evidently not on friendly terms with the other families living on the same flat, or perhaps could not, in the excitement of the moment, think of calling in any other aid, medical or other, near at hand. She remembered Mr. Mussey as the best man to whom he could apply for advice and assistance. Mr. Massey came, saw and-informed the Police, at about midnight. The police enquiry elicited little to account for the deaths. The neighbours had no information to give and the native servants of a European household in matters of this kind are absolutely useless. The bodies were removed for post mortem examination. The coroner's inquest has not concluded.

Intimate in life, the two friends are intimate in death. Both died together, both were given Christian burial in the same cemetery in the Circular Road, they were laid side by side, the same priest prayed for the peace of their souls.

> No further seek their merits to disclose. Or draw their frailties from their dread abode. (There they alike in trembling hope repose,) The bosom of their Fither and their God.

A NATIVE is a native. He may be a superior in office to a European as the term is understood in India, still the Native must be subordinate to the European. A European servant in a native household or business establishment has precedence given him by the native servants over the head of their employer. Such is British prestige in Sludia. No wonder, therefore, that in the daily Police reports in the morning papers, the Hon'ble Nawab Syed Ameer Hossem, C. I E., the Chief Magistrate, has the second place, the first being reserved for Mr. Bonnand, the other supendiary magistráte.

SHAHZADA Nasirulla Kitan, having been lionised in England, has returned to India and been sent back to his father safe and sound and, let us hope, much improved in mind. With return to his own, he censes to be a wonder.

THE prosecution of the Kaviraj in the Calcutta Police Court for obscenito in his descriptive catalogue of medicines, has been allowed to drop, he undertaking to eliminate the objectionable passages. It was intended as a warning to him and others. The next offender will now be so lightly treated. The Police Commissioner should direct his attention to vernacular publications which largely deal in smut

THE bearer of the well-known initials "G. A. S.," the famous George Augustus Sala, one of the greatest living masters of the English language, is extremely iil. We fear much his pecuniary affairs have made him so and stand in the way of his quick recovery He is largely involved and his creditors are upon him. A pension of £100 a year from the Civil List has been granted him and there is a remour that the Daily Telegraph has pensioned him off with a thousand a year. Without being burdened with a large family, having only himself and his wife to maintain, and without being a book-sellers' back, it is a surprise that he should be in such a predicament. Probably he lived beyond his income, and the source bearing his name, we are told, has landed him in difficulties. Major Evans B II, almost similarly circumstanced, died of poverty, for no help came when he needed it most. We hope no such fate awaits Mr. Sala.,

Our Jamalpur correspondent reports that of late Honorary Benches of Magistrates have a large number of cases to dispose of, and that bar. risters-at-law appear before them instead of Mukhtears and Pleaders-This, he says, indicates confidence in the Benches, both of Government and the public. If the Honorary Magistraies can keep their head unturned and maintain the dignity of the court, they are indeed worthy of praise.

THE Viceroy Is on tout Accompanied by Lady Elgin, Mr. Cuningham, Mr. Babington Smith, Dr. Franklin and others, he left Simla, aunder the usual salute, on the morning of Thursday. Dlning at of a hearing. If, again, Umballa, he left it the same night for Agra, where he made a public entry on Friday. At the railway station Lord Eigin was received by the officiating Lieutenant-Governor of the N-W Provinces, the Maharaja of Karauli, the Rana of Disspur and the Nawab of Rampur. After the usual exchange of civilities with the leading persons present, the Municipal Corporation, on behalf of the city, welcomed Lord Elgin with an address which was read by the Vice-President. The Viceroy thanked the Commissioners for the loyal welcome, and in the course of his reply, said for the loyal welcome, and in the course in the when we specifie and not remind you as men of business that when we specifie attached the fine-rial Exchequer, that does not imply maccounting the cash which may at any moment be in the treasury, that we have to look to other considerations and particularly to we carefully the demands that have been made upon the general tax, and that we have to look to other considerations and particularly to we carefully the demands that have been made upon the general tray. Unfortunately during the past two years the Government of Ind. a had to make increased demands upon the general taxp type, and have just seen in the last few hours how that sensitive instrument nave just seen in the last few hours how that sensitive instrained in money market, upon which the commercial transactions of in-depend, may suddenly upset the best calculations. Therefore, it though I do not differ from the opinion expressed elsewhere, if the financial prospects of Government are brightening, I should holding out false hopes if I led you to expect at present any mater alteration in the conditions, fair and honourable as they have been, the assistance we can offer you."

Speaking of religious disturbances, he remarked :

Speaking of religious disturbances, he remarked:

"Gentlemen, I feel deeply thankful that it is not necessal for me to-day to repeat the solemn warming of my prodecessor, which you have alluded in the concluding paragraph of come address You have given just needly to the energy of the low I authorities a fearlessly carrying out their policy impartially both in the tolerance opinion and the suppression of disorder, which Lord Landdown proclaimed, and to which the Government of India inneservedly adhere, but I have equal pleasine in joining with you in placing beside the action of the executive as instrumentally in the cause of peace, the good sense of the people, and I would did the efforts in ide in various parts of the codurty by leading members of the various phases of religious thought, by whom, I gratefully acknowledge, much has been done to promite good-will and tensive the curses of strife. I trust they will never force, but in the increasingly appreciate, how much of responsibility lies with them." ate, how much of responsibility lies with them."

Next Lord and Lady Elgin, with a strong creater escort of the 5th Lincers in white uniform, drive to Jevpore House about three indes distant from the ratiway station. There at noon Lord Elgin received visits from the native Chiefs who were present at the radway station. The Rina of Diolpin and the Niwao of Rampur conversed in English-a sign of the times. In the anternoon the viceregid party visited the formula Fig. and returned the visit, of the Chiefs. After dinner, there was a Levée

REIS & RADYET.

Saturday, October 26, 1895 A DIET OF INDIAN NATIVE PRINCES deserving

n India, he

THE control of the East India Association having passed to the conductors of the "Imperial and Asing Quarterly Review and Oriental and Colonial Record the Society has now no separate journal of its Swn. The proceedings of that body, however, occasionally find their way to the Quarterly. Its last number, that of October, gives the minutes of a meeting of the Association held, under the presidency of the Earl of Cranbroook, a Past Secretary of State for India, on the 11th July, in the Westminster Town Hall. It also publishes the paper read on that occasion by Sir Roper Lethbridge on on that occasion by Si Isoper Data and their relation to the Empire." The subject is welcome to every Indian who has the good of his country at he art and the managers of the Quarterly have taken particular the managers of the Quarterly nave the Particular care, for which our thanks are due to mem, to make the lecture widely known. Coming and the authors of Protected Princes of India and Our Indian Protectorate, the claim of Sir Ropy to speak on the subject may be doubted. As one who has seen service in India and been attached to the Foreign Department of the Gove Commissioner, as author as Press Book of br India is

India, and as one whi growing every day, Sir 'R can revive the usefulness of the East India Association and preserve its integrity, he will have done a service to that body and the country with which it is associated.

The lecturer bases his paper on the declaration made by Lord Salisbury in 1866 when, as Lord Cranborne and member for Stamford, he addressed his constiuents on his appointment as Secretary of State for India, namely, when of all Parties have arrived at the conclusion that we in India pretty well as much as we can govern, and that d be pursuing an unwise and dangerous policy if we tried our borders, or to lessen the power or the permanence of Native Rulers upon whose assistance we have so long replieve the Native Princes were formerly the objects of rand distriust to English rulers, but within the last tenter and their control of the prince of the spirit of our statesmanship espect; and there is now, I think, a general desire to me in the rights and homours which they justly earned fival support at the time of the Mutiny, and to look etc. not as impediments to our rule, but as its most atlituries."

holicy so enunciated by the present Premier, a century ago, in development of the ship exhibited by Sir Charles Wood and ning, has, Sir Roper believes, been acted successive Secretaries of State and Viceroys, m that in 1860, "sanctioned the retrocession in that, in 1860, "sanctioned the retrocession Nizam of two important provinces of the rabad Assigned Districts," permitted, in 1877, southion of Mysore. The same policy was d by Lord Northbrook in the case of the late Rao of Baroda, and Lord Lansdowne had e policy in view in the Manipur business. In and others, there has been no departure from laid down. If then, the action of the Govern-India has sometimes seemed to be harsh, the Adjusts been excellent—"in the great majority perhaps all, the best practical arrangement the curcumstances has been arrived at." r also admits the soundness of Sir H. s spolicy not to publish the proceedings in the suspension or deposition of a Protected n the matter of the Maharaja of Bhurthowever doubts whether such a system tory one, for it has its disadvantages. It is agueness and the evils attending it, which tes: He wants therefore a clear, defined inal be tempted to ask, if he has found and why should he be anxious for a le the Government of India in dealing tive States? His answer is that future ors may go wrong. How then to protect ? Als recommendation is to revive the policy of Lord Lytton. To it "we must be consolidation and perfection of the In-stem." He says:

the Imperial Council, which ought to and sportaneous—in the one direction, of the highest value for consultative, and gislative purposes—and in the other direction. Judicial Committee, into a grand judicial language, al suppose that that Council still ome of the greatest of the Sovereign pied the title of Councillo, of the Emperary one can judge from the public to been allowed to tall entirely into abevull more to be regretted is, that the way signalised their willingness to be most personal relations with the Empire, entiments were thus reciprocated and a have consequently never really regimes and consideratio which was un que to them.

time it was very commonly expected flow into an Indian analogue, on a hale, of our English Prive Connect. and that it would ultimately include, not only the great Princes of India, but also the heads of the British Indian Government. And if such an august body had been strengthened on its judicial side--much as the House of Lords is strengthened by the Law Lords-- by the addition of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Courts, it was thought by many that it would form an ideal tribunal, admirably qualified to deal, by the machinery of Committees, with every case of difficulty arising between the Empire and the Sovereign Princes, or between the Princes themselves, or between the mand their subjects. I do not wish for a moment to be understood to say that all these developments were within the purview of Lord Lytton's intentions; for I do not know that it was so, though I believe it. But it is obvious that they might have fairly and reasonably arisen out of the measures adopted by that Vicerov; and my desire this afternoon is to advocate the taking up again of Lord Lytton's liberal Imperial policy of 1877, with a view of carrying it to its legitimate conclusion. Of one thing I am quite sure, that Lord Lytton's warmly swmpathetic and generous nature of which I knew much both as a friend and as a subordinate, would never have rested content with the present chaos which is as unfair to the Princes as it must be occasionally distressing to every high-mininded Viceroy and Secretary of State."

The suggestion is no doubt good, at any rate, intended to do good. It affords a tribunal for justice to our Princes who are not unoften punished for no offence of their own, who are kept out of their rights by intrigues and false reports, and condemned unheard. But will it be accepted? In the rial of Mulhar Rao, Lord Northbrook ventured on such an experiment. It has not been repeated. Several years ago Lord Stanley of Alderley tried but failed to get an Appeal Court composed of High Court Judges appointed to try cases like, say, the Chamba succession. If such a Court existed, Suchait Singh, the rightful ruler, would not be dragging a miserable existence in England where he had gone for justice. He was kept out on a false statement of his relation with the Raja he was to have succeeded. One baste born was put on the guddee to extinguish the claim of the legal weks later as a cheical error, after the trick had succeeded. The attention of the Duke of Argyll was drawn to it, but the order having been passed, it must stand, though the heavens fall. The troubles of Suchalt are never to end. That they may continue, he is subjected to another similar trick. To shew up the injustice done him, an attempt has been made, by those who wish well of him, to make him a bankrupt. There is a counter-movement, by those interested in suppressing facts, to stifle the enquiry. The too simple Suchait, playing into the hands of those whom he should avoid, resists the action taken in his interest.

The question revived by Sir Roper is not a simple one. Whether it is desirable to have an Imperial Council or not, the Protected Princes certainly require protection from Politicals who make or mar them in the dark. If secrecy has its advantages, the demoralization in its train perhaps outweighs them. The Princes are perfectly helpless. Born in the purple, they have no rights of citizens. They cannot claim the justice that her Majesty's ordinary subjects may have. Whatever their position under the paramountcy of the British Power in India, the ruling princes contribute largely to the Imperial ism of the Empire and deserve better treatment.

There was a discussion on the paper after it was read. We will conclude this notice of the lecture by reproducing the closing words of the Chairman of the meeting:—

"Ladies and Gentlemen,...I must first disclaim the character which has been assigned to me by my friends, Sir Roper Lethbridge and Sir Owen Burne Of the many manners in which the best side of the many manners in which the cre was none which interested me so much as the India Office when I was there and I am glad to have the testimony of the various gentlemen to the able character of my friend, Lord Lytton. So far as I am concerned, I can safely say I do not recall any occasion on which I differed from the conclusions arrived at by Lord Lytten. His mind was very much occupied in bringing out the higner class in India, both in rule and in intelligence. For the Government of India, his device was that there should be intimate relations between the Princes and the Paramount Power and to bring into harmonious action those two powers. The progress going on in India is not only in civilization, but in the knowledge and science of the West.

I know that this meeting is important, because it has given expression to that which is in the minds of men at present; that is, not union by violence but union by harmony of thought. In India there is beginning to be that Imperial interchange of strength and Sir Lepel Griffin mentioned the case of one young ruler who is in thorough sympathy with the Government and determined to help them by every means in his power.

The analogy of Germany requires some reconsideration. Germany was brought together not as a congertee of nations, but as one nation. There is almost as great a difference in India between the different nations as between Europeans and Assautes; and the German system therefore, could not be applied to India at all. Germans were brought together because they were one in kindred, language and thought; there might be some differences among them as to religion, etc.; but they were all Germans. When you come to India you find something quite different and I have continually said myself that this Imperial Council may be compared to the Privy Council. The Privy Council in England is largely an honorary distinction. When they are brought into Her Majesty's presence, they may be said to be Privy Councillors, but there are a great number of outside Councillors who are never called upon for their counsel So it may be with regard to these Indian Councillors.

wish every honour to be done to the Native Princes of India and I wish them to rule in their States beneficently, But I should have a long time to wait before I succeeded in combining the great and smill in one united scheme in which they allow ed others to legislate for their States. These things are matters of growth and cannot be forced. You have brought the English mind to take a deeper interest in India than it ever did before who know something about them on with a vi w to the adventage of the Indian Princes. For People in this country think that growth is silently going on Ladia is one homogeneous, united nation. The English power has grown up against, the will of England in one sense, because it never contemplated the growth which has been thrust upon it It was done by means of pressure applied to an unwilling Gov comment. The trading corporation has now given way to the Government of England tiself and it is essential that England should remain the Paramount Power and it is our interest to com bine those who are in immediate connexion with England with those who are in immediate connexion with India. I hope this question he fully discussed; but I do not believe that the man is yet born who has the wisdom of the power to lay down a Constitution Britain is awaking to a sense of her responsibilities to wards India and India may safely rely upon that It cannot be too much a subject for discussion in England, to see how we can bring about a closer union.'

MOORSHIDABAD

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT)

Mears idabid October 22, 1805

Mr. G. E. Manisty, 108, once our energetic District officer and now Comptroller General of India, was amidst us with his family, staying at the Palace as the guest of His Highness the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshidahad, GCIF He paid a return visit to our respected townsman Nawab Sved Mahomed Zamulabidin Khan Bahadur, Feroze Jung, at his residence where Mr. and Mis Manisty were entertained to relescopic views of the fixed stars. They were much pleased with the drawings of the Nawab's elder grand son S ed Rais Meerza, a pupil of the 3rd class, local Medresah. The Nawab possesses a large and beautiful telescope with the object glass measuring 6 inches in diameter, next in size to the one at the St. Xavier's College observatory He has just brought out from England a first class microscope. He has also a number or other scientific instruments and a capital library of Arabic, Persian and Urdu books. He is President of the Technical School Committee at Lalbagh, and of the Tombs 119, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Committee of the Nizamut, which is a very extensive department He has been an Honorary Magistrate of the Lalbagh Independent Bench for about 20 years; and since the last two years he has been sitting singly exercising and class powers. He is a hereditary Nawab and is next in rank to the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshidabad.

Princes Asii Qudr Sved Wasif Ali Meerza and Iskunder Qudr Syed Nascer Ali Meerza, sons of His Highness the Nawah Bahadur, arrived at Bombay on Sunday, me survey and were received by a number of Mahomedan, European and Alexander of Mahomedan, European Alexander of Mahomedan, Europea Meerza, eldest boy of the late Prince Khurshid Qudr Syed akunde: Ali Meerza. They are staying at Parel Road, with the mother, Her Highness Nawab Shums Jahan Begum Sahih of the late Nawab Nizim of Bengal. They leave Bondbay Thursday and arrive at the Azimgunge terminus on Sunday the current by a special train from Nalham. To welcome the there will be grand demonstrations by the residents. Trick arches have already been erected in several places. The price return home after 9 years' continued stav in England. Nawalis Mahomed Zamulabidin Khan Bahadur Feroze Jung and N Wala Qudr Hossain Ali Meerza Bahadur with other med iriends and admirers of the Nizamut family, proceed as far as Na to receive the princes. His Highness Amir-ul Omra the Name Bahadur receives them at Azımgunge. Rs. 2,000 will be dig tributed to the poor to mark the return of the princes.

The health of the town is not satisfactory

"AN INDIAN JOURNALIST."

(From the Muhimmadin, October 5, 1895.)

THE late Dr. Sambba C Mookers e, Editor of Reis and Rayye, who died in Calcutta in February 1894, was a man who did good He has been tortunate in having a friengly biographer to tell the story of his life and to preserve his letting and correspondence. The career of "An Indian Journalist" ag described by F. H. Skrine of the Indian. Civil Service ly interesting. The work has apparently been a labour of live to the author, who feels almost a sort of affection for those qualities The work has apparently been a labour of live of kindness, generosity, and independence of character which, distinguished Mooderjee and made him beloved of all those who were intimately as posinted with him. Besides being possessed of more of the milk of human kindness thin ordinary mortals, he owned abilities of no man order which gained him the respect of some of the highest officials and the friendship of many eminent men. In his dedication of the work to Sir W. W. Hunter, Mr. Skrine says that Mookerjee was an instance of a Bengali with "backbone," and it was this backbone idded to a love of justice and fairplay and a disregard for the conventionalities of society, which in his case should have been all the more harassing as he came from a Brahmin stock of "the bluest of the blue, gives a charm to the pages of Mr. Skrine, and creates a sympathy in the reader with the struggles, the aspirations and the literary work of this gifted Bengali. What we admire in him most is his earnestness coupled with his disregard of custom that fell foul of convenience. He was a Bohemian at heart and heace the irresistable fascination that journalism had for him from a very early age. It was his first love and he remained true to it up to the very end. If he had been more ambitious, more careful of the ways of the world, more eager to seek the attention of the wealthy and the influential, he would certainly have been more honoured and more rewarded. But it is this absence of the desire of appearing great and distinguished which adds to the intrinsic value of the man and makes in entertain a greater respect for his undoubted talents. He took to journalism because he loved it and he adhered to it throughout his life with decasional breaks. Though he played many parts in his life he did not play them long enough to carn distinction in any of them, and his fame must rest upon his work as a journalist. We are glad that he has been saved from that oblision which is the common jot of most journalists. Mr. Skrine fully recognises this fact and he deserves the thanks of all the labourers in a held whose labour is not well DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genune Cure for Deaf ness, Singing in Ears, &c , no matter how severe or, long-standing, will he sent post free. - Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS. number from heing altogether forgotten.

There is also a particular interest in the life of Dr. Monkeriee which lends additional value to the account given by Mr Skiine. Mookerjee came upon the scene at a very important period in the history of Bengal Born in 1839, he was about eightern years of age when the great mutiny broke out. The people in this country were just awakening under the British administration to a higher miniation of their own rights. The work of education had just In the in hand, and the ambition of many young men in agal we croused to do something worthy of themselves and of air land. The time was to ming with the promise of progress, but they however willing had the opportunity given them of in hand, and the ambition of many young men in and thos the were willing had the opportunity given them of cano. aluable service to the State The caste and social he Himbs were coming in contact with the methods ities of a people so different from their own made up for change but what that change would be note up for energy but what that change would be actly be defined. Mookerjee, who, as we are told, was pm fitty generations of high priests had all the tradicast chinging to him but he had an exceedingly and was one of the first to admit whatever good, there and in European measures of civilisation. Though, at his the off vice of the expressed nd in European measures of civilisation theren he published a pamphlet for the special ad ople of England on the great mutiny, and though he opinion that that muting was brought about by in the British administration, he still was never slow ng, to give full credit to such reforms as were introuling power. His honesty and his fearlessness in was end of nakes his character all the more nuble as his position et difficulty. But if his position had been less enrould not, perhaps, be entitled to such a high place combered would not, perhaps, be entitled to such a high place for independing the which he has carned and which can be read in many of his cra.

This simplifies was also great and his love of humanity was most noteworthy fig. in reading his life, we are reminded much of another nam of letters poor. Oliver Goldsmith, who tried his hand at plany profession but who had to remain a bookseller's hack to the end of his days. We notice the same intention of doing good and being frustrated. The same love of the good things of the world. The same kinds as towards his fellow men as well as towards the last a missiance in obtaining it. We believe what Mr. Skrine the range of the same desire for literary fame and nearly the same mischance in obtaining it. We believe what Mr. Skrine sale mischance in obtaining it. We believe what Mr. Skrine sale mischance in obtaining it. We believe what Mr. Skrine sale days to be all the divine spark in him." He possible the sale place is the place of poetry by him in the past of the sale place in precess of poetry by him in the past of the sale place in the past of the sale place is any solution. This letter is particularly the was held by many is that they should have been adjusted to be a sale by the was held by many is that they should have been adjust to be was held by many is that they should have been adjust to the was held by many is that they should have been adjust to the was held by many is that they should have been adjust to be was held by many is that they should have been adjust to be the way held by many is that they should have been adjust to the way held by many is that they should have been adjust to be the way that the third the sale place is the problem with whom he kept up a corresponding omplation of the busy life, though he was served by a disturbing complation to the busy life, though he was served by a disturbing the place of the pla

work
work
work
work
word, Skrine in a very pleasant manner poultr not only with Bengalis but with approciate merit unmarred by ostentation by harshness. The book should occupy and laboured with great effect. . Liboure l of timed at Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co.,

th Bee, October 12, 1895.)

of the month in our humble opinion, han Journalist being the Life, Letters, being the Life, Letters, Di. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, lav. Calcutta," by F. H. Skrine, I. C. S. Although we have only been able to through the four hundred and seventy-. . . . Hourst and outspoken to a degree, denotes a prince among journalists, and in 1 . . interspecial through the work of the value, while one name of the reclinate of the biography. The latter, tie o go to the timily of Dr. Mookerjee. to be hop d that the book in question will men of all communities in India, and on be a call for a second edition, which, her a frequent occurrence in this country sed that he work has not been more wideu Press than it appears to have been up remembered, in having rescued one of the most deserving of their to this. A collotype portrait of Dr. Mookerjee embellishes the

(From the Englishman, October 15, 1895)

Whether the life of the late Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee would prove interesting, as Mr. Skrine says it would, no matter how indifferently written, is not, perhaps, a practical question. The work before us leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, impartiality, or liftlike portrayal of character. The late editor of Rexisinal Rayyer came, we learn, of the pures Brahmin stock, being thirty fourth in descent from Scharreported author of the last Inflan epic Ninade Charda. He in herited his literary gift, therefore, through free centuries "I must be a limited," write his biographer, "that the pursuits of Sambhu Chunder's immediate progenitors, were hardly favourable to the construction of literary energy. Stern necessity had degraded them from the altar to the shop. His father, Mothur Moham Mookerjee, far from posing as a visible maintestation of divinity, supported himself as a manufacturer and trader of Cilcuita bazaar " Mr. Skrine follows Mookerjee through all the vagaries and struggles of his early life. He was, it appears, wo only son, and therefore spoiled. After a short spell at the local Mission ary school his father removed him, through, fear, of his construction. to Christianity, and placed him at the Otiental Seminary at Garan hatta, where he speedily distinguished himself. He became an enthusiastic student, joining the Calcutta Public Library. "But," says Mr. Skrine, " the spectacle of a lad in his early teens reading with solemn elders had its ludicrous side. In order to escape the mild chaff' livished on him, he pored over his English classes while seated outside the Library in a pony carriage his father hall provided to take him to school."

While at the Hindu Metropolitan College he started a periodical called the Calcutta Monthly Magazine, which soon came to gire! Then he became for a short time editor of the Merning Chronicle. but a difference in political opinion between the editor and proprietor led to his resignation. He employed his enforced lessure in the composition of a pamphlet on the Muting, which created considerable sensation at home, and was generally voted too good to have been written by a Native. A short time priviously, at the age of eighteen, he had married a member of reshort time Mookerjee became attached to the staff of the High. Patriot, and became, as Mr. Strine justly save, "one of a little knot of brilliant youths who held the banner of Indian journalism higher than any of their successors have done." For two years he worked for this journal, and then deserted it for a short time to study law, but soon returned to his more congenial occupation, which he continued at for another three years. Subsequently he became Secretary to the Taluglars' Association of Oudh, and editor of the Samachar Hindustans, the organ of the Association. was appointed Dewan to the Nazini at Murshidibad, but was soon driven from the Nazini's Court by the intrigues which prevailed there. A third spell at Hindoo Patrictism was followed by an attempt at what Carlyle would call "schools mastering," but like that great man he found that teaching was not in his line. Subse quently he became Secretary to Raju Sheoraj Singh of Kashipur, and Minister to the Raja of Hill Tippera. Finally in 1882 he and Minister to the Raja of Hill Tippera. Finally in 1882 he started his life work in Ren and Rayyet, which he edited with vigour and success until his death from pire monta in 1894.

We have briefly outlined Mookery, 's career from the material which Mr. Skine has in his valuable work placed at our disposal, but it would be unjust to that work to judge of it from this epitome. Mr. Skrine deals with his interesting subject with the unfailing instinct of the biographer. Every side of Dr. Mookerjee's complex character is treated with sym, athy tempered by discrimination. It would have been impossible, for example, for his biographer to hit upon a better method of bringing out the perpetual struggle which was going on between prejudice and liberalism in the mind of the enlightened Brahmin than by means of the instance

mentioned in the following passage
"His inherited prejudices were continually at war with these liberal impulses which were the growth of a life-long devotion to letters. Thus he was always ready to welcome those of his countrymen who had outraged unenlightened public opinion by crossing the seas, and he once advised a friend, who consulted him as to the readiest method of gaining notoriety, to visit Surope and take his wife with him. But after receiving a visit from one of the England returned he always ordered the book.hi used during the call to be empticed and cleaned, and everything polluted by his touch to be destroyed. In this struggle between inbred conviction and acquired culture the latter was, on the whole, victorious."

Mr. Skrine's narrative certainly impresses one with the indi-"An Indian Journalist": being the Life, Letters, and Correspondence of Dr. Sambhu C. Mooker, ec, By F. H. Skrine, I.C.S alcutta, Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., 1895.

fered with the The life has ill thou viduality of a remarkable man. To Mookerjee's amiable qualities, which he never lived to a knowledge, was from Laid Landowne, his biographer bette eloquent testimons, which is supplemented who wis leaving India. It is as tillowed by that of numerous correspondents whose letters appear in the "O'ar Dr. Mookeriee, "Your kind letter reached me just to I subsequent part of the volume. His own letters show that he wis leaving, and I was olliged to write my answer on boild to have not only acquired a command of clear and if yield English, areamer that he had also assimilated that study independent of choosits and character which is supposed to me a monitor possible to effective of my intercourse with thought and character which is supposed to be a peculiar posession of natives of Great British. His reading and the store of his general information appear to have been, considering his ophis general information appear to have been, consilering his orportunities, little less than marvellous. Mooken e's cours poolence has evidently been well sitted, and the letters given in Mr.

Skrine's volume are so admirably selected, that the ome soon of any one of them wo iff be a distinct loss. The long list of his cirrespoulents include l, among others, Lord Duffriin, Lord Rosebery,
Sir William Houser, Sir Anckland Colvin, Sir Lepel Griffin, Sir
Donald Wallice, Sir Griffith Evins, Professor Vimbery, Colonel
Sir J. C. Ardagly, Dr. Mirra, Mr. G. Venkara Appa Rao, and Mr.
G. Samara Row. The List two were budding poets. One of the grander for the last arisined is a fine, spectimen of distriction. epistles to the last named is a fine specimen of destructive

"But how came you to write such stuff as the opening lines of cont heroic couplets?

* All had to you, my country's faithful friends, From Britain's isle, on which our ideal depends, And where you worked so well for Bharat lind, That we can sure achieve a success grand?

"The very punctuation, carefully as you have in obedien e to merical necessity, punctuated the passage, is tauliv There is not, in an opening siluttion, a single mark of admiration either at the in an opening station, a single mirk of admitation either at the bestimming in the middle, or at the end. The grammar is not better in other respects. What does 'And 'connect? It is a mere stop gip "Can" on hit to be 'might. There is no end to the milingen process. What a succession of pleonasmin will Britan's all and "Britan's Siv yer that it is Bhartt and not Bhitat Does that mend the matter? Do we ordinarily save-Johnson Lind or Collismith had? Why not say at once Brivat's Of come, we hour peculi warning most readers will read and it iver Bharat Ima The crowning blunder Bhitto Let The defit were Bharatina. The crowning blunder is in the common of the high he had no are bettern in the South accurate type acamethy confidence will as an acces of how came to Higher connection which a vertex?

Vive in a group time of the layers which Dr. Mookerper re-civil to make the more to the control of the model of the second of the with from N 13 F1 H in F Spir roy a recent contribution of Mr. (a) Creater of Notes as Creater. It will be remembered on T to and wise Mr. Creater's otter of open ment in the reserve Court demands on T is an in more deligibility for an Alfrick at matche was found like Dr. Moneyey, to write, and that it was only be cured spire that he went area into practical Al te e from Lord Dufferm itter be hiel lett liebie acman tritton esserves to to reproduced

" Bom h Embrow, Rome, Mrv 16, 13)

o M. den Dr. Mookerjee, dense debrekte perditer from ton for I on a concedbrow that to reac very few of my In. But trends to virls whom I feel a winner right, or for whose character and assistes. There greater is port than I have for yours I am still a subgrit reader of 'Reis and Riviver' and in that way have kept my-clt pictry well informed of coerything that has b en going on in India ince my departure.

o en going on in thus ince my departure

"I am, how wir, viry much rifered to leath of your having been so ectiously unwell. An attack upon the chest is always i citical matter, on less you us not very rooust you must have tele it all the more acutely. Nor does it in the least surprise in all your friends is well as your rectors should have been rendered

very anxious about you

That Lord Linedowns should like end approcine you was certain, and I am sure that cour a limitation for him will increase to certain, and I am sure coare our a our coor for family minerace. Go an become better required with him.

"In regard to my own programs of these not much to tell you. We are very ple curity court for Rom, which is one of the most interesting equitals of Europe, serious led by all the most agree, tole most enteresting equitals of Europe, serious led by all the most agree, tole interesting cipit do of Earope, servinoled by all the most agree telesion cities to the continuous force of Air and Licerton's, and one together chaining fatten and society. The winter light owns for the agree of all in the animier bottings, which supply the surface for the control of shalls. Round, now yet, even not a given place to come to more, but by direct control of the property of the control of the c As a consequence I had both right activesom the real realer realer to a consequence. I had again real tractoms on one of a repoint-rious illness when I reached London, which will very a popularings as it over need my from their any of my fire is ing, as it need need me from least was so my original from minute 1 am going to sport on the sax coast in Traly, so the rivial not be until next viai that I shall really get my holiday at home.

and Ava.

"I retain a very agreeable, to allection of my intercourse with voa during the past five years.

"You will receive a copy of my photograph from Colon I Ar dagh. With best wishes.

"Believe me, dear Dr. Mookeriee, Yours futhfully, Lan downe."

One of the first to express his conditence with the family of the decappear, to have won the illiction not only of the dignitary. with whom he came in concact, but also of those in low estate the had his failing, no doubt, but, a was becoming these are not imphasized in the present work. To impression I trapon the mind upon laying down, the book is that of a good and able mad whose career has been gray hically portraved.

(From the I m. , Ir., September 30, 1895.)

It is not that aimed the personne of harissing official duties and finglish Crishan can find their time or opportunity to pay of graceful a tribute to the memory of a native person duy as Mr. F. H. Skrine has done in its brograph, of the late. Dr. Samble Chunder Mooferjee, the well known Bengal journality (Calcuta Thicker, Spink and Col), not us there many who are more worthy of being thus non-mod than the late Patter of Recogni-RAYAL. In a dedication of this column to Sir William Huas h. Ma. Skring observes that graduade was among the motives who in Mt. Skring observes that a curinde were among the morrises who for led him to undertake the begrephy of his distinguished B, when friend, but he felt, too, that adods tree? Was a career who as should not be allowed to presente oblivion. "He cample a race which has undergot present at viruperation from proche forgetful of Burke's sphere in the anaton mix not be improved. The detrators of the B-methy," he iddly "helmig to the classes. The first known nothing of the sex now indicates of the surface provinces, and have been decided by the bruntle sophistics of Macaulty. The second pidge Bingalis, a Machieli delibert commence we concurred who did not the consense who done a strendame, may delibert means the consense who done a strendame, may delibert means the dame in the consense who done a strendame in a delibert means the dame who can be seen as the dame in the consense who done a strendame in a delibert means. Lower Provinces, and here been dezeled by the brinley sophicities of Macaulty. The second pidgs B ngalis at Machiel shift, by the cringing ecoponies who dance citendance many of official anterious, or convertences who, during a centilities intercourse with us in the core of this become of their much vitin without acquiring out. There is without doubt halfs truth in the geograph wear, call we need their rate cythal agree with Mills fine that it would be half to the first and shiftway is promise with lessons for that modeling and shifts and shiftway is promise with lessons for that modeling to in with red In has Internative (perhalt known). Harthy Clearley, the legicy color fill modeling to have to with a millstability which that there is in provided match that out is fixing the modeling by the press Bridman to ke, on the about of real than the millstability which that the millstability with the second marked him out is fixing the about of real than the house of the press Bridman to ke, on the about of real than the house the millstability with the second marked him out to fix in the about of real than the house of the second marked him out to fix means the presenters, how from we humbly choosing as an increasity had depended the many at the alter to the dogs, and we find his father training and such out an object, and as each was alcost to only when the second marked to which is since offs, with within the protest marked for the wind Millstan endition in these times of the marked for which marked in highest ends out the second content of the province which is paste on the color and to the content with marked in highest ends out the color and content with marked in highest ends ends in the color with a content with marked in highest ends ends end in the color with the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the color of the co on 1835, the way so that it is commissione which y parts for which Mi string cells, with reflects reflect underessing take is the wavearders which mored in highest enderweight motific. The rather, is Hearton or the fine old crowing type, or strongly appeared to his to a partial much of an innerma, and hooled with a cell horror upon the propert of his less research the top one of the whole he have to his minute it is mainter in the stronger of the stronger of the whole he can be to the constraint his firming become the straight point is beyon. lar

We dear, however, however is at what the old times or directed, and have medical uniforms from an into the word way. Most recommendate the first and crypton of the terms of the product old the second. He then a task the word had because the Magness, with he were the description of the Magness of the terms of the theory at the her tought the Magness of the control of the terms of the terms of the Magness of the terms o Accident, how yer, however it at what the old among direct d, thome.

"Believe me, my dear Dr. Moderate, yours uncertis, Duffering Ava."

Curronsly enough, the last letter Dr. Moderate letter 2 moderate letter 2 moderate letter 3 moderate letter 2 moderate letter 3 modera

He became one of the "little knot of brilliant vonths who held the banner of Indian pournalism logher than any of their successors have done." A young man of convival temperaturin, keen observation, genial humeur and great orientity, Mookerjee soon became a popular man far out side the corvine of the Patriot. Like Wilter Strage Landor, he "warming host-hands before the fire of lite," but his enjoy ment of a poel things of the world, Mi Skrine tells us, unamplify the tells was hid len to a westung tast, where "a suitern a form and green co-observation on a strack of aethania which," doubtedly emissi this life." Antiopiumites will be interest to left it that Mokerje to end the only piffative for high middly in the drog which they so typorously denounce. It where a countried control this lite? Anti-opiumits will be interest to left that Mokerper bound the only pillarize for a big parally in the drag which they so vigorously denounce. It was a this period of a career the our pourador, who we nothing it at period of a career the our pourador, who we nothing it at period of a career the our pourador, who we nothing it at period of which was then a good deal of a newley. Moderfee formed a laboratory and communicated the results of this experiments to the learner home or also of Chasenes and that his experiments to the learning homosopaths of Chicago and Phila delighed, through whose good others he eventually received the hucke source in those days, but one of which he was very proud from Medicine he turned his attention to Law, and severing his ponnection with the Patrio became an articed clerk with a firm of consistent with the Private bodains a strict clock with a firm of conflict attorney. He was not long in discovering that the proposed spaces is glidly cubined the opportunity of returning Prices work to which he was quitoubtedly admirably smooth Che arrang ment not both to been entered upon when Huish Sajunder was sized with a serious illness, and so for three years thinhha was vie cit, editor of the paper. Then, at the age of han-v-stine, Hures's clouder did, and the Patrus tell into the led be of a your sid pullion one, whose extravagant instincts soon led on a yoursel mirronade, whose extravagant institute occur in the olderige to be knowled sphere of labour. This he found now;) Sequetaryshop of a new Fulukdars' Association at Luck a we in which post it was an important part of his duties to bit pair killy Journal in fuglish, alled the Samachar Having am, in opit 100 to a local Anglo In han journal edited by a bitter opponent drace Taluquars Tau rival Mookerjee's bulliant talents soon and Mookerjee came still further the definition of a rible on burning questions of the he secribated to the Patrot, or which by this time he was become editor.

The property of the product of the p State personal transfer of an preact cools friends, who nearly state personal first political career was not a long one, and he was titled of state to the Parket once more. Almost one of the first probling work he did on he return was an exhiustive but stagularly belief acules of Sir William Hunti's Joseph of Rur I Barrah, and the Litherita and the stagular of the entite William Hunter is once reported to have and that he would gree have be a the cathor of the review than or the book. Wheth for is so or not, the review placed Mooket per at a bound in the growt rank of mellor letters. The ball was then at his fact, the recognition of the late of the lat tim into the head mastership of the Calcar Ten less to his taste than the drudgery sales a land on the became "the centre of a clark" the factor of the ladien intellect of the ens less to his taste than the drudgery ablough he became " the centre of a fifth of the force of the Ladien intellect of the half of the became Secretary of the Ladien intellect of the half of the became Secretary of the Saste matter—the refusal to cat wild invoke it is engagement, and Mookenee theo the half of the the beautiful of the Nawab of Rampur, a position of the ladient of the ladient courters again out of him the beautiful of the ladient cure which was afterwards merged hame was so Img and honourably chame was so I mg and honourably timee and Pessant. While till futing many brilliant u icles to its warm appropriation of arrive dis-tance in the service. Lookerjee of Hill Tipperah. At length, sand for this time nanently. organ, and here by seculiar vein, by ralt with Professor' The second of th al telations with makers of min from eating his dinner as usual, did not prevent Mookerjee history. Lord Dufferin, amongst others, was his constant correstion taking into himself a wife. On the Parest our young pounded the was barely eighteen - soon distinguished himself, and triendship with many of the best known men of the time. The became one of the "hirle knot of bulliant youths who in India, among them Sir Anckland Colvin, Sir W. W. Hunter, pondent." For twelve years Mookerjee enjoyed the confidence and triendship with many of the best known men of the time in India, among them Sir Anckland Colvin, Sir W. W. Hunter, Migor Exans Bell, Sir Salar Jung, Colonel Ardagh, Sir T. Madhava Rao, Dr. (now Sir, W. H. Russell, Colonel Osborn, Mr. Robert Knight, Sir D. M. Wallace, Professor Vambéry, Sir Griffith Evans, Professor Paul Duscis, Sir W. H. Rattigan, and many others. A man of singular board-mindedness, his inherited prejudices were yet continually at wir with the liberal impulses which were the growth of a lite-long devotion to letters. The entire life, says his briggspher, was a protest again title toolish and suicidal doctrine that there is no excellence of life or thought butside the Hindoo "M thom dans were to be found amongst his closest friends, and he would frequently expatiate on the contrast between the exquisite courtesy of high-forth followers of the Prophet and the thinds disguis d bathari m of so many 'educated' Hindoos." His broadth or m mal vision led him to profoundly distrist the so-called "National" movement and the "Congress," and all its works he regarded as "premature and inspired by ignorance of mankind," Nor was he any the less uncompromising in his attitude towards the Cow Protection movement, for he was intimately acquainted with "the secret springs which move the wirepullers," A man of large heart and great qualities, his death from pneumonia in the early spring of left year was a distinct and heavy loss to Indian journalism, and it was an admirable idea on Mr. Skrine's part to put his Life and Letters upon record.

A FEW INCHES OF PLAIN ENGLISH.

NOWADAYS men are doing all sorts of wonders by means of elec-rooms had in much miss and in chemistry. I see by the papers that

A FEW INCHES OF PLAIN ENGLISH.

Nown this men are doing all soits of womens by means of elections, but his machonics and in chemistry. I see by the papers that they expert to be adde to produce real domaineds by in. Perhaps they may; marvels never crase. But we will wat till they do before we crow are that job. Up to this time, anywy, everything that is boin with the and useful is the four of hour work. Even drimmels, it is good for us to have to work. Fen shillings homestly carned is butter for a min than twenty in the shope of a legaty.

The best condition of thouge for any country would be when fan werest could be a uned straight along, without loss or deduction for any resion. But in the present aspect of human affurs this impossible. Whose full it is we cannot now discuss.

Our source of loss, however, is plan enough, and some remoth for it ought to be found. Let eighted and Wells every working in in vertices ten days of illness, pery year, which greate the times of wars to minicipate they so illness, pery year, who are taking of the reversey on year. But mission a side with some ine men of the every year, this ever get does in a fairly show the stituting of the reversey on year. But mission a side with which men are not ill every year, this ever get does in a fairly show the stituting out loss of those was are all. In my given year noting with loss no time at dis, which with a side of the poin and the indiser.

A biding to an experimence of his in 1988 Mr. George Logdon says, "I cell to give un-take via mine of the poin and the indiser.

A biding to an experimence of his in 1988 Mr. George Logdon says, "I cell to give un-take via the point with a strong hour point with the country with the soil has been a fairly show the strong has been to press he tills as in a cite, a date from his home in Wate House Road, Stobbing, not then a trace in the store of the principal store in the country of the point of the point of the point of the point of the point of the point of the point of the point of the point of th

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally admitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Bilious and Nervous Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick, Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizzness and Drowstness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Angelte. Shortness Finshings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Sourvy, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams and all Netwous and Trembling Sensation, &c The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes.

Every sufference earnestly invited to try one box of these Pills, and they will be achieved to be

knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off al humours, and bring about all that is required No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Beechan's Pills for removing any obstruction or irregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soon restore females of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thousinds who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use.

For a Weak Stomich, Impured Digestion, and all Disorders of the Laver, they act like magic, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human oracline.

human machine
The Natives of India will find Beecham's The Natives of India win find perchants Palls the finest mediame ever introduced to their notice, the European residents also will find there of great value for cooling the blood For throwing off fevers and preventing influentitions in hot climates, they stand without carried.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is, BEECHAM'S PILLS have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the world

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

Decenain a Magle 1 orgh Pills.

As a remedy for Congn Front Congn and Chest, Wheeleng, &c., the Chest, Wheeleng, &c., the Pills at and the most of the Pills at and the most of the Pills at and the most of the Pills and the Pills at and marginal and the most of the Pills and the Pills at and marginal pills at that, and the most of the Pills and the Pi

Beecham's Tooth Paste

Will recommend itself bring efficacious and economical it is packed in near arright collapse to Tubes.

NOTICE - G Atherton & Co. will forward in receipt of letter, samples attests, 2e. 912d, at 8 annas is the 12 minus per box, 25, 9d. per 2 in proper per box; Toom Fister 12 annas it each of the collection of the col

Sole Wholesale Agent for India, BURMAH & CLY : N. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAR STREET CALCUTTA

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE .

Cash Rs. 5 Postages, &c. Ans V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

BY F H SKRINE, 108

The volume, uniform with Moderifee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains
PORTRAIL OF THE DOLIOR

DEDICATION

HIS LIFE STORY.

Emerson on biography. Why is it popular?
His ancestry
Both,
Early education
At Garanhatta School
Youthful dialectics

The Hindoo Metropolitan College Teachers and associates. Essays in journalism

Mairies Hurish Chandra Mookerjee

Mutiny pamphlet British Indian Association, His asthma how caused Relieved by opium,

American honours.
Faults of training
Sub-editor of the "Patriot"
Story of the "Patriot"
Attacks the Income Tax.

Scathing strictures.
Lessons of the Mutiny.
Removes to Lucknow.
A love of music.

A rolling-stone Introduced to the Nazim Palace intrigues

Palace intrigues
Baffles his enemies.
Journalism again
Becomes a schoolmaster
A Private Secretary.
A serious dilemma

Disinterested friendship

Disinterested friendship "Mookerjee's Migazine" Dailies with the Lew The Maharaja of Jaipur Work in Topper: His application suppressed Becomes Prime Minister The water question. Thewated by intrigues.

Thwatted by intrigues.
Resigns his post
The "Repttle Press."
A commissioner of partition
Founds "Reis and Rayyet"
"Travels and Voyages in Bengal!

A terra incognita A feast of reason Postpraidial oratiry

Postpi untid oratory
Bre doing up.
A serious diness
The end.
His character
Broad sympathies.
A for to faintict in.
Love of justice.
Charity

Churty Curresity

Consideration for others, Scorn of money. Distiterestedness Love of annuals. A poetical nature

An admirer of Byton. Drawbacks of journ dism. Mookerjee's "Essays." His letters

His correspondents. Aum of this work.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR S C MOOKERIEF

LETTERS LETTLERS
to, from Ardigh, Col. Sir. J.C., to. Arkinson, the late Mr. E.F.T., C.S.
to. Baneijee, Babu Jyotish Chunder from Baneijee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M. to B mergee, Babu Sarodaphasad, from Bell, the late Major Evans from Bhaddaur, Chief of to Binaya Kushna, Raja, to Curlin, Rao B thadur Ananda to Chatterjee, Mr K M. from Clake, Mr s F J from, to Colvin, Sin Auckland to, from Dufferm and Ava, the Marquis of from Evans, the Hon'ble Sin Griffith H P. to Gargult, Bub Kisari Mohan, to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen to Ghosh, Bubu Kuti Prosanna, to Grosha, Bubu Saroda Kant to Hall, Dr Fatz Edward, from Hume, Mr Allan O, from Hume, Mr Allan O, from Hume, Mr Allan O, from Hume, Mr Edward, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Paul, from Kinght, Mr. Hall C. to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed, to Malik, Mr. H. C. to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed, to Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhmaranjan from Myokerjee, Mr. J. C. from Mincherjee, Mr. J. C. from Myncherjee, Mr. J. C. from Myncherjee, Mr. J. C. from Mynchan, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the Lite Colonel Robert. D.

hom M'Neil, Professor H. (San Francisco) to, from Muschidabad, the Nawab Baha door of
from Nyu catina, Mahamahapadhya M. C
from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert. D
to Rao, Mr. G. Venkata Appa.
to Rottig on, Su. William H.
from Rosebery, E. ul. of
to, from Romitedge, Mr. James
from Rosebery, E. ul. of
to, from Romitedge, Mr. James from Russel, Sir W. H.
to Row, Mr. G. Syamala,
to Sastir, the Homble A. Sashiah to Sinha, Babu Brahman inda,
from Sircai, Dr. Mahendialal
from Sircai, Dr. Mahendialal
from Sircai, Dr. Mahendialal
from Sindley, Lorda, of Aldetely from, to Townsend, Mr. Metedith, to Underwood, Captain T. O.
to, from Vimbery, Professor Alminius to Veneratataman th, Mr. G.
Vizian gram, M. thaga of to, from Willace, Sir Douald Makenze to Wood-Misson, the late Toffessor. J.
LETTERS (& TELFORAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from
Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A. K. M.
Amere Hossen, Homble Niwab Syed
Ardagh, Colonel Sir. J. C.
Buetjee, Bibu M. monath math,
Brieffer, Mr. B.
Deb, Bibu Manahai
Dutt, Mr. O. C.
Dutt, Babin Prosaddoss,
Elgin, Lord,
Ghose, Bibu Novendra K.

Dutt, Mr. O. C.
Dutt, Babu Prosaddoss.
Elgin, Lord.
Giose, Babu Novendra K.
Giose, Babu Novendra K.
Giose, Babu Kuh Prasamia
Gracion, Mr. William
Hall Di Fry Edward.
Hardes Vihareres Desar, the late Dewin
Lyre, Mr. A. Krishnaswami
Lambert, Sur Lan
Mihomed, Mordyr Syed
Micro, M. B. G.
Micro, Babu Sodheshur
Moskerjee, Brion Surendra Nath, Muschidaled, the Nawab Bahadoor of Routledge, Mr. Lunes
Roy, Babu E. C.
Rey, Babu Sur Chunder
Sunyal, Stan Dinabundho,
Severa Labrary
Typera, the, Bara Thakur of Vinterty, Professon Arminus, Vizi magram, the Maharaja of
post-Script.

After paying the expenses of the publicalit

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders to be made to the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1, Uckoor Duit's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remarkable man,—Mr. H. Babington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, Private Secretary to the constraint of the distribution accorded, so far as we know, to no other Native journalist in India, of having an English Civilian for his biographer, but the honour is well in keeping with the life of its subject, who for many years enjoyed the personal friendship of distinguished Civilians, of Provincial Governors, and of successive of Provincial Governors, and of successive Viceroys. Mr. Skitne has performed his self-Viceroys. Mr. Skime has performed his self-imposed task in no patronising manner, but in the spirit of one who while delighting to do honour to a great and good man does not hide his foibles. The subject of the biography was not free from faults, and Mr. Skime does not attempt to make him appear otherwise.

It should not be forgotten that there are gamers and namers and that as much difference

It should not be forgotten that there are papers and papers and that as much difference exists between some of the rabid Calcutta pints, and the paper which Dr. Mookeijee founded as between darkness and light. Reas and Rayyet has always been temarkable for the mongled ability, candour and chantableness of its criticisms, and the periodical has enjoyed a degree of influence approached by no other native weekly. The paper was so well managed by its founder as to attact general notice and bring him into confidential relations with the makers of history.

He was no mere sycophant, and his friend-well managed by its founder as to attract general notice and bring him into confidential relations with the makers of history.

He was no mere sycophant, and his friendship with men filing the exalted places of the land was due to no self-seeking endeavours to thust himself upon them but to their own desire to become acquainted with a Native of great originality and personal charm.

Dr. Monkeipe may be placed with the still lamented Justice Telang in the category of those natives of this country who are connecting links between rulers and ruled, and who by their labours, as well as by their personal example and influence, do immense service in welding together the diverse communities of the land in the bonds of Imperial brothershood and loyalty.—The Bambay Gazella, September 28, 1895.

For much of the biographical matter that issues so freely from the press an apology is needed. Had no biography of Dr. Mookeijee, the Editor of Reis and Rayyet, appeared, an explanation would have been looked for. A man of his remarkable personality, who was easily first among native Indian journalists, and in many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at public affors from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivion without some attempt to perpentate his memory by the usual expedient of a "life." The difficulties common to all biographies have in this case been increased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side nuderstood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assumilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mooker-jee rem uned to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his mineral content would have been une of his own Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that win anthing but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal bingraphet would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathles, and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Monkerjee, it was he who should have written his life.

Bengai had promoted store another han as Dr. Mookeviee, it was he who should have written his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly laudatory; it gives on the whole is complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a duli page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Mookerjee are of such minor importance that they might have been opitted with advantage, but not a word of mis own letters could have been spared. To say that he writes idiomatic English is to vity what is short of the trith. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straightforward, without Oriental luxurance or striving as when he is laying down the laws of Interary form to young aspirants to fame. The letter on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piece of critic sin; it is deligate plain-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or reoressing his ardonr.

For much more that is well worth reading we For much more that is well worth rending we must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrinsically it is a nook worth buying and reading.

The Pioneer, Oct. 5, 1895.
The career of "An Imman Journalist" as described by F. H. Skrine of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting.

Monkeijee's letters are murvels of pure diction which is heightened by his nervous style.

The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Beneals but with all those popular not only with Beneals but with all those pleasant manner and which should make it po-pular not only with Bengais but with all those who are able to appreciate merit unmarred by ostentation and earnestness unspoiled by harshness.—The Muhammadan, Oct. 5, 1895. The letters interspersed through are work are both instructive and of great value, while the name of the author will vouch for the excellence of the biography.—The Bee, Oct.

excellence of the biography.—The Bee, Oct. 12, 1895.

The book has a unique interest, being the memoir of a member of the subject race by a member of the ruling body; and as such, it ought to be widely read in every part of India. Dr. Mookerjee was one of the most talented and accomplished men this country has produced. It is impossible not to admire his bright intellect, his cluste diction, and his keen sense of the humourous; and it is indeed fortunate that the Indian public should have a monograph, exhibiting and setting out his best qualities, from such an accomplished writer as Mr. Skrine—The Morning Post of India, October 15, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. . Guaranteed three Years.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nuckel silvern, keyless, short winding, pitent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours withone winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. M., Jio. Dickson of Hapital Rulway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and knocks and jerks. x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16.x Pte. W Hopkins of Sussex Regitorian Dominion Says:—The watch you sent me some partitions and in the says:—The watch you sent me some from Dundum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pietty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific daimonds, Rubires, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mi. G. Smith, Silt Inspector from Sanikutia, says: "A German valued the daimond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pie. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Parandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28. Pie. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regs. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and quaranteed for 3 years, Mind they are guranteed to be of teal solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO.,

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENUINE HOMCEOPATHY. A CARD. Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M.-S

Homaopathic Practitioner,
May be consulted by letter or personally
daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolab Street, Calcutta.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIO PHARMAOY, 36, Lower Chapore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgem, Accountent, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS
for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of ausolicited Testimonials from SPECIFICS

every quarter.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothes, salks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ,

Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.

61, Regent Street, London W.

Bankers : The London & County Bank.

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the ining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A paniphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½/d stamp by A HUFTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPEH

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in savance, really	•••	•••	Ks 12

Hair-yearty			,, 7
Quarterly			,, 4
Montary	•••		Ke. 18
Single or sampl	e Copy	A	us. 0-8
lf n	ot paid in ac	lvance.
Yearly	•		Rs. 18.
Half-yearly	•••	•••	,, 10-8
Quarterly	•••		,, 6-0
Monthly			n 2·4
Single or sampl	е Сору	•••	Aus. 0-12

No additional charge for postage or peor. RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphles

Communications and books and pamphlers (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

LITERATURE POLITICS $A \times D$ SOCIETY REVIEW

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1895

WHOLE NO 697

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNVASSEE. BY JAMES HUTCHINSON. (Continued from p. 482) CANTO SECOND

Our chieftains saw the peril nigh, And armed them, for the coming fight Scindiah and Bhonslah was the cry* Of those, who knew the mystery ; But all, as yet, was veiled in night; At last the storm-cloud burst, and then, They met their enemies, like men, Who combat, for their country's cause Their native customs, and their laws. These might be right, or might be wrong, But then no arm should interpose, If foreign, the however strong, To bring inglorious repose. They fought, but fought, alas, in vain, To free them, from the galling chain, That coiled around them, like a snake; Vain was the effort, vain the hope, As well, might they have tried to cope With fate,-as Wellesley, or Lake ! They quaded at length, and sued to live, And found such peace, as conquerors give ; And yet, had Holkar's arm been joined, A fairer wreath we might have twined; † But mark! his boat is on the stream,

His squadrons, in their seried lanks, Stand murshalled, on its flooded banks,

Their armour glittering, in the beam !

Why turns he back again? A homeless renegade is near, To pour the poison, in his ear, * And India's hopes are vain.

* Holker was invited by Scindish, and the Rijth of Berar, to

The times were changed, the hour was gone, Laswaree, and Assaye were done; † But tameless was his heart, and now, With aimy, worthy of his foe, A countless host, he stood prepared To do, whate'er a leader dared; But now he stood alone ! A soldier, and a soldier's friend, His was an open heart, and hand, And frame, to head such hardy band, And featly could be tend Each noble sport,-could rein a steed, And o'er his saddle, crouch, and bend, And wheel, with lance in rest; Or charge, where wavering foemen bleed, As hundred fields might well attest, If Poonah's fight were yet forgot, Or Qogem's rout remembered not; I

- " Hower was invited by Schman, and the Kijth of Berar, the join their arms in opposing the English, and had agreed to do so; he was in the act of crossing the Nurbinddith, with the whole of his army for that purpose, when he was dissuaded, by that soldier of fortune Amerikan, then a mere adventure; to this circumstance the text must be understood to allude. the test must be understood to allude.

 † When Holkar took the field to oppose the British Government, Scindiah and the Rijah of Berai had both been subdued. The army of Scindiah was disastrously defeated, at Liswaree in the North of Hindoostan, by Lord Lake, on the 1st of November 1803; about the same period,—indeed earlier, on the 23rd of September of the same year, the combined armies of Scindiah and the Rijah of Berai were, in like manner, signally defeated in the South of India, in the battle of Assaye, by the Duke of Wellington, then Major-General Wellindey.
 - in like manner, signally defeated in the South of India, in the battle of Assaye, by the Duke of Wellington, then Major-General Welliesley.

 On both the occasions alluded to, Holkar displayed great gallantry, particularly at Poonah. "His enemies," Sir John Malcolin remarks, "commenced the action, and were successful in forcing a body of house to retreat;—Jesuint Row, the instant he observed this retrograde movement, voltang upon his horse, and addressing a smill party of his men, advised all who did not intend to die or conquer, to save themselves, and return to their wives and children. As for me, he exclaimed, I have no intention of surviving this day; if I do not gain the victory where can I fly to?" Again.—"At Poonah he led the charge on Scindiah's guns, and being dismounted, and pulled from his horse, by an Artillety officer of great strength, he wrestled with his enemy on toot, till one of his attendants came to his aid, and after slaying his autagonist, remonited him."—The same author proceeds—"The Patans of Ameer Khan, who had been the first to turn their backs, at the commencement of the day, were now the most forward to plunder; they had reached the skirts of the city, and began the work of pillage and massacre, when Jesuint Row ordered some of his own guns to play upon them. It was the only order the Patans would have obeyed; but they did not wholly desist, till a party of them trying to force the safeguards, that were sent to protect the place, Jesuint Row, wounded as he was, gilloped to the spot, and slew two or three of them, with his spear. He, on this occasion, as at Oogem, displayed a remarkable degree of personal energy."—Malcoln's Central India.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded, Address THOMAS KEMPE, VITORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Subscrivers in the country are requested to remit by postat money orders, it possible, as the satest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

^{*} The name of Scindish must be familiar to every one, at all acquainted with the affairs of the Eist, as that of a powerful, independent, native prince. He is the head of the Gwalior Government, and may be said to have been in a state of ceaseless waifaire with the British Government, during the Marquess of Wellesley's administration, Bhonstah, pronounced Bhoostah, is the family name of the Rajahs of Nagpore or Berar. The then Rajah of Berar was in alliance with Scindish, when their conjoint armies were defeated at the battle of Assaye.

at the battle of Assaye.

+ The name of Jeswunt Row Holkar is, no doubt, familiar to every one acquainted with the History of British India, about the commencement of the present century.

state, the capital of which is Indore. His whole life was one of unceraing activity, marading, and warfare; in the latter, with some striking exceptions, he was generally successful, until he encountered the British troops in his last campaigns. His subsequent fate is charched in the Peem. sketched in the Poem.

I think, I see him yet ; His swarthy hue, and piercing eye, As dark, as blackest jet; He had but one, and he would sav. In his light hours, all jestingly, That he must be a princely knave, * A thought, thou knowest the vulgar have. He loved the pleasures of the bowl, Th' impassioned glance of black-eyed maid, That looks, into the soul, A thousand things, tongue hath not said, Though it would gladly tell; And yet, no reveller was he, He knew a soldier's duty well, And practised what he knew. In battle field, with peril nigh, In courtly feat of chivalry, No bearing was more stern or high ; Hs when he burled, in hour of woe, Defiance, at his English foe, " He said, his saddle was his throne, That hosts, in war, should find their graves,-" Vast realms his armies overrun, "And whelm, like ocean's waves." Such was the man, who now arose. Our stern oppressors to oppose : Even such was Holkar, such his guise : Perhaps a second, yet, may rise.

VII.

I joined his ranks; he led the way Northward, to meet our enemy; At last we met; we stong at bay, Then turned, and seemed to fly : 'Twas all a feint,-they followed far ; But still we seemed to fly the war; We reached the Chumbul's stream, and then, We turned, and drove them home again, Aye! chased like frightened deer ; And many a maiden's cheek, with fear, Shall blanche, when they shall read, or hear The borrors of thy stream Bunnas, Mokundra's or Biana's Pass, † (To be continued.)

WEEKLYANA.

THE season of amusements in Calcutta was opened by Professor Richard from New Zealand in the Theatre Royal. The first week of his exhibition of free cure of the cirpple and the blind attracted more than full houses. There was danger from overcrowding and from stormy scenes, the Professor exhibiting a temper unsuited to a healing physician. He has now retired to his private chamber where he practises his trade charging for every treatment except the preliminary consultation. On the boards he has been replaced by Mr. Hudson and his new Surprise Party. The Columbia Rink on the Maidan opens to-day. The Twinning 95 96 Company begin their performances at the Coronthian also from this evening.

THEY are preparing to break up camp at Simla. The Viceroy has left and the members of his Council come down by the end of this month, Mr. Ritchie who meant to enjoy his two months' leave on the heights has cancelled it. He returns to Calcutta on the 7th when he resumes office as Chairman of the Corporation,

THE notice inviting applications for the post of Vice-Chairmanship of the Calcutta Corporation, which falls vacant from January next, is out. Since the last two months, in anticipation of the advertisement, canvassing has been going on and the Commissioners are either bespoken or committed. Votes at these elections usually go by the number of visits received by the Commissioners from the candidates : the applicant who can make the largest record is almost sure of success. The manner of appointment, besides imparing the usefulness of the office, reduces its dignity. The heartless dissection to which candidates are subjected is another serious impediment to the good and the true offering themselves. The Commissioners must mend their way if they want a worthy and independent man as their Vice-

SIR Arthur Havelock, the Governor of Ceylon, has left Colombo for England to come out as Governor of Madras in March next. Sir Joseph West Ridgeway from the Isle of Man succeeds him in the Isle of Ravana or the superhuman. It is a lift for Sir Arthur from the Island to the Continent. Sir Joseph continues in the Colonial Service to which he took after his career in India and Ireland.

THE Hon'ble D. R. Lyall, I. C. S, after his retirement in March next, sinks into Superintendent of the Kuch Behar State. He has the appointment, carrying a salary of Rs. 2,000 and other perquisites, in his pocket. The present Manager joined the place from a Commissioner ship in the British Service, Mr. Lyall's descent from the Board of Revenue, is lower still. We have the spectacle of a Lieutenant-Governor joining the India Office as a Secretary. We may before long see a British Governor seeking employment in a Native State.

 MR. C. W. Bolton, on leave, has been Guzetted temporary Additional Commissioner of the Patna Division. Mr. H. A. D. Phillips, Magistrate and Collector of Mongyhr, goes on furlough for one year. Mr. C. R. Marriott, on leave, ceases to be Collector of Customs, Calcutta, and replaces Mr. Phillips at Mongyr, Mr. F. H. B. Skrine being confirmed as Customs Collector, Calcutta.

HERE is a simple mode of preparing vapour baths for the mad-dog-

"When a person is bitten by a mad dog he must, for seven successive days, take a vipour bath—'a la Russe,' as it is called—of 57 to 63 degrees. This is the preventive remedy. A vapour bath may be quickly made by priting three or four red-hot bricks in a bucket or tub of water, and let the patient sit over it on a cane bottomed or willow chair, enveloped in a large blanket, for fifteen or twenty minutes. When the disease is declared it only remures one vapour bath, rapidly increasing to 37 centigrade, then slowly to 53; and the patient must strictly confine himself to his chamber until the cure is complete."

DR. G. W. Leitner writes to the Times :-

DR. G. W. Leitner writes to the Times:—

"Su,—The writer on Indian Affors' in the Times points out the aboutive conclusion of our law in deciding the dispute between the Hindu guardians and the worshippers at Buddha's Temple at Buddha Gryt, which his been taken care of by the Hindu Mohunt, for the time being, in whose compound it is practically situated, ever since the disappearance of the Buddhist faith from India proper. In my opinion, that conclusion—namely, of doing nothing,—is the only one to which one could have arrived in justice to the history and real circumstances of the case. For centuries were Buddhist pligrous protected and even chaished by Hindu priests of the neighbouring monastery, till, first, the Theosophical imposture, or amateur writers on Buddhism, brought on European interference, which, however well meant, is ever disastrous to Orientals and to Oriental institutions. Nothing can, for instance, exceed the grote-que absurdity of our archaeological restoration, the sticking up of innumerable heads of Buddha, like so many flowerpots, all found the enclosures of the temple, in which boxes of sardines, strips of Manchester goods, and similar offerings of European manufacture attest alike the piety and progress towards civilization of the Buddhistic worshippers. Still be heart homeond with the first production of the Buddhistic worshippers.

strips of Manchester goods, and similar offerings of European manificitive attest alike the piety and progress towards civilization of the Buddhistic worshippers. Still no harm happened under the genial supervision of the H ndu Mohunt till the pseudo-Buddhists alinded to interfered, not to protect their so-called co-religionists, but to air their own self-importance.

Christian proselytism also added a cause for further mutation, till at last the Hindu guardian, in a place teening with instruces of religious toleration and good will, seems to have been driven to a self-assertion, if not to a display of anger, which, I believe, was, at the time I knew him, alien to his nature. How intolerable has been the worry inflicted on this personage and how great was his solicitude for members of a rival creed may be inferred from the following, of which I was a witness in 1886;—

I was a witness in 1880:—

Colonel—was an anateur photographer, as also a great supporter of missions. After visiting the Mount I unfortunately met the colonel, who begged me to use my influence with the Hindu guardian in order to compel a number of Buddinst pilgrims then present to kneel before the sacred Bo tree where Buddha had meditated, instead of the usual musing posture, so that the colonel might photograph

^{*} The people of India, for I believe the idea is not confined to the Hindoos, suppose that a person with any obliquity of vision, or defect of that nature, must be a rogue.

[†] All of these names indicate localities, in which the British troops ancountered great disasters, in their retreat under the Hon'ble Colonel Manson, before the armies of Holkar in 1804.

them in an attitude that was really uncongenial to true Buddhists.

The Mohunt declined to induce any one to measure them in an actitude that was really uncongenial to true Buddhists. The Mohunt declined to induce any one to worship in any particular way, and also expressed his disapproval of making it the object of a photograph. Nothing daunted, the colonel forced the poor pilgrims to kneel before the tree, and then triumphantly came back to us with his negative, hoping 'that this photograph would record the last occasion on which these benighted heathens had bowed to stock and in kneel before the tree, and then triumphantly came back to us with his negative, hoping 'that this photograph would record the last occasion on which these beinghted heathens had bowed to sinck and stone, and that in future they would bend their knee only to the Lord Jesus.' I need not describe my indignation and the shocked surprise of the Mohuut, but I still consider that this occurrence is typical of the mixture of hypocrisy, love of sensation, and greed (if the colonel was paid for his photograph) that make up nearly every case of European interference with Native customs that I have known within the last 30 years. Formerly things were better in that respect. So saturated was the air at Buddha Gya with toleration to other creeds that the British Commissioner of the district presented a very fine and large bell, or rather metal gong, to the main Hindu temple, on which his name and gift are inscribed. When I, however, was there a Calciutta paper manufacturer visited it, and noticing a portable sculpture of the sun-god Surya asked the Hindu priests whether he might be allowed to carry it away. 'Your lordship is master,' was the politie reply of native resignation and despair in the presence of a member of the fulling race, but it really only meant, 'You have the power to do so, but we object.' Mr G.—took it away, and I found the priests and worshippers in profound grief at the sacrilege.

Fortunately, I had just dug up a very fine carving of Surya in the bed of a river some miles away, and I presented it to the temple, not, of course, to encourage idulatry, but to remove an impression unfriendly to Europeans, and thus, to our Government. As for the Mohunt wishing to consecrate the statuetie of Buddha, or rather to make an entry of its existence in his records, as it were, before allowing it to be put into the temple, thus was merely in order to prevent its being made an object of traffic, like solumny Buddhist rehes at Gaya that are sold at two to four annas each timely of the supervision of the custodian, n

Very true and wise words these.

LORD Rosebery being asked, if he would support any proposals of the present Government for the reform of the House of Lords with a view to strenthening that body, or whether he was not rather in favour of its abolition, replied to his correspondent :- "I have never advocated the abolition of the House of Lords, but have repeatedly stated that it is impossible without a revolution. With regard to any measures of reform of that House which the present Government may introduce, I propose to see them before expressing any opinion upon them."

THE other day we gave the names of the six richest men in the world, Who are the six richest women? They are Senora Cousino, Miss Hetty Green, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Mme. de Barrios (or more properly speaking, the Marquise de Roda), Miss Mary Garrett, of Baltimore, and Mme. Woleska, the great Russian landowner. Senora Cousino is a South American widow and worth 40,000,000l. sterling. She owns vast expanses of land, many cattle ranges, a fleet of eight steamships, silver, copper, and coal mines, railroads, and many houses, besides personal property in the form of splendid jewels and probably the richest of the lot. The coal mines yield her 17,000%. a month. From her silver and copper mines she receives 20,000l. Her stock farms, and her ranches yield as much as her mining property. Miss Hetty Green, the richest woman in North America, is the mistress of 10,000,000l. The Marquise de Roda is the wife of a Spanish grandee. She is a Guatemalan by birth, and de Barrios, the tyrannous President of the Republic, married her from a convent at the age of fourteen, disposing of the objections of the Mother Superior by locking that lady up. When he was murdered, his widow found herself worth 5,000,000%. Miss Mary Garrett's riches are valued at 2,000,000/, which is in stock of the Baltimore, and Ohio Railroad. Mme. Woleska's wealth comes up to the same figure.

WE read :-

"An Italian newspaper gives an account of an amusing lawsuit which has taken place lately in a Russian city in which German is the prevailing language. One man sued another (it is the Daily News which tells the story) to recover the sum of 50 roubles, the debut having faithfully promised to return the mouey on 'St. Henry's Day.' But having failed to do so for a long time, the lender discovered that the Russian Orthodox Church includes no such saints as St. Henry, and the judge before whom the case was tried was much puzzled as to what verdict he should give. Happily the idea occurred to him that, saint or no saint, All Saints' Day included even the most doubtful, so ---he gave judgment that the 50 roubles should be returned next All Saints' Day."

A clever Judge ! But was not the amount immediately payable on account of the impossible date fixed for repayment?

THE Revue des Missions Contemporaines, a Swiss magazine, tells the following story of a new god worshipped at Date, on the British Gold Coast.

"Daté is one of the stations of the Basel Mission. The town contains 6,000 inhabitants, of whom nearly one-fourth are Christians. A number of years ago a god took up his abode in a cave near Duté. A kid was given to him every few days, and he was consulted as a wise oracle. All that the worshippers had ever seen was an aim stretched out of the cave to seize the offered kid. One day some of those who came to present the usual sacrifice resolved to see more of the god. When the aim appeared they seized it, and diagged out of the cave a min, a wretched-looking object, his nose eaten away by ulcers, his body covered with sores. The men who had diagged him out were terrified, and fled to the town. No one understood that they had ocen deceived. The monster was a god, the mighter because on hideous, And they came out to the cave to appease him. Full of with at the affiont put on him, 'the god' commanded his devotees to destroy then crops and their provisions, promising them to take them back unto favour and save them from hunger. The infantated people did as he commanded; but he them disappeared, and left them to suffer a terrible famme. The god betook himself to a town not far off-Kiakya, in German territory. To the people of Kiakya he told his tale—of divine wisdom and power, of indignity and of evenge. They believed him, assigned him a cave as a dwelling, and became his wortshippers—they and the inhabitants of a wide distirct round the town. The heathen of Daté, learning what had become of their missing god, earnestly sought by sacrifices and quelantiments to bring him back. At last, by the mistruction of a girl instigated by the heathen priests, a him an accretice, a slave bought at a distant market, was offered up to propritate the offended god. The slave was strangled; then set upright in a trench; earth heaped up round him and over him, and an altar thus constructed. But still the god did not return. The horrid minder leaked out. It came to the eass of the British Governor, who had the altar demoli

••• THE question whether women ought to be allowed to study and practice medicine, has been answered in the negative by Professor Albert of Vienna University.

Albert of Vienna University.

"The Professor argues that all the works of human society that surround us are the creation of the male sex; that men have never been thoroughly comprehended by women; that the proner sphere of woman is maternity; and that the study of medicine, though perfectly possible to woman, does not repay her the immense pain strosts to master it. For she is, for the most pair, hysically and psy incally incapable of practically pursuing the profession, so that the touture of the many years required to master it is usually thou away, and goes uniewarded. The soon politican, the method is being, the animal of culture, is exclusively the inde. But the Piessor goes on to argue that the quadifications which women including hossess for dealing with the sick may be nitised in another way. He proposes to make ladies who have received a certain amount of edit into the regular assistants of physicians and surgeons, in his talk as well as out of them. For this purpose they should receive its inclination in the elements of anatomy, physiology, hygiene, comisty, and natural science, and this should be followed by theoretical or practical instruction—say, for a couple of terms in surgery, generology, and midwifery. They would then be qualified to be doctors' is istants, and should be distinguished from the present class of but putually instructed midwives and nurses only practically trained, and without any scientific knowledge."

In America, they are discussing the question-What class furnishes the largest proportion of its own members to the tanks of vice? In other words, what occupations seem to most fivou this downward tendency. Of twenty-two answers, sixteen say "fictory girls," "shop girls," "sales women," "waitresses;" four say "domestic servants;" and two "those too idle to have any occur ition." Thus, it is said, it is the women who are engaged in public occupations who are most in danger. Dr. Woods Hutchinson, in a paper on the Economics of Prostitution, read before the American Academy of Miedicine at Baltimore, says :

"Again, we have the commercialization of women as a powerful factor in the production of this vice. It is based upon a trade instinctly pure and simple. Space does not permit me to enter upon the subject

here, but I wish to record my solemn and sorrowful conviction that the woman who works outside of the home or the school pays a fearful penalty, either physical, mental, or moral, and often all three. She commits a biologic crime against herself and against the community, and woman labor ought to be forbidden for the same reason that child labor is. Any nation that works its women is damned.

THE following is going the round of the Indian press :-

"A point of law rather important to Europeans in India was settled in the Chief Court of the Punjab on the 17th instant (Sep.) by M. Justice Frizelle and Mr. Justice Rivaz. It appears that Mr. McGregor, of Simla, was charged before the District Magistrate by the Minicipal Committee with disobeying a Municipal order. Mr. McGregor claimed to be tried by a jury, but the District Magistrate disallowed the claim. He proceeded with the trial and sentenced Mr. McGregor to a fine of Rs. 50, and also a further continuing fine of Rs. 680. Accused appealed to the Chief Court through his counsel, Mr. J. R. E. Gouldsbury, and after hearing the argument Justices Frizelle and Rivaz quashed the whole of the proceedings, on the ground that Mr. McGregor, having claimed to be tried by a jury, the District Magistrate could not proceed with the trial except by jury."

The report is not sufficiently full for any comment. We may still

The report is not sufficiently full for any comment. We may still remark that the magistrate provoked the appeal by his order of continuing fine. But if every offence under a Municipal Act were to be tried by jury, the Act must be a dead letter to the privileged.

An Italian, named Ansoldi, born blind, recently graduated with high honour from the Florence Istituto de Studi Superiori, the school for post-graduate university work. He had chosen for his thesis "Compensations in the senses of the Blind." It is an important contribution of new material to psychology.

A CHILD with a fondness for its own dirt was cured of the propensity in a month by Veratrum 2.

CREMATION is progressing slowly in Christian Europe. The Zurich Cremation Society numbers 1,97 members with funds amounting to 10,200 fr. Last year forty corpses were cremated. The charge for each cremation is 65fr. for persons dying in Zurich, and 95 for others. In Paris, the numbers of cremation were—1889, 49; 1890, 121; 1891, 134; 1892, 159; 1893, 189; 1894, 216; 1895 (four months), 75.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE leading London newspapers attach the greatest gravity to the news from the Timer' Hongkong correspondent regarding the concessions made to Russia by China, and say that, if the statement is true, Great Brittin will be bound to intervene. The Engush Foreign Office is absolutely without any information on the subject so fai. The Daily Graphia announces, on what it says high official authority, that the outline of the treaty has no resemblance whatever to the actual facts. The Russian Embassy positively denies the Times' telegram regarding the Port Aribur treaty. The Temps is convinced that the report published by the Timer represents the future if not present position of affairs, as it is impossible to suppose that Russia would neglect such a unique occasion for profiting by the UNEASINESS continues to be felt regarding the political situation, more specially in respect to the relations between Great Britain and Russia. The tone of the European Bourses on Thursday was characterized by nervousness. A Russian official communique declares that the political outlook is tranquil, and therefore not calculated to inspire any uneasiness.

condition of China.

A LITTLE cloud appears in the African Continent. The swarthy King of Coomassie is reported to have rejected the British ultimatum, saying that he prefers war, for which he is fully prepared.

DURING the debate, in the French Chamber of Deputies, on the Southern Railway scandals, M. Ribot denied the charges made by the Socialists that the Government was hushing up the affair in order to screen certain Deputies. Nevertheless the motion of M. Rouannet for fresh prosecutions was carried by a majority of 130. The defeat of M. Ribot's Ministry was due to a coalition of the Socialists and Conservatives. The Cabinet thereupon resigned. President Faure accepted the resignation.

In the treaty concluded between France and Madagascar, the Queen accepts an absolute protectorate under the French. A Resident General has been appointed at Antananarivo, and France will control the foreign relations and internal financial affairs of the country. She also reserves the right to maintain an adequate military force. France, however, assumes no responsibility for anterior treaties or concessions made by the Queen. At the instance of General Duchesne, the Queen has appointed the former Minister of the Interior as Premier. M. Hanotaux, the French Foreign Minister, insists on France upholding the treaty with Madagascar, while several Radical Deputies desire simple annexation. The difference caused delay in the formation of a new Cabinet which has just been formed by Mr. Bourgeois belonging to the Radical party. M. Donmer has accepted the portfolio of the Minister of Finance, and M. Bourgeois takes that of the Interior. The portfolio of Foreign Affairs has not yet been filled. M. Hanotaux, to whom it was offered, declined it, because he objects to the annexation of Madagascar, which is part of the policy of the New Cabinet.

SIR Philip Currie, British Ambassador, had an audience with the Sultan on the 27th October, which lasted an hour, during which his Majesty gave satisfactory assurances that he would faithfully execute the modified reforms in Armenia agreed to by the Powers, and would appoint worthy and competent officials to supervise them.

SERIOUS disturbances, accompanied by bloodshed, have taken place in different parts of Armenia. At Erzingjan alone sixty Armenians lost their lives. The Turks affirm that the Armenians killed the Imam at Erzinghean. Hence arose the slaughter. A German eye-withness states that a brutal murder of a number of Armenians was committed at Trebizonde on the 8th instant. He estimates that six hundred were killed. Russian spectators confirm the German account and state that seven to eight hundred male Armenians were butchered and that the adjoining villages were burned by the troops, aided by the police.

THE Turkish Embassy positively denies the Standard correspondent's telegram regarding the summary trial and execution of fifty members of the Liberal party.

SERIOUS fighting between the Mussalmans and the Armenians took place at Billis, in Asiauc Turkey, on Friday last week. The Turks assert that the Armenians attacked the mosques. Many were killed and wounded in the encounter. Another telegram says that the Turks have killed 150 Armenians at Baibout in Armenia and have outraged and mutilated a number of women. Many houses were burned. Similar scenes were enacted at Gimushdagh near Trebizond.

ACCORDING to Turkish accounts there are 26,000 insurgent Armenians in the mountains in the Zeitun district.

STILL on the Turk! Age has not softened Mr. Gladstone's hatred of the Sublime Porte. He sticks to his bag and baggage treatment of the unspeakable. In a letter to Madame Novikoff regarding the Armenian settlement, he says that the wretched Sultan, whom God has given as a curse to mankind, is triumphant, with Russia, France and England at his feet. The letter concludes by expressing a hope that God will send a speedy end to the official Turk and all his doings. If the Almighty can endure the Turk, why not Mr. Gladstone, great though he is?

LORD Salisbury, speaking at Watfords on October 30, said that he would endeavour, for the sake of continuity, to execute the foreign policy of his predecessors. He regretted the utterances of Mr. Gladstone in regard to the Sultan and the Armenian question, which, he said, added to the difficulties of the Powers in their negotiations for reforms. He announced that social amelioration would be the chief home question of the Government in the coming session. The lowering of prices due to free trade has, he said, almost killed agriculture in several countries.

THE Japanese have commenced the evacuation of the Lianting Peninsula Eight millions sterling, an instalment of the Chinese war indemnity, was paid to Japan in London yesterday.

ADVICES from North China state that the Mohamedan insurgents have captured Lanchanfu, the capital of Kan-su, and are defeating the Chinese in every direction. The secret societies of Central China have joined the Mohamedans.

THE Emperor of China has conferred the Order of the Double Dragon of the first class on two Russian foreign officials, M. Chichkine and Count Kapniste.

CHINA has granted Germany a Crown concession at Tientsin.

THE Novoe Viennya states that the King of Corea has chosen another queen. The King has assumed the title of Emperor, against which the Powers have protested. Miura, the Japanese Minister, has been recalled from Seoul, and airested on his arrival at Huoshima.

It is reported from Teheran that a Russian company has been formed with a capital of two and-a-half million roubles to build a road to connect Teheran with the Cispian Sea, the Russian Government guaranteeing a dividend of five per cent.

THE betrothal of Princess Maud of Wales to Prince Charles, second son of the Crown Prince of Denmark, is announced.

THE Duke of Cambridge has taken his farewell of the Army in an order stating that his connection with it ceases, after 53 years' service, with the deepest sorrow. His Royal Highness rehearses the important changes which have taken place in the Army, and hands his successor a force whereof the Queen and the Empire are justly proud.

IMST Saturday Lord Elgin drove to Fattehpur-Sikri, 24 miles S. W. of Agra. The Viceregal party left Agra at seven in the morning in a barouche and a brake of the Royal Actillery buttery drawn by teams of artillery horses which in two hours and half completed the distance. Mr. E. W. Smith, of the Archæological Survey, N -W. P, author of The Moghul Architecture of Fathpur-Sikri, acted the guide. The city abounds in marvellous monuments of Indian architecture and decorative art, no two buildings being alike in design. The whole day was devoted to the magnificent turns of Alchar's palace. On Monday there was a parade of the Bikanir camel corps, 440 strong, under the command of Thakur Dip Sing. The corps turned out very well, causing surprise by the smartness of the men, the condition of the camels and the steadmens of their movements. One section of the corps was in marching order, each sowar having a British soldier of the East Surrey Regiment on the back seat of the camel, together with food, ammunition, clothing, water, and every other requisite for both men and camels for five days. It is the only camel corps in India,

In the afternoon Lord Elgin received visits from the Maharaja of Bhadawar, the Raja of Manipuri, the Raja of Awa, the Raja of Tirwar and Sett Luchman Das, the Muttra banker. In the afternoon, the Viceregal party drove out about five miles to Sikendra and the tomb of the Emperor Akbar. Next day, the Fort and the Jail claimed the Viceroy's attention. The day closed with a visit to the Taj in moonlight. On the 31st, the Viceroy arrived at Gwalior and was given, a right royal welcome. The young Maharaja, now 19 years of age was present at the railway station to receive Lord Elgin. From the station, they drove to the Guest House where the Viceregal Party took their quarters. Soon after the Maharaja paid the usual ceremonial visit.

Yesterday the Viceroy reviewed the Imperial Service Civaliy. In the afternoon Lord Eigin returned the formal visit of the Maharaja at the Jai Bilas Palace.

WHEN the present Home Member takes over charge of the Lieutenant Government of Bengal, Mr. J. Woodburn succeeds Sir A Mackenzie in the Vicetory's Council. It was again and again rumoused and contradicted that the present Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government would be sent to the Central Provinces. It now appears that Mr. C. J. Lyall, M. A., LL. D., C. S. I., C. I. E., Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, now on furlough, gets the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces. Where then shall the Hon'ble H. J. S. Cotton, G. S. I., go? To Assam? Or, where?

A FUND has been opened for perpetuating the memory of Haridas Viharidas Desai, of Nadiad, the late retired Dewan of Jinoag idh. The deceased was a worthy in in and deserves the honour. He was not much known in this Province, but when in 1933, he came out as a member of the Royal Commission on Opium, he made the best impression. It was with great regret that we heard of his death in June last. Subscriptions are being received by Vazirsanib Bahavadinbhai Hasambhai, C. I. E., Junagadh.

Divan Bahadui Manibhai Jashhai, Baroda. Chumial Sarabhai, Esq., Ahmedabad

Ranchhodbhai, Udayarama, Esq., Bhuj. Purushottamaraya. S. Zda, Esq., Junagadh.

Rao Bahadur Motibhai Rughinathji Panda, (of the firm of Panda Goenliji Kusinatha.) Nadiad.

Manassukharama Suryarama Tripathi, Esq., Girgaum, Bombay, and the Bank of Bombay, Bombay.

The Subscription List for the Huidas Memorial began as follows :

			167.
H II, the Maha Ruo of Cutch	•••	•••	000,1
H. H. the Navabs thib of Junagadh		•••	2.000
H H, the Maharaja Sahen of Idar	• • •	*	500
Vazirsahib Bahayadinbhai, C. I. E., Jun	agadh	•••	1,500
Divan Bahadur Manibhai Jasbhai, Bar	oda		1,000
Rao Bahadur Chumlal Surabhai, Ahm	edab id		1,000
Manassukharama S. Tripathi, Esq., Be	mbay		1,000
Purushottamaraya S. Zida, Esq., Juna	gadh	•••	60၁
Rao Bahadur Motilal Lubhai, Bhuj		•••	500
Ranchhodbhai Udayarama, Esq., Bhuj	i		500
Chhotalal Sevakarama, Esq., Bhuj	•••	•••	500
Ratilal Chhotalal, Esq., Bhavnagar			500
A friend		•••	500
Rio Bahadur Motibhai Righunathji P	anda, N.	idiad	400
Harilal Damodar, Esq., Bhavnagar		• • • •	300
Govardh enarama M. Tupathi, Esq., 1	Bombay		300
Tanasukharama M. Tupathi, Esq., 1	Bombay		250
Dr Moulal Kushali, Junagadh			250
Bipilal Manekalal, Esq., Bhavnagar			200

BABU Annrup Chandra Mookerjee of Juna has become the manager of the estate or Babu Gopal Lil Seal, of the Colootolla Seal family.

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science. 210, Bow-Bazer Street, Calcutta.

(Session 1895-96.)

Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjee, B.A.,M.B.,C.M., on Tuesday, the 5th Inst., at 6 to 8 P.M. Subjects: Histology—Muscle; Physiology—Alimentation.

Alimentation.
Lecture by Bibu Ram Chandra Datta, E.C.S., on Wednesday, the 6th Inst., at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Classification of the Hydro-Carbons. Lecture by Babo R im Chandra Datta, P.C.S., on Friday, the 8th Inst. at 4-15 P. M. Subject: Hydrides of the Hydro-Carbons.

Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Friday, the 8th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subjects: Chemical Physiology—Carbo-Hydrates.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR, M.D.,

110norary Secretary.

November 2, 1895.

As Superintendent of the Zemindaries of Raja Ranajit Sing of Nashipore, Babu Anurup Chandra achieved success. Unwilling to stand in the way of his advancement, his late employer has parted with him reluctantly. Raja Ranajit is a young man of promise. Already he has made a mark by his judicious liberality, business-like habits, and urbanity of disposition. Babu Gopal Lal makes an acquisition, for his new manager, besides being the scion of a respectable and well-known house, has business experience and familiarity with the details of Zemindari management. We hope Babu Seal will stick to his choice. He is young and may yet make hunself a useful member of society. He has good examples in his own family—in his uncle Heralal and grand-fathet Mathal.

A USEFUL institution is the "Hindu Sitkara Samiti," It is a necessity of the time. Its object is to assist Hindu families in the last rites to their dead. In a large town like Calcutta, where next door neighbours do not always know each other, great difficulties are encountered in the removal of corpses to the burning ghat. The bodies cannot be touched by other than castemen. Sometimes delicate ladies may be seen leaving the Zenana and exposing themselves to the public gaze in discharging the duties, at the last moment, of affection and piety to husbands or brothers, mothers or other dear kinsmen or kinswomen. The accomplishment of these demands a large measure of physical endurance. The "Hindu Satkára Samiti" undertakes, on notice, to supply the required number of hands. In the case of the poor who are unable to meet the costs, the "Samiti" finds them from its own funds, The Secretary, Prasanna Kumar Mookerjee, the soul of the institution, is a man of energy. He was formerly a Police officer During the last epidemic he disposed of a number of dead bodies. Such an institution should not be allowed to die from want of support. The very etymology of the word Satkdrapious act-shows that, from a Hindu point of view, assistance freely rendered is highly mentorious. Within the few months of the " Samiti's" existence, Babu Prasanna Kumara has had some strange experiences. The relatives of a poor Hindu, who were unable to find the costs of his cremation, had a proposal made to them by a prous Mussulman that he was willing to stand the expenses of the deceased's disposal provided it was by interment and provided also the deceased was allowed to be sanctified by the Kalma according o the Koran. Babu Prasanna Kumar heard of the matter by accident and, instead of burial, cremation took place according to the rites of the Hindu religion. In the anneal the "Samiti" has put forth occurs the well-known Sanskrit verse which says that the thinnest fibres, united together, may bind an elephant in rut, and little drops, by force of number, may fill the largest tank to overflowing. We hope the sense of this ancient saw will not be lost on our countrymen.

THE arrangements made for the Bengal District Road Tramway Company (Howigh-Sheakhalla) bunted, are satisfactory. The capital is Rs. 5,40 000, divided into 5,400 shares of Rs. 100 etch. A minimum interest of 312 per cent is government. The calls have been judiciously distributed Rs to to be paid with application, Rs. 20 on allotment and the balance to three calls of Rs. 31, Rs. 20, and Rs. 20 within approximately 3, 6, and 9 months respectively. The Directory is strong, consisting of Sir T. A Martin, Mr. P. F. Hedger, Mr. R. N. Mookerpee, Rar Laht Mobert Sinha, Bahadur, Babu, Nandalat Gossain, and Babu Harendra, Kishna, Scookergee. The promoters of the scheme, it seems, have paid some attention to our remarks in a former issue about the appointment of directors from among families of local influence and expensesce. From the estimates prepared, the revenue receipts are expected to be not less than 1132 per cent, on the total capital. The portion of the Hooghly district which the line will tap abounds in all sorts of articles required for the Calcutta market. Writing so far back as 1882, the Comia ssioner of Burdwan said that "there is no doubt that the central and western portions of the tract lying between the Hooghly and Damooda Rivers is extremely populous and fertile, and that it deserves, and would amply repay, opening up by a Railway." The guage will be 2 feet, and the length for the present will be 20 miles. Starting from Telkalghat at Howrah the line will pass through Bantra, pass along the old Benares Road, make a diversion through Janas, then run to Sneakhalla through some intermediate villages that are well known. There are some jute and paddy marts, and some large and well-supplied vegetable hats that will be tapped. There are two important centres of cotton fabrics also, such as Kharsarye and Rijibalhat. The wares of these two places are well known in Calcutta. The passenger traffic also will be respectable. The District Board of Howrah and that of Hooghly have both granted the Company the free use of as much of the Roads within their respective jurisdictions as the line may take up. The Hooghly Board have granted a favourable concession, viz, that on five miles of the line being declared open, the Board will pay to the Company, by way of interest on the capital paid up and spent, such a sum of money as may make the net profit equivalent to a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent, per annum. The maximum for which the Board will thus be liable is Rs. 450 per annum per mile. In seturn the Board will have a third of the profits in excess of 10 per cent, per annum. By far the best inducement to shareholders is that Messis, Martin and Co., as contractors of the line, will pay during construction 31/2 per cent. interest on payments to them.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full particulars, including many unsolicited testimonial and newspaper press natices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Augil Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, Londou, S. W.

Four out of the six Directors, it will be noted, are native gentlemen of respectability. The business capacity of Sir T. A. Martin and Mr. Hedger, and their reputation in the commercial world of Calcutta, are a guarantee of success.

THE Coroner's inquest in the Commercial Buildings tragedy was as mysterious as the tragedy itself. It throws no light. At any rate, the morning papers report little or nothing. The verdict of the jury is that W. Collingwood had died at the hands of J. G. Pugh, under what circumstances or from what motive there is no evidence to shew, and J. G. Pugh thereafter took his own life.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, November 2, 1895.

PROSECUTIONS FOR OBSCENITY.

THE recent prosecution of a Hindu physician in the Calcutta Police Court for what was considered improper advertisements, has, as we have already reported, ended in the withdrawal of the complaint, the accused undertaking to modify or suppress the objectionable passages. He had translated literally into English some verses from ancient Hindu medical works of accepted authority. The translations appeared in a catalogue of medicines named and prepared according to directions in such treatises as fall within that branch of Sanskrit literature which is somewhat loosely styled "Ayurveda." The catalogue not only names the medicines but indicates their virtues, describing the diseases in which they are prescribable. In the preface, the Kaviraj says, "In mentioning the medicines, great care has been taken to describe the diseases in which they are administered. The peculiar feature of this catalogue consists in the description of those diseases. In many cases the language has been reproduced of the medical Rishis of India. This catalogue is not, therefore, a mere trade publication. It will repay perusal. It is practically a small treatise on disease and medicine for domestic reference.

No objection has ever been taken to the publication of the original works on Hindu medicine. In fact, those works have been repeatedly published both at Calcutta and Bombay. So long as the Hindu system of cure continues to be professed and practised, those works will certainly be read and followed. Even if it perishes outright, notwithstanding the many visible signs of a revival, in its competion with the Western mode of cure, the medical literature of mediæval India, that is exceedingly voluminous, may not yet die. To the historian of medicine and medical science, that literature will never fail to be of interest. Whether the Greeks derived their medical lore from India or not, resemblances occur between the Greek and the Hindu medical systems that are certainly striking. The history of medicine has yet to be written, and when written, the connection between Greek and Hindu medicine will form a very important chapter. To stop the publication of Hindu medical books, so long as they have readers and so long as the history of medicine, showing its gradual development, has an interest for mankind, cannot but be an unmitigated evil. No medical literature can be free from things that are unmistakably prurient or obscene to the general reader. Yet it is not only tolerated but also carefully studied for the sake of its scientific value. Hum unity is subject to ugly diseases. Writers on medical science cannot pass them over for fear of offending the modest. A professedly medical catalogue, which mentions the drugs in use among the profession, can no more omit the remedies than a professed work on pathology ignore the diseases. So long, therefore, as man is obliged to bear with those maladies, he must bear with their descriptions also in language.

In judging of the pruriency of a publication, there is one important consideration that should not be forgotten. That consideration is connected with the place where the objectionable matter occurs. Dit is matter in the wrong place. Every dictionary contains words and definitions that are not only disgusting but absolutely obscene. The only cyclopædia of Sanskrit lore, the Sabdakalpadruma, contains extracts from Rishi literature that are sickening. Nobody, however, whatever the measure of his prudery, can call for the suppression of works like these. We have seen, again, that works treating of pathology or therapeutics, or surgery or obstetrics, or such as are distantly connected with these brauches of knowledge, cannot be objected to for matter that may, from a general point of view, be regarded as indecent. The same consideration applies to medical catalogues. Their object is to inform suffering humanity of the remedies recommended in recognized treatises. They are intended to inform and not excite pleasure as in imaginative literature.

We must not be supposed to advocate the cause of obscenity. We make general observations irrespective of any particular case There can be no possible objection to the suppression of such advertisiments, for example, as do not come from regular professional men having a reputation to lose but are paraded by quacks offering nostrums to men wedded to sensuality but desirous of bailing its inevitable consequences. The law should reserve its rigour for these. It is very much to be regretted that most of the vernacular papers, week after week, come out with much filth. Here is a field for the Police to shew its activity and set the public morals right. The public theatres are under a censorship, but when will the authorities begin to examine the advertisement columns of the daily and the weekly press which are not often guardedly worded?

Wide as the subject is of pruriency in literature, we cannot close our remarks without some reference to the ancient or sacred literature of India. That literature, judged by modern canons, must be held as containing much that is undoubtedly filthy. There are passages in the two great epics that cannot be read in the class room or a family circle. Many of the poems of mediaval India, again, contain passages of pronounced pruriency. For all that, nobody can demand the suppression of those grand works of genius. The language being obsolete, they can be read by only the learned few. For this reason their suppression is un-desirable. Then again, as works of art, they are immortal for their grandeur and beauty. The palace of marble that the Danava architect built for the heroic sons of Pandu has passed away. The very site of that wonderful monument of engineering is unknown. The glowing description, however, which the genius of Vyasa has left of that structure is still as fresh as ever, and thousands read it with pleasure and profit to this day. For the sake of that pleasure and profit which every page of the book affords, every one ought to put up with it occasional blemishes.

These remarks apply with equal force to the ancient and sacred literature of other countries. Examine them in even the translations of modern scholars; their deformity is equally apparent. The historical or antiquarian as also the artistic value, that attaches to them, should prevent their suppression or even mutilation. The sensible portion of the world is agreed that the mischief that may be expected from them is very little, compared with their general utility. Some of the universities of Europe at one time insisted upon what were called "expurgated editions." Fearing, however, to mangle outright those great works of genius, the expurgators sometimes placed the objectionable passages together in the appendix. The folly of the course became soon manifest. Byron has immortalised became soon manifest it in one of his scathing stanzas. The world, as a matter of fact, has not become a whit worse for permitting the works of Horace to appear in the form that he gave them. The classical myths have done more good to mankind by their general merits than mischief by their lusciousness. As regards modern literature, even Swinburne and Zola have not only been tolerated but come to be respected for their

Another point is the difficulty of deciding what really constitutes obscenity to be put down. The celebrated case of Stockdale vs. Hansard may be referred to in illustration. A Parhamentary committee had pronounced one of Stockdale's publications obscene, deriding, in cutting language, its pretensions to be considered as a medical work. The report they submitted was published by Hansard, the authorised publisher of both Houses. Stockd de sued Hausard. Experts were examined. Most of them deposed to the scientific character of the publication, The verdict of the Parliamentary committee was upset. The jury held that Stockdale's publication was not obscene, and the judge, Lord Denman, agreeing, heavy damages were awarded against Hansard The case is not more famous for the dispute to which it led between the judicature and the lower House of Parliament than for the reversal, by a competent jury, upon the evidence of experts, of the opinion of a committee of the Commons. This feature of the case is somewhat clouded by the gravity of the other issues that arose out of it. Nothing; however, is more certain than that prosecutions for obscenity in literature or art should not be hastily commenced. Art, again, has especial canons. Many statues and pictures, condemned in haste or ignorance as objectionable, have been saved for the admiring world by the common sense of juries acting on the evidence of experts.

In India there ought to be a regular department for instituting prosecutions for obscenity. No Police Commissioner, however able, unless properly assisted, can form a correct opinion. The opinions of experts should be called for before the aid of the law is invoked. Convictions by Magistrates upheld by Sessions Judges have been set aside by the High Courts. A public prosecution is a grave evil to the victim. A verdict of acquittal may mean financial ruin to the acquitted. Then, again, hap-hazard prosecutions terminating in the triumph of the accused, cause much mischief in other directions. Considering how narrow is the line that separates the obscene from the unobjectionable, such trials should never be held without the aid of juries. The fate of Vidyasagar or Pandit Tarkavachaspati, in the Court of an Indian Magistrate, would have been uncertain in a prosecution based upon the publication of Kumara Sambhava or Birth of the War God, which is universally recognised as one of the best fruits of Kalidasa's genius.

THE OCHTERLONY COLUMN.

CALCUITA'S PRINCIPAL LANDMARK.

A well-known London merchant once assured me that he had passed St. Paul's Cathedral at least twice daily for forty-two years, and never seen the interior of that august pile. Clearly public buildings resemble prophets in receiving scanty appreciation in their native place. If a hundred denizens of the Ditch were asked what they considered to be the most conspicuous object within that imaginary enclosure, ninety-nine would probably answer "the Ochterlony Column," but the percentage able to give a connected account of its history would be very much smaller. The present moment, when it is receiving a much-needed coat of colour, is an opportune one for recalling to the public memory the vicissitudes that attended its construction.

Sir David Ochterlony deserved better of his country than many who have been honoured with even more pretentious monument. He belonged to a race which has had a very large share in the task of laying the foundations of the Empire. Though bern at Boston, then the capital of an English colony, he came of shire family. Arriving in India as a cadet in the Company's army in 1776, he climbed to the rank of Colonel after twenty-seven in 1770, he climbed to the rank of Colonic arter (wenty-seven years' service. In 1804 he defended Delhi against the force of Holkar, but his opportunity for gathing supreme distinction did not come till 1814, when the aggressions of the Nepalese drove the Matquis of Hastings into a declaration of war. Sir David was appointed to the command of an Army which invaled the Western portion of the long trip of Terai, and he stormed one hill fort after another and compelled the arrogant Gurkhas to sue for peace. A draft treaty was presented to the Durhar: but with characteristic duplicity, the Maharaja delayed executing it, and strove hard the while to augment his forces. The Governor General was not to be trifled with. During the Waterloo year 33,000 men were poured into Napal from Tirhut. They penetrated to a spot within easy striking distance of Katmandu, and the Maharaja "climbed down." The treaty of peace and alliance which was then executed has continued in force for eighty years.

In 1816 the grand old General received the dubious honour of a baronetcy. He survived to render excellent service to the State as Divisional Commander during the operations against the Pindaria and Mahrattas in 1817-18, which were conducted on a scale never since attempted in India. He died at Mirat, full of years and since attempted in India. He died at Mirat, full of years and honours, in 1825. His country men resolved to keep the veteran's memory green by a permanent memorial, and a public meeting was held at the Town Hall which appointed a Committee to collect subscriptions. The movement was headed by Sir Charles, afterwards Lord, Metcalfe, a name great and venerable in the Bengal Civil Service, and he was actively assisted by others of light and leading in their day. Rs. 40,000 was soon subscribed, and an amateur architect was uncarthed in the person of Mr. Charles Knowles Robison, one of the Calcutta Magistrates, who had travelled and studied much. He submitted two sets of designs. travelled and studied much. The submitted two sees of designs, The first was for a Grecian Column on the purest lines, and was warmly advocated by Mr. Robison. The second had a Saracenic character, with a very peculiar variation. The upper port on was copied from an ancient Syrian edifice; the lower was a reproduction of an exquisite plate in the colossal work on Egyptian archition of an exquisite plate in the colossal work on Egyptian architecture published at the expense of the French Government, by Denon, one of the awants who accompanied Napoleon during his memorable expedition to the Delta. The Committee were, happily for Calcutta, induced to choose the Oriental design by the General's well known predilection for Mohamedans.

The work had hardly begun when Rs. 27,000 of the money was lost by the failure of the mercannile house with which it had been deposited in the cataclysm of 1830. Nothing daunted, the been deposited in the catacitysm or 1830. Working daunted, the Committee made a fresh appeal to the public, and, though most Anglo-Indians had been hard hit by the collapse of Messrs. Palmer and the other great agencies, Rs. 10,000 were got together. Again, the whole vanished in the bankruptcy of the banker who held it as deposit. The second blow would have involved the abandoument of the scheme, but for the public spirit of the contractor, a Mr. Parker, who volunteered to complete the column at tractor, a Mr. Parker, who volunteered to complete the column as a total cost of Rs. 33,000, provided that he received dividends from the estate of both the defunct concerns. This proposal was accepted with effusion, and the works went on merrily, though it was no joke raising the great stones of the gallery and Turkish dome by hand power. Finally, eight years after the demise of its subject, the Ochterlony column dominated Calcutta from its full height of 165 (Sect above the Maidan.

Tradition hath it that a St. Andrew's Dinner was once held in the chamber at the summit, but I decline to believe that the Scottish community of Calcutta were ever "cribbed, cabined, Scottish community of Calcutta were ever "cribbed, canned, and confined" within such narrow limits. That curious taste in which our ancestors indulged of having their meals in all sorts of out-of-the-way places renders it possible that a dozen enthusiasts may have dined at that aerial height. The inconveniences endured must have been compensated for by the view, for it extended from Barrackpur to Fort Gloster.

arracepur to Fort Gloseer.
The column bears the following inscription:-"Sir David Ochterlony, Baronet, Grand Cross of the Military Order of the Bath, Major-General in the Army of Bengal, died at Meerut on the 15th of July, 1825. The people of Iudia, Native and European, to commemorate his services at a Statesman and a Soldier, have, in grateful admiration, raised this column.'

Its base was for many years desecrated by becoming a sort of Exchange where khitmatgars bartered the remains of their masters' tiffins with "mean whites." Lord Metcalle died in England after timins with mean waites, and during the same year Mr. C. K. Robison joined the great majority. He lies in the Circular Road Burial Ground, under a stone which records that it is a "tribute to the Memory of a beloved father."--- F. H. S. --- The Englishman, Oct. 29.

"AN INDIAN JOURNALIST."

(From Power, September 22, 1895.) HAVE been reading Mr. Skrine's life of Dr. Sambbu Chunder Mookerjee, entitled "An Indian Journalist" which was published Mookerjee, entitled "An indian jinumata wanten was pulmated last Sunday. The publication of this work is the only notable event of the past few days. That a Civilian who is the biographer of no less a person than the Lieutenant-Governor of the day should unbend himself so far as to undertake the task of writing the life of an Indian Journalist, who all along occupied a more or less isolated position in his community and was more of a dreamer than a worker, is indeed a very gratifying sign of the times-though old Sambhu was one of those men whom it was impossible to know without loving him passionately. Old Sambhu had a heart, and he felt for others to an extent which is rare in this cold, calcuand he left for others to an extent with a same in a same lating age. I can forget Sambhu's word-painting. I can forget his scholarship. But the qualities of his heart I can never forget. As a writer of racy paragraphs he was unsurpassed, perhaps unapproached—amongst Bengalees of course. But I fear he was As a writer of racy paragraphs he was unsurpassed, perhaps unapproached...amongst Bengalees of course. But I fear he was little cles besides. As a writer on serious subjects he was not quite successful. He was about the worst man that could be selected for drawing up a petition. His principal defect was his lack of all sense of proportion. Latterly he became ambitious of becoming another Kristodas Pal, without even the rump of a party behind him. He became the friend and correspondent of Viceroys and Governors and would treasure up their letters with a wanter which would be dispusting in a less simple. warm-hearted avanity which would be disgusting in a less simple, warm-hearted and guileless man. His letters to Lord Dufferin are very remark-able productions. He takes the Marquis into his confidence and and guileless man. All etters to Double in the very management of the productions. He takes the Marquis into his confidence and inflicts on him long accounts of his minutest affairs—his health, projected visits and even his arrangements for the conduct of his paper in his hypothetical absence. No village matron gossiping in the glat could enter into minuter details about herself than are enshrined like gems in Sambhu's letters to the white lords of the Iudian creation. He had almost degenerated into a snob. Indeed, latterly he appears to have become a veritable autograph hunter. Any European of distinction whom he happened to meet anywhere was sure to be the recipient of a letter from Sambhu. From Lord Rosebery down to the humblest guest at Government House, not one escaped the attentions of the autograph-hunter. The story of Sambhu's life as narrated by Mr. Skrine is rather dis-appointing as it leaves several gaps which somewhat puzzle the reader.

Lord Dufferin and Sir Auckland Colvin appear to have found in Sambhu a regular correspondent. They evidently regarded him as a garrulous old fool and enjoyed his pleasantries. They appreciated a gain down out not and enjoyed his presentered.

In they appreciated this scholarship and his command of the English language, his rich fund of humour, his quaint observations of men and things in general, his frankness and the truly oriental warmth of his heart.

They liked him all the more for giving it hot and strong to his own countrymen, and for his out and out support of the measures of Government. The writer of the Baroda Pamphlet was not the same man who week after week sang Hosanna to the glory of the White Brahmins whose worship occupied so much of his last days.

But I doubt if any one ever took him seriously. Seriousness was foreign to his constitution. Poppy and Mandagoora do not make a man serious. Sambhu was a splendid failure in life. There is not another instance of a man endowed with so much ability who failed to accomplish anything worth accomplishing. His scholarship was something astonishing. His literary powers were unquestionably of a high order. But still his life was a failure. We all loved, liked and adored him, but I for my part never expected him to play a prominent part in the affairs of his country. His paper, Rein and Rayyet, appeals to fit audience but few. To the property are none newsys, appears to nt audience but few. To the people at large, his very name was unknown. It was only those who had the privilege of his friendship that could form some idea of the lovable nature of the man. A more forgiving man never lived, nor one whose heart was so full of sympathy for those that sought his counted to help. sought his counsel for help. Every young man whom he knew worshipped him as a demi-god. His love truly surpassed the love of woman. Greater scholars than he may possibly arise amongst us. Better writers we may see. But never more shall we look upon another of such a kind, warm and sympathetic heart as upon another or such a kind, warm and sympathetic heart as Sambhu. His conversation was a rare intellectual treat, and he could rivet the attention of his hearers for hours, till even the small hours of the morning: Time passed so swiftly and agreeably in his charming company. The Dutts of Wellington Square, specially Jogesh Babu and Sreesh Babu, literally idolized him. But for their almost romantic devotion to Sambhu, the entire course of his life would perhaps have been directed in a different channel.

Jogesh Babu had been the guardian angel of the gifted man, and but for such a devoted admirer we do not know what would have been his fate. Babu Jogesh Chunder has been mainly instrumental in bringing about the publication of this biography. He has performed a task of love and discharged a duty to his departed here, performed a task of love and discharged a duty to his departed hero, who was everything to him and to whom he was everything. It is he who has supplied the materials, and whose loving care has passed the pages through the press. Thinking of Sambhu I cannot but think of that loving and chivalrous soul but for whom the world would have heard very little of one of the greatest Bengalees of the present century. As for Mr. Skrine, his too has been a labour of love and we cannot be too thankful to him.

(From the Madras Standard, September 30, 1895.)

It is rarely that the life of an I idian journalist becomes worthy of publication; it is more rarely still that such a life comes to be written by an Anglo-Indian and a member of the Indian to be written by an Angio-indian and a member of the Indian Civil Service. But, it has come to pars that in the land of the Bengali Babus, the life of at least one man among Indian Journalists has been considered worthy of being written by an Englishman. Dr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee, late Editor of Rin and Rapyet was a well-known scholar. Fe was a man of high intellectual articular straight and a brilliant written who collected accordingly. tual attainments and a brilliant writer who cultivated assiduously tual attainments and a prilliant writer who cultivated assiduously the acquaintance of men in authority and of position. He died last year and his "Life, Letters and Correspondence" are now presented to us by Mr. F. H. Skinne, i. c. s. The life story of Mr. Mookerjee occupies but a small portion of the book before us. Mookerjee occupies but a small portion of the book before us.

It was a chequered one. Mookerjee was a Brahmin by both and a Brahmin of Brahmins all his life. At the age of five, he was sent to a day school kept in the house of a local Zemindar, but here he was more remarkable for his ptanks than for application to study. He was transferred to a sectarian seminary and later on he joined the Hindu Metropolitan College where he completed his studies. While at College, he started the Calcuta Monthly Magazame which had a mushroom existence. Our of College, he became for a short time the Editor of the Office, he became for a short time the Editor of the Morning Chronicle. He then joined the staff of the Hindop Patrot. There he did not remain long. At this period he began the study of the science of Homeopathy and in recognition of his researches in this branch of learning; he obtained the degree of M. D. from an American University. His next resolution was to become a lawyer and he became an articled clerk in the officer but here he was more remarkable for his planks than for appli of a firm of European Attorneys. But he disliked the profession of a firm of European Attorneys. But he disliked the profession and he rejoined the Hindoo Patriot as Sub-Editor. Again, he left that paper to become the Secretary to the Taluqdars' Association and Editor of the Samachar Hindustani. His next enterprise consisted in giving up journalism for a time and becoming the Dewan of the Nawah Nazim of Bengal. Here he got into difficulties and love of change induced him to accept the Head Mastership of the Calcutta Training Academy. He had no charm for the school-master's rod and we hear of him next as Secretary to the Luis Sheets. Singh of Kashipur and then as Munister of Hill school-master's rod and we near of min next as Secretary to the Raja Sheoray Singh of Kashipur and then as Minister of Hill Tippera. He was ousted from this place by the intrigues of those attached to the Raja. In 1882, he founded Reis and Rayyat and from that date till his death in 1894, he continued as its Editor. It was Mr. Mookerjee's good fortune to associate with some of the best known men in India, and his conservative opinions in social and political matters seem to have endeared him to Europeans particularly. Some of them at least would not have befriended him tt in spite of his ability and his natural gifts, he were a Congress-man. The chief attraction of the book before us consists in the letters from and to Mr. Mookerjee contained in it; and the interest in them would have been considerably heightened if they were not expurgated editions. It is certainly creditable to be told that Mr. Mookerjee was in corresponding terms with such persons as Major Evans Bell, Sir William Hunter, Sir Salar Jung, Sir Madava Row, Sir Auckland Colvin, Lord Dufferin, Sir Lepel Griffin, Professor Vambéry and Lord Lansdowne. The style in which the letters are written is indeed creditable to the writer, but in some places they seem to be laboured and disclose the vanity of the writer and his great contempt for educated Bengali young men in general and Congress men in particular. The letter ad-dressed to Sir Salar Jung contains a flattering account of the dressed to Sir Salar Jung contains a flattering account of the writer and his labours ending evidently with a request for patronage which Mr. Skrine omits to publish. There are several letters to Sir Auckland Colvin written very familiarly beginning with "My dear Sir Auckland" and ending with "Yours sincerely." But Sir Auckland, except in one letter, addresses him only as "Dear Dr. Mookerjee" and "Yours truly." In one letter Mookeries says "At one time I thought of gains to Malesses. "Dear Dr. Mookerjee" and "Yours truly." In one letter Mookerjee says "At one time I thought of going to Madras to the Congress, to see how they ordered the matter down south and keep our Boys of Bengal in check, particularly in matters of social discipline. It was not to be. I could not get a P. O. or other presumably safe steamer and I would not form part of the cargo of Bahudom of all castes in charge of Thomas Cook and Sons."

The book contains a letter published from Sir Lepel Griffin; but the six and the safe of the cargo of th there is none to Sir Lepel; similarly while there are not less than half a dozen letters of Major Evans Bell published, not one of those written to him appears in print. Sir Lepel says in his letter I need not teil you that your estimate of the attacks made upon me by the Anglo-Bengalce press is a just one, as is your statement of the source from which they proceed." It is not difficult for us of the source from which they proceed. It is not diment for us to guess what Mookerjee must have written to elicit such a state-ment. In another letter to Sir Auckland Colvin he savs "Our people the Boys of the Period in the press and on the platform-are rather difficult to please. I myself don't. But I don't care" The Boys of the period, we suppose, were the leading Congressmen in Calcutta. In a third letter he writes :--- All my friends men in Calcutta. In a third letter he writes :-- "All my friends ere u.ad about the Congress and Congressists, besides all have been ere mod about the Congress and Congressists, Desides an nave been long since engaged. If I asked perhaps I could get a separate tent away from that bustle of our Indian Runnymede, but I would not ask Hume or Bonnetyce." It strikes us that Mookerjee would not have succeeded in becoming familiar with Viceroys and Gov ernors--nor even found an Englishman as his biographer --were it not for his anti-Congress tendencies. In many of his letters to men in authority, he goes out of his way to have a fling at the Congress or his "Bengali bors". And we doubt whether Mokenice could have discharged his detices faithfully as a journalist tramelled by the friendship of Vicerovs and Governors.

(From the Pribune, October 2, 1895.)

"An Indian Journalist being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Sambha C. Moskerjee, late Editor of Reis and Ravyet, Calcutta," is a book of which the title used should be attractive to news aper writers and readers. The interest of the book is Skrine, of the Bengal Civil Service. The book is a well bound octavo velume of nearly 500 pages, but the actual life story of the Rew and Rayyet has been so honoured. Babu Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee used to carry on correspondence with such men as Lord Dufferin, Sir Auckland Colvin and Sir Charles Elliott, and---what is perhaps more important --- he was not well disposed towards the But Mr. Skrine is not perhaps aware that this change came over Babu Sambhu Chunder after Lord Dufferin had honoured him with his acquaintance. At the Calcutta Congress of 1886 Babu Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee was a prominent figure, and expressed the greatest admiration for the great national movement. However, it is needless to rake up the past. Mr. Skrine deserves our thanks for his tribute to the memory of an Indian journalist, and perhaps we shall hear of fewer battles royal in the Calcutta Municipality between him and certain other Indian journalists. As the book is published for the benefit of Babu Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee's family we hope it will have a large sale among the Indian as well as the Anglo-Indian public.

(From the Merning Post of India, October 15, 1895.)

The latest addition to the current literature of the country is a neatly got up and handy volume, entitled "Life and Letters of Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee," by Mr. F. H. Skrine, of the Bengal Civil Service. It is, indeed, very good of Mr. Skrine to write a nottee of the eminent Indian journalist, when we lost n the early part of 1894, and to bring out a carefully-edited ielection from his correspondence: and it is very generous of him to direct that the proceeds of the book minus the court of to direct that the proceeds of the book minus the costs of publication, should be devoted to the support of the family of the subject of the memoir, who have been left unprovided for. Mr. Skrine has performed his self-imposed task, as he says, amid harassing official cates, and in an uncongenial climate, and he prings to the work an unquestioned sympathy with educated natives, and an appreciation of their capacities, motives, and aspirations. Written by a man of undoubted literary talents the book was ushered to the notice of the public with a large, promise, and it is only fair to say that the execution has fulfilled all ust expectations. The book would, no doubt, have been much more useful and interesting, if the numerous letters of the Doctor, and the replies thereto, could have been published in full. But unfortunately the obligations that every writer has to the living, and the impolicy of placing at the disposal of the public all of what transpires behind the scenes, prevented Mr. Skrine, as it has always prevented many more eminent writers, from writing and publishing with a total want of reserve. As it is, however, the book has a unique interest, being the memoir of a member of the subject race by a member of the ruling body; and as such, in ought to be widely read in every part of India.

The life of Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee was a peculiar one.

His genius, bright and brilliant in the extreme, was fitful and erratic. Till advanced in years, he never settled down steadily to anything, and though his talents, his literary accomplishments, his wide and varied range of reading, his culture, and his incisive his wide and varied range of reading, his culture, and his incluse humour, were recognized and appreciated by his countrymen all over India, his want of tact and of singleness of aim and purpose, and of devotion to one leading idea and principle of life, marred what would otherwise have been one of the most prosmarred what would otherwise have occal one of the most properous and useful carcers. Mr. Skrine has felt a natural delicacy in bringing out this side of the question, and in depicting the shadows that darkened the brightness of the picture. As a thorough-going admirer of Dr. Mookerjee, he will not admire the other than the shadows that the shadows are the shadows. that the subject of his sketch committed even one mistake; and would rather believe in a conspiracy against him, of all and would rather better in a conspiracy against tim, or all his educated and wealthy countrymen, than say that Dr. Mookerjee was once misled by a misguided enthusiasm into doing something he should not have done. Mr. Skrine has said, with all the tast and shrewdness of the practised advocate, all that can possibly be said in defence of his hero at each particular turn of hite; but whether that is the true duty of the biographer, we do not know. If Dr. Mookerjee had been alive to-day, he would have been glad to see that many things, which he thought to be great and serous blunders and almost irreparable mistakes, had been presented to the world in a different light by his thorough-going almirer. One reading through Mr. Skrine's pages, would imagine Di. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee to be an ideally perfect man, which he was far from being. While giving full credit to Mr. Skine for this whole-learted advocacy, as it were, we are not sure that it is the proper course to pursue. The true use of biography is that men, who have their voyage of life yet to go through, and their names and fortunes yet to make, might learn from the lives and experiences of others how to avoid the shoals and quicksands that obstructed their paths; to observe how they had acted in grave emergencies and interesting situations; and to shape their had interspersed his book, as he might very easily have done, with criticisms and remarks leading to this end, it would have been simply invaluable.

Besides the fact that he edited Mookerjee's Magazine and Reis and Rayyet, the only important features of Dr. Mookerjee's life were that he had been in three native courts, and that he latterly came to be a regular correspondent of several high officials. For obvious reasons his career in the native courts, in none of which he had a happy time, could not be described or delineated in detail; and the replies of the officials, so far as they let us into opinions about public topics or about each other, have to be carefully avoided. These are the difficulties under which a contemporary author must write; and we can only regret, but can-not get over them. But in reading these pages, one cannot help regretting how great a man Dr. Mookerjee might have been if he had settled down to one course of life in early manhood, and pursued that course with life-long energy and devotion; if he had not been addicted to the use of opium; and if he had devoted more attention, like the eminent Kristodas Pal, to questions of policy and Imperial matters, and left local politics and personalities alone. With all his faults, however, Dr. Mookerjee was one of the most talented and accomplished men this country has produced. It is impossible not to admire his bright intellect, his chaste diction, and his keen sense of the humourous; and it is indeed fortunate that the Indian public should have a monograph, exhibiting and setting out his best qualities, from such an accomplished writer as Mr. Skrine.

WHAT EMPEROR WAS THIS.

HE was one of the greatest monarchs that ever ruled in Enrope. He was always at war, yet—but wait; let us take one thing at a time.

He was an enormous eater. He breakfasted at five on a fowl seethed

He was an enormous eater. He breakfasted at five on a fowl seethed in milk and dressed with sugar and spices. After this he went to sleep again. He dined at twelve, always partaking of twenty dishes. He supped twice; first early in the evening and again about one o'clock—the latter the most solid meal of the four. After meit he are a great quantity of pastry and sweets, washing them down with vast draughts of beer and wine. Then he would gorge himself on sardine onelettes, fired suisages, eel piec, pickled partridges, fat capons, &c., &c.

Finally he abdicated, did this omnivorous Emperor, and a friendly contier this described the power that compelled him to do it. "This a most truculent executioner," said the oratin; "it invales the whole body from head to foot. It contracts the nerves with anguish, it freezes the marrow, it conveits the fluids of the points into chalk, and puises not until it has exhausted the body and conquered the mind by immense torture."

immense torture.

He was crippled in the neck, arms, knees, and hands, and covered with chronic skin eruptions; while his stomach occasioned him constant suffering. He was a wreck at an age when he should still have been suffering. He was a wreck at an age when he should still have been active and vigorous.

This is not fiction, it is history; without a syllable of exaggeration. How many of our readers will write and tell us what man this was? A thousand, no doubt.

Alack-a-day! however. Not kings and emperous alone are this and fine and the same road. We are not usually Alack-a-day! however. Not kings and emperors alone are thus afflicted. Great hosts of us travel the same road. We are not usually gluttons as this royal gentleman was, but people who eat sparingly often have the same inialady. Commonly they inherit a tendency to it. On the level of this dreadful disease the rich and the poor, the gluttons as this royal gentleman was, but people who eat sparingly often have the saine malady. Commonly they inherit a tendency to it. On the level of this dreadful disease the rich and the poor, the great and the small, meet together.

Speaking of an experience of her own, a woman says: "My hands became stiff and numb. There seemed to be no feeling in them. I was so crippled that I could not even cut a round of bread. A little later it attacked my legs and feet, the soles of the latter being very tender and sore. The pain was so severe-that I often sat down and cuted on account of my sufferings and my heplessness. I used rubbing only and embrocations, but I got no tellef. In this way I went on month aften month, never expecting to be well again. I felt the first signs of illness in February, 1839. At first I had merely a baid taste in the mouth, no appetite, and was low, treed, and languid. Following this came the agones of rheumatism, as I have said. I owe my recovery to a suggestion of my husband's. He advised me to try Motoer Seigel's Curairie Syiup, and got me a bottle from Mr. W. Simpson's, in North Street. After taking it for a fortinght my hands got their right feeling, and I suffered no more from theumatism nor from indigestion and dyspepsia, which I now understand to be the cause of theumatism. From that time to this I have been in the best of health. (Signed) (Mrs.) Elizabeth Ann Cook, Southwell Lane, North Street, Horncastle, Luccolinshire, February 1st, 1893."

"In the year 1879," writes another, "theumatism attacked me, one joint after another. The pains were all over mr, although the worst was in one knee. For two years I suffered with it—the doctor's medicines doing no good. In 1881 I read in a little book that rheumatism was caused by indigestion and dyspepsia, and that the true cute for it was Mother Seigel's Syrup. This proved to be true, as after taking three bottles I knew no more of stomach disorder nor rheumatism. I have since recommended this wonderful remedy to hundreds of persons. (Si

By the aid of common sense and Mother Seigel the Emperor might have stayed on his throne, might he not?
Yes, but unluckily she wasn't born in time to help him.

CAUTION!

It having been notified to the Proprietor of Brecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately mtroduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (viz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 annas or 1s, 11/2d. and Rs, 2 or 2s. 9d) are clearly printed on the lid of each box The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes, the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represent ed to be of higher value than they really Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Ceylon.

G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUITA.

NOTICE .- Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee tites plus V P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

BY SARADA PRASAD BANERJEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE

For 1895.
Having the largest sale of all similar works,
ENGLISH PREPARATORY ENGLISH PREAL COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES.
This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th CLASSES INDIA READERS NO. 1

FOR 6th & 7th CLASSES
These books are of remarkably simple style and quite suited to Indian students.

one quite suited to Indian students.

The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P. and Oudh, the Punjab, Madras, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Bunna, invited to the above publications of un que

To be had of
S. K. LAHIRI & Co.,
College Square, Calcutta.

GENUINE HOM(EOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S

Homeopathic Practitiones,
May be consulted by letter or personally
daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutte.

Publishedion the 16th September, 1895 PRICE:

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, I.C.S.

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR.

DEDICATION.

HIS LIFE STORY.

Emerson on biography. Why is it popular? His ancestry.

Buth.

Early education.
At Garanhatta School.
Youthful dialectics
The Hindoo Metropolitan College. Teachers and associates.

Essays in journalism. Marries. Hurish Chandra Mookerjee.

Mutiny pamphlet. British Indian Association. His asthma how caused, Relieved by opium, American honours,

American honours,
Faults of training,
Sub-editor of the "Patriot,"
Story of the "Patriot,"
Attacks the Theome Tax,
Scathing strictures,
Lessons of the Mutiny,

Removes to Lucknor A love of music. A rolling-stone Introduced to the Nazim.

Pal a e intrigues Buffles big enemies.

Journalism again, Becomes a schoolmaster, A Private Secretary,

A serious dilemma. Disinterested friendship. Mookerjee's Magazine."
Dallies with the law.
The Madianaja of Jaipur.

Work in Tippera. His application suppressed, Becomes Prime Minister.

The water question. Thwaited by intrigues

Resigns his post.
The "Reputle Press"
A commissioner of partition
F unds "Reis and Rayyet."
"Travels and Voyages in Bengal."
A terra mognita.
A terast of reason.

A feast of feason.
Postprandial oratory.
Breaking up.
A serious illness.
The end.
His character.

Broad sympathies, A fee to fanaticism. Love of justice.

Charity. Curiosity Consideration for others Scorn of money.
Disinterestedness.
Love of animals.

A poetical nature. A poetical nature.
An admirer of Byron
Drawbacks of journalism.
Mookerjee's "Essays."
His letters.

His correspondents. Aim of this work.

ORRESPONDENCE OF DR S. C. MOOKERJEE. LETTERS

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.,
to Atkinson, the late Mr. E.F.T., C.S.,
to Banerjee, Babn Jyotish Chunder.
from Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.

to Banerjee, Babu Sarodaprasad.
from Bell, the late Major Evans.
from Baddaur, Chief of
to Binaya Krishna, Raja.
to Chrlin, Rio Bahadur Ananda.
to Chrlin, Rio Bahadur Ananda.
to Chatteijee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarke, Mr. S.E.J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Anckland.
to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of.
from Evans, the Hon'ble Sir Griffith H.P.
to Gugult, Babu Kisari Mohan. to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kisari.
Ghose, Babu Kati Prosanna. to Ghose, Babu Kati Prosanna.
to Graham, Mr. W.
from Griffio, Su Lepel.
from Guffio, Su Lepel.
from Guffio, Su Lepel.
from Hunter, Su W. W.
to Jeukus, Mr. Edward.
from Hunter, Su W. W.
to Jeukus, Mr. Edward.
to Jing, the lute Nawab Sir Silar. to Kuight, Mr. Paul.
from Linsdowne, the Mirquis of.
to Law, Kumar Kristodas.
to Lvon, Mr. Percy C
to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
to Milk, Mr. H. C.
to Marston, Miss Ann.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokerjee, Jate Raja Dakhunaraujan.
from Mokarauhahan.

from Nayaratna, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Nayaratna, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to Rao, Mr. G. Venkata Appa. to Rao, the late Su T. Madhaya. to Ratigan, Sir William H. from Rosebery, Earl of. to, from Routledge, Mr. James. from Russell, Sir W. H. to Row, Mr. G. Syamala.

to Row, Mr. G. Syamala,
to Sastri, the Houble A. Sishiah.
Sastri, the Houble A. Sishiah.
Sucar, Dr. Mahendralal,
from Stanley, Lord, of Alderley,
from, to Townsend, Mr. Meredith.
to Underwood, Captain T. O.
to,
from Vambery, Professor Arminius.
to Vencataramanich, Mr. G.
tyranigram, Maharaja of.
from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie.
to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J.

Wood-Mason, the late Professor J.

to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J.
LETTERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from
Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A K. M.
Ameer Hossem, Hon'ble Nawab Syed.
Ardagh, Colonel St. J. C.
Borejee, Bibu Mannathanath
Banetjee, Ra Bahadut, Shib Chunder.
Barth, M. A.
Belch unbers, Mr. R.
Deb, Babu Manahat.
Dutt, Mr. O. C.
Dutt, Bibu Prosaddoss.
Eign. Lond.

Dutt, Babn Prosaddoss.
Elgin, Loud.
Ghose, Babn Kut Praa K.
Grahan, M. Wilham sanna.
Hall, Dr. Fuz Edward.
Hartas Viharidas Desar, the late Dewan.
Lyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswann.
Lambert, Su John.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitta, Mr. B. G.
Mitter, Babn Sidheshur.
Monkerjee, Raja Peary Mohan,
Monkerjee, Raja Desay Mohan,
Monkerjee, Raja Desay Mohan,
Monkerjee, Babn Surendra Nath.
Mushudabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
Routledge, Mr. James.

Routledge, Mr. James.
Roy, Babu E C.
Roy, Babu Sarat Chunder.
Sunyal, Babu Dinabundho.
Savitti Library.
Tippera, the Bara Thakur of.
Vinibly, Padagon America.

Vambery, Professor Arminia, Vizianagram, the Maharaja of, POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication he surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of liters.

Orders to be made to the Business Minager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, 1. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remark oble man.—Mr. H. Babington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895.

Dr. Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and originality about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading -- Sir Alfred W Corff, KC1E., Director of Public Institution, Bengal

KC1E, Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, 26th Sentember, 1895.

Dr. Mookejee was well worthy of the distinction accorded, so far as we know, to no other Native journalist in India, of having an English Civilian for his biographer, but the honour is well in keeping with the, life of its subject, who for many years enjoyed the personal friendship of distinguished Civilians, of Provincial Governors, and of successive of Provincial Governors, and of successive Viceroys. Mr. Skrine has performed his selfimposed task in no patronising minner, but in the spirit of one who while delighting to do honour to a great and good man does not hide his foibles. The subject of the biography was not free from fulls, and Mr. Skrine does not not free from fulls, and Mr. Skime does not attempt to make him appear otherwise.

It should not be forgotten that there are papers and papers and that as much difference exists between some of the robid Colouta prints, and the paper which Dr. Monkeijee founded as between datkness and light. Reis and Rayyet has always been remarkable for the mingled ability, candfur and charable-ness of its criticisms, and the periodical has enjoyed a degree of influence approached by no other native weekly. The paper was to ness of its criticisms, and the periodical has enjoyed a degree of influence approached by no other native weekly. The paper was so well managed by its founder as to attract general notice and bring him into confidential relations with the makers of history.

He was no mere sycophant, and his friendship with men filling the exalted places of the land was due to no self-werking endeavours to thrust himself upon them but to their own desite to become acquainted with a Native of great origin into an approach afrom.

Dr. Mookerjee may be placed with the still famented Justice Telang in the category of those natives of this country who are connecting book between talers and ruled, and who by their labours, as well as by their personal example and influence, do immense service in welding together the diverse communities of the Lord in the bonds of Imperial brother-hood and loyalty—The Bombay Gizelle, Sentember 28, 1895.

For much of the biography of Dr. Mookerjee, the Edition of Reis and Rivrel, speared, an application would hive been looked for. A man of his remark bile personality, who was easily first among matter library prices and in the sensitive mach to the proposition of the remark bile personality, who was easily first among matter library propositions.

of his remarkable personality, who was easily first among nature. Indian pourralists, and in many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and howked at public affairs from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivion, without some be offered to sink into obseron without some attempt to per bettie his memory by the usual expedient of a hife. The difficulties common to all bing uphers have in this case been in-creased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a diffe-ent race from the subject. It is true that ent race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English chrincter as few foreigners understand it. But no spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought an expression, Dr. Mookerjee termined to the last a Braham of the Braham os—i conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and among al. In consequence of this, his ideal mornance may wis nothing but respect and approved. In consequence of this, his ideal biographer would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained the him in Western beining. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written her life.

his life. his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly landatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dull page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Mookeijee are of such minor importance that they might have been omitted with advantige, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. To say that he writes adomatic English is to say with it short of the truth. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straight-forward, without Oriental luxuriance or striving after effect. Perhaps he is never so charming as when he is laying down the laws of Interary form to young aspirants to fame. The letter on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piece on page 285, for instance, is a delightful prece-of criticism: it is delicate plain-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either off-inding the youth or remessing his action.

For much more that is well worth reading we

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume uself. Intrinsically it is a nook worth buying and reading.

The Pioneer, O. t., 5, 1895.
The cateer of "An Initian Journalist" as described by F. H. Skome of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting.

Mookerjee's letters are marvels of pure diction when is benditened by his nervous salve.

The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those who are able to apprecrite merit miniarred by ostentation and earnestness inspoiled by harshness.—The Muhammadan, Oct. 5, 1895. The letters interspersed through the work are both instructive and of great value, while the name of the author will vouch for the excellence of the biography.—The Bee, Oct.

1895.
The book has a unique interest, being the

The book has a unique interest, being the memoir of a member of the subject tace by a member of the ruling body; and as such, it ought to be widely read in every part of India. Dr. Mookerjee was one of the most talented and accomplished men this country has produced. It is impossible not to admire his bright intellect, nis chaste diction, and his keen sense of the humourous; and it is indeed fortunate that the Indian public should have a monograph, exhibiting and setting out his best qualities, from such an accomplished writer as Mr. Skinie—The Morning Post of India, October 15, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. .

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open faced, mck I silvern, keyless, snort winding, pitent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAONI-ED" watch, with hard setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pietry box and full three year's guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughspring, pietry box and full three years guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more train 28 hours with one winding. Will list a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One with free for the putchase of 3 it a time, Mr. Jino. Dickson of Hapittal Rulwiy, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and knocks and jerks, x Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Pomantillee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regit from Durndum says:—I have sold it for Regit for Regit of Patina Opunin Descript Patina Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin Opunin from Dundum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mi. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium De-Rs. 20. × Mr. 1. B. Scott of rain copining partment says:— The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real

Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0.
Fashianable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Silt Inspector from Sanikuta, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extrast and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pie. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28. × Pie. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 35 for the very same watch, Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extrast and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIO PHARMACY. 36, Lower Chapore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcatta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician RAVIRAJ NAGRADRA MATH SEN, Physician Sorgeon, Accountent, practises the Ayureda system of medicine, after having obtained diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

SPECIFICS
for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthurs, Puthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by rregularities of kinds, Catalogues, containing full accounts of disease Citalogues, containing mili accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on applica-tion, Prescriptions, with or without medizines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the Brusis Isless, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases. Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

POSFAGE Stamps of all countries of the year 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jeweller, watches, clothes, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ.

Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.

61, Regent Street, London W. Bankers : The London & County Bank.

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT

Sufferers are not generally aware that thes discusses are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of twing parasites in thining memoriane of the noise and eustachia tubes. Microscopic research, however, he proved this to be a fact, and the result is the a simple teniedy has been formulated, whereb these distressing diseases are rapidly and per-manently cured by a few simple application matter at mome by the patient once in two weeks. A pampilet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½1 stamp by 7 HUTION DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor S TORON FO. Canada.

Scientin American.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE A VD PEASANT) WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPEI AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Socie RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	it j	aard in aara	ince.
Yearly	•••	•••	•••	Ks.	I 2
iranf-year				,,	7
Quutaiy			•••	,.	4
Montaix	•••	•••		κe	1-5
ougls or	sample	Copy		Aus.	0-1
	lí no	t paid in ad-	vance.
Yearly		·		Rs.	31
Haif-year	ly			37	10-
Quarterly		•••		,,	D-1
Monthly	•••	•••	•••		2.
Single or	sample	Copy		Ans.	0-

No additional charge for postage or peot RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Adventisements (three commins to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the spacetaken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest carge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayet."

Design: 1. Uckoor Dutts Lane. Wellington

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

LITERATURESAND TICS

VOL. XIV.

OVEMBER 16, 1895.

CONTEMPORA

THE TUN

XII., \Vergweit, by the Nurbuddah's tres And many a lonely dell is there, * Where not a whisper wirs the air, ive the jackat's cry, or the peacock's

Or the bubbling wave, as its breaks, th With distant, ficful, roar ;

Like the sound, in the shell, the ear th

Or a detant surf-beat shore; And thusehe gildes, mid mountain steeps Clothed, in hues of eternal green,

And thus, her crystal wave she sweeps Thro' many a fairy, wood-land scen

Franchere, we dwell or had pur house Or it might merely be our haunt,

For used alas! so long to roam, I scarce know, what, by home is meant; Yet I still, we had our fields to tend,

To help a summer's day to spend ; But when the nights grew long, and clear,

We mounted, and took brand, and spear, And roamed afar, they wot not where,

Twas all they knew, we were not there,

Till back we came, and welcome found, As fortune had our labours crowned.

*The Nurbuddah is a stream of very considerable magnitude, which rises in the highest table-land of Central India, and after a long course, falls into the sea, on the western coast of the Peninsula, at Barrach. It is however only navigable for small Erafi, for about a bundred miles from is mouth, owing to the rocky, and irregular nature of its bed. The following is a somewhat highly colored picture of a rapid, in its course, at Bherah Ghaut, about ten miles from Jubbulpore. But let us look once more on the Nurbuddah. Hark! Hear ye not already his distant roar, like the sound of a sea-shell, "in your ear? Lo I there he comes with mountains, for his banks, "clothed in their ever-green forests; but let us proceed somewhat "closer, and we stand upon the very verge of the precipice, and behold his mass of waters dashing along a bed of white marble, "and now, with ceaseless roar, bursting through a chasm, so narrow, "that a bold-hearted mountaineer might leap across it; but though "the fall below; now follow the stream in its deep and narrow "channel, and then look on its dry and uncovered bed, where the strata of white marble shoot up their peaks, like those of snow-capt mountains are merely divideably the river; the name of the Hurr Pahl, a place lower down, the opposite edges of the mountains are merely divideably the river; the name of the Hurr mountains are merely divideably the river; the name of the Hurr mountains are merely divideably the river; the name of the Hurr

"At the Hurn Pahl, a place lower down, the opposite edges of the mountains are merely divided by the river; the name of the Hurn Pahl, a place lower down, the opposite edges of the mountains are merely divided by the river; the name of the Hurn Pahl is derived, from the circumstance of the river being here so obstructed, by large masses of basalt, rising about ten or eleven feet above the ordinary level of the stream, and giving passage to the trever, trough three very narrow channels, across each of which, it is supported an antelope could bound."

The scenery also give banks of the Nurbuddah, in so far, as I have had an opportunit of observing, is wild, wooded, and picturesque in the extreme.

XIII. At last, we met, and orders gave,

To bounne us, for the Ganges' side ; Not, ya may judge, to quaff its wave, *

But on a foray ride ;

For fame spoke, loudly, of the gold, erchants' coffers could unfold,

To the bright eye of day;

We mounted each his steed, and then, We mustered full five hundred men,

Equipped, for march or fray. We passed Myheer, and Rewah's vale,

Then tarried, in that lovely dell,

Bintath the Hilliah Pass, and there to Wa ward, sent our scouts before, sound the shroffs of Mirzapore, I What gold they had, and where?

That done, we marched, with set of sun

And reached the sown, and stood addition Sach armed, and ready for the fight, Ere it was, scarcely, noon of night !

One moment more,—the axes clang, In fifty quarters, loudly rang,

And quick, the bolts, and bars gave way,

Beneath the hammer's ponderous sway ! Some, at a distance, stood, and gazed,

By the feeble taper's ray ; But scarce a voice, or hand, was raised,

To scare us, from our pley ; Of that, we found an ample store ! S-

Each helped himself, nor asked for more.

* To drink the waters of the Ganges, or to bathe in the streamy considered by the Hindoos, as highly salutary in a spiritual sense All Hindoo witnesses, in Indian courts of law, are sworn by the Ganges' water, a cup of which, with a spring of myrile in it, is held in their hands, in the same manner as Christians are sworu by the

In their hands, in the same manner as Christials are sworu by the Scriptures.

† This is a magnificent mountain Pass, about halfway between the town of Mirzapore and the capital of Rewah; the scenery at the bottom of the Pass is very beautiful, and at the top of ji, there is a fine water-fall, in the rainy season. During the hot season, the bed of the stream, which is merely a mountain-torrent, is quite dry or nearly so. The following is a description of the fall in question.

"Pass we at present the beautiful and romantic valley of Mylicer; pass we the fair and cultured province of Rewah, its neat capital, washed by the Tonse, and all his unrivelled Falls, and we are now about to descend the Hilliah Pass. But mark you brawling little mountain torrent, foaming in its track, which we found it rather difficult, if not dangerous to pass; step fifty yards aside, and you stand upon the verge of a precipice, over which, with one bound, it rushes in unbroken fall, for perhaps two hundred feet, till in its "descent it becomes nothing, but one white sheet of foam; while the "roaring, crashing and cracking of the buge rocks below beyp-ak their agony, and the raggy precipices on either side, dark as Erebus, and dipping with spray, look on its tortures, with unalter-

"Alle men."

Mirapore is a very handsome city, though not one of the first class, in magnitude. It is situated on the right bank of the Ganges, about thirty miles above Benares. It is considered the key of the Dukhun, or central part of India, and is a great mart for all sorts o merchandise, more particularly cotton.

Subscribers—1 the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, it possible, as the batest and most convenient medical, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

XIV.

The signal given, we left the town, And laughed the weary march away, Across the table-land, that lay, Between us, and the Soane ; Rhotass, a moment, saw us pause, * High, frowning o'er the vale, it stands, A fortress formed to freedom's, hands, And worthy of her cause ! But where are those, with hearts so bold, And true, that dare to hold? From thence, we downward tracked the stream, That glittered, in the silver beam Of an eastern queen of night;

That glittered, in the silver beam }
Of an eastern queen of night;

For an accoung of the magnificent, and I should almost think, impregnable fortress, I beg to refer the reader to the following extract from a tale of fiction, which however is sufficiently accurate, for our seent purpose. It may be as well however to premise, that the fortress has been for some years unoccupied. It is now uttery described, and its buildings are fast falling to ruin and decay.

"An easy march the following morning brought them to a considerable of the property of the pr

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fail particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Aural Speculist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W. Its streamlets wandering athro' the plain, Amid its isles, seemed some vast chain, Formed, by some magic sleight; We followed, by its crystal waves, By Barcon's Ghaut, to Bhe sh's caves. * Those temples of a far-past age Dug, in the heart of the living rock, Now echoed, to our lawless rage, And to our impious mock! They were so old, none knew, 'twas said, Their purpose, or when thef were made ; And that may be; but this I know, That, never, did old mother Earth Give, to the day, a ruder birth, Than that lay 'camped, in the plain below, Cleaning their arms, for the coming fray, For close at hand, a city lay; It was my once-loved home, and now I thought me of my wrongs, and vow ! Perhaps, I would have saved !-- but how ? (To be continued.)

WEEKLYANA.

THE London Correspondent of the Indian Spectator has a paragraph on the Times' notice of Mr. Skrine's "An Indian Journalist ?

"They Indian Affairs' column in the Times this week is mainly occupied with a review of the Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Mookerjes by Mr. Skrine, the well-known Bengal Civilian. The review is really a concise biography of the united Bengal Civilian. The review is really a concise biography of the united Bengal pointailst, bringing up all the more essential and significant incidents of his career. This is done, not only in a kindly appreciative spirit, but in such a way as must, for English readers, throw new and interesting side-lights on Hindu life and its more enterprising intellectual aspects. As a characterstudy, and that of a 'man who went through many vicissitudes—this sketch—as Mr. Skrine's book must be in greater degree—shows Mookerjee In his maturity; hence, it would be instructive for those of your readers who have at hand back numbers of the Indian Magazine and Review to compare with the final result, Mr. Hodgson Praits high estimate of Mookerjee's chracter as it appeared to his then Cavilian superior. Passibly, Mr. Skrine's memon, to which attention will be drawn by this notice in the Times; may serve to modify and enlarge our insular estimate as to the value of that bite noire, the 'Bengali Babu,' as a factor in our Indian imperial system. It may be mentioned that the opening para. of this notice glauces at the improvement in the tone and qdality of the Indian Pectator."

Linguistic Still served in the columns of the Indian Speciator."

HE also reports :-

"Your worthy citizen, Mr. Dorabji P. Cama has this week written to the Lord Mayor, forwarding one hundred guineas for the Ministon House Poor-hox as fulfilling the 'precepts of his religion' on the occasion of the anniversary of the decrease of his wife—whom many of your friends will remember. Mr. Cama continues to lead a very retired life, though he is still diligent in business."

* The great unitary road, from the lower to the upper provinces of India, crosses the Soane, at the ghaut, or ferry, at Baroon. The temarkable caves at Bhelah are probably unitratic, and to this supposition, the text of the poem has reference. For motionation, tegrading the uses or purposes of multiratic caves, I beg to refer the teader to the Note on the subject of Bhurmjoun. The following account of the outward appearance of these extraordinary excavations is taken from the tale of fiction, to which I have already, more than once referred.

is taken from the tale of fiction, to which I have already, more than once, referred.

"Asmanu Singh now turned his steps homewards, visiting the caves "at Bhelah, by the way. He passed the Kowwa Dout, that ary pinnacle, on the summit of which a huge mass of rock is an delicately poised, that a crow alighting on it, it is supposed, might make "it tiemble, and hence its name. The Rijah looked with reverence on the religious sculptures, which surrounded its base, the work of ages too remote, for even traditionary lore. About a mile from this, arose a chain of rocky mountains, consisting of huge loose masses of stone, from amongst which, the rains of ages appeared to have "washed away every particle of earth, which had perhaps once given "them form, and consistence.

"They were, in short, the skeletons of mountains. On nearer in spection however, it was found that they were traversed in different "places, by strata, in which the unwearied and indefatigable industry "of man had hewn out chambers, in the solid rock. There were six or "seven of these, made at different places, some of which were as large, "as a spacious apartment. In all of them, the walls in the interior were as smooth as polished marble, or rather as polished granite, "for of the latter, the strata of rock consisted. There were a few "inscriptions observable on the doorways, but of so old a character, "as to be illegible, by any of the Rajah's followers. In short the "caves, or rather the excavations at Blielah had survived the names of those, who dug them, and the very purpose, for which they had "been excavated, had now become the sport of mystery, and doubt."

17 having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (vis., 4 annas, 8 annas or 91/2d, 12 annas or 1s. 11/2d. and Rs, 2 or 2s. 9d.) are clearly printed on the lid of each box-The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Crylon. G. ATHERTON & CO., 3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET.

CALCUTTA.

NOTICE.—Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee rates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postaces.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

By SARADA PRASAD BANERJEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE For 1895.

wing the largest sale of all similar works, ENGLISH PREPA COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES.
This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.
INDIA READERS NO. 2

FOR 4th & 5th CLASSES. INDIA READERS NO. 1

INDIA READERS NO. 1
FOR 6th & 7th CLASSES
These books are of remarkably sample style
and quite suited to Indian students.
The attention of School authorities in the N.W P and Oudh, the Punjab, Madras, Bom bay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Buma, to invited to the above publications of unque merits.

To be had of

S. K. LAHIRI & Co., College Square, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas or 6 copies for a Rupee.

A Cheap Reserve for the Army. By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY, Late Her Majesty's Service. Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anns 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE, late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, I.C.S., (Collector of Customs, Calcutta.)

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR. DEDICATION (To Sir W. W. Hunter.) HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.,
to Atkinson, the late Mr. EFT., C.S.,
to Baneijee, Babu Jyoush Chunder.
from Baneijee, Babu Jyoush Chunder.
from Baneijee, Babu Sarodaprasad.
from Baddaur, Chief of.
to Bunaya Krishna, Raja.
to Chriu, Rai Bahadur Ananda. to Chatuejee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarke, Mr. S.$J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Auckland.
to, from Duffeiin and Ava, the Marquis of.
from Evans, the Hon'ble Sir Griffith H.P.
to Ganguli, Babu Kisair Moban.
to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
Ghosh, Babu Kali Prosanna. to Graham, Mr. W. LETTERS

to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
Ghosh, Babu Kaki Prosanna.
to Graham, Mr. W.
from Griffin, Sir Lepel.
from Guha, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
from Humter, Sir W. W.
to Jenkins, Mr. Edward.
Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.
to Kinght, Mr. Paul.
from Kuight, the late Mr. Robert.
from Lausdowne, the Marquis of.
to Law, Kumar Kristodas,
to Lyon, Mr. Percy C.
to Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
to Mallik, Mr. H. C.
to Marston, Miss Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mita, the late Raja Dr. Rajendralala. to Mookerjee, Mr. J. G.
from M'Nest, Professor H (San Francisco). to, from Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahador of.

from Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.

from Nay tratua, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to Roo, Mt. G. Venkata Appa. to Rao, Mt. G. Venkata Appa. to Rao, the late Sir T. Madhava, to Rattigan, Sn. Wilham H. from Roseberty, Earl of. to, from Routledge, Mr. James, from Rossell, Sir W. H. to Row, Mt. G. Syamala, to Sastri, the Horr'ble A. Sashiah, to Sinha, Babu Bi dimananda, from Sircar, Dr. Mahendialal, from Statley, Lord, of Alderley, from, to Townsend, Mr. Metedith, to Underwood, Captain T. O. from Vambéry, Professor Arminius, to Vizianagiam, Maharaja of. to, from Wallace, Sir Donald Mackenzie, Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. Etters(& Telfgrams) of Condollace, from Con from Nay traina, Mahamahapadhya M. C.

to Wood-Mason, the late Professor J.
LETTERS(& TELFGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from
Abdus Subhan, Moulvi A. K. M.
Ameer Hussein, Hon'ble Nawab Syed.
Ardagh, Colonel Sir J C.
Bauerjee, Babu Manmatbanath
Banerjee, Ral Bahadur, Shib Chunder.
Barth, M. A.
Belchambers, Mr. R.
Deb, Babu Manahar.
Dutt, Mi. O. C.
Dutt, Babu Prosaddoss.
Elgin, Lord.

Elgin, Lord. Ghose, Babu Norender K.

Ghosh, Babu Kuli Prasanna.
Graham, Mr. Wulliam.
Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
Haridas Viharidas Desai, the late Dewan.
Iyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami.
Lambert, Sir John.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitta, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, Babu Sidheshur.
Mookeijee, Raja Peary Mohan,
Mookeijee, Babu Sutendia Nath, Murshidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
Routledge, Mr. Jajues.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Sanyal, Babu Dinabundho,
Savitti Library.
Tippera, the Bara Thakur of.
Vambèry, Professor Arminus. Ghosh, Babu Kali Prasanna. Vambèry, Professor Arminus. Vizianagram, the Maharaja of. POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders to be made to the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, I. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta,

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remarkable man.—Mr. H. Bibington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895.

Dr. Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and originality about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading.—Sir Alfred W. Conft, K.C.I.E., Director of Public Instuction, Bengal.

R.C.I.E., Director of Public Instuction, Bengal, 26th September, 1895.

It is not that aimd the pressure of harassing official duties an English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so graceful a tribute to the memory of a native personality as F. H. Skrine has done in his biography of the late Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, the well-known Bengal journalist (Calcutta: Thacker, Spink and Co.); nor are there many who are more worthy of being this honoured than the late Editor of Ress and Resyet.

We may at any rate cordially agree with Mr. Skrine that the story of Mookerjee's life, with all its lights and shadows, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not even the Hindoo Patriot, in its palmiest days under Kristodas Pal, enjoyed a degree of influence in any way approaching that which was soon attained by Rers and Rappet.

A man of large heart and great qualities, his death from premionia in the early spring in the last year way a distinct and heavy loss to Indian purnalism, and it was an admirable idea on Mr. Skrine's part to put his Life and Letters upon record—The Times of India, (Rombay) September 30, 1805.

It is rarely that the life of an Indian journalist becomes worthy of publication; it is more rarely still that such a life comes to be written by an Anglo-Indian and a member of the Indian Civil Service. But, it has come to pass that in the land of the Bengali Biblis, the life of at least one man among Indian journalists has been considered worthy of being written by an Englishman—The Madara Standard, (Madras) September 30, 1805.

The late Editor of Reis and Rappet was a

The late Editor of Reis and Rayyet was a The face Edition of Acces and Congress was a profound student and an accomplished writer, who has left his mark of Indian journalism. In that he has found a Civilian like Mr Skime to record the story of his life he is more fortunate than the great Kristodas Pid. himself .- The Tribune, (Lihote) October 2, 1895.

For much of the biographical matter that For much of the biographical matter that issues so freely from the press an apology is needed. Had no biography of Di. Mookerjee, the Editor of Reis and Rayset, appeared, an explanation would have been looked for. A man of his remarkable personality, who was easily first among native Indian journalists, and in many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at public affairs from a different point of view from theirs, could not an office of the sufferent point of view from theirs, could not an office of the sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a sufferent point of view from theirs, could not a suffered to such with a sufferent point of view from their suffered to such and suffered to the country of the suffered to the country of the suffered to the country of the suffered to the country of the suffered to the country of the suffered to be suffered to sink into oblivion without some attempt to perpetuate his memory by the usual expedient of a "life." The difficulties common to all biographers have in this case been increased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the leaned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mookerjee remained to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal biographer would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written his life. his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly laudatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dull page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Mookeijee are of such minor important that they might have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spaged. To say that he writes idiomatic English is to say what is short of the truth. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straightforward, without Oriental luxuriance or striving after effect. Perhaps he is never so charming after effect. Perhaps he is never so charming as when he is laying down the laws of literary form to young aspirants to fame. The lette on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piec The letter of criticism: it is delicate plant-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his aidour.

For much more that is well worth reading we

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume itself. Introsicially it is a book worth buying and reading. The Pioneer, (Allahabad) Oct. 5, 1895.
The career of "An Indian Journalist" as described by F. H. Skrine of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting.
Mookerjee's letters are marvels of pure diction which is heightened by his nervous style. The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Binguis but with all those who are able to appreciate merit unmarred by osteniation and earnestness unspoiled by Marshness.—The Mthammadlan, (Madras) Oct. harshness.-The Muhammadan, (Madras) Oct.

1895.
 The work leaves nothing to be desired either

The work leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, impartiality, or hielike portrayal of character.

Mr. Skrine deals with his ingressing subject with the unfailing instinct of the biographer. Every side of Dr. Mookeijee's complex character is treated with sympathy tempered by descriptions.

character is treated with sympathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skrine's narrative certainly impresses one with the individuality of a remarkable man. Mookerjee's own letters show that he had not only acquired a command of clear and flexible English but that he had also assumiflexible English but that he had also assum-lated that sturdy independence of thought and character which is supposed to be a pecu-lar possession of natives of Great Britain. His reading and the stores of his general in-formation appear to have been, considering his opportunities, little less than marvellous.

one of the first to express his condolence with the family of the deceased writer was the present Viceroy, Lord Elgin. Mookerjee appears to have won the affection not only of the digutaries with whom he came in contact, the angutaries with winn he came in contact, but also of those in low estate.

The impression left upon the mind upon laying down the book is that of a good and able man whose career has been graphically portrayed.—The Englishman, (Calcutta) October 15, 1895.

r 15, 1895. is career of an eminent Bengali editor, is career of an eminent Bengali editor, who died in 1894, throws a curious light upon the race elements and hereditary influences which affect the criticisms of Indian journal-which affect in exercisins or Indian journalists on British rule.

The "Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Monkerjee," a hook just edited by a distinguished cavillan in Calcutta, takes us behind the scenes of Indian journalism.

It is a narrative, written with insight and a complete mastery of the facts, of how a clever youth gradually grew into one of the ablest leader-writers in Bengal, and still more gradu-ally matured into one of the fairest-minded any mattred into one or the arrest-inition editors that western education in India has yet produced. If the training and experience which develop the journalist in England are sometimes varied, they seem in India to have which developes an even in anumal sometimes varied, they seem in anumal an even wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how a great Bengali journalist is made; space forbids us to enter upon his actual performances. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much felicity of expression, in Mr. Skrine's admirable monograph. It is characteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skrine belongs, that such a book should have issued from its ranks. Dr. Mookerjee was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—" India has neither the soil nor the elasticity, enjoyed has neither the soil nor the elasticity, enjoyed by young and vigorous communities, but present the arid rocks and deserts of an effect civilization, hardly stirred to a semblance of life by a foreign occupation dozing over its easily-gained advantages." This was true of the pre-Mutiny India of 1851. If it is no longer true of the Queen's India of 1895, we owe it in no small measure to Indian journalists like Dr. Mookerjee who have laboured, amid some misrepresentation, to quicken the semblance of life 'into a living reality.—The Times, (London) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAGNA-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the rough-est use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily reest use. Runs more than 28 hours with me winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Raulway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained haid knocks and jerks. × Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Ponnamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Dundum says:—I have sold it for from Dundum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. x Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium De-purment says:—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Rea Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fa-honable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Silt Inspector from Sankutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28 × Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real volid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed to a years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L M. S. Homwopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutta.

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY. 36, Lower Chitpore Road, F Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEM, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtainted a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical lustitutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, As-thma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including dis-eases brought on by irregularities of kinds, Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseas-es and remedies, are transmitted on applicaes and remedies, are transmitted on applica-tion. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases. Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

POSTAGE Stamps of all countries of the years 1850-1880, as well as those current of India, Native, English Colonies, are bought in any quantity, at the highest prices, either for Cash or other articles, such as jewellery, watches, clothets, silks, books, or any other things desired given in exchange. Orders or direct consignments solicited by

A. WEISZ.

Wholesale Stamp Dealer.

Established 1880.

61, Regent Street, London W.

Bankers: The London & County Bank.

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of hving parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2½d stamp by A HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY(ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

If paid in advance, Ks. 12 Half-yearly Quarterly ... Monthly ... ••• ... Single or sample Copy ... Ans. 0-8 If not paid in advance, Yearly ... Rs. 18 ... Half-yearly... ... ,, 10-8 ... Monthly , 6Monthly , 3Single or sample Copy ... Ans. oNd additional charge for postage or people ... Ans. 0-12

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Containications and books and pamphlets (cast age paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet." Advertisements (three columns to the page WICE: I, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 701.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE.

BY JAMES HUTCHINSON.

(Continued from p. 530.)

CANTO THIRD.

In vain, we ride before the blast,
Or trace the long, and weary way,
Without a star, whose cheering ray
May point us, to some haven at last;
The restless mind, without an aim,
Is scorched, at last, by passion's flame,
And we will, vainly, seek for rest,
In sunny lands, and cloudless skies;
Still memory pursues, nor dies,
A hell or heaven, within the breast,

ı.

Alone, I trod the desert way, And, scarce, a pathway marked the road; But all was silent, save the neigh Of the distant steed, the traveller rode; Or the Sarus, as he flew o'er head; * Or the mutmur, from some river's hed : Or the tinking of the Bunjarrah's bells, † As he swept, thro' the lone, and wooded dells, His cattle browsing, as they went, Tho' laden was each goodly steer ; Or the belling, from each thicket sent, By herds of wild untended deer ; Or the Jogee, with his matted hair, $ As he muttered, still, his ceaseless prayer ; Or the forest monarch's dreadful roar, As he seized his prey, or yelled for more; . I recked them not,-my heart was far away, And sorrowed, as I went, o'er some, long vanished, day, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , . Years passed away, and, with them, passed

The hope of that, to come at last, The long, self-promised, hoped for years Of happiness, undimmed by tears. They came not, as I said before : Perhaps, had sought some unknown shore; But those, who've found them, best can tell The sun-bright clime, in which they dwell ; I found it not !- how could I find Enjoyment, with a tortured mind? And yet, perhaps, my sorrow's force Had more of sadness, than temorse ; The not all guilless, I could brave-The scorn of living, or the graved But, when I thought of Lilloo's fate Hope told me, it was all too late; That, for the present, all was o'er, And life, a sea, without a shore :-But that were little ,-for I grieve, Not for myself, but her, who died; For her, who, on that fatal eve, For me, was whelmed, beneath the tide. 111.

I, now, had none, for whom to live ; No one, to whom 'twere joy to give; Yet deem not thence, I knew not bliss. The' brief my hours of happiness; Oh! many a stately flower, Arrayed, in woman's fairest charms, Hath decked my lonely bower; Aye! lain within these arms; But unesteemed, because unwoord, They had no power, to soothe my mood, Nor influence enough, to bind Th' affections of a fickle mind; Ah ! no, not fickle ; tho' unwed, My heart was constant to the dead; Yet I have often tried, in vain, To wake my soul, to love, again, As oft, remembrance fresh returned, And, from my breast, the intruder spurned.

And thus, I had no aim, in life; Then wherefore, still, this reckless strife, This ceaseless warfare, with my kind, For happiness, I could not find; This course of rapine, and of stealth For what I valued not,—their wealth.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

^{*} The Sarus is a stately and magnificent bird, of a light state colour, approaching to a French gray, belonging to the Stork or Crane species. Its call, as it flies over the wild, and wooded tracks of Central India, is very striking and sublime. The Sarus, I believe, is held in great religious veneration, by the Hindoos.

religious veneration, by the Hindoos.

† The Bunjarrahs may be said to be the desert merchants of India. They are to be found transversing the wild, and unfrequented tracks of the central parts of the country, with their flocks of cattle grazing, as they go, and laden with grain, cotton, iron, or other articles of internal traffic. They are generally accompanied by their women, if not by their families. At the end of their day's journey, they pile up their goods, in the form of a rude fortification, the interior of which is occupied by themselves, and their cattle. In times of war, the Bunjarrahs are generally respected, by the contending armies. The name, I betieve, literally signifies, sweepers of the jungle. The tinkling, alluded to in the text, is occasioned, by the bells, which they are in the habit of attaching to the necks of their favourite steers.

The Jogee is one of the orders of itinerant religious mendicants belonging to the Hindoo faith.

The perils, and the enterprise, At first, had power to soothe my grief; But grown familiar, with their guise, Tney, long, had ceased to yield relief ;--And could these fail, and sordid gold The gates of happiness unfold? Ah! no. I had enough, and yet, Memory defied me, to forget.

I found, it was a foolish thought, To deem, content could, thus, be bought, Or by aught else, except that love, That bids us, lift our hearts above ; And thus there came, by grace divine, Remembrance of my native vale, And of Bood'h-Gyah's holy shrine; I called to mind its cloistered cell, The quiet of each sainted tomb : And thought, if aught could soothe my gloom, It would be, there, to dwell ; And it might be, my sufferings past, And penances,-to rest at last. VI.

I spoke, and bade adieu to none, Buf late, one night, I took my way; None knew, or cared, where I had gone ; Perhaps they sorrowed, for a day, For I was ever first to ride, And skilful too, their course to guide; But what availed the parting tear, Or bitterer still, the taunt, and jeer ; My purpose ta'en, they could not shake,—
Or hinder it ;—when a wake? n awake?

VH. I gained, at length, the well-known pile, And hoped to find, in convent cell, 4 The quiet, which I loved so well. At first, all nature seemed to smile, /The Fulgo's broad, and glassy stream Swept past me, like a fleeting dream ; I saw the craggy ridge extend, And hailed it, as a well-known friend; And farther still,-the lake around. So loved, seemed hallo .'d ground ; The very birds, that wheeled their flight, In mazy cucles, through the au, Hovering, above its vaters fair, Seemed those, that, las , had met my sight. VIII.

But Oh ! I could not ! in my eve, Adown the stream, lev I should spy Scenes, linked so dark ", with my fate, f That beautifus, although they be, And graven, on my it mory, I could no longer costemplate. And then, there were a me silly tongues, That prattl'd of my Lo so's wrongs ; And how, those wromes wrought farther deeds, O'er which, my heart, yet, freshly bleeds Then tale was false .-- none knew her fate Sive one, and that were now too late . That litest witness was her sire. And where is he 2-go isk the pyre (To be continued.)

WEEKLYANA.

DR. M. R. Leverson, Secretary to the Anti-Vaccination Society of America, summarises the four blue books of the British Royal Commission and of the works of Drs. Crookshank, Creighton and Buckly, in these words :-

in these words:—

1st. That vaccination never has prevented and never can prevent an attack of small-pox.

2nd. That it is powerless to modify any such attack.

3rd. That it has invaccinated, and is hable to invaccinate syphilits, cancer, leproxy, tuberculosis, scrofula and many other diseases.

4th. That it is almost certain that vaccination has caused more deaths and diseases than ever has small-pox, whose dangers and rawages have been wickedly exaggerated by official quacks.

6th. That Jenner was a mercenary charlatan worse ignorance and impatience of scientific methods were equalled only by his mendacity, in which last habes been imitated by his official followers.

THE following farewell Aimy order was issued on the occasion of relinquishing the command of Her Migesty's Army by the Duke of Cambridge who had held the distinguished position for 39 years, and Her Majesty's commission for 58 years.

"War Office, October 31, 1895.
Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Duke of Combridge, K.G., retinquishes to-day the duties of the command of Her Majesty's Army, a post of benour and distinction which he has held since July 16, 1856. His Royal Highness has for nearly fifty-eight years held Her Majesty's commission, and he now severs his connection with the active duties of honour and distinction which he has held since July 16, 1856. His Royal Highness has for nearly fifty-eight years held Her Majesty's commission, and he now severs his connection with the active duties of his profession with the deepest sortion and regiret. In relinquishing these duties His Royal Highness desires to place on record the obligations he is under to all general and other officers who have so uniformly and ably assisted and supported him in maintaining the Army in the high state of discipline and efficiency for which it is distinguished, and he desires to express his deep sense of the admirable conduct, both in the field and in quarters, invariably displayed by offi ers, which in officers, non-commissioned offi ers, and men of the active Service over whom he has so long presided. The period covering His Royal Highness's command of the Army has been one of great changes. The abolition of purchase, the introduction of short service, of the territorial system, and of improved arms, and equipments, have all been materially assisted in their development by the cordial co-operation of all ranks of the officers of the Army. The Milita have been brought into closer connection with the Line, the Yeomanny have become far more efficient, and the institution of the Volunteer Force in 1859 marked an important epoch in the expansion of the definitive range fliction, and the institution of the Volunteers, have become a valuable portion of Her Majesty's Army. In India also most important initiaty changes have been effected, commencing with the amalgamation of the late East India Company's troops with Her Majesty's Army in 1860, since which their great changes have been arrived at in many details connected with the Army of India, concluding with the recent reorganisation of the Presidential armose into one command under the control of the Commander-in-Close in India. In bidding the Army an affectionate farewell the Dinke has been arrived at many details connected with the Army of India, concluding with the recent red

On his retirement, the Duke has 1 in honomed with the unprecedented title of Colonel-in-Chief in the British Army. He will besides draw his pay as Field-Marshal under the old warrant obtaining before the abolition of the system of honorary colonelcies, which considerably adds to his retiring allowance.

A royal Duke has been removed from the head of the British army, and no member of the reigning family acceeds him. It is also to be put beyond all control, nominal as it is, of the Sovereign. The Navy has passed out of Her Majesty's han's. Its affairs are administered by the independent Board of Aominalty, "The commissions of nava officers are not signed by the Quee, not is Her Majesty referred to in the appointments and promotions of officers, in the ratification of courts-martial, not is there any such connection between the Crown and the First Lord in regard to the service as existed between the Sovereign and the Communder-in-Chief for the last thirty-nine years at all events." The same change is foresholowed in the new air ingements about the Army. Its affairs will be administered by a Board with a nonroyal Commander-in-Chief as its head, under the lead of the Secretary of State for War. Here is an echo of the Ridical cry for the abolition of toyalty.

NEXT day, the new Commander-in-Chief Lord Wolseley issued the following order:

"In obedience to the gracious order of Her Majesty the Queen, Field-Marshal Viscount Wolseley assumes command of the Land

^{*} There are several religious edifices at Bood'h Gyah, but the one * There are several religious edifices at Bood'h Gyah, but the one bere more narroularly alinded to, is a college or convent of religious ascences. I rather think, that they are of the Buddhist larth; at the head of the institution, there is a Mohunt, or superior, who on occasions of ceremony goes about as described in the text, attended by twenty, thirty or forty of these brethren, but scantily clad, and armed with sticks or bludgeous. The first appearance of this cortege, even to a person accustomed to the East, is very striking.

[†] It has been already mentioned, that the city of Gyah is only about six miles, further down the stream, than Bood'h-Gyah , both are situated close to the banks of the Fulgo.

Forces of the Crown at home and abroad, in succession to Field-Marshal His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. In this, his first, Army order Lord Wolseley wishes, in the name of the Army, to assure His Royal Highness of the affectionate regard of all who have served under him unum his long period of office. It will be Lord Wolseley's endeavour, in the discharge of the high duties now entrusted to him, to maintain the girst to dutions of the British Army, to further the well-heing of the soldier, and to encourage the progress called for by the unceasing advance in warlke applicances and in military knowledge which makes this age. The good spirit which animates alike the Regulars, the Militia, the Yeomanry, and the Volunteers, is so well known to Lord Wolseley that he confidently relies upon the loyal support of altranks in his desire to promote the military efficiency of Her Majesty's Army.—By Command of Field-Marshal the Viscount Wolseley, Commander-in-Chief.—REDVERS BULLER, A.G."

The Duke, who was opposed to many reforms, leaves the Army in a high state of discipline and efficiency. The Viscount comes in to introduce reforms and make it a real fighting machine, ready to be used for whatever purpose the nation might require.

THE next Criminal Sessions of the High Court will commence from Wednesday, the 4th of December, Mr. Justice Trevelyan presiding

THE Upper India Chamber of Commerce has re-elected its Pre. sident Mr. W. E. Cooper as its representative in the Legislative Council of the N.-W. P. and Oudb.

In the Court of the Sessions Judge of Allahabad five men were tried for the death of a pahlwan (wrestler), two being charged with murder and three with abetment of the offence. The three assessors, disbelieving the evidence of the informer, were of opinion that none of the accused was guilty. "In view of the conflicting evidence in the case," the Judge did not think it was necessary for him "to arrive at a different conclusion." The tables have been turned upon the informer, who is under arrest and will be tried for perjury.

THE statue of Lord Reay has arrived at Bombay. It is being erected near that of Sir Richard Temple and will be unveiled by Lord Sandburst.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS.

æ

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

~おりかがないな~

THE troubles of the Sultan continue. He has appointed a Special Commission to report day and night upon the result of the measures adopted for the restoration of order in Anatolia.

Fresh massacres of Christians have taken place at Aintal, near Aleppo, where 200 were killed A large number have also been killed at Marash. A state of anarchy prevails in Central Albania, where the chiefs are defying the authority of the Porte.

The Russian Black Sea fleet has been recommissioned, and the troops at Odessa are all ready for active service.

Sir Philip Currie, British Ambassador, has returned to Constantinople. The situation in Asia Minor is improving. The Ambassadors of the Powers believe that a conference will be indispensable in order to settle Turkish affairs. Meanwhile they are in favour of deferring further action beyond doubling the guard ships of the Embassies. There is no proposal for a conference and the respective Cabinets consider no adequate basis exists for the same.

Fifty foreign warships are assembled in the Levant, eighteen of which are British.

The situation in Turkey has generally improved, and all is now quiet in Asia Minor. In consequence of this a better feeling prevails on all the Bourses in Europe.

The American missionaries at Marash report that the carnage on the 19th was terrible, many hundreds having been killed. The Armenians estimate that 40,000 victims have fallen during the late massacres.

The Turkish Foreign Minister has informed Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador, that the doubling of guardships at Constantinople by the Powers would be granted.

During a debate in the Italian Chamber of Deputies Signor Crispi, Premier, expressed his confidence that peace would be maintained, but if unhappily it should not, the rights of Italy would be protected. Baron Blanc, Foreign Minister, described the earnest efforts made by Italy to establish a concert of all the Powers. The Pote, he said, will make a mistake if it supposed that it can temporize by raising a discussion about the past, and by seeking to prevent the Powers from affording naval protection to their pacific interests.

The Sultan is entirely in the hands of the Palace clique under Izzet Bey, and still refuses to grant the neccessary firmans for doubling the guardships of the Enbassies. The Ministers are in constant attendance on His Majesty at the Palace.

The latest advices state that fresh disturbances have taken place at Erzeroum, in which twelve Armenians were killed.

Advices from Crete state that fighting has taken place near Canea, and that the insurgents have defeated the Turks, who lost forty in killed and woulded.

THE Queen in addressing a detachment of the Scots Guards at Windsor, prior to their departure for Ashanti, said she would follow their progress with interest and pray for their safety. Her Majesty wished them God-speed. Colonel Sir F. C. Scott and his staff have sailed for the West Coast of Africa. Prior to his departure he was interviewed at Liverpool by Reuterds representative, and said that, whether King Prempeh submits or not to the British demands, the expedition must go to Coomassie.

A choleraic disease has broken out at St. Petersburg, with fourteen cases and seven deaths in three days.

THE Chinese are negotiating with a German and a British syndicate for a loan to pay the next instalment of the Japanese indemnity.

GREAT Britain has proposed to the Brazilian Government to arbitrate regarding the possession of the Island of Trinidad.

THE Novos Vremya states that Japan recognises the unconditional right of Russia to keep Corea and Manchuria within the sphere of her influence.

THE French Chamber of Deputies unanimously voted credits for increasing the Consulates in China. The police suddenly searched the houses of all the Socialist Deputies and leaders and impounded all party papers which they found. M. Beithelot, Foreign Minister, in the Chamber of Deputies, announced that it was the intention of the Government to enforce to the utmost its economic rights to Madagascar, which would henceforth be a French possession. He stated that while observing loyally its pledges towards oreigners, it had been decided to uphold the existing treaty, but to modify it somewhat, in order to remove any doubt regarding its meaning. The Chamber, after an excited debate regarding the blunders in connection with the expedition to Madagascar, approved of the conduct of the Ministry, 426 deputies voting in favour of it and 59 against.

M Jules Barthelemy Saint Hilaire and M. Alexandre Dumas are

HER Myesty the Queen has conferred the honour of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India upon Ludy George Hamilton.

THE trial on the second indictment in connection with the Liberator Building Society frauds has concluded. Jabez Balfour has been, sentenced to seven years' penal servitude on the first indictment and seven years on the second, or 14 years in all. Defendants Brock and Theobald have been sentenced to nine months' and four months' imprisonment respectively.

THE Italian Budget Statement shows a surplus of eight million lire without any increase in taxation or national debt.

THE Egyptian Budget for 1896 shows a surplus of £630,000.

CARDS for the Viceroy's Levée, to be held at Government House, Calcutta, on the 16th of December, must be sent to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting not later than Wednesday, the 4th of December, 1895. We will remind gentlemen presenting others that they are required to be present themselves.

SIR Charles Elliott will be entertained tonight at St. Andrew's Dinner, Raja Benoy Krishna, of Raja Nabakissen's Street, has announced an Evening Party to do honour to His retiring Honor, from whom he received yesterday the patent of his new nobility.

In a private letter dated Lahore, the 27th of November, we read-"The weather has just become cold, it was unusually warm four or five days ago. The sky is now overcast and it threatens rain."

In Calcutta, with the close of November, it is not yet cold weather. The mortality from fever is very high.

A CORRESPONDENT writes :-

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—
"Reic has been wrong in publishing that the 'Bickaneer Imperial Service Come! Corps' was the only one of its kind in India, after its inspection by the Viceroy at Fattetpur Siki Hely. There has been a very efficient came! corps of Bhuttpur for a long time, though not for Imperial service. I think it was organized by the late Chief after 1870, when he first received powers of Edministration, notably of the army at the outset. It might have been in existence before his time, as Bhuttpur has always been a military chiefship, but he certainly received in with uniform arms and accounternests." Bhurtput has always been a multary emersory, organized it with uniform, arms and accountements."

On the 19th November, Rija Vishwanath Singh Bahadoor of Chhatarpur, Bundelkhand, Central India, was invested with the title of Maharaja by Cuptain Ramsav, Political Agent. There was a Durbar, the Political addressed the Miharaja, the sanud was read and handed over when the Maharaja replied. A feature of the Durbar was that the assembled Thakurs and the officials of the State, one after another, went up to the Political Agent, and each presented him as nazar a gold mohur which was touched and remitted. On behalf of the State were presented trays of embroidery and Benares cloth, an elephant, a horse, a country matchlock gun and a spear. The last two only were accepted. Was this honour specially done for the occasion, or has it been the practice of the State since the days of Saidar South Sah? If an innovation, the new distinction is a dishonour to the Lord of the World.

THE death of Mr. II. W Foster, LCS., Registrar of the Mudras High Court, is a paniful one. He had just married in England and was on his way to Midras with his bride, when he suddenly died of heart disease in the train near Guntakul station on the Southern Marhatta Rulway Mis. Foster had hardly realized her married state when she became a widow. How terrible the situation to a Hindu child wife who continues a widow for life!

BABU Pootno Chunder Shome, of the Subordinate Judicial Service, having retired on pension, is anxious to offer his services to the public in another capacity. He has obtained permission of the High Court to practise as a Pleader.

THE District Commal Courts in Burma will no longer have the assistance of Public Prosecutors. The Chief Commissioner has accordingly reminded the Migistrates that their duty is "to ascertain the facts of the case" and not merely to content, themselves with recording and weighing the evidence before them. In other words, the Magistrates must direct the prosecution and be both the Police and the Judge.

THE academic death, prescribed for Bengali children for possessing, after the first warning, a copy of a book suppressed for scurrilous atticks on the Government, is not so light an affur in England. Jurists, both barbarous and civilised, are agreed that children, like the king, can do no wrong. Those conversant with the Mahabharata know how the grou Judge of the Infernal regions, the mighty Yama himself, was builed down from his palace and office and forced to take both in the lowest of the four orders of human beings on the earth, for the punishment he had the foolishness to inflict on the Rishi Mandavya for an offence committed in childhood. Mandavya was a powerful ascetic, possessed of wealth of penances and fully competent to impose his will on Yama. The Indian Penal Code has exempted children from criminal liability, but there is nobody to notice the prank of a provincial Secretariat when, in its wisdom, it thinks fit to legislate by an executive order and create, in the very teeth of the Penal Code, not only a new offence, but provide for it the heaviest penalty. Clever as our Secretaries are, their knowledge of the law is neither extensive nor deep. One of them who may be taken as a fair specimen of the class, some years ago, surprised a colleague of his on the managing Board of a metropolitan Library by his unfamiliarity with English authors by no means unknown to the advanced students of Indian Colleges. He had not heard that the delightful philosophical egotist, Montaigne, the father of a new species of literature, the great exemplar of Add son and Steele and Johnson, had been Englished. Florio and Charles Cotton were names of no significance to him. The same official, on another occasion, stared at the mention of Jeffrey, the father of nineteenth century criticism, and enquired what he had written. Sydney Smith, in noticing an erroneous decision on poaching, recommended Beccaria on Crimes and Punishments to one of the greatest Judges of England. We may, without offending, recommend to the Secretariat a perusal of the judgment of Lord Camden in what is known as Shipley's case. Shipley was a young man of a respectable family. Possessed of talents and great freedom of thought, he had written some essays in which the good dons of his university discovered all manner of evil. They charged hun with heresy, immorality, and what not, and convicted him in solemn conclave, without having granted him a hearing, and pronounced sentence of expulsion and academic death, If it were India, such sentence would have been irrevocable. But in England no one is above the law. Shipley appealed to the Lord Chancellor and keeper of the Great Seal as representing the Sovereign in his capacity of visitor of the College. It is a domestic tribunal, but the forms provided by the wisdom of ages for ensuring correctness of decisions prevail in it in full force. Lord Camden set aside the sentence of the learned dons and read them a sharp lecture for presuming to judge a fellow man without having given him an opportunity for defence. The biographer of Lord Camden was at some pains for obtaining a copy of that judgment and preserving it for future reference. Lord Campbell says that to the end of his life, the great Chancellor regarded it with approbation. The following extracts from the precious deliverance may be read with interest and delight by all whose minds have not been seared by an unchecked and long practice of official tyranny.

"The appellant, Shipley, a young man at the University, had been expelled from his College for the supposed off-ace of publishing a linel, aggravated, as his accusers and judges chose to say, by his being guilty of "general immorthity." The College being a royal foundation, he appealed to the King, as Visitor. The appeal was heard by Lord Camden, Lord Chancellor, who said . -

' The jurisdiction is exercised in the right of the King, as Visitor. It is, in its nature, very peculiar. It is a despotism incontrolled, and without appeal; the only one of its kind which is known in this Kingdom.

'I contemplate with pleasure so numerous an assembly, as there is no restraint upon the Visitor but his own character,

' Not considering here the imp at of the evidence, I shall pronounce that Mr. Shipley was condemned unheard, and without such previous trial as natural justice required. Waether my fact, was proved against him or no, is not, in this view of the subject, in iterial. Such a mode of proceeding is never to be be justified or illowed by a Jurige. It is a natural principle of justice engitived upon the heart-not acquired by book-learning-that no one is to be condemned unheard. *

'I could wish that persons who are intrusted, for ingenuous purposes, with a despotic power over youth, would understand the first principles of justice. Were it a case of ordinary discipline, or of customary punishment, I should, in this domestic forum, turn a very deaf ear to complaint, though, as representing the royal visitor, I can reverse any act. I should wish, in all such cases, to leave the governors of a college almost absolute. But in the case of expulsion, I wish for temper, and I must have it, for I must claim it. That p nishment is extreme. It is capital. It inflicts academic death. An independent member of a College is, by this mark upon him, sent home degraded, stript of his degrees, and of advantages in certain professions. He comes into the world introduced by odium of clariform, 1. I should expect that a proceeding, to be attended with so his consequences, should be conducted with temper, said be supported by solid proof, and be satisfactory to ad reasonable minds?

YESTERDAY, there was a Durbar at Belvedere. It was the last of Sir Charles Educt's. The occasion was, as the carl of invitation, printed in gold probably to lend additional dignity to the ceremony bit unreadable, especially at night, says, "the investiture of certain gentlemen on whom titles have been conferred by Ris Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India". The card contained the name of the block and the number of the seat set apart for the invited. It, however, give no plan of the durbar hall for you to know where your seat was. It was misleading in another way, showing no indication of all that was done at the Durbar. A surprise was reserved for the visitors. The gentlemen invested, and they are no more for the titles conferred, are

- 1. Rojoh Binaya Kushna Deb, of Sovabazar, Calcutta.
- 2. Raja Norendro Lall Khan, of Narojole in Midnapur.
- 3. Shams-ul-Ulma Maulai Muhammad Hahadad, of Calcutta.
- 4. Moulvi Suyid Nasiruddin Ahmed Khan Bahadin, of Bihar.
- 5 Rai Sattye Konkur Sen Bahadur, Government Pleader, Buidwan. 6 Rai Hari Krishna Mazandar Bahadur, of Islampur in Murshidabad.
- 7. Ru Kodas Chunder Bose Bihadur, of Calcutta.
- 8. Rai Madhab Chunder Roy Bahadur, of Calcutta.
- 9. Rai Brohma Mohun Muluck Bahadur, of Hughli,

The proceedings, after the much of the Lieutenant-Governor preceded by Chopdars and his aids-de-camp and followed by his Private Secretary and Secretaries and Under-Secretaries to the Government of Bengal, opened not with conferment of the sanads of Indian titles, but with another and different matter in which His Honor has no jurisdiction. The programme even as published in the Englishman of the previous morning makes no allusion to it, verifying the truth of our remark. The first to be introduced to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in Durbar, So Coarles Ethott sat in no other capacity, was the Hon'ble Ray meswar Prosad Sing Bahadoor of Gidhour robed as a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. Two warrists were read by the Chief Secretary, one appointing him a Knight, and the other dispensing with personal invessiture, then the Lieutenant-Governor pinned the star on the Knight's bir ist and addressed him. The warrant uself gives and grants unto on R waneswar "full power and authority to we if and use upon the left side. If his upper vestment the Star and also to wear and use the Riband and Badge appertationing unto a Knight Commander." It has been e plained that the Maharaja was anxious to receive his new honous at the hands of Sir Charles. That can hardly justify the part a nimed by S r Charles Elliott. He was only to be the beater of the warrants, the Insigma and the Bulge, but he chose to act the G aid Master as he did, his Chief Scorelary abetting the illegality and the other Knights and Companions of the Order present all ling it improtested. Kn in Bahadar Abdul . Jubbat was similarly in sted with the insignia of a Companion of the seme Order, and enlogised for his services to the Governmen which would not make bin Inspector-General of Registration that he might retire as such. The holders of Indian titles for whom the Durbar was held next of imed the Lieutenant-Governor's attention The sanads were banded over. The two Rijas were addressed to separately and the rest disposed of en masse.

At the Wanowrie rifle raige, Poona, on the morning of November 18, a Sepoy of the 7th B imbay Infantry ran amuck, and killed four men including himself. After firing from 200 yards, while advancing to 300, he commenced to in wildly about, threatened an ex-Sub idar-Major of his own regiment—a retired pensioner—who had saunteed up to the range, and shot him dead with the loaded rifle, when the Hivildar of the regiment went forward to seize him. He too was fired at and killed instantly. Then the infuriate man of war began to fire indiscriminately. It was now the turn of Lieutenant Riddell, of the 4th Bombay Rifles, who was acting for the range officer, to attempt the arrest and be killed. Finding him advance, the Sepoy warned the Captain not to come near him. To prevent further mischief, the officer tried to approach when he received a shot in his arm, Another desperate struggle with the wounded arm, and another shot, at which the Ciptain fell. The Sephy then ran 300 yards, reloaded his rifle for his own destruction, took off, his boots, then took his own, life, He had been a Jemidir and been reduced to a Sepov, for which he bore a gratige against the two native officers he koled. The man had evidently been smarting under the injustice as he took it. He had no intention of killing the European officer but was driven to the deed in the midness of the hour; and when he found that he had committed a wrong, he punished miniself and went, the way of all his victims. The tragedy is a warning to all to be just and to administer justice in a way that it may not be felt as an injustice. Of late, are not such instances in alaplying? The Sepoy was a Sikh by religion. What could be the meaning of his taking off the boots? Was it, as since reported, only to facilitie the act of self-destruction by holding his implement more tightly, or was it the desire of freeing himself from a contaminating substance at the last moment when bent upon making the voyage to eternity?

TUESDAY last, Sir Charles Elliott, accompanied by his Private Secretary, went to Seebpore for inspecting the new bridge at Shahmar. The Magistrate of Howrah, Mr. Grieron, was in attendance, with Babu Gapal Lal Shall who has met the entire cost of the construction coming up to Rs. 13,000. Sir Charles expressed satisfaction at the work and thanked the donor in the name of the local public. This is a fair start. We hope Babu Seal will soon recover lost ground.

THE Sular Dainth, a metropolitan Bengali daily, nivites attention to what it regards a jubbery in the Controller's branch of the Postal Department. A Superintendent drawing Rs. 200 has been promoted, over the heads of orany seniors, to officiate in a post of Rs. 900. It is not the appointment so much that the Dainth objects to as the conduct of the offi er favoured. Himself unfamiliar with his duties, he inflicts fines for trivial errors. Vexed at the delay of an old clerk in bringing up certain records, these model officer—the favourite of Mr. W. H. Sindell, the Controller, ordered the man to be dragged before him by the eir. The veroacular piess is, of course, scurribus and deals in sciolids and intruths. Ene following, however, from the same article that charges Mr. Kelly, for that is the name of the Superintendent, may be read with interest by those who wish to form a correct opinion of the character of that piess.

press.

"If thinks are to be given for the excellent arrangements of the Siving Books Department of the "est office, these are due to Messi. Dillon and Gold noticed Bobert. To Charan Diss. It is in consequence of the nordigence and a weariest exertions of these three officers of the nordigence and to weariest exertions of these three officers of the normalized by a grant came to a be conducted so wed. * * * * 2.1 Gold man never reproved any clerk for any error. The used to say that work connever be satisfactorily.

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science.

210, Bow Boys Street, Calcutti.

(Session 1895 95.)

Lecture by Baba Rain Chande Datts, FCS, on Monday, the 2nd Dec. at 4 15 PM, Subject: Cube Hs leates, Gueosides and Alkaloids. Leture by Dr. D. N. Chatter et BA, MBCM, on Fuesday, the 3rd Inst., at 6 to 8. PM. Subject. Histology—Laver; Physiology—Alment atom.

Lecture by Babu Rajondia Nath Chaterine, MA, on Wednesday the 4th Inst., at 6.30 P.M. Subj. 7. Light—its nature and mode of Propagation.

Lecture by Dr. Nilratan Surker, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 5th last, at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject: Zoology-, The Flut worms.

Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lal Sucar, on Tuursday, the 5th Inst., at 4-30 P.M. Subject: Galvanometer. Action of currents upon each other. Lecture by Dr. Nihatan Sukai, M.A., M.D., on Saturday, the 7th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Chemical Physiology—Cubo-Hydrates.

Admission Fee, Rs. 4 for Physics, and Rs. 4 for Chemistry; Rs. 6 for both Physics and Chemistry; Rs. 4 for Physiology; Rs. 4 for General Biology; Rs. 6 for complete course of Physiology and Biology. The charge for a single lecture is 4 Annas.

MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR, M.D.,

Honorary Secretary,

November 30, 1895.

exacted by reproof and fines, that kindness can always do more than painthment for trivid mixtikes. Mesers, Goldman and Dillon were men with goduke hearts. Their kindness for subordinates and the devotion and love they inspired, made work a pleasure with every clerk. There is not cyclick that does not shed to us at the mention of these names. Mr. Goldman was really a man made of gold?

Does this not support Sir Richard Guth's estimate of the native press? That toess orange a hundred chales to light and is never slow to be thankful for small acts of kindness shown by officials in power. It is only those whose misdieds are drigged to light of day that speak ill of it and desire its summary suppression.

MR. Radice, well known for vigour beyond the law, has this time signalised beinself by writing an "amended judgment" in a case of disputed possession, six days after he had ceased to be the Joint Migrarate of Mymensing. The High Court, to the exercise of its Criminal appellate purisdiction, says,-" The order of this Court was that the Joint Magistrate of Mymensiag was to deal with the case. Mr. Radice at the time he wrote this judgment, had, no more power to write it or do any other work as Joint Magistrate of Mymensing than any private individual. His judgment, therefore, is not a document which can be acted upon." The case has, accordingly, been sent back for being disposed of "by the Joint Magistrate of Mymensing, whoever he may be." How long will. Mr. Radice he allowed to play pranks before high heaven? Sir Charles Elliott, however, it is believed, regards every exhibition of vigour beyond the law with satisfaction if that vigour touches only the dark subjects of the crown.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, November 30, 1895. TITULAR DISTINCTIONS IN INDIA.

In former days there were no periodical issues of what is now called the Honors' List, It is now Gazetted twice a year with great regularity. It is an innovation which time has brought in its train. The practice is, no doubt, deserving of praise, of rewarding honourable and accomplished, and even wealthy, members of society for enlightenment and public munificence, as also servants of the State for valuable services rendered to the Sovereign. A break, however, is noticeable in the policy that used to regulate the bestowal of honours. During the early days of British rule, titles were never conferred after the manner of the present times. Then, instead of any new titles, only such as were enjoyed, by courtesy or under the sanction of the old Mussulm in Government, by scions of the landed aristocracy were recognised. Generally, the recognition took place on the succession of the eldest member of the house to the headship of the family In Bengal, hous salke those of Burdwan, Bunwaribad (Beerbhoom), B. ttith, Hutwa, Doomraon, Shipur (Champarua), Pacher (Manbhoom), Gangpore (Chota-Nagpur), Bhockoylish (24 Perg mas), all enjoyed the respective titles of their families, from Maharajadhiraj, Ameer-ul Moodk, Nizumut-ud-Dowlah, to Maharaja and Raja Bahatat. None of these honorific distinctions was created by the British Government. Originally bestowed by the Mussulman Government. they were inherited by the eldest members of the houses on their succession to the family estate. The British had the wis lom to recognise them when new successors came in. Among members of untitled houses the first recipient of honour from the present rolers was Nobokissen who had rendered valuable services in the early days of the East

Kally Kissen, when the title was conferred on his son, Harendra Krishna, in 1874, it was considered to be hereditary, although titles in India could not be so under the resolution of the Government of India, in the Foreign Department, of May 1820, and according to the sense of the despatch from Lord Canning, dated December 1859, to the Secretary of State. If we mistake not, when the title of Maharaja Bahadur was conferred on the successor of Maharaja Mahatap Chand Bahadur of Burdwan during the administration of Sir Ashley Eden, the Bengal Government, in recommending the bestowal, urged on the Government of India that it should not be hereditary. If such was the intention of Government in the case of a landed house like Burdwan, it is a strong precedent against those new men who having obtained a title aspire to perpetuate it in their families. Before the mutiny, titles were very sparingly conferred. The descendants of Dewan Gunga Govind Sing were for many years without any titular distinction. Pratap Narain Sing did not obtain the stamp of aristocracy before 1854, although Paikpara was one of the biggest and most important houses in metropolitan Bengal, The mutiny brought about a change in the policy of title-giving as of many other measures of administra-tion. The British Government had to reward those that had rendered invaluable services during the dark days of the Sepoy rebellion. A perfect shower of honors was poured by the first Viceroy of the Crown. From that time a new disease has appeared in the country, called the title-fever. It has spread all over the land. A large number of persons has been attacked by it. In their struggle for honorific distinctions, they assume virtues which they have not. The help is sought of the infector newspapers of the country. The hard-earned money of stingy ancestors is freely spent, the chief object being to win the good will of the District executive. In this way, many works of public utility have been given to the country. Schools and hespitals have been founded or subsidised. New roads and canals have been laid and excavated. The very Zoological gardens of Government have received accessions in the form of either new buildings for the shelter of old faunt or new specimens added to the collections. When the Orissa famine made its appearance, one of the Calcutta Baboos fed a certain number of beggars. He was, for this, recommended for the title of Rija Bahadur, in the name of the Lieutenant-Governor who had then left the country, by the Secretary who was an intimate friend of the Baboo. It was urged on his behalf, that he was closely related to one that had been made a Raji Bidadar, so that there was no chance of the distinction being lowered in the public estimation. Thus was his admission facilitated into the new order of nobility created by the Government. It should be noted, however, that the gentleman in question has taken the lead in the town in the matter of munificence to the hungry poor. More than five hundred persons of both sexes and all ages are still fed by his heirs every day. The instances are many of other admissions into the titled aristocracy of persons that distinguished themselves by liberal expenditure on the occasion of the Orissa and the later famines that have visited the country. Indeed, it was since the Orissa famine that the India Company. Nobokissen's family still enjoys flood gates of title have been opened, and every the honour as a hereditary one. In the line of Sir one can aspire to some so t of distinction by only Raja Radha Kant Deb Bahadur, the title of Raja creating an interest with the D strict officers, worth Bahadur has also been hereditary. In that of being only a secondary consideration. It is high time some restrictions were placed on conferring If the Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government titles as on the bestowal of public appointments. It is to be regretted that several persons have been admitted into the rank of Raja or Nawab who ought not to have been admitted for more than one reason. A foreign Government, however, that is not in touch with the people, can hardly be blamed for errors of the kind.

Ot late, public munificence has come to be regarded as the sole qualification for admission into the titled aristocracy. By this is meant liberal contributions in behalf of the fads of officials in power. Lady Dufferin's fund has been the occasion of the making of many Rajas and Nawabs. The Lowis Sanitarium at Darjeeling. a really useful institution, has made one or two. The Howrah Town Hall has given us some Rai Bahadurs. Even a benefaction for housing a little school at Calcutta named after a Secretary to the local Government, promises to give us a Maharaja unless the superior authorities scrutinize the recommendation with care. Of schools there was already a fungus growth in the metropolis, so that the one founded and christened after the Secretary could scarcely be regarded as needed. The benefaction, again, has been guarded by a clause about reversion of the gift to the donor or his heirs in case the institution comes to a demise. But Secretaries are not so big as Lieutenants of Provinces and they are thankful for small mercies.

The procedure of Raja-making is very simple. The District officer must report a person favourably. One must cultivate friendly relations with him if ambitious of being a titled subject. There are hundreds of ways by which to ingratiate oneself into the good graces of the District celestial. He has his fads, and one need only contribute liberally for their accomplishment. The next deity to be gratified is, of course the Divisional Commissioner. That task, however, is not so difficult. Partly, the District officer takes it upon himself to smooth the path. But if there is any obstruction, the District officer advises the aspirant as to what he should do. The Commissioner's acquiescence being se cured, the rest is easy wilking. The local Governments are bound to report favourably on that has been strongly recommended by the Division al Commissioner. The recommendations of the local Governments go up to the Foreign office. The Vice-roy is hunself his Foreign Minister; so that it is the Viceroy who, in consistation with his Privat-Secretary, does the rest, that is, orders the inclusion of the candidate's a one in the Honors List. Both the Vicerov and the Private Secretary have very little personal knowledge of the undividuals honoured But the absence of personal knowledge is no ber in such a case. A Kumar whom the Vicerov hesitated to grant a prevate interview for fear of opening the door wide, was immediately Gazetted a Raja. The language of the recommendations by the local Governments is curefully considered. Very generally, dever Secretaires win the day

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CHRED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Nuses in the Heal & amount of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very the sould in contractely curing cases of all kinds. Fill particulars, racta hag many one the testimomats and newspaper overs actions, will no sent pass from an ipplication, The system is, without doubt, the most surces ful ever brought before the public. Address, Amai Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminster, Landon, S. W.

can manage to draft a few sentences of power, that is, with a more eloquent ring than his confreres of the N-W Provinces or Madras or Bombay, the Bengal man is sure to be preferred to those of the other Provinces. Altogether, it is a question of wordpainting. There is one estimable feature in the procodure, and that is that no Secretary, or Lieutenant-Governor, or Governor, is allowed to interfere with the choice by personal solicitations of any kind, after the report has gone up to the Viceroy. In fact, none of them has the means to know who among the reported batches will succeed unless informed by the Viceroy's Private Secretary.

THE SPLIT IN THE CONGRESS CAMP.

THE DISPUTE OVER THE PAVILION.

THE contention at Poona regarding the use of the Congress pavilion, after the Congress, for the Social Conference, is not the fruitless squabble that philosophic indifference may choose to take it. Both sides are in earnest, and when both sides have so many intelligent men to lead them, the dispute demands a thorough examination. The Mahratta Brahmans, who are unwilling to place the pavilion at the disposal of the Social reformers, have voiced the sentiments of a large class. Managed as the Social Conference is, its resolutions, they maintain, are not worth the paper on which they are written, so far as the main body of the people is concerned. The reformers, whatever their reputation for intelligence and culture, are men of little or no social influence. They have, it is urged, broken with that society which they seek to reform. They are certainly at liberty to meet together, denounce the customs of orthodox society by argumentative speeches, and record their resolutions on paper for the use, as their opponents would say, of philanthropists in England. What the opposition wants is that they should not bring the Congress, which is a political institution, into disrepute with the main body of the people. The use of the Cengress payilion for ventilung social questions, it is feared, is very likely to make the Congress uself unpopular in the eyes of orthodox society by connecting it even vaguely with a movement against the existing order of things. Hindu Swiety is essentially conservative. It has set its face against widow-marriage. The exertions of of Indian philanthropists in that direction, have not borne all quate fout. Considering the money and the energy spent, the result achieved is sourcely calculable. Even if the reformers be held to have the best of the unument in their favour, that has served them hade. Right or wrong, the legislation of the Rishis, as understood by the country in general, is not likely to be soon given up. Those, therefore, that have not yet attained the degree of culture involved a indulgence of forbidden food and drink, in macrying daughters and sisters out of their own orders, in providing husbands for their widowed kinswomen, and in making journeys to foreign lands under circumstances incompatible with the observance of caste rules, shrink to take any step that may confound the Congress with a movement against religion and caste. India, they argue, wants many things. The programme of the Congress is a political and not a social one. There is nothing to prevent men who have not broken with religion and caste from meeting those who have, on the common platform of political reform. The Hindu, observing the externals of his faith-adoring his sacred fire and saying his twilight and midday prayers after the manner of his Vedic ancestors, feels no hesitation in working with any number of denationalised members of his own race, or, for that matter, with even Mussulmans and Englishmen, for winning new liberties for his country from the reluctant hands of his rulers. He feels that if he is to hope for success, he must enlist in his cause all comers irrespective of their dress, surroundings, or nationality. All differences may be sunk for accomplishing the common design. He is even willing, for the sake of the cause, to surrender himself, if need be, to the lead of those who differ from him in social customs and religion. He cannot, however, allow that his temporary disregard of all differences for a particular purpose should be availed of by those with whom he mixes, for making it appear that he means more than he actually does. The liberal electorate, he urges with great plausibility, comprising Christians of all de-nominations, of an English borough, may meet together as brethren for electing a liberal member for Parliament. But the electors, after their legitimate proceedings are over, can hardly allow any section of theirs to exhibit in the same place theological rancour against the rest of the people. A Methodist may combine with an Episcopalian, and both with a Calvinist or Lutheran, for taking into consideration. the intelligence of a destructive famine in an Indian province. But can the Methodist and the Episcopalian quietly permit the same organisation that has called the meeting to the Calvinist or Lutheran for denouncing Methodism and Episcopacy? If this is allowed, will not future meetings be impossible when called for common ends? Even this is the situation at Poona as understood by the orthodox section of that town. They are unwilling to permit the organisation that calls the Congress from being availed of by a portion of the Congressists for the exhibition of rancour against their customs and religion.

It is not very clear why the promoters of the Social Conference should be so eager for the Congress pavilion. As a matter of fact, the number of delegates actually taking apart in the Conference is very small, the main body having nothing to do with it. The few that di cuss social reform and record their resolutions, may very well afford to meet on a different occasion and in a different place. Elaborate arrangements are scarcely needed for bringing them together or for lodging them. They are, again, men of note who have achieved success in their respective professions. It cannot inconvenience them much or even at all, if they have to assemble a second time at a different place. Their persistence creates a very unfavourable impression. would seem that unwilling to work single-handed as they have always done, little recking the abuse daily showered on their heads by ignorance and faction, they wish to act under new auspices, expecting prestige and influence from the place and occasion of their meeting. They attach importance to the subject before them. To publish their deliberations widely and get as many converts as possible, are motives not ignoble. Excluding the few fanatical busybodies that now and then invoke the aid of legislation, with the generality of them even these are the only approved means of success. They must educate Indian opinion. To thrust, however, their company upon men shrinking from that honour, is not very honourable. The promoters of the Conference, it is said, wish to stand or fall by a plebiscitum of all the standing Congress committees in India. They are unwilling to give way at the opposition of the Poona Committee, Regrettable as the dispute is in consequence of the angry feelings it has already excited, the question, however, should be settled once

After the above was in type, intelligence reaches us of the dispute having ended. The promoters of the Conference will not ask for the loan of the Congress pavilion.

THE PILGRIM SHIPS ACT.

Lord Elgin has extricated himself from a difficult position. Lord Elgin has extricated himself from a difficult position. Six weeks ago we called attention to the outcry in the Indian Press, European and Native, against the Pilgrim Ships Bill, and to the memorial in which the Bombay Mussulmans had formally embodied their protest. That protest amounted to a declaration that the Bitish Government was, in spite of the Queen's solemn pledges, interfering with the religious observances of the people, and was converting pilgrimage, which forms a spiritual obligation on all Mahomedans who can accomplish it, into a luxury for the rich alone. The objectors also pointed out that the Viceroy. for the rich alone. The objectors also pointed out that the Viceroy, by the proposed Pilgrim Tax for the benefit of Turkey, was being made a catspaw for levving one of the most odious imposts known to the East. Lord Elgin's difficulty was intensified by the two facts that the Bill contained provisions which even the Minister in charge of it could not defend, and that it was the result of a compulsion which he could not with propriety avow.

The normal process of legislation in India is simple and effective. A provincial Government finds that some class of the community is suffering from grievences, or has developed new conditions with which the existing law fails to deal. It accordingly applies to the Government of India for legislation. The Supreme Government in the executive capacity scrutinizes the alleged necessity for a new law, carefully testing the evidence in correspondence with the exercise. Government which has moved in the matter. with the provincial Government which has moved in the matter, and with other of the local administrations in which the same problem is likely to arise. If satisfied of the necessity the Suprem-Government then proceeds in its legislative expacts to bring in a Bill. In doing so it places before the Legislature and the Indian public a detailed history of the steps taken to ascertain that the proposed measure has its origin in the actual wants of the people, and that it really meets those wants. The Legislative Council then refers the Bill for the criticism of the provincial Governments, or of those of them whose population can possibly be affected by its provisions. Various public bodies and recognized associations throughout India are also con Ited. A select comassociations throughout India are also confided. A select committee of the Legislative Council goes $de=\varpi$ through the whole evidence thus collected, and, if needful, manifes the Bill so as to bring it into absolute accord with the ficts. Any member of the Legislature who thinks that this has not be ω thoroughly done, or who suspects that the true history of the measure has not been disclosed, gets an opportunity for very data and criticism at the session of Council held to pass the Bill into 1 v.

The history of the Pilgrim Ships Act exhaus the antithesis of this process. The indignation which it excited and the fiase in which it has ended were due not to the inherent folly of its proposals alone, but also to the conviction through ut India that those proposals were not made in the interests—the population to be affected by them. A convention sat in Pari, at which India was very inadequately represented, to consider the means for arresting the spread of cholera from Arabia to Europe. Under pressure from the Foreign Office in London, a draft measure was sent out to India to give effect to the proposals of the Paris convention---some of them ludicrously ansuitable to Indian Mahomedan pilgrims. As Indian pilgrimage to Atabia had already been regulated by a careful series of enactments based upon the local tacts, fresh legislation was required if the existing law were to be superseded by the doctrinaire devices of the Paris convention. Government found it impossible to bring the devices before the Indian Legislature without exciting a popular agitation and courting a public defeat. The Indian Government accordingly remonstrated with the Secretary of State against the dangerous and unjust provisions of the Bill. Its remonstrance, while temperate in tone, was convincing in its arguments. It was supported, we understand unanimously supported by the Secretary of State's own Council at Westminster. But the late Ministry was then tottering to its fall, and as an easy prey to every form of pressure. Mr. Fowler, to his honour be it recorded, had, in the vigorous days of the Ministry, more than once resisted ment, he disregarded also the opinions of his own Council, and desparched to India a mindate for immediate legislation. We do not care to reproduce the adjectives of indignation with which that mandate has been denounced by the Indian Mussulmans and by the whole Indian Press.

The embarrassments of the Indian Government were further increased by the attitude of Turkey. The Government of India which is by far the largest Mussulman Power in the world, we being spurred on by imperious orders from home to a course of action certain to arouse widespread and possibly fanatical discontent among its Mahomedan subjects. Meanwhile the Ottoman Sultan, who has pretensions of being the Commander of the Faithful, looked on with lay indifference and enjoyed the prospect of the Faithful Commander of the State Commander. of the British Government embroiling itself with its 57 millions of Mussulmans. It was stated that the Sultan had not even ratified the proposals of the Paris convention which were to be forced the throats of the Indian Mahomedans, and that there was little likelihood of their ever being really carried out by his officers. Fortunately, while the Indian Government was struggling at its distasteful and almost impossible task, a change of Ministry took place in England. Lord George Hamilton, with chivalrous consideration towards his predecessor, and with that regard for the continuity of government on which Lord Salisbury laid stress at Waiford last week, hesitated to intervene. But the importance of the case, and the protests and remonstrances from India, him to go into the matter. The pressure upon the Indian Government was removed, and Lord Elgin was left to find his way out as best he could from the false position into which he had been driven. His Home Minister and the Select Committee of the Legislative

His Home Minister and the Select Committee of the Legislative Council proceeded scientifically to draw the teeth and cut the claws of the Bill. Having rendered it comparatively harmless, they further deprived it of effective vigour by turning it into "an enabling" Act. That is to say, the law was not to come into force until the Governor-General thought fit, and he received powers to recast some of its most important rules. We have said that the process he which the Polorius Shins Bill was coulded was not the process by which the Pilgrim Ships Bill was evolved was not in accordance with the normal method of Indian legislation. A new Indian law is ordinarily the outcome of the local needs of an Indian community. It is arrived at by a slow inductive process, during which the evidence for the necessity of the measure is scrutinized, first by the Government of India in its executive capacity, and then by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council. Each step in its history is frankly disclosed to the Indian Legislature. The Pilgrim Ships Bill did not even pretend to be based upon the wants of the Indian population. Instead of being arrived at by a slow inductive process in India it was avowedly the result of à priori conclusions arrived at on the other side of the globe. So far from its detailed history being openly stated to the Legislative Council, every member knew that there had been secret influences at work.

In this experimenting on the forbearance of the Indian Legisla-ture we play with edged tools. The Act of Parliament passed during Lord Salisbury's last Ministry gave to the Indian Legisla-tive Council powers which it did not before possess. It is dangerous to treat a Legislature which has become a reality as if it were a sham. Occasions may arise, for example, on great questions of finance, when the Indian Legislature must accept the deliberate policy of the British nation. But the very fact that the Indian constitution is hable from time to time to such tension makes it the more unwise to subject it to needless strain .-- The Times.

REMINISCENCES OF DR SAMBHUC, MOOKERIEE

BY ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

(Concluded from page 536)

Thus Anglo-Indian journalists are not the men likely ever to truly appreciate Sumban Chander or his writings and it their brief obliging notices of this "Prince of Indian journalists" contain a world or two of appreciation of his many ments, that is but indicative of the feeble reawakening of a smothered and diseased conscience. It would not be well or graveful, however, not to mention in this connection that the late Robert Knight fully recognized the worth of Sambhu Chunder and the Statesman used to contain every now and again long and eloquent leading articles in appreciation of writings in R is and Rayyet which Mr. Knight used to call a truly worderful organ. Mr. Knight and Sambhu Chunder were afterwards friends and Mr. Knight considered it an honour to enjoy his friends company. So highly did Mr. Knight estimate Symbhy Chunder's literary attainments that on one occasion Sambhu Chunder having asked him acoust something of ancient English custom Mr. Knight exclaimed "You make me blush, Dr. Mookerjee. What you do not know, I am not likely at all ever to know." "But no," said Sambhu Chunder, "really you think too much of me, Mr. Knight. It is all your kindies, but I do not deserve it. You are an Englishman of high culture and ripe scholarship. How am I likely to know even half as much as you." "" do." "No, no, Doctor, don't you try to try your modesty upon me. of competitive examination, the result of which was that even

I know a bit of what you are and what you know. Why, Doctor, you have read all the books I have read. Then you have read books I have only heard the names of, but never read. And then you seem to have read books I have not even heard of. This is no empty compliment, Doctor, your writings betray all I say."

Furning to the members of the Anglo-Native journalism in Bengal, we do not know what to say.

They have given evidence of an unworthy spirit in reference to Doctor Sambhu Chunder's death which has given us very deep pain. How Sambhu Chunder has deserved only a dozen lines and even less of notice on his death is what passes our comprehension. If the politics of Sambhu Chunder and those of other native journalists were at the antipodes, as one of our contemporaties expresses it, the latter might have criticised his politics at length along with recording other brilliant points in Sambhu Chunder's character and personality which were more or less known to them. But it is useless arguing in this strain with men who have acted in this connection with a purpose. that purpose may be, we have no inclination to examine. The fact of the matter is that the selfish aprit which at present pervades journalism in Bengal has developed a heartlessness which seems to have choked the expression of any real feeling of maganimity, or even a tolerably keen sense of justice. The words of Mr. Malabari the Editor of the Indian Specialor are still ringing in our ears. On the first occasion that a friend of ours met him, he asked in course of conversation, if Dr. Sambhu Chunder was truly appreciated by his own countrymen in Bengal, and when our friend said that he was not so much appreciated as he ought to be, Mr. Malabari's surperse knew no bounds. "What, Sir!" exclaimed the accomplished journalist, "do you mean to say you exchanged the accomplished part of your education so much fail to appreciate that brilliant man of Rea and Rayyet? This fact only shows that Bengal is not a whit more advanced than Bombay. Why, Str, if Sambhu Chunder was born in Bombay, he would have been simply worshipped. There is none like him in all India, I assure you. He is a man whom we can set against the whole West, mind you, in any literary controversy. He is one of our invaluable ornaments---an ornament of which all India may well be proud. Just send him over here if you can somehow, my friend, and we will show you what reception we greet him with!"

But Mr. Malabari forgot that Bengal was not liberal-minded Bombay, but only self-seeking Bengal and that even this self-seeking is as much a vice in ordinary mortals as in our pretentious patriots and tall-talking public teachers. Can any of our high-stepping public men or high-sounding publicists lay his hand upon his heart and say that his conscience is as clear as was Sambhu Chunder's? Well, we need not anticipate the right answer. Can any of our patriots say that his criticism of governmental measures and policy was as featless and hard-hitting as was Sambhu Chunder's? No, even in his greatest mistakes, Sambhu Chunder could never be charged by any sane man with dishonesty or acting against his conscience. So pronounced indeed, were his unsulled honesty and conscientiousness that nobody dared ever call them in question. Mistakes, of course, he had many, because he was human, but his writings even under such mistaken views betrayed a simplicity of heart and honesty of mind which were truly praiseworthy. His unhappy support of the Age of Consent Bill was a source of great pain to us as we had to tange ourselves against his side. But we believed it then as we believe it still, that he was wheelled into assuming that attitude by men who had personal interest in supporting the Government. His health was always had and grew at times worse and this was the opportunity snatched to cloud his usually clear vision. The supporters of the governmental policy were far from the representative and the accession into their ranks of Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mook 1700 inv sort their ignoble cause with the only respectability it could boist of.

Dr. Sambhu Chunder had no sympathy for the National Congress movem nt, not because he had no sympathy with the a pitations of his countrym in to secure a larger share in the administration of their own country, nor because he did not wish the wrongs of his countrymen to be righted. Nothing was father from his min! The reason of his keeping aloof from the Congress may ment was to be found in another quarter. A Conservative by birth and instincts, he hated all Radical notions. He had no patience for English Ridical theories or their had initiations by his own countrymen, theories which sought to place the patricity on the same footing with the plebenan, to make the pince and the peasant of one and the same rank. The very idea of such an act was, to him, a violation of an All-wise God's dispensation who has created man and beast, buds and trees, all at the same time. As no two men can be to an I to be equal in any respect, no two men can claim to share equal rank or cqual privileges. Conceived in diversity, neither the creation nor the laws of the world can bestow equality on all created beings. The claim of the peasant to be considered equal with the prince is simple blasphemy. Imbued with these solid ideas, he always discountenanced such about notions and theories. He had no love, therefore, for the systems a shoemaker's son would one day sit in judgment over the highest patrician in the country. Nor had he much sincere regard for modern constitutional Government with its system of election by sheer dint of votes. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee was much too conservative and too wise a philosopher to accept the adoption conservative and too wise a points plant to accept the adoption of such ideas for the amclioration of his own country and his countrymen whose loyalty is in their blood and whose very blood cries out for a king to follow, obey, worship and die for. And yet none felt more keenly the grievances of his countrymen in respect of their legitimate claim to higher appointments under the State. But he did not think that the method of the National Congress was the right method to demand the fulfilment of their aspira-

But it is upon the personal and private virtues of Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee that the curiosity of the future biographer of Bengal's worthy sons will be proud to dilate. Dr. Mookerjee at home would supply him with a theme of almost romantic interest. Upstairs the parlour house of the Wellington Square Dutt family is a small room which is furnished more with an eye to usefulness than ornamentation, and yet it was the best ornamented Editor's sanctum in all Calcutta. Here in this room would sit Dr. Sambhu Chunderits best ornament, lighting up the room and furniture with his intellectual halo. None entered this room without feeling the influence of his charming presence, for none who entered it set his influence of his charming presence, for none who entered it set his eyes upon him without being filled with awe which hedges in true greatness. Nor was this awe of the sublime unmixed with the loveliness of the beautiful. In fact, the sublime and the beautiful vied with each other in his character and the internal struggle expressed itself in his external appearance. But Sambhu Chunder's singularly intellectual qualifications were set off but his budden's singularly intellectual qualifications were set off by his handsome personal features. There was a harmonious blending of internal and external beauties in his personality which altogether formed and external beauties in his personantly which altogether formed an attraction that was too powerful for one who came in personal contact with him to resist. His character was in his face inscribed in God's own hand. His large eyes out of which twinkled forth the mild light of kindness and sincerity, his regular nose, his wellformed mouth and well-rounded chin crowned with his ample forehead and head of flowing hair which shaded and set off the effect of his olive complexion, joined to a well-proportioned size, body and limbs were no mean contribution to the attractions of his body and limbs were no mean contribution to the attractions of his personality. Everything with Sambhu Chunder was an art, speech or thought or action, an art which was the outward expression, as he would say, of the science of truth. Philosopher from his hirth, he regarded nothing however trivial, with a light heart. Wholehe regarded nothing however trivial, with a light heart. Whole-hearted to the backbone, he never believed in indifference to any thing in God's creation. If his movements were artistic, from a gentle wave of the hand to a slight toss of the head, it was the result of a mental culture and an intellectual discipline which sought to restore man to his natural divinity. His conception of what a man should be was far too idealistic for a work-a-day world

But these were only the outward signs of Dr. Mookerjee's highly developed qualities of head and heart. Few men in India are so well-versed as Sambhu Chunder was in Western lore and the range of his studies covered all branches of knowledge. He never flirted with knowledge. His study was always thorough. Whatever he took up for perusal, he would begin from the beginning and end took up for perusal, he would begin from the beginning and end with the end. He would read the title, the inner title and the preface of a book before entering into its subject matter. Bad, good or indifferent, no author could complain of his inattention or half dealing with what his work contained. He would also read the whole of a newspaper and hence it was that he could not read many in order to make his own journal contain a thorough record of the week. But for all that, so full of thoughts he was that a single newspaper would afford him ample straws with which to make yery handsome bricks. One little suggestion was enough to single newspaper would attord him ample straws with which to make very handsome bricks. One little suggestion was enough to provoke in him the highest philosophy, most original thoughts, the brightest literature and the most wholesome and entertaining reading. The world has not as yet produced such a brilliant paragraphist as Dr. Sambhu Chunder, and even Englishmen of high education and culture admitted this truth.

nigh education and culture admitted this truth.

Dr. Sambhu Chunder was a severe and yet a large-hearted critic.

If he hit anybody he always hit with effect. The mean attacks in Anglo-Indian journals upon Native men and manners would provoke in him a sledge-hammar retalistion. But he could never be provoke in him a sledge-hammar retalistion. But he could never be mean. His darts hit those at whom he levelled them with tremendous effect, because he hit from a high platform which reminded them of their low level. He had a profound pity and therefore no mercy for all sorts of meanness and his independence now and again led him into condemning personal iniquities which often incited bad feelings against him. But Sambhu Chunder was ever conscientious and never vindictive. He, of course, erred many a time in policy and principles, but he always erred on the side of conscience. conscience.

But Sambhu Chunder was more a man of heart than intellect. In fact, his highly developed intellectual powers were but the result of his highly developed heart. The old saying that where the heart is all right, the head seldom fails embodies 'a truth which is as goed as the fact that man is born to die. Sambhu Chunder's worst enemies would make him forget the worst injuries they had done him by merely going to him and asking to be excused. A struggling editor or a young journalistic venture would receive from him the warmest encouragement though never sought for. None could more truly appreciate merit or be more enthusiastic in acknowledging originality. He could enter into the spirit of any body's writings almost as thoroughly as the writer himself, and in correcting or "doing up" manuscripts of his contributors or correspondents he always strove to preserve the idea and spirit of the writers, nay, his charming pen would touch up that idea or spirit into strikingly full bloom and expression.

Sambhu Chunder's virtues, greatness and attainments were so vast and varied that it would fill a big volume to relate all of them. It is, indeed, impossible even to mention a little with appreciation within the scope of a newspaper article however long. We would, therefore, conclude here with the promise that we shall gry to record these varied features of his character in these columns as an opportunity offers. In fine, we must once more say that Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee was really a man in a million. He was an indomitable genius, and what genius has ever been truly appreciated in his day? The world loves talent because it serves it. the world hates genius because it rules it. But all the same, well may one exclaim of Sambhu Chunder:

His life was gentle: and the elements So mixed in him that Nature might stand up And say to all the world--- This was a man.

-- Hope.

AT A PENNY APIECE --- £20,000.

AT A PENNY APLION——£20.000.

If you had as many pennies as there are natural holes through your skin, how many pennies should you have?

You would have enough to make £20,000. Now figure up the holes for yourself. Yet you couldn't afford to sell them for a penny each, even in hard times. They are worth more money. These holes, or sweat glands, pour out quarts of sweat every day—water, mixed with salt and poisonous humours. Stop these holes, partly or entirely, and the skin's work is at once thrown on the lungs and kidneys. Then you fill ill with some disease or other. With what disease depends on the nature and location of your weak spot.

A lady, whose name we are permitted to mention, will not soon forget the spring of 1890. It was then that for the first time in her life she was afraid to be left alone; not from fear of enemies, but from sheer nervous excitement. She was obliged to have elastic put; into life she was afraid to be left alone; not from fear of enemies, but from sheer nervous excitement. She was obliged to have elastic put into ner slippers to let them out—her feet were swollen so; and her hands were in the same condition. In the morning her face would puff up and large lumps form under her eyes and on her cheeks. Then a rash made its appearance all over her body, vanishing again almost immediately, as a blush comes and goes on the face.

The suddenness of this she compares to the sting of a wasp or horner. An intense itching accompanied it, so she could not lie in bed or be quiet in any position on account of it. She was in misery night and day, and scarcely knew what to do with herself. Her legs got so painful and feit so ured she was put to it to get about. For eighteen months (it must have seemed like as many years) she was tormented in this way.

months (it must nave seems and actions), and attended successively at the Newcastle Infirm my and at the Dispensary. But nothing more than temporary ease came of the treatment they gave her. The doctors recommended a change of an, and in August, 1891, she went to North Sunderland. She found rehef at that place, but not from the air.

Now we must get back to the spring of 1890, and inquire what, if anything, preceded this strange ontbreak. At that time, the lady says, she first felt languid, tired, and constantly sleepy. She was troubled with bad headaches and attacks of giddiness. Her appetite failed; she could eat but little, and after eating had a feeling of weight and fulness at the chest and sues. Her whole system was depressed, and the life in her tope tred to sink, as the water does in a cistern where there exists a hidden leak somewhere. Then came what has already here deep thed. been described.

At North Sunderland, whither she went for a change of air, she met a gentleman named Cathcart, who expressed a most intelligent opinion of her case and advised the use of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. Convinced by his reasoning she procured a supply of this well-known remedy and began taking it.

Her letter concludes in these words: "After I had used the Syrup

Her letter concludes in these words: "After I had used the Syrup only a few days I felt a decided improvement in all respects. My appetite revived, my fond digested better, and soon the rash and lumps entirely disappeared to return no more. I have since enjoyed the best of health. You are at liberty to make my statement public if you think it may be useful to others. (Signed) Mrs. Sarah Charleton, 27, John Street, Arthur's Hill, Newcastle, February 7th, 1893."

We congratulate this lady on her recovery and thank her for allowing us to publish the above details of her experience. The doctors called her ailment nettle rash, but it was more than that. Her blood was loaded with the poisonous acids generated by indigestion and dyspepsia—the same as the poisons of gout and of acute inflammatory rheumatism. The irritated nerves of the skin produced the rash, as the clogged pores were unable to excrete the poison. The purifying power of Seigel's Syrup expelled this poison through the kidneys and bowels, and by stimulating insensible perspiration over the whole surface of the skin.

Of this disease an English physician says: "When it becomes of this same an English physician says: "When it beco-tronic all treatment fails."

Yes, all treatment except the one which cured Mrs. Charleton.

CAUTION!

It having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrupulous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna hox lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the tetail prices, (viz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 9½d, 12 annas or 11, 1½d, and Rs, 2 or 25. 9d) are clearly printed on the lid of each box The fraud to which attention is drawn as that or 9200, to anomaly gold are clearly printed on the lid of each onx. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes representative of bother value than they really ed to be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Burma and Ceylon

G. ATHERTON & CO., 3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET.

NOTICE—Should any difficulty be experinced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee ates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages,

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH. SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE

For 1895
Having the largest sale of all similar works,
ENGLISH PREPARATORY I wing the larges.

ENGLISH PREFERENCE COURSE

1 A and CL

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES
This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee.

INDIA READERS NO. 2 INDIA READERS NO. 1

FOR 6th & 7th CLASSIS

These books are of remarkably simple style and quite suited to In han students.

The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P. and Oudh, the Punjab, Madi is, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assau, and Binning, is matted to the above publications of unque ments.
To be had of

S. K. LAHIRI & Co. College Square, Calcutta,

Congress Sketches: A Review

OF THE SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS

Fourth Indian National Congress Held at Allahabad.

Reprinted with additions and alterations from Reis & Rayyet

With a portrait of Mr. George Yule. President-Sold by the publisher G. P. Varma, and at the office of the Advocate, at Lucknow for 8 Annas a copy, besides pustage.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans 4. Per V. P P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU O. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," BY

F H. SKRINE, 108, (Collector of Customs, Calcutta)

The volume, uniform with Mookeijee's Travels and Voyiges in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR DEDICATION (To Sir W. W. Hunter.) HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE. LETTERS from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. ACORRASIAN LEFTERS
to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.,
to Atkinson, the late Mr. E.F.T., C.S., to Bunerjee, Babn Jyotish Chunder
from Banerjee, the late Revd Dr. K. M.
to Bunerjee, Babn Strodaprisad.
from Bell, the late Major Evans.
from Bhaddam, Chief of
to Binaya Krishna, Raji.
to Chrlin, Ru Bahadur Ananda.
to Chatterjee, Mr K M.
from Clarke, Mr. S. E.J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Anckland.
to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Mirquis of.
from Evans, the Hon'ble Sir Griffith H.P.
to Ganguli, Babn Kisari Mohan. to Ghose, Babn Naho Krissen.
to Ghose, Babn Kish Prosanna.
to Ghose, Babn Kish Prosanna.
to Graham, Mr. W.
from Griffin, Sir Lepel.
from Gha, Babn Strodi Kint.
to Hall, Dr. Firz Edward.
from Hunter, Sir W. W.
to Jenkins, Mr. Edward.
to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.
to Knight, Mr. Paul.
from Knight, the late Mr. Robert from Linsdowne, the Marquis of.
to Liw, Knim u Kristodas. to Lyon, Mr. Pecy C
to Mahomed, Monivi Syed, to Malk, Mr. R. D.
to Mussion, Mrs. Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mussion, Mrs. Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mussion, Mrs. Ann.
from Moskerjeer, late Rijt Dr. Rijendralda to Mookerjeer, Mr. J. C.
from M'Ned, Professor H. (Sin Francisco) te, from Mushindabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
from Ondern.

from Nayuatna, Mihimahap olhya M. C. from Osborn, the Lite Colonel Robert D to Rao, Mr. G. Venkata Appa to Rao, the Late Sor F. Mothava to Rittigan, Sir William H

Rangian, Sir William H
from Rosebery, Earl of,
to, from Roseberg, Earl of,
to, from Roseberg, Earl of,
to Row, Mr G Svannala to Systin, the Hordbie A Sishich to Suba, Babi Brabin manda, from Sincar, Dr M diendralal from Stanley, Lord, of Ablerley, from, to Townsend, Mr Meredich to Underwood, Caption T O to, from Vambéry, Professor Arminius, to Venrataramanich, Mr G, Virianagram, Mahocyt of to, from Wallace, Su Donala Wickenzie to Wond-Mason, the late Professor J.
EETTERS(& TELEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, fro

to Wood-Mason, the Late Professor J.

LETTERS(& TFLEGRAMS) OF CONDOLENCE, from Abdus Subhan, Moulov A K M
Ameer Hossem, Hon'ble Nawab Syed.

Ardagh, Colonel Str J C.

Buerjee, Babu Manmathanath
Banetjee, Rai Bahadur, Shib Chunder.

Buth, M. A.

Belchambers, Mr. R.

Deb, Babu Manahar.

Dutt, Mr. O. C.

Dutt, B blu Prosaddoss.

Elym. Lord. Eigin, Lord. Ghose, Babu Norend K.

Gyish, Babu Kah Prasanna.
Gudenn, Mr. Wilham.
Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
Hardas Vibaridas Desai, the late Dewan.
Iyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswam.
Lunbert, Su John
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitta, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, Babu Sidheshur.
Mookerjee, Raja Peary Mohan,
Mookerjee, Babu Surendia Nath, Mushidabad, the Nawab Babadooi of,
Routledge, Mr. Jaines.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu Sutat Chunder
Sanyal, Babu Dinabundho.
Sivitti Library.
Tippera, the Baia Thakur of Vanbery, Professor Amminus, Vizitungram, the Maharaja of,
POSISCRIPT

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders to be made to the Business Manag-"An Indian Journalist," at the Bee s, i. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Press, I. Ucko Street, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remarkable man. -Mr. H. Babington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October,

Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895

Dr Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and originality about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading—Sir Alfred W. Corff, K C I E., Director of Public Instruction, Bengal. 26th September, 1895.
It is not that aim of the pressure of harassing official duties an English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so graceful a tribute to the memory of a native personality as F. H. Skrine has done in his biography of the Late Dr. S imblu Chunder Mookerjee, the well-known Bengal journalist (Calcutta Thacker, Spink and Co.); nor are there many who are more worthy of being thus honoured in or the Late Editor of Reis and Rayyet.

We may at any rate cordully agree with Mr.

We may at any rate cordully agree with Mr. Skrine that the story of Mookerpe's life, with all its hights and shadow, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real Index.

No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not even the Himbo Patriot, in its palamest days under Kristod's Pal, enjoyed a degree of influence in any way approaching that which was some extined by Reis and Kayret.

A read of large heart god great qualities, in death from pneumonia in the early spring in the last year was a distinct and heavy is to Indian purroulism, and it was in exceeding to the last year was a distinct and nearly is to Indian pointuition, and it was in exceeding the and Letters upon record—The Times of In ea (Homber) Systember 30, 1895.

It is early that the life of an Indian journalist hes mes worthy of publication; it is more

It is easely that the life of in Indian joint alors he mes worthy of publication; it is more rarely in that such a life comes to be written by an Anglo Indian and a member of the Indian Civil Service. But, it has come in pass is it in the land of the Beng di Babas, the lift of at least one man among Indian jointal sits has been considered worthy of being written by in Englishman The Models, Standard, (Madas) September 35, 1865.

1895
The late Editor of Reis and Rayret was a profess of student and an accomplished writer, who has left his mark on Indian journalism. In that he has found a Cayman like Missure to record the story of his life he is more formate than the great Kustodis Pal himself,—The Tribune, (Lahore) October 2, himself,—The Tribune, (Lamer) October 2, 1895

For much of the briggraphical matter that issues so freely from the press an apology is needed. Had no broggraphy of Dr. Mookeyper, the E-lator of Reis and Rayyet, appeared, an offins remarkable personality, who was easily first among native Todan portradists, and in many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at pulsoc affirst from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to suk into obliviou without some be suffered to sink into oblivion without some attempt to perpetuate his memory by the usual expedient of a "life." The difficulties common expedient of a "life." The difficulties common to all hingraphers have in this case been increased by special circumstances, not the least creased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Monkertjee remained to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that win nothing but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal bingraphie would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written his life.

Mookerjee, it was he who should have written his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly laudatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dull page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Mookerjee are of such minor importance that they wish have been opited, with advantage here.

might have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. To say that he writers idomatic English is to say what is short of the truth. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straightforward, without Oriental luxurance or striving forward, without Oriental luxurance or striving after effect. Perhaps he is never so charming as when he is laying down the laws of literary form to yoing aspirants to fame. The letter on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piece of criticism: it is delicate plain-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be piect that his productions are not in the smallert degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his ardoor.

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrin-

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrinsically it is a book worth buying and reading.—The Pioneer, (Allahabad) Oct. 5, 1895.

The career of "An Indian Journalist" as described by F. H. Skrine of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting. Monkeylee's letters are marvels of pure diction which is heightened by his nervous style.

The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those who are able to appreciate merit unmarred by astentiation and earnestness inspoiled by harshness.—The Muhammaulan, (Madras) Oct. 5, 1895.

5, 1895.
The work leaves nothing to be desired either the way of completeness, impartiality, or in the way of completeness, impartiality, or lifelike portrayal of character.

Mr. Skrine deals with his interesting subject with the unfailing instinct of the biographer. Every side of Dr. Mookerjee's complex character is treated with sympathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skrine's narrative certainly impresses one with the individuality of a remarkable man.

Mookerjee's own letters show that he had not only acquired a command of clear and flexible English but that he had also assimilated that stardy independence of thought nextole English but that he had also assumpted that sturdy independence of thought and character which is supposed to be a peculiar possession of natives of Great Britain. His reading and the stores of his general information appear to have been, considering his opportunities, little less than marvellous.

One of the first to express his condolence with the family of the deceased writer was the present Viceroy, Lord Elsin. Mookerjee appears to have won the affection not only of the dignitaries with whom he came in contact, but also of those in low estate.

The impression left upon the mind upon laying down the book is that of a good and able man whose career has been graphically portrayed.—The Englishman, (Calcutta) Oc-portrayed.—... tober 15, 1895.

The career of an eminent Bengali editor, the career of an eminent pengan entor, who died in 1894, throws a curious light upon the race elements and bereditary influences which affect the criticisms of Indian journal-which affect the criticisms of Indian journalists on British rule.

The "Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Mookerjee," a hook just edited by a distinguished civilian in Calcutta, takes us behind the scenes of Indian journalisms.

It is a parrative, written with insight and a complete mastery of the facts, of how a clever youth gradually grew into one of the ablest leader-writers in Bengal, and still more gradu-ally matured into one of the fairest-minded editors that western education in India has yet produced. If the training and experience which develop the journalist in England are sometimes varied, they seem in India to have an even wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how a great Bengal journalist is made; space for-bids us to enter upon his actual performances. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much felicity of expression, in Mr. Skrue's admirable monograph. It is characteristic of the noble service to which characteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skrine belongs, that such a book should have issued from its ranks. Dr. Mookerjee was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—"India has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed by young and vigorous communities, but present the and rocks and deserts of an effere civilization, hardly stirred to a semblance of life by a foreign occupation dozing over its easily-gained advantages." This was true of the pre-Mutiny India of 1851. It is no longer true of the Queen's India of 1895, we owe it in no small measure to Indian journalists like Dr. Mookerjee who have labouted, amid some misrepresentation, to quicken the some misrepresentation, to quicken the "semblance of life "into a living reality.—The Times, (London) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open faced, ickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Jino. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. X Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamaltee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16. X Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Duindum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. X Mr. T. B. Scott of Patina Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some partment says :—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0.
Fashionable electro cased Gold king set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector from Sanikutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28 Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L M. S

Homaopathic Practitioner

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street, Calcutta.

Movelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIO PHARMACY. 36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fouzdari Balakaana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NACENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Acconcheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical Institutions of the

SPECIFICS

SPECIFICS
for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

every quarter.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas or,6 copies for a Rupee.

A Cheap Reserve for the Army. By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY,

Late Her Majesty's Service. Apply to Reis & Rayyes Office, Calcutta.

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2 %d stamp by A HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St. TORONTO, Canada. Scientific American

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY(ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.
If paid in advance,

	•••	•••	NS.	12
iaif-yearly	•••	•••		7
Juarterly			•••	4
dontniy			".	1-8
			1	1.0
ingle or sample	Сору	•••	Ans.	0-8
If no	t paid in ad	vance.
čearly			_
			Rs.	18
laif-yearly
	•••	•••	91	10-8
Quarterly			,,
	•••		77	6-0
lonthly			••
		•••		2-4
ingle or sample	Cana			-
migic or sample	Сору	•••	Ans.	0-12
No additional	abama tam -
No additional	coarge for I	postage	OF D	eon.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at me rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any devertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Ress & Rayyet." Advertisements (three columns to the page

OFFICE: 1, Uchoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT

(PRINCEPEASANT)ؿ

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

REVIEW LITERATURE SOCIETY OFPOLITICS AND

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 702.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE. BY JAMES HUTCHINSON. (Continued from p. 542.)

CANTO THIRD.

IX

And then, my brethren looked askance, Or passed me, with averted glance, The haggard look, that spoke my doom, Was even too dark, for convent gloom. Oh! I have ever found it so, That those, the deepest plunged in grief, Will look, in vain, amid their woe, And most, to priesthood, for relief. And then, to please our prelate's pride, Must we run, by his litter's side ; That couch, besprent with gilding o'er, AVhile sackcloth was the robe, he wore ; The way his jewelled heralds led, While he wore ashes, on his head, Whose matted han, around it wound, Unloosed, would sweep, along the ground.

Such service, well, might suit a page. Or monking, from his convent cage; But arm, accustomed to the brand, Disdams to wield an usher's wand. Like fettered eagle, in his rage, I fretted, in my narrow cage ; They saw my state, and judged my pain, That I was, as the desert's child, And bade me seek Sugoojah's wild, * And tend their rich domain ; Aye I tend their wealth, who never knew, To watch, or keep my own ; I promised not; but bade adieu, And wandered forth, once more alone.

XI.

I tore, and cast my clothes, aside, And smeared my body, and my hair, With ashes, and the tiger's hide Slung, at my back, as now I wear, The sole, scant vesture, that remained, For all those gauds, my rapine gained. My matted hair, in plaited fold, For turban, round my head, was rolled ; The staff, and scrip, the arms, I bore, For the keen blade, which once I wore ;

But these, for long, had ceased to be, And, with my passions to contend, I roamed a houseless Sunyassee! * No change had I, to hope, or dread, Save that, should lay me, with the dead ; And I would, then, have felt a pride, To've known the worst, that could betide, Had my own fate, whate'er it were, Been object of a moment's care.

Small matter, where my footsteps bore ; And so, I thought, 'twould soothe, once more, To gaze, upon the stone-built dome, Holds Jeswunt Holkar's tomb. I found the spot, I sought, and there, Still faithful, even beyond the grave, And ready, tho' he could not save, His favourite steed was grazing near, Fast by his master's bier ! I saw, and grieved ;-nor sought to chide My weakness, when the starting tear Gushed forth, I could not hide. And there, the priest his vigil keeps, And there, the lamp, for ever, burns, And there, the war-worn veteran weeps, † And there, the weary traveller turns, And pauses, on his trackless way, For the final rest of him, to pray, Whose checkered lot forbade to know. What quiet meant, while here below. And, surely, they have mourned him well, 'Tis thus, he would have loved to dwell,

All wordly cares were, at an end;

^{*}The monastery of Bood'h-Gyah, I have understood, is richly endowed with lands, in the districts of Ramghur, and Sirgoojah.

^{*}The following, though a very imperfect account of the religious asciences called Sinyassees, I have extracted from the Dictionary of religious ceremonies, for us brevity, and because I have no work by me, at the present moment, to which I could refer for a better. Sinyassees,—a kind of religious order, among the Indian Brahmens, They are anchorets, and affect the greatest abstinence, refraining from marriage, and all pleasures in general. They make but one meal, and live on alms; and misted of a copper cup, which others generally carry about with them, they are permitted to use earthen—ware only. Their clothes are dyed with red earth, and they carry a long bamboo cane, in their hands. They are forbid to touch, either gold or silver, much less are they allowed to carry any, about them. They have no fixed habitation, nor lie two mights together in the same place, once a year excepted, when they are permitted to continue together two months, in the same place, "The Sunyassees are bound to be always ready to oppose six enemies, viz., Cama, lust; Croota, auger; Lopa, avairce; Madda, "pride; the love of things of this world; and Mutsara, revenge"

* Many years ago, the sepoys of one of the battalions of the old.

pride; the love of things of this world; and Mutisara, revenge."

† Many years ago, the sepoys of one of the battalions of the old Fourth Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, in passing the tomb,
I think in Bundelkund, of the officer, by whom the corps was raised, worshipped or paid their devotions, at his grave; I am not sure, whether I was not told, that a fakeer attended at the tomb, or kept a lamp burning there. The battalions of the Regiment in question still retain their respective designations of Burra, and Chotah Ciawford,
(i. e.) the great and little Crawfords; they are both very distinguished corps.

Even, in his last, and narrow cell : Some tribute, still, the great should find, And Holkar's was no common mind.

XIII

I went my way, and passed our haunt, By the Nurbuddah's stream ; Like spirits, at the word, avaunt ! Or shadows, in a guilty dream, Gone were they, every one! The very walls were gone ! And onward, still, my footsteps led, To Teoor's city of the dead ; *

* The village of Teoor is situated about five iniles from Jubbulpore, * The village of Teorr is situated about five miles from Jubbulpore, towards the Nurbuddah, in a direction between Tilwaree and Bhera ghats. It is remarkable, for the runs alluded to in the text; they are supposed to be those of the ancient Gurrah, the capital of Goandwanah. There is now scarcely one stone standing upon another, while the dank, dark jungle, which grows upon its site, is all but impenetrable. This is indeed desolation! the crumbling dust of bricks and tiles, for miles around, mark, however, how extensive it once was, and perhaps when there shall be fewer remains, than there now are more starfer to. "This is indeed desolution I the crumining dust of bricks and ties, for miles around, malk, however, how extensive it once was, and perhaps when there shall be fewer remains, than there now are, may satisfy the inquirer, that it, like Babylon, indeed existed. Yes I I stood upon the site of a queen's palace, which is now a shapeless mound or carn of lowe stones, and saw the poor artist dig out large blocks of stone, which had constituted a portion of some colossal ided, to include them to the more shapeless forms of modern days. The itemples of this vanished city of the desert are still standing, and though comparatively small, might vie in solidity of structure, with those of Egypt." The temples above alluded to belong to the Buddhist or Jain worship, and contain many mages of great heauty, cut in a very fine sandstone. The palace is said to have been that of Duigonter, a queen of the Goands. The following account of this heroig, but ill-fated princess, extracted from Dow's translation of Ferishah's History of India, is so interesting, that I consider no appology agreess up for giving it insertion. In Dow's history, the name is written Durgetti, but I have used that adopted in the text, as being more in accordance, with the prominication of the people of the country. "At that time, the kingdom of Gurrah was governed by a "queen, whose name was Durgetti, famous for her beauty, and accommission that the thindred miles in "length, and one hundred in breadth, yet so flourishing was the country, when the text have were hour remains the remains the remains and the small trees there were the remains the remains the remains and the proper of the miles in the small trees there were the remains the remains and the proper of the people of the country.

"queen, whose name was Durgetti, famous for her beauty, and accomplishments: her dominions were about three hundred miles in length, and one hundred in breadth, yet so flourishing was the country, that in this small track, there were about seventy thousand towns and villages, well inhabited, which had the good fortune, never to have fallen under the dominion of foreigners.

"Asaph, having heard of the riches of this country, disturbed the peace-able inhabitants, unaccustomed to the sound of war, with constant depredations; he at length marched against their, with six thousand horse, and about double that number of infantry. The queen, with fifteen hundred elephants, eight thousand horse, and some foot, is prepared to oppose him. Like a bold herome, she led on her troops to action, clothed in armoor, with a helmet upon her head, mounted in a castle, upon an elephant, with her bow, and quiver, lying by her is side, and a burnshed lance in her haid. Though her troops had not been accustomed to action, the love of national independence and the example of the queen, inspired every breast with a hon's courage. Their eagenness to engage made them match in disorder, towards the enemy, which the queen observing, commanded them in anthous howly, and compactly, and to observe the signal to engage, when it should be displayed from the elephant, that carried the royal standard.

"In this is name, the received the enemy, whom she quickly remised."

when it should be displayed from the elephant, that carried the isolated standard.

"In this manner, she received the enemy, whom she quickly repulsed, and pressing upon them, laid six hundred Mogul horsemen dead on the field; she prisoned the rest till the evening with great. Staughter, When night came on, the queen hasted with her army, and gave them of orders to wish, and refresh themselves, that they might be prepared for a night attack upon the enemy, before they could recover from their constero atom. But her minister, and the rest of her chiefs, less than constero atom. But her minister, and the rest of her chiefs, less than any and one eigenant is so prudent, than this betone, apposed this examinaty measure, and sectiously insisted, on returning to the field of battle, to biny dent fixends. She, accordingly, returned unwillingly, and after the dead were ominit, again andriessed her chiefs, and solitored trem, one by one, to accompany her to storm the Mogul of came, name of them however had the spirit to second her, in this dating emerging. They vinify in igneed, that the enemy would of their lover too, even to the country.

The charts of the futle knogdom of Gurrah soon found, that they we class to the futle knogdom of Gurrah soon found, that they we class to the futle knogdom of Gurrah soon found, that they

"The clear over a conference the country
"The clears of the little knogdom of Gurrah soon found, that they
"we e fattry frustrated in their hopes. Asaph to wipe twey the "divence, which he field seist uned the day before, and finding what "enemy me had to deal with, advanced in the morning, towards the "queer, with his attillery, which, in the preceding action, he had left behand him, on iccount of the badiress of the roads. The queen, upon
"A son's approach, ast moed to a narrow pass, and prepared to oppose "ham. The Mary, sconning the pass with his attillery, soon opened to more editivate or the plan beyond in, where the queen's son,
"a your not give thoses, as soon as the Moguls came into the plan,
"made it soons chouge, and exhibited produces of valor. He trepus close enemy take, both in the third attack, being wounded, he are an found with loss of bitond. When he was just failing from this ham, "its mether, who was mounted on an elephant, in the front
"mary and the construction of the people, to carry him back to the rear jimany
"called to some of her people, to carry him back to the rear jimany
"called to some of her people, to carry him back to the rear jimany
"called to some of her people, to carry him back to the rear jimany
"called to some of her people, to carry him back to the rear jimany

I stood, upon a mound of stones, That holds within, no buried bones, But was the palace, and the bower Of woman, decked in pride, and power ; A queen, who died, in the battle field. For the wild realm, she could not shield. Where, now, Durgoutee can we trace The princes of thy vaunted race?*

The princes of thy vaunted race?*

"field. The loss of the prince, in short, together with the retreat of so many, with his person, struck a panic into the rest, so that the unfortunate queen was left, only with three hundred men in the field. Durgetti, however, seemed no wise affected, by her desper use is situation; she stood her ground, with her former fortunde, till she received an arrow in her eye; she endeavoured to extricate it from the wound, but as he tugged it, part of the steel broke short, and menually her neck, which she also drew out, but nature sinking under the pain, a dimness swam before her eyes, and she began to nod, from side to side of the howdah. She, however, recovered from her famiting by degrees; and a have office of her household, by name "Adhar, who drove her elephant, singly repulsed numbers of the enemy, whithersoever he turned the ourrageons animal. He begged permission, as the day was now intertrevable, to carry the queen from the field. She rejected the proposal, with a noble disdain. It is true, said she, 'we are overcome in war, but shall we ever he wanguished in honour? Shall we for the sake of a lingering ignominations life, lose that reputation and virtue, which we have been so olicitious to acquire? Not let your grantfule now repay that service, for which I lifted up your head, and which I now require at your "hands. Haste, I say, let your diager save me, from the crime of "hands. Haste, I say, let your diager save me, from the crime of "hands. Haste, I say, let your diager save me, from the crime of "hands. Haste, I say, let your diager save me, from the crime of "hands unstainto tears, and begged, that as the elephant was swift of foot, he might be permitted to leave the field, and carry her to "a place of safety. In the mean time, the queen, finding that the "unemy crowded fast around her, and that she must be taken prisoner," addenly leaning forward, seized the dagger of Adhar, and plinging in time her boson, expired. The death of the queen rendered Asaph's vactory comp

"vectory complete. Six Indian chiefs, upon their elephants, still stood "firm, and ashamed of being outdone by a woman, dedicated their "lives, to revenge the death of the queen."

*On the walls of a temple, at Ramnuggur, eighteen miles above the fortress of Mundlah, there is an extensive inscription, containing an epitome of the history of no less than fiftythree Goand monarchs. A translation of this inscription is to be found, I think, in the 15th Vol. of the Asiaux Researches of Bengal. The following account of the locality, in which the inscription is to be found, if think, in the 15th Vol. of the Asiaux Researches of Bengal. The following account of the locality, in which the inscription is to be found, in you to eallogether uninteresting; in case however, the reader should confound Ramnuggur with Teoor, it may be as well to mention, that they are quite distinct, and that they are situated, about sixty miles apart. "The principal objects of attraction were the remains of two palaces of considerable antiquity. The larger one had been magnificent, "and could scarcely yet be said to be in ruins. Viewed in connection with the capital of the country, it appeared to have been the Windsor Castle of the Goand monarchs. Its walls and costly connecs, however, were now blackened over, by the smoke of nearly half a "vilage of poor peasantry, who had found an immolested refuse, within its walls. It is stituted, within a hundred yards of the banks of the Nurbuddah, and commands a view of that river, energing from the forest, and rishing along its stony bed, with scarcely more, than summer song. Between it and the river, many a tree might still be observed, to mark where a garden had been. The building was sof three stories, and enclosed a quantingular are, in the centre of which, there were still the remains of an extensive reservoir of water. To the south, the front was ornamented with four circular towers, and the apartments, which were large and handsome, with a pavilion-shaped ceilings, communicated with the private but a more singular part of their constituction consisted, in the inner small of the patice being sufficiently thick, to contain a private passage, from which there was a separate entrance to each cell.

"A little to the west of the palace, the royal chapel, containing the original objects of adoration, placed in it by its founder, was still standing, and on its walls an extensive inscription, cut in blue match, existed in primitive simplicity, containing an epitome of the history "existed in primitive simplicity, containing an epitome of the history of no less, than fifty-three princes.

"The smaller pidace was probably intended, for the dowager branches of the famor. Both are certainly the most successful "specimens, which have yet witnessed of native architecture. They were probably built, about the time of the Emperor Akbai, during whose rego, this interesting country was overion, by the armies of the empire, and the scenice passed, from the bands of its princes, if for ever, "Recollections of the Nurbuddak—Orient Pearl, vol. 1.

Thrice hapless wert thou ! had not fame Made us familiar, with thy name; Thy nable daring 'g inst thy foes ; Thy glottons death, and many woes; The, once, mond city of thy swite, Even as thy rule, bath passed tway; Its name, of millions, once, the shout, Hath, now, become the sport of doubt ; And yet its fragments, for around, And broken idols strew the ground, With matted brushwood, tangled o'er, That, nightly, hears the tiger roat; Its temples, still, are standing there. But echo, now, no more to prayer ; But, in them, serpents rear their crests, And birds of darkness build their nests (To be continued)

WEEKLYANA.

THE objections against the Jury Bill have prevailed. It will not he proceeded with. Such is the report in the morning papers. The absence of sid or persistency in error or obstinacy not to withdraw, is praiseworthy.

TO-DAY'S Gazette of India announces the appointment of Mr. C. J. Lyall, C.S.I., C.I.E., I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, as Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces with effect from the date of assuming charge. Mr. J. P. Hewett, CI.E., officiating for Mr. Lyall as Secretary, has also been confirmed in

THE next Sheriff of Calcutta is the Hon'ble P. Playfair. He is the man of the hour among European merchants in this city, and deserves the

SIR Alexander and Lady Mackenzie have arrived at Calcutta, Sir Alexander and Ludy Miller are also back from Darjeeling, Sir Charles and Lady Paul are among us again.

SIR John Ardagh, Private Secretary to the last Viceroy of India, Lord Lansdowne, now S-cretary of State for War, has been appointed extra Aid-de-Camp to Lord Wolseley, Commander-in-Chief of the Butish

THE original estimate of the income-tix for the Lower Provinces for 1894 95 was Rs. 42,30,000. It was raised before the operations commenced to Rs. 43,75,000. The amount realized was 45,61118. The net revenue gives an increase of 5'I per cent, against an increase of of 3 per cent, in the preceding year. The number of persons finally assessed came up to 106,975 or an increase of 1,499, or 1'4 per cent. Out of 108 765 persons originally assessed, 1,790 were exempted on revision, the percentage of exemption being 1'6 against 2'1 in the preceding year. The average incidence of the tax was Re. 1 to 17'9 persons. In Calcutta one person in 39 paid the tax, the average incidence Re. 1 to every 4 persons remaining the same as in the preceding year. The proportion of persons assessed to population for the whole province was I to 665. Out of the total collections Re. 38,80,301 on account of tax for the year during the year, Calcutta contributed Rs. 18,99.075 or 48 9 per cent. The final demand amounted to Rs. 39,72,351 on 106 975 persons. The percentage of collections was 97.7 against 96 of the previous year. Distress warrants were issued in 5,035 cases. Property was distrained in 1,934 and actually sold in 337 cases. The tax collected after the issue of warrants but before distraint, amounted to Rs. 39,401, after distraint but before sale, Rs. 34.349, and by sale of property Rs. 3,463. The final demand on account of penalties was Rs. 34,455 and for costs Rs. 12,737. There were one case of fraud and four cases of embezziements. In the first the notice of increased assessment was altered from 42 to 10 and the leaf of the assessment list abstracted. The prosecutions, in every instance successful, numbered to-5 for false personation as assessors, one for obstructing a distress warrant, two for false accounts and account books, one for false complaint of demanding bribes and DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafuess, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseeled. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

for concealing sources of income, and one for false statement in a verified petition of objection. This last conviction was set aside on appeal. No particulars of the case are given. It would be unsafe to convict a person on this charge, for the prescribed form of objection to an assessment adapts of no explanation and requires the mention of the assessable income to the pie, under a law the interpretation of which entirely rests with the collecting agency.

IN Rangoon, a widow lady, wanting to pay taxes, borrowed Rs. 100 of a chetty who advanced the amount at 144 per cent, interest and on the security of title deeds of a house valued at Rs. 4,690. What were the attendant expenses? What the cost for examining the title deeds and title to the property? What the amount received by her after payment of all charges?

AT the Bombay Criminal Sessions, one Hasan Gufoor was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment for biting off the nose of a woman named Ashoo.

THE papers publish some important information regarding the settlement of the long pending Pamir Question, and the cordial relations existing between Great Britain and Russia in those parts. In an interview with a representative of Reuter's Agency, Colonel Gerard, the British Commissioner, said :-

THE START.

"We started from Sunla on June 15 last, and met the Russian Commission on July 22 at Like Victoria. We completed the demarcation of the frontier by the first week of September, and on the 13th of that month our whole work was concluded. I left the Pamirs that day, and marched with the Russian Commission, as their guest, as far as the frontier at Ash. Thence I came by post horses via Khokand and Tashkend to Samarkand, whence I proceeded on my journey by the Trans-Caspian Railway."

RUSSIAN HOSPITALITY. "First of all I want to draw attention to the extreme cordiality which existed between the Russian and British Commissions. At a moment like the present, when there is much discussion on Anglo-Russian relations, it is well to dwell upon the fact that, so far as the Pamir Question is concerned, the two Governments are absolutely at one. The Russians could not have extended greater cordiality to-Russian relations, it is well to dwell upon the fact that, so in a saturate panir Question is concerned, the two Governments are absolutely at one. The Russians could not have extended greater cordinity towards me than they did, and had I been a Frenchman, the ieception given me would have been everywhere telegraphed as evidence of the solidity of the Franco-Russian albance. The British and Russian camps were pitched close to one another, the Union Jack and the Russian ensign floated side by side, and the British and Russian efficers dayly exchanged hospitalities. At the town of Ash we received a great ovation, and on our nessing Marghilan the whole gartisno turned out to honour us. We were entertained at a supper and there were fireworks and illuminations, the British and Russian fligs being displayed on all sides. At all the public banquets—about six in number—arranged in our honour at the different towns through which we passed, the Queen's health was invariably drank first, and the speeches dwelt upon the condat relations existing between the two Powers. Or the railway a special saloon was placed at my disposal by the Russian authorities. I was invited to the Government's houses, and stayed there instead of putting up at hotels. In fact, everybody went out of his way to pay is attention, the hospitalities of the two Governments were all that could be desired, and all stories of strained relations are unitie."

THE SETTLEMENT.

"Both Commissions have agreed to a line of demarcation up to the Chinese frontier. All the documents have been signed, and are now on their way home. The Pamir Question is practically settled, When the Commissions reached the highest point attainable, the last pillar (No. 12) of demarcation was driven in, and the Russian Commissioner, turning to me, said:—"These lies the Pamir Question, butted beneath that stone." The value of the Pouris themselves is intsoloer, turining to me, said;—'There lies the Pamir Question, build beneath that stone.' The value of the Pamirs themselves is ail. The value of the Agreement is that we know on whose territory we stand and thus disputes similar to those which occurred in Slugnan, Roshan, and elsewhere will be prevented. By one Agreement, there is a buffer State, party Chiuses and partiy Afghan, between the Russian fronter and the Huduk Kush. In the Pamirs themselves, everything is in a complete state of rest. The Russians have one gairson at the Pamirst Post, and the nearest support of that force is at Kuldija, where is a sound of Cossacks. The last-named post is two hundred inless north of the Pamirski. Post, which is about a hundred inless north of the frontier agreed upon as the limit of the respective spheres of influence. There were no Afghans on the Pamirs; they had all withdrawn to the left bank of the river. The nearest Afghan post we passed was one composed of seven men at Sarhad-i-Wakhan. The Chinese Garrison at Tash-Kurgan consisted of three hundred Regulais, who were in full occupation of the district. The nearest Butish post is in the Hunza Nagyr country, one hundred and forty miles from the present limit of the sphere of influence on the road to Gilghit. At the end of July the two Commissions bestowed new names on the mountains and lakes forming the name of mountains we called after the Emperor Nicholas. The two chief peaks were called Mount Salisbury and Mount Lobanoff, and the highest connecting peak between Lake Victoria and the watershed of the Nicholas rauge we named 'Pie du Bon Accord.' "

THE TRANS-CASPIAN RAILWAY.

"The extension of the Trans-Caspian Railway is proceeding apace. It is a purely commercial undertaking. The alarmist reports in the Indian papers about the ulterior motives of Russia with respect to the strategic value of the line are absurd. The Railway goes merely through the commercial centres, and travels picallel with the frontier. So far from mining towards the frontier, it rather edges away from it. To suppose that the country through which this line passes is desolate, and that the railway must, therefore, be intended for strategic uses, is ridiculous. The country is one of amazing fertility, and resembles Cashmere. Populous villages abound, and the land is densely cultivated. There is a very large industry in cotton and silk As evidence of the richness of the country, I would point out that the State Bank of Khokand, only recently stated, does business to the extent of a million sterling monthly. All the roads are crammed with caravans of cotton, of which Turkestan could produce a quarter of all that commonity required for Russia. All this I mention only to show that there is real need for the railway, and to refute the notion that it is intended for wailke purposes. As I said before, it is purely commercial."

COMMERCE NOT WAR.

"Russia's policy is one of commerce rather than of war. The great thing to remember is that Russia and Great Britain are now absolutely at one on this question, which, at one time, seriously threatened the friendly relations between the Governments of London and St. Petersburg."

MESSES. Thacker, Spink and Co. are advertising a new edition of Letters written in a Mahratta Camp during the year 1809, by Thomas Duer Broughton. The letters were first published in England, in 1813, by Murray, Albemarle Street. They were noticed by Sydney Smith in the Edinourgh Review in a short critique which shows all the peculiarities of Sydney's genus and style. The following extract will, we are sure, be read with interest.

"This is a lively, entertaining, well-written book; and we can conscientiously recommend it to our readers. Mr. Thomas Duer Broughton does not, it is true, carry any great weight of metal, but, placed in a curious and novel scene, he has described what he saw from day to day, and preserved for the amusement of his readers, the impressions which those scenes made upon him, while they were yet strong and fresh. The journals of military men are given to the public much more frequently than they used to be; and we considerable class of publications as one of great utility and importance. The duties of such men lead them into countries very little known to Europeans, and give to them the means of observing and describing very striking peculiarities in manners, habits, and governments. To lay these before the public is a praiseworthy undertaking and if done simply and modestly (as is the case with this publication), deserves great encouragement. Persons unaccustomed to writing, are prevented from attempting this by the fear of not writing sufficiently well; but where there is something new and entertaining to tell, the style becomes of comparatively little importance. He who lives in a Mahratta camp, and tells us what he hears and sees, can scarcely tell it amiss. As far as mere style is concerned, it matters very little whether he writes like Cavar or Mullas. Though we praise Mr. Broughton for his book, and praise him very sincerely, we must warm him against that die diful propensity which young men have for writing verses. There is nothing of which Nature has been more bountful than poets. They swarm like the spawn of cod-fish, with a vicious fecundity that mytes and requires destruction. To publish verses is become a sort of evidence that a min wants sense; which is repelled not by writing good verses, but by writing excellent veets; —by displaying talents great enough to overcome the disgust which proceeds from satiety, and showing that its never too late to repent and do well. We hope Mr. Broughton will enter in

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

THE situation in Turkey continues critical. The Sultan disregards the repeated counsels of the Porte to admit additional vessels to the Bosphorus as guardwalps to the Embassies, and Hei Mijesty's ship Dryad has left the entrance to the Dudanelles and rejoined the British squadron at Salonica. The Sultan has appealed in vain to Russia, Austria, France and Germany, not to press the question of extra guardships. Prince Lobanoff, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, undertook to sound the different Cabinets, but receiving unfavourable replies informed the Porte that he declined to sever himself from the other Powers. Count Goluchowske, the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in, reply to the Sultan's appeal, emphasized the complete enlents existing between the Powers, and advised him to abandon his dilatory policy. The Embassies have again addressed the Porte on the subject. It is feared no more delay will be tolerated. Said Pasha, who was recently Grand Vizier, has been ordered to reside in the Sultan's palace, but fearing murder has taken refuge in the British Embassy.

In the meantime fresh missicies of Christians have taken place at Aintab. Kurds, and the Namidieh Cavalry (militia commanded by tribal leaders and associated with regular aimy) are raiding the entire province of Van and committing horible atrocities. The entire population of the village of Jurtabon, numbering upwards of two hundred souls, have been killed.

The emissaries of the Armenian Committee have appeared in South Russia, and are urging the Armenians to join the movement against the Turks. The Russian Government are repressing these propaganda.

THE Reichstag was opened on December 3. The Emperor William in his speech from the throne said that the foreign relations of Germany continue to be freendly. The effort of Germany, Russia, and France to avert further complications arising from the war between China and Japan had been successful, thanks to the judicious moderation shown by Japan. The result, His Majesty said, would contribute to preserve and enlarge a field of peaceful labour for Germany's industry and trade. The situation arising from the deplorable events in Turkey had occupied the serious attention of Germany, who faithful to her alliance and the principles of German policy, was ever ready to co-operate with the Powers whose interests require them to work in the cause of peace. The united resolution of the Powers was to respect treaties and support the Sultan's Government in establishing order. The state of things justifies the hope that their efforts will not want success.

PRESIDENT Cleveland, in his message to Congress, states that Great Bittain has not yet replied to the American note of July last protesting against the enlargement of Bittish Guiana, contrary to the rights and will of Venezuela, and proposing arbitration. Referring to Atmenia, he hoped that the prompt and effective action of the Powers will not be delayed. The President then goes on to say that the country is financially ill, and will require heroic treatment. He deprecates free coinage under the guise of bimetalism. In conclusion he urges the necessity of maintaining neutrality in the Cuba question.

ALL the Socialist Reichstag Committees and all Social and Democratic organisations in Beilin have been closed on the ground that they endanger public order. Airests, prosecutions and sentences for political offences are daily increasing. Heir Koeller, Home Minister, has resigned owing to his having dissolved the Socialist Committees without consulting Prince Hobenlohe, the German Chancellor.

AFIER several days' debate, confidence in Signor Crispi's Cabinet was voted by a majority of one hundred and thirty-six.

HER Majesty's ships Racoon, Sparrow and Magpie have arrived at Accra, to support the Ashanti expedition.

LORD Roberts, speaking at a lecture on the Festern question at Dublin, said that he was reported at the recognition of the fact that England occupied a continental position in the East, where her interests must be protected by continental means of defence. The policy of disregarding events beyond the north-west frontier of India was, he said, mapplicable to the present conditions of British occupation.

THE French have established an observation post sixty units from Mongsin.

NEGOTIATIONS between France and Great Britain regarding the Mekong question are at present at a standstill.

A CHINESE force in Yunnan has dislodged a French garrison which had been established at Muangu, but the reason for the act is unknown.

THE Novoe Viennya states that at a conference of foreign ministers held at Seoul, it was decided that the Japanese should evacuate Corea, with the exception of two companies at Seoul and two at Gensan and Jusan for the present.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the letter of Professor Vambéry in the correspondence column. We cannot be sufficiently grateful to and for his reported messages of good will from the bracks of the Dambe. We wish our countrymen will profit by his teachings and main his cannot by to sink all take mistinctions between Huntus and Manumetrus for the benefit of Indians in general.

Agreement a community of the same of the s

THE Indore difficulty has been solved for the moment. The Holkar has explained himself to the Viceroy. The Mithur ji goes out of his territory for a tour in search of health in Northern India. Mr. Bedarkur has been asked to resign. Rii Bihadur Ninakchand succeeds him as minister. A Council his been appointed with full powers to carry on the administration. Sudar Nirayan-rao Bhiggat, Sardar Sakharam Martand, Chief Justice Dhurandhai, Rios theb B. A. Gupte, Lala Bishweshwaimatu, Raosaheb B. P. Wagle, Raosaheb K. D. Kotnai and Raosaheb R. J. Binde constitute the new State Council

THE last St. Andrew's Dinner was one of the largest-attended. The Hon'ble P. Playfair occupied the char. The usual to ists of recent years were drunk and there was merriment all round. We publish elsewhere the speech of the Charanin. We have no space this week for that of the Lieutenant-Governor.

THE ever active So Charles Ethott is more than attentive to his work now that he is about to lay down the reins of office. He is anxious that the orders made by him be issue it as soon as passed. He means evidently to leave a clean table for Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

BESIDES official work, Sir Chinles's closing days in Calcutta are fully occupied with duties thrown on him by his friends and admirers, Since his return to Cilcuita with Ludy Elliott, he is much pressed for time for all the last honoms to him. List Siturday he was the chief guest at the St. Andrew's Dinner. This week is pretty full. On the 4th the Mahomedans opened the complimentary farewell for which they have been preparing themselves. It was the naming of the Medressah Hostel under construction. The principal speakers were. Prince Jehan Kidr. Bidadoor, Khan Bidadoor Abdul Jubb u and Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman. They fully ju tified the movement started by the Mahomedans for a public entertainment and memorial to their great patron. The Hon'ble Prince in a few grateful words obtained permission of the Lienten oit-Governor to nome after him the Hostel "to keep alive in generations to come the memory of what His Honor has done for the welfare and advance of the Mahomedan community," Mr Ridman was equally enthusiastic. He said :-

R thman was equilly enthusiastic. He said:—

"Sir Chules Ethott will be long and gruefully remembered by the present and from generations of Mahomedius in Bengil in connection with this noble edifice which is now in course of construction—His Honor's in equilibrium has been a source of construction—His Honor's in equilibrium has been a source of constant anxiety and thought to the leaders of the Mahomedium community for more than a quinter of a century. The causes are miny and well known, but, gentlemen, I am delighted to say that one of them has been moviennoved. Mahomedium prients in Bengal were unable to send their children for the purpose of education to Calcutt owing fur there being no suitable accommodation for them or proper or adequate supervision over them by any recognised authority. That great want which his been felt for years together has now been supplied. This being so, it is unnecessary for me to say that the grantinde which the Mahomedium community feels will ring from one end of Bengil to the other. Dr. Hærnle has made a reference to my humble efforts towards the promotion of this hostel. All I can say is that as long as I am alive my services will be always devoted to the tinest and best interests of my own community, for I finish believe that if every Mahomedian did nis duty honestly and conscientiously by his community, the time would come when we would not only regun out lost ground but be side by side with our Hindu brethren."

The speech of the day was the address of Khan Bahadoor Abdul Jubbar. He entered into the causes—the social changes which made the Hostel a necessity. He also explained that in giving his substantial support, Sir Charles was not unjustly partial to the Mahomedans. He remarked:

"The Koran teaches us followers to be grateful to their benefactors and it is only an act of gratitude on the part of my co-religionists to express a wish that the hostel should bear His Honor's name. Upwards of a century ago Mr. Wairen Hastings established the Calcutta Medressa for the benefit of the Mahomedans, and his name has ever since been a household word among the Mahomedans of Bengal. I have no doubt that the name of Sir Charles Elliott will be equally remembered by present and future generations, His Honor having given to the students of the Medressa a residence. In the good old time the need of a hostel was not much felt, as then every well-to-do Mahomedan in Calcutta was attentive to the pious duty of sheltering and feeding one or more students. Unfortunately, during the last thirty years, there has not only been a sad to among in the cucumstances of the Miliomedia residents of Cilcutts, but self-indulgence, I am sorry to say, his become present or many time who are able to help others. Minored in mode of Chanty has now admiss disappetred, and pour statlents in the mofused ratio. At this potentie His Horis has possible them with a hostel, and the Miliomedias will for ever from in indepted to His Horis and the Miliomedias will for ever from indepted to His Horis Table not are not be understood that His Horis was in any way partial to the Miliomedias of this province, but he saw the difficulties under which the Miliomedias laboured, and as a wise states in he adopted, without migrate to the claims of others, such measures as would indirectly amenorate their condition."

In his reply to the vote of thanks proposed, by the Hon'ble Nawab Syed Ameer Hossein, Sir Chirles E hott remembered the services done to the cause of Miho nedim education, and to that community by the late Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadoor, and wished that a tablet might be erected in the new building to commemorate the memory of the departed Nawab.

The day after, the Calcutta Medical School entertained the returing Lieutenant-Governor to a farewell address.

Preparations have been made by Raja Benoy Krishna for this evening for an Evening Party to meet the Lieutenent-Governor. It is expected that not only the heads of Native society but the Pandus will assemble to bless the returning Governor and wish him a safe voyage home. We are not aware whether any other surprise is in store.

Next week comes off the grand native entertainment at the Town Hail to be followed by the Civil Service Dinner. Sir Charles Elbott will also open the Marcus Square and receive an address from the Society for the Higher Training of Young Men.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, December 7, 1895.

THE OLD BENGAL POLICE.

THE Bengal Police, when first organised in 1862, consisted of a heterogeneous mass of drafts from the old and the military Police and a proportion of new men to make up the full complement. The officers were of three different elements: 1st., Thana Darogahs, taken, with some few exceptions, from the old service, 2nd, commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the disbanded military Police battalions, and 3rd, a fair proportion of new men. The rank and tile consisted of a limited number of Thana burkundazes, the majority having declined to enter the new service from a vague fear, and a large proportion of Sepoys of the military battalions and recruits. The organisation had for its heads District and Assistant Superintendents. Some of these were S. C. officers, others belonged to the broken up Salt department. Not a few of the latter were young Englishmen ignorant of . Il work but who had sufficient interest to be provided for. It cannot, therefore, be supposed that any judgment was exercised in the selection of subordinate officers and men. The few educated and well-connected natives, who first entered the new Police as Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors, had to leave in a short time in disgust at the capricious treatment they received from their inexperienced superiors. As a consequence, native gentlemen having any self-respect refused to enter the department notwithstanding the fair prospect it offered of pay. Out of a large number of officers of this class, the proportion of educated men of good families, therefore, was small. The men recruited as constables were, in many instances, the refuse of the jails. Scarcely any enquiries were made regarding their character and antecedents. All that was wanted was a good array of uniformed men against the next inspection of the Deputy Inspector-General or other superior officer. Much success could not be expected of a department whose component parts were so weak.

both subordinate officers and men were sent on duty to the different Police stations in the interior. During their stay at head-quarters, the Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors were generally employed in the office of the District Superintendent as English clerks and in light office duty, because the regular ministerial establishment was ridiculously small. There was a school at the head-quarters of every District, but the subordinate officers never attended it; nor were they otherwise trained for the regular work they were subsequently called upon to perform. The result was that most of them had to depend on Taidnierses, men without any pay but who, however, managed to make bandsome incomes. Some reform has since been attempted in this direction by appointing constables who can read and write. But Taidnuvises are still allowed at the recommendation of the Inspectors.

Considering the large area of every Bengal District, the number of officers and men at first sanctioned was insufficient. Since then several reductions have been made on account of financial embarrassments. Not to apeak of efficiency, the strength of the Force is inadequate for the two of its principal duties -the prevention and detection of crime. There are also many stations, of which, instead of Sub-Inspectors, Head-constables are in charge. Their status and respectability may be judged by the fact that they are of four grades drawing salaries of Rs. 10, Rs. 15, Rs. 20 and Rs. 25. What a high officer to place over an area equal to that of an average English county, having, besides, immense power for good or evil over thousands of Her Majesty's subjects! Latterly, Sub-Inspectors have come to be placed over Thanas, which have, however, been reduced in number; but these officers are mostly no more than higher grade Head-constables. The average number of constables doing duty in each Police station is about fifteen, insufficient to go the round of a village even once a week, the jurisdiction of a Thana being very extensive. The village Chowkidars are, therefore, left pivity much the arbiters of the lives and property of the rayyet.

A few words are necessary regarding the village Chowkidari, or, as it is now called, the Rural Police. During the last twenty years Commissions have sat and is and of paper been written as to the means of re organising the Raral Police, for its better control, ter rusing its status, and for making it a subordinate agency of the regular Police. How far the attempt has succeeded, we will not stop here to enquire. We will refer to some facts which may help the corpusy. In some Districts the village Chowkidar are still paid by Chakran or service lands granted by the Zeminders, and in others by a small rate on c.ch householder. One who pays the piper may command the time. The Chowkidars are as much the recents of Government as of the Zemindar or his agent, and the heads of the village community, according to the system of payment in vogue As in most cases their regular pay is a trille, they generally labor hard during the day to procure means to maintain themselves, and go to sleep when they are expected to keep watch and wild. Besides other multifarious duties, they have to attend weekly or twice a week at the Police Station according to the distance of their villages and report a crime when it is the will of the Zemindur's agent or the heads of the village.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds. It is should be revealed. For, when the Zemindur's agent or the heads of the village.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds. Action of current upon each other than the Zemindur's agent or the heads of the village.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds. Action of current upon each other than the Zemindur's agent or the heads of the village.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Thursday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Stunday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Stunday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Stunday, the 12th Inst., at 6 to 7 P. M. Subject. Zinlegy—the First winds.

Letter by D. Ndrian Sukar, M.A., M.D., on Stunday, the 12th I go to sleep when they are expected to keep watch

After a little drill at the head-quarters of a District, | there is no clashing of interests in a village and the people are of one mind, even heinous offences are suppressed and no information is allowed to reach the Police station. This is frequently done to obviate the infliction of the Police officers' visit and its consequent annoyance and expenses. The people have not forgotten that their sires and grandsires had to pay the Police-Salam for inducing the Police to close its investigation and leave the village. Even now Police officers and constables expect to live at the expense of the village as a customary right during their stay. If the crime is serious, the officer remains on the spot for several days during which all field work is at a stand-still, the local bazar and shops are closed, the women are unable to get out of their homes for fetching water or for other domestic purposes, and festivities are stopped. If the offenders are detected and the investigation is conducted successfully, several of the substantial villagers have to proceed first to the Thanna, then to the head-quarters of the District to attend at the Magistrate's Court and possibly a second time at the Sessions Court.

The present Police, though reformed, unfortunately inherits a portion of the bad name which the old Police gained by its misdeeds. The old days are, however, gone by when, to obtain an appointment as Darogah or Mohurer or Jamadar, a man had to dance attendance at the Magistrate's Court for years and to fee the Sheristadar and Amlah, and when appointed to make presents at stated intervals. Cases are known in which more than a thousand rupees had to be paid. For a burkundazship a hundred and sometimes more was given. Then, again, all the Thannah establishment had to spend freely once a year when the Magistrate was on tour. The Amlah and Chaprasis who accompanied him and his personal servants had to be fed and paid handsomely. Though the Khansama was paid by the Magistrate for his Russad, not a pice ever reached the Darogah, and the Darogah was not the man to pay the actual supplies from his own pocket. Regarding appointments in the Police, the common saying was " whatever the character of the appointment, it carried with it butter and rice," meaning a grand style of living.

NEO-BUDDHISM.

An Oriental scholar of solid reputation, referring to the latest fad of Sir Edwin Arneld and Colonel Olcott, speaks of the movement for depriving the present possessors of the ancient Temple at Buddh-Gva, as "that great humbing of neo-Buddh-in and the mountebank propaganda of the Mahabodhi Societi." As the cause of neo Buddhisia has suldenly become popular with philosophical dilettantes of a certain class, we publish ib law an extract, especially translated, from the last "Bulletin" in French of M. A. Barth, dealing almost exhaustively with the que con. It deal with the history of the movement till the end of 1803 Very little requires to be added for bringing it down to die. The reflections of M. Barth are so obiviously just that, except a labitul of fanaries who pretend to have found in Bottbusm the most

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science. Lecture by D. D. V. Contrepen, B.A.B.C.M. on Furnity, the 19th Inst., at 6 to 8. P.M. Subjects: Histology-Liver, Physiology-

Altimentation Lecture by Bibin Rigender North Chitterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, the 11th 1981, at 6 PM Subject: Light—us nature and mode of advanced type of faith, every one will yield his ready assent to them. The "Bulletin," we may mention, is a critical account, which M. Barth publishes every third or fourth year, of the works issued during the period, on In han religions. The Bengali mind is eminently imitative. It could not be that when mon like Sir Edwin Arnold and Col. Olcott entered the field there would be no Bengali imitators, however dubious the honour attaching to a successful trot across or around it. Accordingly, Babu Nobin Chandra Sen, "the poet of the Hindu rivival," although unfamiliar with the spelling of the very name of the great work that forms the basis of that titival, came forward with his Amuábba or a versified life of Buddha after the fashion of The Light of Ana. We have, in a recent number, expressed our opinion about the merits of Babu Son's work. Hear now how a foreign critic speaks of Sir Edwin's versified life of the same religious teacher. "The Leght of Ana (and the same may be said of the translation of Gitagoeinta) may be a fine piece of versification, the judgment of which must be left to his countrymen; but it is a bad work, without any true poetry, for there can be no true portry where there is no common sense."

Translation.

"With M. Augustin Chabourtan (author of an Essay on Buddhist philosophy) we leave the domain of tangible studies to enter apon the limboes of Bullhism, and its allies, occultism, theosophy, spiritism, Kabbalism, &c. M. Chaboureau who is the editor of the "Veil of I-is," and an esotetist, unless I am mistaken, will not allow himself to be classed as a neo-Buddhi to and is ever ill disposed towards it, I cannot well see why. When once he has cleared himself of certain excentracities, his method at bottom and his results are almost the same abcoause he seeks for and finds in Buddhism not only a trans-indental philosophy, unique and original, but also a science, destine I, it may be, to be the science of the 20th century, but in any case, a science markedly in advance of our own age. His book deserves, for some reason, to be ranked above the ordinaty productions put forth by this school. but still it does belong to one and the same class. No one expects me to give a detailed account of that literature, and even if he dul, I would be incapable of giving one. I cannot even be certain whether the periodicals of all sizes and shapewhich champion him and are his organs, are still airve-such as the Lucyler (London), the Pab (N.w York), the Lette Figure (of Dr. Franz Hartmann of Leipzic), without containing the Patis papers. Among outside works, the best are till only efficients of an attenuated dilectantism like the Instition of Bulla (of M. Einest Boulen), and the anonymous trict attribut. I it at to Malamet Blavarsky but since acknowledged by Mr. Model Colling, the Light on the Path, which has been tread and Smooth by Pandin Brokeensa (ma pperces, and I 1, Myer 1009) Anyone, on the orner hand, who is shes to see the extent to which trustics in and constitution can be particle, has only a proceeding progress, of a work published in Philadelphia, "You pro Unveiled" which breathes the neo-Buddhist inspiration on its even to chapter

In India, as everywhere, they them is near a morphrish from theosophy in publications, the solities, the Covarious of Covariance almost invariably those of the other also. The leadership, more or less creatly, two tree hands of Col. Henry S. Olcott, president of the Madias. They are expect, which realism in the outside world 200 branches (two of them in Paris, it would seem), of which 150 are in India. The organ of the Society, the Theosphat, has entered on it. 15th volume. Mr. Olcott hiving already endowed Buildhim with a circuition, has now published a manual, reproved by the heats of the church in Burma, Chieverng and Jipan. It sums up in 40 articles the common creed of all Buddhims (see the number of the journal for Jan., 1892). It can resultly be supposed that this platform of common belief, as Colonel Olcott terms it, is feeble enough and hears little resemblance to the Buddhism of any epoch or of any known land.

All that it proves for the time being is tha in India, as elsewhere, it has been centralized among persons without much discernment; possely too it was taken quite seriously at the recent Chicago Congress. The Society professes, moreover, to have one celectic and naively mystic cult for all ancient manifestations of Aryan thought, and the Transplant contains in this connection a certura amount of Hindoo religious archeology, from which we must not expect too much criticism, but which is at the same time of a real value and superior at all events to anything published in similar periodicals in the West. The Europeans who form part of the army militant in this movement do not betray overmuch judgment, but the natives are there in their own element and many of them see in it a means of rehabilitation and safety for their fellow coan sympa. It is one of the mainfold manifestations in I not the least curious, of the travail pains which are besetting the higher classes of Hin for society and its contact spreads even to a goodly number of Aiglo Inhims (see the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of London, 1890, p. 228, for an account of several conversions to Buddhism, notably the case of a Mr. Powell at Colombo. It was in the Light of Ana by Sir Edwin Arnold, possibly a great post, un loubtedly a fanatic and a dilettante, that this so called dirgyrum found his primrose path). In Coylon, the movement has several organs, both Singhalese and English, notably the Buddhed of Colombo, founded in 1888, patronised and more or less inspired by Colonel Olcott; a paper which, as the title shows, represents more especially militant Buddhism. In Bengal the Maha Bodhi Society spreads the propaganda. Founded originally in Colombo, Ceylon, in the year 1891, this Society has its alleged headquirters at Biddoa Givi in Bibir, but its actual centre is in Calcutta. Its patron is the great Lama of Tibet; its president the Mahathera Sum ingala of Caylon; its Vice-presidents the highest ecclesiastics of the Barma, Japan, China and Ceylon churches; its director and counsell remediet, Colonel Olcott; its Secretary General, Mr. H. Daarmapala, who is also the principal editor of its organ The Journal of the Maba-Boldhe Society (1st number, Calcutta, May 1892), and represented it at the Chicago Congress. Besides the general aim of propagan lism, it has, as a special object, the founding of an international Bublinst College at Buddha-Gaya, and the con sequent em to spation to all Bullibism (the English alministration would, anded, call at by no other name) of the great temple so recently to a dual for long occupied by Swite priests : for it must be nown that ther is nowhere in the whole country a stande author . Bollbust to be found unk's policy when Mr Deramapala (appear to be in the way. Mr. Ole at hims If pleaded the cause of the emergepetion in an allfres d livered by him at Calcasti on the 24th October 18)2 (The End plate in Halison and Build in C. mire 1833) for a red anneal principle object do and conform in Ban what discount have us in the concern discount grant bequent language whech file the paraculate portrail, and is mention, hardly dign it, of extrong British from it favour regiont Mathematican Sel by all win this 5 cay and in sports, the enotherst, and the fourth for Colonia, which I say the sear contagon at a I me a short Both had To t Secretary Interwhich, so carried lands a property to publich works on the history of Bullhin entetic Bulling er from the Sin it, Pili, and Inform and I have about a morning let up there with which it has begge. There is, however, any of a coain write of experience in that of a gand in the general treatment of the Journal While on the one hand we are given ex ellent selections, such as the Vividity marga, there are others more in agnificant, especially, when served up in a fragingulary form, for instance the extracts of Kshemen lead May it for the future show more austerity, and devote itself towards exploring in the true interests of history the great field bring open before it, without seel up to dabble in easy folldbre or in horsest propagandism : then its usefulness will be unquestioned. The less resemblance it bears to us twin-sister, the Maha Bodhi Society, the hetter both for itself and for us."

Letters to the Editor.

"AN INDIAN JOURNALIST."

Budapest University, November 15, 1895.

DEAR Sir, ... I have just finished reading Mr. Skrine's interesting book on the life of Dr. Mookerjee, and I cannot refrain from giving you some of the impressions the biographical details of your late editor have left upon me. The effect of a book is always in connection with the bias and tendencies of the reader, and it is very natural that everybody tries to pick out from the store offered to him the information mostly needed for the completion of his studies. Being a many years' student of the life and languages of Eastern peoples I gather from the biographical skesch, and particularly from the correspondence of the late Dr. Mookerjee, experiences which are unique in their way. In spite of the special attention I have paid hitherto to the life and doings of Indian men of eminence, like the late Sir T. Madava Rao, Sir Salar Jung, Dr. Rajendralala Mitra and of others still living, I dare to affirm that the late Dr. Mookerjee stands out, in many points, from his famous countrymen, and as a journalist he ranks amongst the first of his colleagues in Europe. What strikes me particularly in his remarkable personality, is his extensive reading in various branches of science, his unprejudiced opinion on men and matters absolutely heterogenous from the peculiar views in which he was brought up, and above all his liberal mode of thinking in religious matters, although he kept faithfully to the Brahmanic dogma, remaining always a thorough Indian. Excepting his love of change and his want of steadily persevering in one career, there is nothing that denotes in him the Eastern character, nothing that reminds one of the shortcomings of many Turks, Arabs, Persians and Central-Asiatics, who took to an assiduous study of our Western life and sciences and still remained Asiatics at the bottom of their hears, I mean to say that they failed to penetrate the real spirit of modern civilisation and were always wavering between the two theories of light and culture. Dr. Mookerjee must, therefore, be looked upon as an exception to the rule and as an evident proof of the fact that the subtle mind of an Asiatic is easily turned into a thoroughly European one, and that, owing to the innate perspicacity of Asiatics in general, he can even surpass his teachers and serve as a bright example to those who believe in the possibility of a radical change of men in Asia.

The life of the late Dr. Mookerjee may serve, on the other hand, as an encouragement to England's civilising efforts in the East. Pardon my want of modesty in saying that it is a justification of the views I have been defending for decades---that the British spirit of enterprise, of justice and of liberty is best suited for the promulgation of our Western culture in Asia. Tell me, can France, Russia and Holland boast of having produced men like the late Dr. Mookerjee? I am fully aware of the many mistakes committed by the English in India. I cannot find sufficient blame and reproach for the cold and haughty behaviour of the average Englishmen towards the natives of India---but the efficient result of British rule is nevertheless undeniable. England is achieving a master-piece of work in the heart of Asia, and if the process of civilisation can go on undisturbedly we shall live to see many Indians, both Mussalmans and Hindus, like the hero of Mr. Skrine's book. I beg to remain, > Yours obediently, A. VAMBERY.

A MUNICIPAL GRIEVANCE.

B alasore, the 30th Nov. 1895.

Some ten years ago necessity being felt for a slaughter house within the Municipality of Balasore the then Municipal Board selected a site by the side of a road and in the vicinity of to override by mandate the opinion deliberately and unanimously a Hindu village and built a slaughter house there ignoring formed by the Governor-General and his Council.

the entreaties of the Hindu community. Not only did it give a shock to the Hindus but also the hide godowns attached to the slaughter house rendered the neighbourhood unhealthy and became a source of continual annoyance and a nuisance. When the people began to complain of the stink that came from the hide godowns no body heeded them on the ground that the municipality in removing the slaughter house and the hide godowns would be put to an unnecessary additional expense. But when Babu Raj Narayan Das, an influential Zamindar of the town, came forward with an offer of defraying all the expenses of the removal, recourse was had to the plea of want of a more eligible site.

How far the municipality was in carnest in the reply will appear from the fact that when subsequently Mr. Gregg, the Sanitary Commissioner, came to the town and Banu Radha Charan Das showed him the slaughter house and a secluded place a few hundred cubits off, he quite approved of the place and suggested the removal of the slaughter house there. Still no oction was

But thanks to a change in the Municipal Board and to the liberality of Babu Raj Narayan Das and his nephew Babu Radha Charan Das, this great nuisance is about to be removed to a place where there is no chance of its wounding the feeling of any Hindu neighbour or causing annoyance to any villager or passer by. Babu Radha Charan Das has paid to the Municipality about Rs. 1,000 to acquire a piece of land and to build a new slaughter house. We hope our Government will take notice of this liberality and thank the donors on behalf of the Hindu inhabitants of the town .--- Yours, &c.,

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

ST. ANDREW'S DINNER.

THE TOAST OF "THE VICEROY AND THE LAND WE LIVE IN."

The Chairman, the Hon'ble P. Playfair, who was received with loud applause, said:--Gentlemen, in accordance with traditional custom observed at this Nitional Festival, I have now the honour to propose the toast of--- His Excellency the Viceroy, and the Land we live in." I suppose that comparatively few people in India, and fewer still in England, realise the unceasing toil of office work that devolves upon the Vicerov of India, imposing a physical and mental strain of such severity as might reasonably deter many a mental strain of such severity as might reasonal statemen from accepting the high office. Lord Elgin's experience has been no exception to this rule. It was no enviable situation for a new Viceroy to find his Minister for Finance in the words of Sir Robert Peel-" seated in an empty chest by the pool of bottom-less deficiency, fishing for a budget" (laughter), and to have to less denciency, using for a binger (naginety, and to have resort to the unpopular expedient of increasing taxation. But with that kind of determination on the part of the Government of India that "aye keeps a stout heart to a stey brae" the difficulties of the situation were grappled with.

In the short time His Excellency has held office two events have happened that must take a place in History. The one has meant the important annual saving of nearly fifty lakhs of rupees by a reduction of interest on the India debt, a measure redounding, as His Excellency has gracefully acknowledged, to the credit of the Minister for Finance, our fellow countrymen, the Hon. Sir James Westland (cheers).

The other important event has unfortunately caused a large expenditure of money in a war with some of the Border Tribes.

The Chitral campaign has elicited our admiration of the gallantry and endurance displayed in both British and Native As a measure of experience, or as a test of armament and transport it may have been useful, but still we must regret that it should have it may have occur useful, out all me that it me when the treasury could but ill afford to meet the cost, and that the result should be an additional annual burden on the finances of the State.

It is very evident that like the little boy with Pears' Soap the Government of India would not be happy till they got Chitral, and as the sequel to the picture shows that the little lad was setisfied with the prize sought for and did not ask for more, it is to be hoped that the Government of India has now completed the annexation of necessary frontier outposts (applause).

necessary reontier outposts (appiause).

Associated with the decision to retain Chitral, there comes a degree of satisfaction to those who hold the theory that good Government for India means Government by men on the spot (hear, hear), that with their return to office Her Majesty's Ministers did not attempt

It has been a General complaint of past years that India and her affairs have had but an indefinite place of interest in the mind of the British public. A welcome change seems to be taking place, if we are entitled to draw this conclusion from the frequency with which articles on Indian subjects appear in magazines and newspapers at Home from the pen of politicians financiers, investors and manufacturers. The views expressed for the most part seem however to indicate the personal interest only which each writer has in the country. There is the prophet of insolvency who predicts a universal distrust in Government Securities if the expenditure on the Army and Civil Service is not reduced; the pessimist who looks to invasion and decay; while on the other hand the investor and manufacturer apprehend an important rivalry from increasing prosperity to India.

One of the most interesting questions associated with the "Land we live in," the growing importance of which is, as I have said, attracting attention from without, is the prospect that is being unfolded to India of a revivel of industrial enterprise (hear, hear).

India has begun to realise that through the adoption of the power-loom she may reinstate in another form, those employments that have been lost to her for a time by the annexations of western science. We all know that the absence of industrial enterprise is not a natural thing to India (hear), and that it has long been recognised that she may recover her lost industries as a relief to the pressure on the land and with benefit to the landless classes. England, under her beneficent principles of free trade, has assisted India towards this prospect. In addition to a flow of capital and supplies of machinery and tools there has been a steady stream of British, and for the most part Scots artistus picked workmen coming to India to educate and supervise the Native operative to whom the credit of reviving India's industrial enterprise is in a great measure due. This free transfer of capital, in its fullest sense has superseded the "sole market policy" adopted some generations ago when the exportation of machinery and materials used for warfare and the emigration of an artisan to a foreign and possibly hostile country was a grave and punishabl: offence. I venture to say, gentlemen that the party at Home that now attempts to let its voice be heard by complaining of British Capital in India allied to unjust laws having an unfair advantage over British Capital at Home hampered by British law, betrays a degree of self interest too clearly discernible to be likely to induce the British nation to go back upon its free trade principles and differentiate between a colonial and an Indian policy of trade (loud cheers). You will all agree with me I think that none of us came to reside in this country for change of air, and that in our endeavours to earn a living we wish to be placed in no worse a position than our fellow countrymen occupy in the Colonies, and to be looked upon with no greater jealousy. In attempting thus to help ourselves we have the satisfaction of knowing that we are also benefiting a large number of Her Majesty's Indian subjects.

In an epigram a modern writer refers to the competition in industrial enterprise between the East and West as a conflict between "the white man with his vellow mital and the yellow man with his white metal"; but favoured with ch ap labour, cheap fuel and possessed of the raw material is to be wondered that India should arouse herself to make use of these resources? And is it surprising that a frugal people, endowed with pattence, and the faculty of imitation, finding a means of territing an here-ditary trade should attempt to re establish the minufacture of the coarser description of cotton and jute labries in India? (applaue.)

I have referred to the opposition that has been advanced at Home, and I would add that it can only be regarded as a misfortune when a conflict arises from commercial competition between the mother country and any of her colonies or dependencys, and especially so when India is concern? (appliuse). It would be unnatural did we not feel sympathy for our own kith and kin when overtaken by such competition. Their permanent misfortune v. in amount to a calamity. And in addition to this the position in which Ladia stands to Great British entitles the interests of Great Britain's commerce to a consideration that cannot be disputed. This position was set forth with frankness by Mr. Simuel Laing speaking from his place in the Legislative Council as Minister for Finance 33 years ago, when he said "he could not deny that England having founded the Indian Empire and being ready to sustain it, and having given up all precensions of exacting tribute as Holland does from Java, or spain from Cuba, and all claims on a monopoly of the Indian market and carrying trade may with some reason ask India so to levy the necessary revenue as not to interfere with trade between the two countries." (Hear, hear).

India's trade has never had protection, nor in the late discussion on the Cotton Duties Bill was protection sought, but as it has been acknowledged that the wealth of India like all other countries is in proportion not only to its natural resources out to the degree of liberty it may possess in the use of these resources, she claimed that liberty and nothing less. (Cheers.) And gentlemen, I apprehend that were India's natural advantages handicapped by unuccessary legislation, it would in all probability be more to the ben-fit of her competitors in the Far East and to producers on the Continent of Europe than to British trade. (Hear, hear) The Indian Consumer regards price more than quality on account he is content with cheap manufactures. The Bombay Spinners have already found successful rivals in the Cotton Mills Japan has asserted her position as a manuof China and Japan. facturer and with increased knowledge of the craft is relying upon quality to sell her wares and is abandoning that artifice of spurious ministron and prace with which she began to trade. Having acquired Formosa, "the granary of China," rich in coal, petroleum and sulphur, Japan in likely to assert heiself still further in the minutacture of textiles in the Rast.

But there is a great force lying alongside of Japan that has hardly as yet been set in motion. Japan may prove to have been merely the pioneer and the late war the herald of a new era. It China with her industrious and thrifty millions (hear) overcomes her superstitious dread of opening mines and prosecutes the textile dustry on which she has already embarked, she must become a potent factor as a producer. And this may happen soon. If the treaty of peace with Japan secures to that nation and therefore to the subject of the treaty powers, under the most favoured nation clause, liberty to engage in manufactures in China without tax or licence fees, it is cortain that Germans and Americans will also enter the field of industrial enterprise and British-Indian, as well as British Manufacturers and Merchants will have to face the strength of foreign competition, it may be in woolen, silk and jute, as well as in cotton fabrics. (Hear, hear.) With this prospect, gentlemen, I think you will permit me to say that the indistrial enter prise of India not only requires absolute freedom from unnecessary restraint and factions interference, (loud cheers) but is also deserving of all the lostering care that can be bestowed upon it (hear, hear). In demanding liberty to control our factories, I do not mean to advocate anything approaching the working day of 2112 hours work (laughter and applause) as in China, nor am I personally in favour of night work, which is I believe frequently had work, (cheers) as I hold by the adage of the good old nursery rhyme----- early to bed, and early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise? (Laughter and applause.) What I desire to affirm is, that England cannot hope to retain the Eastern markets exclusively for her manufactures and that if India is not allowed the fullest liberty to conduct her industries in accordance with the the fullest liberty to conduct hir industries in accordance with the customs of her people, her industrial trade abroad and perhaps also at Home, will be annexed by her competitors in the Far East. This view of the case I consider should be pressed upon the attention of the British public. We have perhaps been negligent recognizing the necessity of doing so, in having failed to appreciate the growing relationship that exists between commerce and politics and its governing influence.

Having said so much with regard to the prospect of an enlarged area of supply, I do not m us to forecast a downfall of Brirish trade with the East. With her skilled labour, natural resources, scientific inventions to effect economy in the employment of labour, and by her finencial strength, and geographical position, England will continue to hold her industrial approaches. (Lond cheers.)

The field in India is fortunately very wide and there must be possibilities for the extensive d v lopm at of Brush trade when, according to an estimate recently rule by Lancohue manufacturers the total quantity of cloth an cally consumed in India population of yarns and does not exceed 812 valids pirh ad of the united value of In ha's production and el, the outlet, as it has texules does not represent Rs. 1 2 0 per hing of those who are been said, would appear to be in the c now unclothed.

Gintlemen, you know the old profine feathers British public eager to subscribe fit 12 1 Railway, (laughter) and discussing with construction of a line through Barma extensive and thickly populated tracts Railways (Heat, hear.) It his for every 29,000 soils; a condition to ichi, ity is hazardous in a country whose pool loare almost wholly dipendant upo i agriculture. Bombay is bei Madras with little more than 1/2 of the population of Bengal has one mile of Railway to 13,000 out. The Punjabwhish has a population of 1/3rd of that of Bengal has one mile to 11,000 souls. (A ib " far away buds have case when we find the Hons sterling to a Usasla tightcy proposals for the Ching, when there are country throughout the cessole for the want of a exceptionally bally off ily one mile of Rulway in the interests of human it off than Brugal, for with of Railway to 8,000 souls voice : What about Assam?) I haven't ; of the figures for Assam, or,

I see many in this Hall who have not considered that the State serving the eastern districts of Bengal has met the requirements of commerce.

And you are aware that for many veirs the merchants of Calcutta have asked for an additional line of ommunication to Northern India with its own separate entrar e to the Port and that this is still denied to them. Picture to surselves a Province lying between Calcutta and the North-West of 43,000 square miles containing 51/2 million people or an area half as large again as Scotland with a population Krd greater, the Commissioner of which has as a means of locomotion when inspecting the Districts, and it has as a means of locomotion when inspecting the Districts, and it may be in reaching a parade ground, or in approaching a durbar what he describes as "a sort of attenuated bathing machine (laughter) dragged by coolies at the rate of 3 miles an hour." (Renewed laughter.) One line of railway to Upper India is considered sufficient for the communications of a population of 100 millions with a port whose annual sea-borne trade is valued at Rs. 85 crores, employing four millions tons of shipping. Imagine Russia with one trunk railway. Can you imagine that the commerce and travelling facilities of France, Germany, Italy, and England, and travelling iacilities of France, viermany, italy, and England, each with a population less than one half of that I have mentioned, should be so restricted. That in this age of commercial competition between countries the attempt should be made to compel marchandise by official dictation to follow a prescribed channel "is marchandise by ometal dictation to inlow a prescribed channer "is one of those things" as Lord Dundreary would have said, "that no feller can understand." (Laughter and applause.) You have the Jubilee Bridge on your outskirts, the Kidderpur Docks in your midst and that colossal white elephant the Assam Bengal Railway must and that colossal white depinant he areas being a warraw (cheers and laughter) in prospective, creations of the official mind that have not as yet come within the sphere of usefulness. It would be natural to suppose that such costly experience would have made the official bureau less self-reliant when dealing with questions made the official bureau less self-reliant when dealing with questions affecting Calcutta which must always be in the main questions of commerce. But the battle has still to be fought out. And if perchance, gentlemen, it is won and the possibility averted of Lord Macaulay's 'South Sea Islander extending his travels to seat himself on Prinsep's Ghat to depict the ruins of Chowringhee, and the blown out furnaces of John King & Co,'s foundry (loud laughter) what opinion is posterity likely to hold of the end of the nineteenth century when India's commerce was dominated by sold heald and century when India's commerce was dominated by gold braid and a Woolwich training? (Laughter and applause.)

These matters, gentlemen, should be of much concern to Government for the good of the "Land we live in," as it is from the agriculture and commerce of the country that the revenues are supplied. And, gentlemen, if India is making progress in mechanical know-ledge, she has also by the unostentatious industry of a large body of public servants (applause) risen to the pleasing position of receiving the congratulations of the President of the deputation of British Association upon her practical adaptation of scientific invention. It was a pleasant corollary to Mr. P. V. Luke's lecture on field telegraphy delivered before that separately delivered before that separately last September, that he should have elicited such a compliment. (Hear, hear). Since last St. Andrew's Anniversary a Medical Congress, has assembled in this city that has testified to the civilized world the assembled in this city that has testined to the civilized world the existence of one of greatest benefactions that has been conferred upon the people of the "Land we live in" by the British administration. I refer to the medical relief directed by the State. (Cheers). It may be good for the "Land we live in" that it should be visited by such scientists as met at the Congress and the complete the property of the congress and the complete the property of the congress and the complete the congress and the congress become better known generally to our countrymen at home. It is not to be wondered at that our beautiful winter climate should attract our fellow countrymen and others in increasing numbers from the winter fogs and frosts of home. India can offer attractions to the beau and the belle as well as to the savant and the sportsman; and in winter it is neither to be despised as a place of residence nor as a ground for exploration. (Applause). If we are round blithe and gay, it is a salutary reaction after a long period of confinement, during which we have been roasted, boiled, and stewed, to a degree, that can hardly be realized without having been experienced. (Hear, hear), If it would be extreme to characterise that experience as a writer lately heard Hong Kong described in "a monosyllabic adaptation of the ultimate destination of the incorrigibly unright-eous," (loud laughter) we could not at all events have brought ourselves during these seasoning months to chant the motto of the Dewani-Khas at Delhi. ("If there be paradise on earth, it is this, it is this"). (Applause). With depreciated silver the it is this, it is this"). (Applause). With depreciated silver the cost of a visit to India is not terrifying to the fortunate recipient of the Great Eastern Hotel do, not demand gold rents (laughter) from those who do not find accommodation with friends. The Anglo-Indian has hitherto held the enjoyable reputation of keeping open house according to his means (hear, hear), and although the latter, as heaven full well knows, has more frequently shrunk than increased of late years, he has not relaxed his efforts to continue to entertain the stranger within his gates. It is hard lines if by doing so he is afterwards compelled to defend himself and his income against those who he finds to his dismay have made use of his home in the nature of a caravanserai. (Cheers). Although such instances have occurred, they are fortunately few. The good fellowship of the Anglo-Indian is meant to be received in as kindly a spirit as it is given by the words of our National Poet

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises on the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fall particulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press natices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before he public. Address, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westministes, London, S. W.

"But ye whom social pleasures charm, Whose heart the tide of kindness warms, Who hold your being on these terms Each aid the others Come to my bowl, come to my arms, My friends, my brothers."---(Loud cheers).

Gentlemen,...-In these imperfect remarks I have attempted to show that the "Land we live in," although offering many attractions, is only half developed and partially exploited. For the position she has already attained in the civilized world, the credit is due to those who make up the races of the United Kingdom. To borrow a simile of a modern statesman, India has received the benefit of the strong *agacity, staunch, through going character, sobriety, and seriousness, of the habitual temper of Scotsmen, while she has perhaps been taught by the English, to take a rider view of her political problems, and a broader conception of her Imperial destiny, and has been sharpened by being brought into contact with the quicker, the more agile, and the more ready witted character of the Irish, who have brought their imagination and diplomacy to advance her best interests. Long may India enjoy such benefits derived from the people of the United Kingdom (Loud cheers).

AT A PENNY APIECE---£20,000.

AT A PENNY APIEOE -- £20,000.

If you had as many pennies as there are natural holes through your skin, how in my pennies should you have?

You would have enough to make £20,000. Now figure up the holes for yourself. Yet you couldn't afford to sell them for a penny each, even in hird times. They are worth more money. These holes, or sweat gluids, point out quarts of sweat every day—water, mixed with salt and poisonous hum mirs. So pensee holes, partly or entirely, and the skin's work is at once thrown on the lungs and kidneys. Then you fall lib with some disease or other. With what disease depends on the nature and location of you week upot.

A lady, whose name we are permitted to mention, will not soon forget the spring of 1890. It was then that for the first time in her life she was afruid to be left alone; not from fear of enemies, but from sheer nervous excuencent. She was obliged to have elastic put into her slippers to let them out—her feet were swollen so; and her hands were in the same condition. In the morning her face would puff up and large lumps form under her eyes and on her cheeks. Then a rash made its appearance all over her body, vanishing again almost immediately, as a blush comes and goes on the face.

The suddenness of this she compares to the sting of a wasp or horiset. An intense tiching accompanied it, so she could not be in bed or be quiet in any position on account of it. She was in missey night and day, and scarcely knew what to do with herself. Her legs got so painful and felt so tirred she was nit of it of get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed her so nit of it of get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed her so nit of it of get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed her so nit of it of get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed here it is not not it to get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed here it is not to it to get about. For eighteen months (it mist have seemed here it is not not it to get about.

months (it must have seemed like as many years) she was tormented in this way.

Meanwails she consulted two doctors, and attended successively at the Newcistle Infirm up and at the Dispensivy. But nothing more than temporary ease came of the treatment they gave her. The doctors recommended a change of an, and in August, 1891, she went to North Sunderland. She found rehef at that place, but not from the air.

Now we must get bick to the spring of 1890, and inquire what, if anything, pieceded this strange outbreak. At that time, the lady says, she first felt linguid, tired, and constroutly sleepy. She was troubled with bad he diaches and attacks of giddiness. Her appetite failed; she could eit but little, and after eating had a feeling of weight and fulness at the chest and slices. Her whole system was depressed, and the life in her appeared to sink, as the water does in a cistern where there exists a hidden leak somewhere. Then came what has already hear described.

At Narth Sunderland, whither she went for a change of air, she met At NATIO Sunderland, within size went for a change of air, she met a gentleman named Cathoart, who expressed a most intelligent opinion of her case and advised the use of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. Convinced by his reasoning she procured a supply of this well-known remedy and began taking it.

Her letter concludes in these words: "After I had used the Syrup pairs for data. I fair a deal of the standard in all acceptances."

remedy and began taking it.

Her letter concludes in these words: "After I had used the Syrup only a few days I felt a decided improvement in all respects. My appetite revived, my food digested better, and soon the rash and humps entirely disappeared to return no more. I have since enjoyed the best of health. You are at liberty to make my statement public if you think it may be useful to others. (Signed) Mrs. Sarah Charleton, 27, John Street, Arthur's Hill, Newcastle, February 7th, 1893."

We congratulate this lady on her recovery and thank her for allowing us to publish the above details of her experience. The doctors called her ailment nettle rash, but it was more than that. Her blood was loaded with the poisonous acids generated by indigestion and dyspepsia—the same as the poisons of goat and of acute inflammatory rheumatism. The irritated nerves of the skin produced the rash, as the clogged pores were unable to excrete the poison. The purifying power of Seigel's Syrup expelled this poison through the kidneys and bowels, and by stimulating insensible perspiration over the whole surface of the skin.

Of this disease an English physician says: "When it becomes chronic all treatment except the one which cured Mrs. Charleton.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally ad-A mitted to be worth a Guinea a box, for Bihous and Netvous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Sto-mach, Sick, He idache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizzness and Drow-sness, Cold Chills, siness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortness of Breath, Costiveness,

Scury, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dieams and all Nervous and Siery, Figure Decaus and all Nerous and Trembing Sensation, &c. The first dose will give tellef in twenty minutes. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one hox of these Pills, and they will be ac-knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them carry off all humours, and bring about all that is required. No female should be without them. There is no medicine to be found equal to Berchants. Pills for removing any obstruction or aregularity of the system. If taken according to the directions given with each box, they will soom restore females of all ages to sound and tobust health. This has been proved by thousands who have tried them, and found the ands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use.

For a Weak Stomach, Impaned Digestion, and all Disorders of the Liver, they act like magn, a few doses will be found to work wonders on the most important organs in the human machine.

The Natives of India will find Beecham's The Natives of India will and recensive Pills, the finest mediane ever introduced to their notice, the European residents also will find them of great value for cooling the blood. For throwing off fevers and preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the preventing influence of the prevention mittions in hot climites, they stand without a fival.

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debi-litated as, BEECHAW's PILLS have the Largest Silvert and Patent Medicine in the sam lit

Beechara's Magic Cough Pills.

As trear dy for Congres in general, Asthma, Broncind Affections, Hoatseness, Shortness of Breath, Eightness and Omnession of the Chest, Wheezong, &c, these Pills stand annivilled. Let any person give Beech on's Couch Pills attrid, and the most violeent Cough will in a short time be removed.

Beechain's Tooth Paste

Will recommend uself being efficacious and economical; it is packed in neat airtight and economic if this parked in local analysis collapsable Unites.

NOTICE G Atherton & Co will forward on recent of setter, simples at the following ries: size o.12d, at 8 amous per lock; 1:1146 size 12 mais per lock, 2s, 9d size 2 topes per lock from Piste 12 amous per Tope, these collapsable posting which rates do not include the cost or postage which will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO.,

3, NEW CHINABAZAR STREET, CALCUTTA.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE:

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST: Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE, late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F H. SKRINE, I.C S., (Collector of Customs, Calcutta.)

The volume, uniform with Mookerpee's Travels and Porages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR.

DEDICATION , To Sir W. W. Hunter.) HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERIEE.

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.c.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.
LETIERS

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J C,
to Alkinson, the late Mr. E F. T., C S,
to Banerjee, Babn Jyotish Chunder
from Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Banerjee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.
to Charle, R. B. Bandou Ananda. to Charlejee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarkee, Mr. S. E. J.
from, to Colum, Sa Anckland.
to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of,
from Evans, the Hon'ble Sir Griffith H.P.
to Guguh, Babn Kesan Mohan. to Ghose, B. bun N. du Krissen.
to Ghose, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghose, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, B. bun K. du Prosanna.
to Ghosh, M. Panl, from Kanght, the late Mi Robert from Lundowne, the Muquis of,
to Lun, Kun Kristondas.
to Low, Kun Kristondas. to Low, Mi, Percy C.
to Muhomed, Monder Syed, to Mullik, Mr. H. C.
to Munston, Miss Ann,
from Meth, M. R. D.
to Mutston, Miss Ann,
from Moserjee, M. J. C.
from M. Ned, Professon H. (Sun Francisco) to, from Murshin thad, the Nawah Baht, dout of
from Niyuratna, Mihumuh qudhya M. C.
from Osbon, the late Calonel Robert D.

to, from Marshid bad, the Nawah Bahadou of from Osborn, the Lite Colonel Robert D. to Rao, Mr G Verkitt App.
to Rio, Mr G Verkitt App.
to Rio, the Lite So T. Madhaya. to Rittig on, St William H.
from Rischery, End of.
to, from Rouledge, Mr. James.
from Rissell, Str W. H. to Rey, Mr G Syanita to Susha, Beba Bahan unida, from Sucar, Dr. Milhenholal from Sincar, grow, Milhenholal from Sincare grow, Milhenholal
from Sincare grow, Milhenholal
from Sincare grow, Milhenholal
from Wallice, Sir Donidi Mickenze to Wind-Mason, the Lite Professor L

STERN'& TELEGRAWS) OF CONDOLINGE, from Abdus Subhan, Monlyo A. K. M.
Ameer Hossen, Homble Nivab Syed.
Ardagh, Coloned Su. J. C.
Bartly, M. A.
Betch mibers, Wr. R.

Banetjee, Ru Bahadur, Barth, M. A Betch unbers, Mr. R. Deb, Baba Mondau. Dut, Mr. O. C. Datt, Baba Prosaddoss, New Lord Eigin, Lord. Ghose, Babu Norend K.

Ghosh, Babu Kah Prasanna. Graham, Mr. William. Hall, Dr. Fuz Edward Hardas Vihandas Desai, the late Dewan. Hundus Viharidas Desai, the late Dewalver, Mr. A. Krishnaswami.
Lumbert, Su John.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitta, Mr. B. C.
Muter, Babu Sulbeshur
Mookerjee, Raju Peary Mohan.
Mookerjee, Babu Sunendia Nath.
Murshid ibad, the Navab Bahadoor of,
Routledge, Mr. James.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Roy, Babu Sai it Chunder.
Sany d, Babu Dinabundho.
Saviri Labrary
Tipper e, the Bua Thakur of Vombery, Professor Armunus, Vizi in gir in, the Maharaja of,
post SCRIFT POSTSCRIPT

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the dis-posal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders to be made to the Business Manager, "An Indan Journalist," at the Bee Press, t. Utkoor Dutt's Line, Wellington Street, Calcutta,

OPINION ON THE BOOK

It is a most interesting record or the life of a tenrolkable man -Mr H. Babington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October.

Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895.

Dr. Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and originality thout his correspondence which make it very interesting reading—Sir Alfred W. Corft, K.C.I.F., Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, 26th September, 1895.

It is not that a und the pressure of harassing official duties in English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so graceful a tribute to the memory of a native personality is F. H. Skirne has done in his hogisphy of the late Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, the well known Bengal poundist (Cilontia: Thacker, Spink and Co.); nor are there many who are in are worthy of being this honomed than the late Editor of Rev and Rayred.

We may at my rate corch dly agree with Mr. Skirne that the story of Mookerjee's life, with ill its light, and shadows, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

India
No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not record the Hindan Patrial, in its palmiest days

India

No weekly paper, Mr Skrine tells us, not even the Himbo Patriot, in its palmiest days under Kristodas Pal, edgeed a degree of influence in my way upto ching that which was sion attained by Reis and Rappet.

A man of Tage heart and great qualities, his death from premionic in the early spring in the Vistyeri was a distinct and heavy loss to Indian purindism, and it was an admirable decroid Mr Skrine's part to put his lafe and Letters upon record. The Pima of India, (Hombay) Systember 30, 1895.

It is a new that the ble of collidary pointal step heavy has worthly of public drong it is more tarry stuff that such a life comes to be written by an Anglo-Judian and a member of the Indian Craft Sarvie. Buy, if his come to pass that in the land of the Bragaic Bibis, the life of at least one man union Judian point distribution by an Englishman Fundabar Standard, (Madhas) September 33, 1895.

The Life Editor of Reis and Rappet was a

1895
The late Editor of Reis and Raryet was a profound study and retrieve was a profound study in the horse beft his mark on Todian journalism. In that he has found a Cretim like Mr. Skine to record the story of his life he is more fortunate than the great Kristodas Palhimself. The Tribune, (Lihore) October 2, Formuch of the hographical matter that issues so freely from the press in apology is needed. Had no hography of Dr. Mooko jee, the Editor of Reis and Rayret, appeared, an the Editor of Reis and Rayret, appeared, an expliciation would have been looked for. A man explication would have been looked for. A man of his remark tible person dity, who was easily first among native Lodian poroalists, and in many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at public affairs from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivious without some attempt to perpetuate his memory by the usual expedient of a "life." The difficulties common to all biographers have in this case been inof an hographers have a first case been in-creased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a differ-ent race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side or the learned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mooker-jee remained to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal biographer would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another onan as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written his life. his life.

his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly landatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dult page.

A few of the letters addressed to Di. Moo-keijes are of such minor importance that they might have been omitted with advantage, but might have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. To say that he writes idiomatic English is to say what is short of the tinth. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straightforward, without Oriental luxuriance or striving after effect. Peshaps he is never so charming as when he is laying down the laws of literary firm to young aspirants to fame. The letter on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piece of criticism: it is delicate plain-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult fert of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his aidour.

For much more that is well worth reading we

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrinsically it is a book worth buying and reading.

—The Pioneer, (Allahahad) Oct. 5, 1895.

The career of "An Indian Journalist" as described by F. H. Skime of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting.

Mookerjee's letters are marvels of pure diction which is heightened by his nervous style.

The life has been told by Mr. Skime in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those who are able to appreciate merly immarred by who are able to appreciate ment unmaried by ostentation and earnestness unspoiled by harshness.—The Muhammadan, (Midras) Oct.

5, 1895.
The work leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, impartiality, or highke portrayal of character. Mr. Skrine deals with his interesting subject with the nofating instinct of the biographer, Every side of Dr. Mookerjee's complex character is treated with sympathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skrine's narrative certainly impresses one with the individuality of a remarkable man. one with the individuality of a remarkable man. Mookenjee's own letters show that he had not only acquired a command of clear and flexible English but that he had also assumpted that timely undependence of thought and character which is supposed to be a peculiar research. and character which is supposed to be a peculiar possession of natives of Great Britain. His reading and the stores of his general information appear to have been, considering his opportunities, little less than marvellous.

One of the first to express his condolence with the family of the deceased writer was the present Viceroy, Lord Elgin. Mookerjee appears to have won the affection not only of the dignitariers with whom he came in control.

he dignitaries with whom he came in contact, the arguitaries with whom he came in contact, but also of those in low estate.

The impression left upon the mind upon laying down the book is that of a good and able man whose career has been graphically portrayed.—The Englishman, (Calcutta) October 15, 1805.

tober 15, 1895.

The career of an eminent Bengali editor. who died in 1894, throws a curious light upon the race elements and hereditary influences which affect the criticisms of Indian journalists on British rule. The "Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Moo-kerjee," a book just edited by a distinguished civilian in Calcutta, takes us behind the scenes of Indian journalism. daily at It is a narrative, written with insight and a Calcuta.

complete mastery of the facts, of how a clever youth gradually grew into one of the ablest leader-writers in Bengal, and still more gradually matured into one of the fairest-minded editors that western education in India has yet produced. If the training and experience which develop the journalist in England are sometimes varied, they seem in India to have sometimes varied, they seem in India to have an even wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how a great Bengah journalist is unde; is space for hids us to enter upon his actual performances. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much felicity of expression, in Mr. Skrine's admirable monograph. It is characteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skrine's belongs, that such a hook should clfaracteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skinne belongs, that such a book should have issued from its ranks. Dr. Mookeijee was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—" India has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed by young and vigorous communities, but present the and rocks and deserts of an effect sent the and rocks and deserts of an effete civilization, hardly stirred to a semblance of life by a foreign occupation dozing over its easily-gained advantages." This was true of the pre-Mutiny India of 1851. If it is no longer true of the Queen's India of 1895, we own it in no small measure to Indian journalists like Dr. Mookeijee who have laboured, anid some misrepresentation, to quicken the "semblance of life" into a living reality.—The Times, (London) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7. Guaranteed three Years.

Strong accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, nickel silvern, keyless, short winding, patent, "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-ED" watch, with band setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates. One witch free for the pirchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. × Dr. H. Moore of Royal Artillery from Poonamillee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16.× Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regit. from Dunidum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium Department says:—The watch you sent me some partment says :- The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Ro. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Solid Gold Watoh Ks. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-o.
Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-o. Mr. G. Smith, Silt Iuspector from Sankuta, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I vot Rs. 25: the second one I sold to a manny from Furnamar says:—For the first one I got Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28 × Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentlemen's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch. Res. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real sould gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L M. S. Homzopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street,

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIO PHARMACY.

36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fou Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Accoucheur, practises the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtainted a diploma at the final eximination of one of the Government medical Institutions of

SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Philhisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds. Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

every quarter.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas or 6 copies for a Rupee.

A Cheap Reserve for the Army By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Late Her Majesty's Service. Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, hat proved this to be a fact, and the result is tha a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and per manently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treat ment is sent on receipt of 21/2d stamp by A HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER AND

Remese of Politics, Laterature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION. If paid in advance.

rearly	•••	•••	•••	Ks.	12
Half-yearl	y	•••	•••	,,	7
Quarterly		•••	•••	,,	4
Montnly		•••	•••	Ke.	1-8
single or s	ample	Copy	•••	Ans.	0-8
	If no	t paid in	advance,
Yearly	•••	٠	•••	Rs.	31

Half-yearly ... Quarterly ... ••• ••• Monthly ... 2-4
Single or sample Copy ... Ans. ... J.
No additional charge for postage or peon. Ans. 112

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

KATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines of 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a time or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. Fie lowest carage for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I, Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

DROIT ET AVANT

ල PEASANTI WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW O F POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 703.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SUNYASSEE. BY JAMES HUTCHINSON. (Concluded from $ 555.)
CANTO THIRD.

XIV.

My journeyings, it were vain, to tell, Or where they led, or what befell; I've watched the Ganges' infant flow, Where Koosh is clad, in encless snow, * Aye I trod the Caspian's tideless shore. And heard the Euxine's breakers roar ; + I've bowed me, in Ellora's cave, And prayed, above a Moslem's grave ; I For sure, the semblance of a shrine Must, ever, wake some thoughts divine; If pure the heart, what recks the spot? There is no place,-where God is not !

I boast not of my wanderings past, And, now, the present seems the last. A native of my loved Behar, Where the sun shines, with genial beam, Why did I seek thy wilds, Cachar ! Or the marshes of the Soormah's stream ? § Stranger ! thou seest these wooded heights, And you thatched shed, amid the waste? 'Twas there, for thirty days, and nights, I dwelt, in vigil, and in fast-A mighty spirit slumbers there, Who spent a tedious life, in prayer, And, ever, since he died,

They say, that from the mountain's side, Sweet Uttur hath been seen, to flow, In you small well, below. * Aye I they may doubt; but this I know, I saw the Tiger, round me, prowl, I heard the Wolves around me howl; And, yet, they had no power to harm, For I was girt, as by a charm. Oft, as their footsteps nearer closed, Some unseen power, still, interposed, I scarce knew how ; 'tis true, men say, That o'er the good, these have no sway ; But even, if, for the guilty, sent, + I scarce could deem me innocent : Even so ; tho' these have missed their prey, Disease, as fell, hath found its way.

YVI

· 'Tis destiny, thus urges on, When, most, we deem the act our own; Leads us unconscious to our fate, Nor shows the gulf, till all too late : Yet deem not stranger, that I fear, Altho' perhaps, my end be near ; Oh! I have often prayed, for death, As eagerly, as some for life; Aye I thought to rid me of my breath, When weary of this mortal strife. Tis true, that, even for the brave, Some terrors, still, that change must have : Yet deem not thence, that I would buy A respite, for a single day; With none to share it with, -as now, What were a crown, upon my brow? For what, then, should I pray, in vain? To bear my miseries, again? Drag on, in pain, a few brief years, And, at the thought of sufferings past, Moisten the dull earth, with my tears, Which must receive my dust,-at last?

The coward part was never mine, To rail, at fortune, or repine ;

† It is said, that these indomitable fanatics and wanderers, in their roamings, sometimes go as far, as the limits here indicated.

† For an account of these magnificent temples or excavations, see Captain Seeley's Wonders of Ellora.

Captain Seeley's Wouders of Ellora.

The Hindoos and Moosulinans are now to a certain extent tolerant; they mutually pay some degree of respect to each other's festivals, and they have, in like manner, in some measure adopted the customs of each other. The Hindoos now seclude their women, almost as much as-the Moohumundans; on the other hand, no widow of the latter fasth now thinks of taking a second husband although the prophet of Mecca himself married the widow Ayesha.

§ Behar was one of the Soubahs or Soubahdarees of the Mogul empire. It is a rich, and extensive province, situated about the middle of Gangetic India. By the natives, its climate is considered neither very hot, nor cold; it is as healthy for them, as almost any other portion of India. The real capital of the province is the overgrown city of Patna; this however constitutes a separate jurisdiction of itself, and Gyah is now the provincial capital of the district of Behar.

The valley of Cachar is situated, on our eastern frontier, between Sylhet and Munnipore; the Soormah or Barak river runs through the middle of the valley, which is marshy, and the climate moist and insalabrious, in the extreme, to the natives of Hindoosthan; although it is not so, to Europeans.

*The locality, here indicated, is situated among the wooded heights on the left bank of one of the feeders of the Soormah or Barak, about three miles above the village of Panchgong, in Cachar. The fakeers there show a small phial, which, they say, contains uttur, which has been skimmed off, from a small well, which they point out. If not some priestly imposition, the pretended uttur is probably nothing else than a little naphtha, or petroleum. In the Buimese empire, which than a little naphtha, or petroleum. In the Buimese empire, which lies to the eastward of Cachar, it is wel known, that the greater portion of the petroleum of commerce is found.

† Tigers abound in Cachar, and are exceedingly destructive, both to man and beast. The natives of the place entertain a belief, similar to that mentioned in the text, an opinion, which probably forms no inconsiderable portion of the basis of the moral code of that simple people.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

^{*}The Koosh of the Hindoos in the Caucasus of the western

Yet judge, if I have had my share Of earthy griefs, and woes, to bear. Ah 1 Lilloo, little did we deem, The pleasures of that fleeting dream Would fade away, so soon; Aye ! fade, ere it were noon ; And leave, behind, a track of years Blasted; tho' watered, by my tears; Fatal the hour, thou heards't my suit ; More deadly, still, hath been the fruit; What I am now, is quickly seen; But none know what, I might have been. Ah! Lilloo couldst thou see me, now, The daggled locks, upon my brow, My sunken eye, and quivering frame, Thou couldst not deem, I were the same ; Thou couldst not guess this haggard shade, To be the wreck, -which thou hast made! I wrong her, Stranger ! for the guilt, And deep the guilt, was mine alone ; By me 'twas, that her blood was spilt, By me, that deed of darkness done. XVIII.

My soul is fluttering, in my breast,
As it would fly,—or be at rest;
My reason wanders, thou mayst see,
And C shall, soon, have ceased to be.
No Lilloo! if even now the cup
Of happiness were offered up,
Aye! fauly, freely, proffered forth,
O'eiflowing, to my burning lip,
As freely, would I dash, to earth,
The charmed draught, if it should be Linked, with forgetfulness of thee;
If only for the hour, which death
May spare me, yet, this fleeting breath.

Our thousand gods, alas I have given No promise of an after heaven;* I ask it not ; my sole request Is rest-for-ever welcome, rest; But, when I think of thee, my love ! I own, my thoughts, oft, point above. I envy not, the Moor, his toys, His Houses, and his promised joys ; Tho' every tongue should whisper rest, They could not full my troubled breast, And tuneless, were the sweetest song, Unless, from thme own silver tongue. To some, perhaps, these joys were fair, I prize them not ;-nor seek to share ; Without thee,-they were idle all, A gilded show, that soon would pall. XX.

But, if the Christian's hope be true
Of after life, Oh! it were sweet,
To think, that we again might meet,
With pure, and spotless hearts, anew,
And love, without its guilt, renew;
If I could deem that promise sure,
What penance would I not endure;
And yet, they say, it needs it not,
If, with a contrite spirit, sought;
Their tale seems strange, and stranger still,
One God should rule, with uncheck'd will;
Yet, I have tried its truth to scan,
And still, methinks, there is but ONE;

But true or false, 'tis now too late
To struggle, with a wayward fate;
Yet! happy they, who hold a creed,
Can cheer the heart, in day of need,
Oh! it were much, to know that bliss,
If only, in an hour, like this;
Tho' now, with scarce that space to live,
My hoarded thousands! would give;
If, but to hope, that I, once more,
Might meet thee,—on their promised snore.

XXL

Even now, as thro' a misty cloud, I saw her, in her dripping shroud; And often, thus, her form appears, As, when emerging from the deep, Her eyelids closed, as if in sleep, Yet drooping, as with unshed tears!

LAMENT.

YES I she is dead, who lived for me, Tho' sweet the smile, that lingers yet, So like—her own, it well might be, But yet, for hers,—how fixed, and set.

Yes! death is here,—her raven hair Is lifeless all, about her brow, And that was eloqueut, and fair, As marble pale,—'us colder now.

Her eyes are closed, as if in sleep, Their funges curtain all, below, Their lids but droop,—as if to weep, In pity, at some dieam of woe.

Oh! lift them not,—in mercy, spare
My breaking heart, the dreadful sight;
The soul, the spirit, is not there,
That beamed, that sparkled, in their light.

But she is gone; what do I here?
The sun, that warmed my lonely breast,
Hath set,—nor left a ray to cheer;
'Tis time,—that I should be at rest.

And then, away, her shade will glide, Or pause, as now, and seem to chide, And beckon me, with outstretched hand, To follow, to some dreaming land. Nay! doubt me not;—I come! I come! To seek thee, even beyond the tomb.

XXII.

Haste, Stranger! to Bood'h-Gyah's pile, And there, within the convent aisle, My wealth is hid, an ample store, Go, give it, to the poor;—*
Howe'er men doubt of caste, and creed, There's none will blane the pious deed, That stills the hapless captive's moan, Or soothes the dying wietch's groan,

Then give it to the poor!
"Tis strange! this hour, or feared, or dared
Should ever find us, unprepared,
And I could wish, some farther space
Had yet be given me, to retrace
The darker portions of my fate;
But that, thou seest, is now too late;
And, if I am not, what I ought,
Be theirs the blame, whose malice sought

^{*} The Hindoos believe, in the transmigration of the soul, and as this, according to their belief, will have to pass through an indefinite number of terrestrial forms, and transmutations, before it has arrived at such a degree of perfection and purity, as to be incorporated, or associated with the Godhead, their religion fails to inspire the mind, at the hour of death with any degree of comfort or confidence. To this, the text must be understood to allude.

^{*} From this, it would appear, that the Sunnyassee never did belong to the monastery at Bood?n.Gyah, but that he was merely a noviciate, as it were. When a man becomes a Hindoo ascetic, all ties of consangumity are broken, and cease to operate; at first he is a Chelah or disciple himself, and as such inherits from his teacher or superior; in the course of time, he comes to have his own chelahs or disciples, and whatever wealth he may acquire, and leave, is inherited by them.

To deem, the furrow, on my brow,
Was ploughed by guilt, and not by woe.
Their tale was false;—but that they knew
It was enough,— hey wished it true;
And they may said, my name assaid,
What heeds it me,—yes at were well,
Another time, to be more kind,
Another time, to be less blind,
Nor drive a brother to offend,
They scarce would seem to wish to mend.

XXIII

This wreck of passion, grief, and care, Is scarcely fit a thought to share; Yet once, it was my wish, and hope To sleep, upon the far hill-top, That looks ne'r Chirkee's well-known plam, * And o'er Bood'h-Gyah's tich domain; But here!—that last delusion ends;—Then give my ashies to the winds; Then none will say, with jocind tread, Here sleeps, he, or here tests the dead. Unthinking fool! a few years must, Lay him too, with th' oblivious dust.

He passed away, nor left a trace Of kindred, lineage, or of race, And we will hope, that rest may gain, He sought, so long, on earth, in vain.

WEEKLYANA.

DR. Fitzedward Hall again writes regarding "An Indian Journalist:—
"It is to Reis and Rayyet that I am chiefly indebted, now-a-days, for my information regarding what is going on in Bengal. I always look forward to its arrival, and my interest in it, keen hitherto, will in future be more so, now that I know the share you have in its conspicuously able management.

That justice has been done, and through a medium wholly unprecedented, to the memory of the lamented Dr. Mookeijee, is, for India, a most auspicious sign of the times. A generation ago nothing like it could have been looked for. Talent, however great, if independence had been conjoined with it, would then have counted for nothing."

ANOTHER English notice of the book :---

"Mr. F. H. Skiine has rendered a friendly service to the memory of Dr. Sambhu Ch. Mookerjee by bringing out his 'life, letters, and correspondence' under the title of 'An Indian Journalist,' Dr. Mookeriee was of pure Brahman stock, being a lineal descendant, in the thirty-fourth generation, from the celebrated poet Suharsha, author of the Sanskrit epic Nushadhacarna. In spite of a strangely chequered career which began with his school days and continued for many years while he was on the staff of the 'Hindoo Patriot' and other papers, and made a name as a reviewer, till he started, in 1882, 'Reis and Rayyer,' a weekly paper devoted to politics, literature and social questions, which has maintained to the end of his life-and we may add, is maintaining under the able editorship of his successur-a general reputation for literary finish, breadth of view, and impartiality. In the editorial chair of this paper he found full scope for the utilisation of his extensive acquaintance with English and Indian literature, his dry humour, his sober judgment. Though a staunch Hindu, he kept himself free from social prejudices, he was allied in close friendship with the late Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur, and on terms of intimacy with many English gentlemen of influence. What impresses the reader of the correspondence most favourably is the high appreciation in which Dr. Mookerjee appears to have been held by all with whom he was brought in contact. Books like this, will go far in breaking down the social bitties still existing between the Hindus and the dominant race."—Lux & Oriental List, Vol. vi., Nos. 10 and 11, Oct.-Nov., 1895.

THE National Hungarian Millentum Exhibition to be held at Budapest between May and October, 1896, is thus announced in the Gazette of India:

"THE NATIONAL HUNGARIAN MILLENIUM EXHIBITION,
Historical Exhibition Exhibition of Works of Art. Ethnographical Exhibition Exposition of Military Concerns, Land-Produce, Industry and Commerce, Good Railway Connections, Authorised Office for Providing Apartments."

GOLD has been found in German Africa. A German geologist has traced an auriferous quartz teef four miles in length, forty miles to the west of Tanga.

AFTER bitter experience, China has awakened to modern civilization. An imperial edict orders the construction of a double line of railway from Pekin to Tientsin, at an estimated cost of three million taels.

SIR Donald Stewart has been given a fresh term on the India Council. A special telegram in the Englishman reports that Sr Charles Elliott will likely be admitted to sthat Council in view of possible reforms in the Land Revenue Settlement.

THE Governor-General in Council has exempted all spirit imported into British India, which has been rendered effectually and permanently unfit for human consumption, from the whole of the Customs duty in excess of 5 per cent. ad valorem leviable thereon on importation into British India.

DELAY is not always dangerous. It may prove an advantage. The Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, on the unanimous verdict of the jury, sentenced three persons, out of four, to capital punishment for dacoity attended with murder of one Hukha Varshang committed in December 1893. In August last, the Bombay High Court confirmed the sentence. The prisoners next petitioned the Local Government, which declined to interfere, and the execution was fixed for the 22nd of August. It was then urged that certain important evidence was not admitted at the trial. The day of execution was postponed. A long correspondence begin ending with a reference by the Bombay Government to the Government of Iudia. The Bombay Government has now decided that, owing to the delay in carrying out the sevetence of death, it should be committed to one of transportation for life.

THE Legal Practitioners' Bill had the earliest and earnest support of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Puoj b. The Lahore Chief Court Bar also recorded a resolution suggesting its extension to all classes of legal practitioners. Echoing the cry from other parts of India, that Bar Association has just rescanded its former recommendation and has Resolved that, as past legislation had been a failure, and the proposals of the Bill offer no hope of succeeding in their object, the Act should be repeated altogether, and that it should be left to the different bodies of legal practitioners to manage their own affairs, as in England. It was, we believe, the Lahore advocates, who, a year before the Act was passed, had agreed among themselves not to employ or encourage touts, and found it advantageous in that their income was doubled. An accession of new blood disturbed the arrangement and law brokers began to flourish when the Act was passed to make them law breakers.

THE Registrar, Calcutta University, notifies that candidates intending to apply for the privileges of affiliation to the University of Cambridge are required to submit their certificates of having passed the F. A. or the B. A. Examination to him, so that the language or languages in which they have passed may be endorsed on such certificates.

THE date for admission to the Apprentice Department of the Civil Engineering College, Sibput, is the 3rd of February, 1896.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no matter how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Ear-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

^{*} Chirkee is a very small village, situated half-way, between Sherghortee and Gyah; about a mile to the west of it, there is a rugged circular hill, that rises shruptly from the plain. It is covered with brushwood, and has altogether a very picturesque appearance. This hill is seen from a considerable distance, all around, and is probably the one alluded to; I am thus particular, in case the inhabitants of the sacred city should hereafter wish to raise a pillar or obelisk, on the site indicated, to the memory of the Sunyassee.

AT the instance of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, the Lieutenant-Governor has appointed a Labour Enquiry Commission, with H. C. Williams, Esq., C. S., as President, the members being Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonel D. W. D. Comins, Inspector-General of Jails, Lower Provinces, W. B. Gladstone, Esq., nominated by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, H. C. Begg, Esq., nominated by the Indian Tea Association, C. W. Gray, Esq., nominated by the Indian Mining Association, and Kumar Dakineswar Malia.

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS,

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

ALL the Ambassadors, also the Turks, it ts said, generally approve of Sir Philip Currie's action in receiving Said Pasha at the British Embassy. The Sultan sent different Ministers and his Private Secretary to try and induce Said Pasha to quit the British Embassy, promising immunity from any harm. He, however, stoutly and repeatedly refused to comply, and Sir Philip Currie likewise declined to persuade him. Her Majesty's despatch vessels Cockatrice and Imogene, lying in the Bosphorus, were surrounded by Turkish Police boats all Thursday night, fearing that Said Pasha would attempt to take refuge on board. The bonts were withdrawn at daylight, Sir Philip Currie has protested against the proceeding. M. Nelidoff, the Russian Ambassador, had an audience of the Sultan on Dec. 8, and presented a letter from the Czar. A change in the Turkish Ministry is expected, and Said Pasha, the ex-Foreign Minister, who is known as a Kurd, will, it is stated, be Grand Vizier. Next day, Said Pasha return ed home. Before leaving the English Embassy, he wrote to Sir Philip Currie, stating that, owing to his being so repeatedly urged by the Sultan, he was obliged to abandon his intention of going abroad to recruit his health, and return home to prove his appreciation of the Sultan's assurances that he continued in his Majesty's favour. He states, however, that his health will not permit of his resuming office. After bitter, reluctant delays an Imperial irade has been issued by the Sultan, authorising the extra guardships of the Powers, It appears that the Russian Ambassador appealed to the Sultan to avert an ultimatum from the Powers. His Majesty yielded, The British and Italian extra guardships passed the Dardanelles on Dec. 12. for Constantinople.

THE chiefs of the insurgent bands at Zeitun are declared to be Russian Armenians. The United States Government has demanded the punishment of the officer who fulled to protect the American missionaries in the outbreak at Marash, and also of the Turkish soldiers who were guilty of pillaging the mission station.

REPORTS received from many sources in Armenia state that utter desolation exists there, and that thousands are homeless and perishing of cold and starvation.

LORD Salisbury's despatch regarding the Venezuela dispute has been received at Washington. In it he maintains the Schomburgh bound my as the minimum of the territory of British Guiana. The ultimatum from the British Government to Venezuela has been finally delivered through the German Minister.

THE select Battalion, to which Prince Henry of Battenberg has been attached, left the Albert Docks on the 7th for Ashanti. The Duke of Connaught, commanding at Aldershot, reviewed the Battalion at Aldershot before they started.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Full purticulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before he public. A litess, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westmipister, London, S. W.

THE death is announced of Mr. George Augustus Sala, the famous journalist and one of the masters of the English language. He has not survived long his late sad experiences.

THE Times, in an article on the cotton duties, concludes that India has a strong case which has brought conviction to the best men of both parties, and that it will be very difficult for Lancashire to shake that conviction. Lord George Hamilton received the Manchester deputation on Wednesday. In reply, he said that the present amtagonism of interests was a danger to the unity of the Empire. Indian finance, he said, had slightly improved during the year, and he sincerely hoped that it would continue to improve, and thus permit of the remission of the cotton duties. He assured the deputation that their grievance would be the first for removal if the finances improved, and said that it was not advisable to give a final answer until he was prepared to act, and he was bound to allow Bombay its full say, and give fair play to both sides. He promised to submit the views of the deputation to the Indian Government, and would ask them to accelerate their reply.

MAJOR Toselli, with 1,200 Native troops and 20 Italian officers, was surprised and surrounded by Menelek's army, numbering 20,000 at Ambagali. General Arimondi, while advancing to relieve Major Toselli, was forced to retreat to Makalle, after a battle in which Menelek lost heavily. Three of Major Tosellis officers and 300 men joined General Arimondi. Seventeen Italian officers and forty non-commissioned officers besides a Mountain Battery with Major Toselli are supposed to have been massacred. The Italian Government has ordered the despatch of reinforcements numbering four thousand men from Naples. It has every confidence in General Barateri, and the Italian positions, notably at Makalle; are strongly fortified and victualled in case of a siege. The fighting was desperate and lasted for six hours, the Italians being eventually crushed by vastly superior numbers. Two or three thousand Shoans were killed. The latest report is that Major Toselli was killed at the beginning of the battle, and that the Shoans murdered many wounded Italians. The Italian forces have evacuated Adowa and are centering upon Adigrat. where preparations are being made to resist the Shoans, who number about thirty five thousand. The defence made by Major Toselli was most heroic. When all was lost, though the numbers against him were overwhelming, he valuantly led the final charge, thus enabling the remnants of his force to escape and join General Arimondi's force, which merely checked the advance of the Shoans without fighting. Upwards of two thousand Native troops fell at Ambagali. Three Italian Battalions and a quantity of materiel leave for Massowah on the 17th instant and two Battalions on the 27th instant. The Italian Budget Committee have approved an extra grant of four million lire for military expenses in Abyssinia.

DURING a debate in the French Chamber of Deputies, M. Paul Guieysse, Colonial Minister, said that the policy of France had emerged from the period of the offensive and had entered a peaceful phase. The Government, he added, would not seek to extend the dominions of the Republic. Does he mean what he says?

PRINCE Hohenlohe, speaking in the German Reichstag, said that Government was resolved to enforce the laws against the Socialists with the strongest measures.

THE Blackburn operatives have resolved to appeal to the Lancashue members of Parliament to demand the instant repeal of the Cotton Duties, owing to the fact that thousands of looms are idle.

THE Queen has taken the hotel at Cimiez, near Nice, which she occupied last season.

ADVICES from Madagascur state that a mob of six thousand has destroyed the British Mission at Remain ando. The Rev. Macmahon, the Missionary, and his family efficted their escape. The French troops have started to quell the disturbance, and all Europeans in the country have been ordered to Antananaivo.

THE Viceroy arrived at Calcutta yesterday, landing at Prinsep's Guat, Lord Elgin will hold his Levée on the 16th. Next day, he will unveil the statue of Sir Steuart Bayley, Kabiraj Ganga Perser Saris dead Burnan 1823, in a village near Vikiampore, District Dioca, he breached his list on Monday, December 9 at Caloutti, on the banks of the sacred Briggiath. At an early age, after his investime with the second thread, (1911) Vedya carries a sacred threat like a Brithmin), he studied Sinskitt Grammar and interature, at Sonarang in Vikrampore, sitting at the feet of the fe and Pundit Kund Soroman. The latter had a large number of disciples to teach and feed. His income was extremely limited, and each disciple had to be one ent with only haif, and, sometimes even quarter rations. Ganga Persaid studied the Ayniveda under the futton of his father, the celebrated Nilsonbar Sen who in his day was the foremost of Kabusques at Calcutti. The Kabusque practice in former times was hampered by many serious obstacles, chief amongst which was the absence of ready made medicines, especially, the costlier ones, for immediate use. The custom was to prepare the required medicine after the physician had been called in. The preparation often took many days, so that the patient sometimes succumbed to the disease before the physician could render him any help. Gang i Prasad's father, Nilambar, resolved to keep in hand a good stock of Ayurvedic medicines. He had to incur a large pecunitry outly, but his forethought was soon crowned with the best results to both himself and his patients. His practice rose by leaps and bounds, till be topped all the Kabirajes of Calcutta. Large as his earnings were, he spent freely in charity, so that his popularity knew no bounds. Ganga Prasad commenced practice when he was 22 years of age. At first he was only his fither's assistant. The venerable Nil unbar, however, soon died, leaving no money to his son. The latter had to push his way through the world. The European system of cure was then highly popular. Kibn iji nid lost ground before its formidable rival Ganga Prasad, however, knew the value of his art and had great self. reliance. Silently but surely his practice and popularity extended-Within a very few years he succeeded in coming to the front rank of Ayuvedic practitioners. Following the example set by his father, he invested his savings in manufacturing such medicines and medicinal oils as are 'frequently in requisition. His medicinal oils proved an mexhaustible mine of wealth. His success also in the cure of disease was remarkable.

Ganga Prasad was a rigid Hindu, He resembled his father in charity. He had a large number of pupils to keep. His benefactions to learned Brahmans on all ceremonial occasions were very large. He carefully excluded those that are stained by accepting the gifts of excasted families of wealth. During the prosecution of the Bangabashi, he readily came forward as security for the accused in a heavy sum, after almost every one among the Garbhadhanist Rajahs and Rijahings, so foud in their demunctation of the Consent Bill, had dexterously refused the poyer of the poor fellows about to be dragged to Hajat. The may discovered his medie by that one step. He had the courage of his convictions. He has left a large fortune to his heirs, and in my legacies to kinsmen. Altogether, his death is a loss, almost irreparable, to the cause of the Ayurvedic method of cure.

THE death of M. Bathelemy St. I. lure is a distinct loss to the learned world. Both as a classical scholar and Ocientalist he was in the front rank and enjoyed a word wide reputation. If a literary fame eclipsed that of his political a aiving of early years. He edited the Journal des Savants for many years with distinguished ability. His first great work on Sankhy's phi osophy established his fame as an Orientalist on a solid foundation. It excited the admiration of the great German Pandits. His greatest work-a complete translation into French of Aristotle's volumnasus remains-was concluded by his "Problemes d'Aristote" in two volumes. It is a marvel of accurate learning and patience. Begun in 1832, the translation was finished in 1891. It would seem that he had been spared by his Maker for completing his great task, for he lived to a good old age. His concluding volumes on Aristotle are, perhaps, a master-piece. The authenticity of the Problems had been doubted by some scholars. M. St. Hilaire, in a grand dissertation, critically examined the evidence bearing on the subject, and showed that the doubt had no ground to stand upon. No one had studied the works of the Stagirite with greater care than he. His opinion, therefore, on the question of the genuineness of the Problems is entitled to the highest respect. The I tional machinery provided by the British Government. The supremacy word problems, as used by Aristotle, means questions and answers out forward for discussion and solution. They are in the form of questions and answers. The 38 sections of the collection include atogetace $55 questions relating to all sorts of subjects, meay of them extremely in oute and curious. The titles of some of our sections will give a general idea of the character of the marters dealt with, Moderd questions, relating generally to diseases; on sweat, wine and drinking, fatigue, sympathy, shivering, the voice; good and bid smells; Temperature; Muhemitics, Astronomy; Animite and Inanimate things; Purlosophy; musical Hirmony; Selewater; mineral witers; air; the wind; Fear and Conrage; Temperance; Justice; Intelligence; the Eyes; the Eyes; the Nise; the Mouth; Touch; the Face; Colours; these form the topics of this great work. The speculations, in some ins ances, coincide wonderfully with the discoveries of modern science. Here is a book which, if translated into Bengali, is sure to be devoured by Bengali readers in coasequence of many points of resemblance with the surmises of the R shis of ancient India.

M. St. Hilling took an active interest in the English translation of the Mahabharata published by Pratapa Chundra Roy. It was through his influence and recommendation that the French Government went out of its way for subsidizing that work, disregarding its sereal character and, therefore, its incompleteness at the time of the grant, and also its price of publication, vis., a foreign country. Although a labourer in the field of ancient Indian literature, M. St. Hilane was not indifferent to the currents of modern thought in this country. He had a poor opinion of the work of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. He did not live to review the grand poem in Suiskiit of Pandit Rim Nath Tarkaratua in the Journal des Savants, but in a private letter to the English translator of the Mahabharata he expressed his admiration for the genius the of Pandit and his marvellous command of the dead topque of the Rishis.

THE following extract from Harpers Monthly Magazine will be read with interest in this country as affinding a fair idea of the general ignorance of India under which a considerable portion of the British public still labours.

"With the spread of education among subordinate castes, the supremery of the Brahmin, and the exclusive monoply in matters intellected which he formerly enjoyed, are rapidly waning. The class which seems to have in de the most apital out of the new order of things is the somewhat loosely defined, but widely distributed, portion of the Hindu population, known as Bengalis or Babus. When they are conservative enough to cling to the primitive costume of their forefathers, which was evidently not designed to foster the vice of vanity among its weariers, there is little difficulty in distinguishing them from other subjects of the Queen-Eupress. These orthodox Babus wear nothing on their heads to cover their close-cropped stocks of black hair, although they usually carry a white cotton unbrells; their principal although they usually carry a white cotton umbrella; their principal garment is along piece of white dispery, called a dhott, leaving their runs and legs bue, and won something after the fashion of a Roman tiga. Other characteristic features of their costume are the low patenttoga. Other characteristic returns of their costinuate the two patents thereby, and white socks which have a tendency to hing down, leaving visible, large surfaces of fat brown sharks, as these people are meaned to be of fiel, and portly hight. Goldstimmed spectacles often add a too hof modern 'actuality' to this somewhat archaic costinue.

There is a prevident before mong the more progressive mimbers of this class, that a European costinue, or which single common, a sort of compromise between the dress of the undisguised Babbi and the compromise between the dress of the undisguised Bibn and the Englishman, is the first step in the direction of worldly success. As a recent crine remarks, 'In as small constreas getting off a train-car, I have repeatedly observed that Bibns in coats and trousers risk their lives in a flying leap, while others in dhoft and have feet insist on the critistoping before they trust their prections persons to the ground.' Whatever may be his dies, he runs no task of being mistaken for a member of any of the military castes, and in case of war it would not hilly never occur to the ruling powers to raise an army from among this industrious and profife section of the community. But in a competity where everything has been specialised from the very beginning, no one seems to respect this class the less in account of its pacific disposition. And yet some of their bandis, with a historic name, lately remarked, 'You can no more make a gentleman out of a Bengali thin caive a fine image out of ratten wood.' And as a general thing the Bengui will tely more on the world of an Englishian in than on than carve a fine image out of rotten wood. And as a general thing the Beng tit will rely more on the word of an Englishman than on that of his fellow-countrymen. But, on the other hand, it cannot be denied that these people represent much of the brain and intelligence of native Ludia. They edit papers and are born agitators, criticising the policy of the Government, and saying whatever it pleases them to think upon political matters in their societies as well as in their journals, for they are usually endowed with the gift of volubility and rapid interince and freely express their minds in 'high falutins' and more or less Shakespearian English."

There is no egregious mistake in the statement that the supremacy of the Brahman and his monopoly in matters intellectual are rapidly waning, for others than Brahmans are availing themselves of the educaof the Brahman, however, as Brahman,-that is, irrespective of his intellectual acquisitions and piety,-is not yet a thing of the past. The Brahman, if only he happens to be a decent individual, still receives the bow of worship from every Kshatriya or Vaisya or Sudra that has not broken with his caste or religion. The Brahman's feet are still touched with reverence on every ceremonial occasion. Those among the Brahmans that are engaged in the pursuit of the ancient learning of their country, still receive gifts of honour, as their sires and grandsires before them did, on occasions of religious rites. They are still the spiritual guides and preceptors of the people. Some more centuries will have to elapse before the Brahman ceases to be honoured in India by the individuals of the other orders among Hindus. From the manner, again, in which the writer speaks of "the somewhat loosely defined but widely distributed portion of the Hindu population known as Bengalis or Babus" that are making "the most capital out of the new order of things," it is plain that he will be filled with surprise when he learns that the Bengalis or Babus include a large number of Brahmans; that Bengal is only a geographical division of India, having proper boundaries; that the word Bengali implies a racia; and not a caste distinction. The dilettantes and back writers in the press who take upon themselves to instruct the British public in matters Indian, have yet to learn the very alphabet of Indian ethnology, caste, and even geography. With these writers the Bengah is always a butt of ridicule, and whole columns of maccuracies are poured on his devoted head to excite merriment at his expense. Living as the Bengali does in a hot climate, he cannot cover himself with cloth as thick as is worn by the people of colder climes. His ideas of decency, again, are different from those of other people. His durbar dress, however, is perfectly unobjectionable. That he is not enrolled in the army can scarcely be his fault, considering how the Government has repeatedly disallowed his prayer for entering the army as a career. Every Bengali cannot fight, even as every. Englishman cannot shoulder the musket or manage the steed-Macaulay himself could not ride or manage a pony. It is, however, not true that there are no Bengalis who can fight. There are entire castes in Bengal which can formish excellent materials for regiments capable of standing side by side with the bravest troops of the world. Can the writer name the Pundit to whom he refers as his authority for his libel on the Bengali character? He is probably none else than the renowned Ramghose Mookerjee whom this instructor of the British public had met with in a Railway train if he had ever been to India or with whom some friend of his has possibly exchanged a letter or two. It is very much to be deploted that such malicious caricatures are regarded by the conductors of English newspapers and periodicals worthy of their columns or pages. The mischief already caused by ignorance and malice is very great. The Indian press should never lose the opportunity of setting the British public right by exposing all mischievous detractors.

REIS & R.IYYET.

Saturday, December 14. 1895.

LORD ELGIN ON ADDRESSES.

In reply to an address of welcome presented to him at Beneras, Sir A P. MacDonnell is credited with having said,-" My reason in taking a tour through the districts is not personal gratification, but the desire to bring myself into touch with the officers, public bodies, and privite individuals who make up the State organisation." Although these words embody an obvious truth, yet the necessity for their utterance will be admitted by those who have carefully read Lord Elgin's Poona speech. If Lord Elgin's view be correct of what the contents should be of addresses of welcome presented to high officers of State, the utility of official tours upon which so much stress is laid in this country would seem to disappear. The fruits are already being reaped of the Poona deliverance. The Mahajan Sabha of Madras desired to present an address of welcome to the Viceroy. The draft was submitted to the local Government which took objection to the paragraphs referring to the increase of military expenditure at a time of financial embarrassment caused by the ever-increasing loss by exchange, the retention of Chitral, the adoption of a severe policy towards the agricultural classes by reviving settlement operations with, as it would seem, the pre-determined object of increasing the revenue from land, and the interested agitation in England for the repeal of the cotton duties. The address urged the desirability of economy, so that the savings effected might be devoted to the relief of the tax-payer " or in feeding the departments directly beneficial to the public, such as Public Works, Education, Sanitation, etc., or in carrying out those urgent administrative reforms for which the public have been some years clamouring, such as the separation of judicial and executive func-tions." The Madras Government decided that unless these references were omitted, the address could not be allowed to be presented. The Mahajan Sabha held a meeting and resolved that, under the cir-cumstances, no address should be presented, for the suppression of the paragraphs would materially detract from the value of the document. From his point of view Lord Elgin might be pleased to direct that addresses of welcome should not be converted into instruments for challenging the general policy of Government, but the question is of what value would such occasions be if the privilege be taken away from the people of laying their grievances at the feet of authority? Of what value would their tours be if officials were to close their ears against all complaints and hear nothing but the praises of the administration? Asiatic monarchs and even Subordinate Chiefs have their paid bords and encomiasts for loudly proclaiming their virtues not only on all ceremonial occasions but also within the inner apartments of their palaces and mansions for awaking them from their slumbers. However agreeable the voice of praise, the listeners never expect other throats to utter it. They never hope for eulogies save from those whose vocation it is to eulogise. The difference, however, is very great between Asiatic despotism or weakness and European statesmanship based on superior culture. Despising the encomiums prompted by interest or pusillanimity, statesmen should read their history in a nation's eyes. A large quantity of eye-wash is used by subordinate officials for tricking superiors into an impression of general prosperity when the fact is otherwise. The opportunities in India are very rare, for those engaged in the task of ruling, of learning anything directly from the lips of the ruled. From their very nature, the addresses of public bodies are drafted with great reserve. Their tone is always respectful. Factionsness is rigidly avoided. To discourage even such expressions of opinion implies an impatience of criticism that is incompatible with liberal statesmuship. If the policy criticised really admits of justification, officials should welcome

The Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science. 210, Bow-Boar Street, Calcutta. (Session 1895-96.)

(Session 1895-96.)

Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lai Sircar, on Sunday, the 15th Inst., at 5 P.M. Subject: Gravanometers. Action of currents upon each other. Lecture by Dr. D. N. Chatterjee, B.A., M.B., C.M., on Tuesday, the 17th Inst., at 6 to 8 P.M. Subjects: Histology—Liver; Physiology—Almentation.

Lecture by Babn Rajendra Nath Chatterjee, M.A., on Wednesday, the 18th Inst., at 6 P.M. Subject: Rectilenced Propagation and Velocity of Labr.

the 18th Inst., at 6 P.M. Suoje, F. Rectimenean Propagation and Venocity of Light.

Lecture by Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, Thursday, the 19th Inst. at

5 P.M. Subject: Action of Currents upon each other Electro-dynamics. MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR, M.D.,

December 14, 1895.

Honorary Secretary.

such criticism for the opportunity offered them for explanation. It is only when the task becomes difficult of hiding the struggling pangs of conscious truth that such expressions of opinion become annoying. Perhaps, Lord Elgin is too sincere a statesman to be capable of quenching the blushes of ingenuous shame while justifying the retention of Chitral and pleading the increase of military expenditure and of loss by exchange as difficulties in the way of relief to the agricultural classes, of the extension of Public Works, and the separation of judicial and excutive functions. He should remember that stopping the expression does not kill the grievance outright; that statesmanship consists in meeting criticism openly and replying to it with vigour,
All this may be admitted, and yet the view, it may be argued, propounded by the Viceroy may be strictly correct. In refusing addresses distasteful to him for their contents, the Viceroy does not interfere with the right of the subject to petition the crown or its representatives. Every private individual has the right to refuse receiving and answering unpleasant communications addressed to him. The situation would be truly deplorable of the Viceroy if this right were denied to him. Unfortunately, the Viceroy's progress through the empire is invested with a political character which can by no means be climinated from it. The people have always been allowed to approach him on such occasions not only with expressions of loyal welcome as befit every good subject of the Queen, but with also a tale of their wants and respectful suggestions for showing how those wants may be obviated or met. Herein lies the difficulty of the situation. Lord Elgin's predecessors have borne the infliction, each with as much grace as he could command. Addresses have before now been even refused. The reasons, however, had never been formally enunciated. The desire, publicly expressed, of stopping the free expression of opinion in addresses is a distinct departure from established practice. Rules have never been promulgated defining the principles that should regulate the frame of such public utterances. On the other hand, it has been always understood that in welcoming or bidding farewell to Viceroys and provincial Governors, public bodies have all along been allowed to make references to political questions of the hour and freely criticise them from their stand-point of view. Instances are not wanting of Viceroys betraying an impatience of criticism by even undignified exhibition of temper. But Lord Elgin's is undoubtedly the first attempt to lay down a rule as to what the limits should be of topics introduced in public addresses. In preventing excursions into the wide field of administrative policy, it seems that Lord Eigin's wish is that nothing should occur to disturb the pleasure or harmony of Viceregal progresses through the empire; that the head of the administration should everywhere be greeted with only expressions of loyalty and joy and contentment with the existing order of things; that only faces beaming with inward satisfaction, with not a line of cark and care, should be presented on such occasions. The rides and progresses of Queen Elizabeth, it is said, were regulated up in such a principle, for the police had especial instruc-tions to prevent all sorts of ugly, deformed, and ill-dressed people from living the streets in and ill-dressed people from living the streets in hope of obtaining a sight of the Sovereign. None but well clad and handsome specimens of humanity were allowed to become objects of the Queen's but I have done what I can to remedy this deficiency by bringing gaze., The partiality of Queen Bess, however, for handsome countenances, was productive of no mischievous consequences to her people. Unfortunately, the new kind of addresses with which Lord Elgin wishes to be greeted, is not altogether innocent. The check proposed on the free utterance of thoughts is very much to be deplored. That check is one of direct consequences of our forward military policy as also of the ministerial coqueting for Lancashire

Letter to the Editor.

A MUNICIPAL GRIEVANCE. (A telegraphic correction)

REGRET the publication in your esteemed paper of 7th December of a letter headed "a Municipal Grievance." The site of the old strughter house, situate at the horder of the butchers' quarter, was selected by a special Sub-Committee and approved by Dr. Zorab, Chairman of the Municipality, and by the then Sanitary Commissioner. The cues of the animals, he ud from the Uriva, Babu's garden, house situate at a little distance, in ide him feel kind and ask the former Board to remove it. They declined but resolved at a meeting that if a similar staughter-house, built on a piece of land of equal dimensions as the existing one, on a site equally convenient to the butchers could be guaranteed, they would have no objection to the removal. Nobody came forward. An appeal was made to the Divisional Commissioner through the Migratrate which was rejected. Dr. Gregg, Sanitary Commissioner, inspected the slaughter-house but never suggested its removal. The Bibu subsequently having agreed to bear the cost of a new lind and slaughter house, the Commissioners (the old body) agreed, according to their former promise, to remove it, and they also acquired land for the purpose. No Government or public thanks necessary for personal convenience. Sarry to find people that dare mislead editors like yourself.

ST. ANDREW'S DINNER.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT'S REPLY TO THE TOAST "THE GUESTS."

I have been entrusted with the honour of returning thanks on the Scotchmen of Calcutta, and I rise with great pleasure to perform that duty. It is no mere formality to say that we who have enjoyed your hospitality have been greatly impressed by two things—the generous abundance with which the tables have been I then for the retreshment of the inner man, and the liberal provision of intellectual recreation which has been made in the interesting speeches to which we have listened. Those who are old babauer of the place must be gratified by observing not only the growth of the number who attend this festival, but also the increased warmth of the spirit of friendliness which it evokes, (hear, creased warmth of the spirit of friendliness which it evokes, (hear, hear) and we congratulate you on the existence of the strong national feeling which binds you together, and also on the good reasons which justify your pride in the name of Scotland. In these cosmopolitan days when philosophers debate whether patriotism is more akin to a vice or to a virtue, and the Custom House pites it as an article ripilly rising in values for my friends will me that a core of heather which her year and heather which has year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and heather which her year and her which her years and her which her years and her years and her years and her years and her years and her years are years and her years and her years and her years and her years and her years and her years and her years and her years and years and years and years and years are years and years and years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years and years are years are years and years are years and years are years are years and years are years are years and years are years are years are years and years are y till me that a sprig of heather which list year pul one anna as duty his this year been assessed at three--(laughter), we who are not philosophies do well to hall every occision that strengthens, the ties which bind us to our dear mother land, (cheers) and which forces us in this country to appreciate the bonds of blood and race and good fellowship. (Renewed applause) Your St. Andrew's and good removants, (kenewed appearse) Your St. Andrew's Dinner is emmently such an ocasion assahis, and we trust that for years to come generations of guests like ourselves may enjoy the appitality of generations of Scotchmen like yourselves, and admire the warmth of national enthusiasm and the spirit of good-will mire the warm'h of national enthusiasm and the spirit of good-will which meetings of this kind tend to engender. (Cheers.)

Thus far I have spoken on behalf of the guests whom I represent; but I have also to acknowledge on my own behalf the very flattering remarks made by Mr. Henderson regarding Lady Elliott and myself, and the special feeling which has induced you to place me in this polition to night. I should like, therefore, at this point to ask my fellow guests to seat themselves, as the remainder of my observations will be of a general character, and I know there is nothing more tiring than to listen, standing, to a lengthy speech.

Mr. Henderson has remarked feelingly on my mysfortune in not with me to-night an A.-D.-C. who is privileged to wear the Highland Light Infantry uniform, and I can congratulate you on the fact that my successor will be free from the defect which attaches to myself as he is as sound a Scotchman as any in the room. (Applause). Mr. Henderson has also given a summary of the (Applause). Mr. Henderson has also given a summary of the work carried out by the Bengal Government, and I understand that you desire that this entertainment should be your farewell to the retiring Lieutenant-Governor, and that you invite me, in replying, to go outside of the ordinary subjects, and to give to you, through you to the public, some account of my stewardship during the last five years. (Cheers.) It is, I believe, recognised by you all that a Lieutenant-Governor cannot address you with anything like the authority of a Viceroy, and cannot enter on an exposition of principles of Imperial policy such as you have been so fortunate as to listen to in former years; but it is still thought that the integral and domestic more lightly the Renaul Government. that the internal and domestic working of the Bengal Government may supply topics which possess interest and which deserve commemoration at a time when the reins of Government are changing

In accepting this invitation I feel that you will not expect me to speak of the intricacies of civil government as it affects the great mass of the Native population, but that I should confine myself to those sides on which it touches, or is touched by the interests and welfare of the great body of the European community -- those in Calcutta in the first place, and in the second place those who live in the mulassal, but are represented here. Even when limited in this way the subject is a very large one, and I feel sure that you will forgive morif on such a night as this I confine myself to the principal points of contact and to the most important measures regarding which the Government and the European body have muoually influenced each other. And the first point I am bound to dwell on is the great, and I am glad to be able to say the increasing trade of the place (Applause.) No Lieutenant-Governor would be worthy of his office if he did not see in that trade an object which in the interests of all classes of the community, whether resident in the capital or in the outlying parts of the province, he is bound to do all in his power to encourage and develop. I am indebted to Mr. Skrine for figures which show that while the imports of Calcutta during the last five years have stood unchanged at about 25 crores, the exports have risen from 35 to 45 crores. This is a large increase, and the sub-ject is one on which I might easily dilate at a length disproportioned to what I have to say on other points, and I only make one or two remarks here. The first is, that our figures do not bear out the complaints made in England about the effect on the Manchester trade produced by the imposition of the cotton duties. (Hear, hear.) Cotton imports have stood at 14, 13, 12, 16, and 15 crores during the five-year period, and in the current year they are likely to exceed the maximum on record. Another point is that it is the imports of luxuries, such as sugar, tobacco, and spirits, which show a tendency to increase, and that local production is to some extent supplementing the import of necessaries. As to exports, their growth is mainly due to the great expansion of jute cultivation and manufacture, and the levelopment of internal trade is chiefly the result of the attentio paid to the improve-ment of communications and the removal of obstructions.

As regards this matter the two chief potts at which the Bengal Government has in my time come in contact with the trade of the place are the port and the railway system. With regard to the port, the most important event has been the or ring of the Kidderpore Docks and the burden laid upon the ti-le of Calcutta by the charge for interest on the expenditure. I his is a matter on which I have been in constant and anxious ommunication with the Port Commissioners, and I went so far as or let it be known that if the voice of the trading community alled for such action, the Government would be prepared to use the power which the law gives it of compelling ships to enter the Daks instead of lying in the river or at the Jettics; but your expresentatives generally agreed that such a step was inadvisable, a lit was not taken. By degrees, however, the facilities afforded by the Docks have become more and more appreciated, and Hearn that during the last twelve months the receipts have conalled the actual working expenses. A project is now before the Port Commissioners, under which all export cargo will be taken in at the Docks, and which if approved, will result in a near to roach to equilibrium; and the Supreme Government has received a tayourable proposal for postponing the sinking fund, and has hired that there is some hope of a reduction of the interest. (Applause.) I think we may fairly attribute this friendly attitude of the Government of India to the fact that one of its members, though he is now the watchful guardian of Finance, was formerly a Bengal officer, who cannot hold himself aloof from sympathy with the difficulties of Calcutta, (cheers) and that another is the distinguished officer who is about important discussion held a different view from that taken by the majority of the Calcutta mercantile community and by the Chamber of Commerce. But I feel sure that I am paving you no idle compliment when I express my belief that you would I give utterance to my genuine sentiments, (cheers) although they differ from yours, than that I should gloss them over, even our of deference to such an occasion as this. (Hear, hear.) I refer to the extension of the Rast Indian Railway system and to the desire which has been expressed that Calcutta should not be the mercy of a single line in respect of its traffic with North-West India, but that a new railway capable of competing with the East India Railway should be constructed. My view on the other hand, has been that a single railway system is sufficient to carry all the traffic which now presents itself or is likely to present itself for the next twenty years, and that it is more advantageous to the trade of Calcutta that capitals should be expended in developing the feeder communications and enlarging the rolling stock and the number of trucks on that system, than in construct-ing a rival with a greater mileage and inferior gradients. Mr. Henderson has referred to my past connection with the Public Works Department as giving me some right to form an opinion on the subject, and I confess that my experience in India and my study of the working of the principle of unlimited competi-tion in America have not been favourable to the proposed scheme. tion in America have not been (avourable to the proposed scheme. America has taught us that competition generally ends in combination, and my belief is that if a rival line were constructed, we should soon see the two systems enter into an agreement to pull their earnings, and then the trade of Calcutta would have to pay frieghts sufficient to cover the working expenses and dividends of two railways, though it could all be carried by one. This, however, has been the only instance in which the views of the Bengal Government have been at variance with those of the Chamber of Commerce. On all other points we have been at one, and our united efforts have succeeded in carrying the connection of Calcutta with the East Coast and the Bengal Nagpore Railways---a measure which ought to do a great deal to redress the somewhat undue favour shown to the Bombay trade in former years. The Government has also supported the requirements of the Chamber of Commerce regarding the water communication with Eastern Bengal, and has earnestly pressed on the construction of feeder roads, feeder lines, and tramways. We have lately recommended to the Government of India a list of railway projects which cover a length of about 1,100 miles of broad gauge and 750 miles of nara length of about 1,100 miles of broad gauge and 150 miles from gauge line within this province, and projects extending to row gauge line within this province, and projects extending to about 600 miles have been formally or practically sanctioned. We have repeatedly expressed our conviction that with such a teeming population as that of Bengal, passenger traffic alone will secure a moderate dividend for any project which is judiciously selected and economically carried out, and we have heartily supported the efforts of independent capitalists to construct small local railways and trailways round about Calentia. and tramways round about Calcutta.

The principle of combination, rather than competition, which I have referred to in dealing with railway projects, is even more clearly applicable to the question of recruiting labour, whether for tea-gardens, for the colonies, or for coal mines, and this principle has been strongly advocated by this Government in giving its adhesion to the request of the Chember of Commerce for the appointment of the Commission to enquire into the labour question. The injury done to the great tea industry of Assam question. The injury done to the great tea industry of Assam by the evils which attach to the present system of recruiting has been a cause for great anxiety ever since I learnt, as Chief Commissioner of that Province, to appreciate their gravity. (Hear, hear, and applause.) Efforts have been made to repress those evils by magisterial activity and by rules containing as much restriction as the law allows; and now the Government has indicated what we believe to be the only radical cure for the misdeeds which have made service on the Assam tea garden so undeservedly unpopular in Bengal. I can only express a hope that the clashing of oppying interests will not be found to be so unmanageshall can be make it impossible to establish a voluntary organisation for the recruitment and supply of labour in which all employers shall combine and by which all demands shall be supplied.

The Census of Bengal taken in 1891 revealed the fact that the population had increased in ten years by five millions, or at the rate of half a million per annum; and we have reason to believe that that rate of increase still continues, or is but very slightly retarded, and instead of using Tennyson's lines "Every minute dies a man, every minute one is born," we find that in Bengal every minute seven persons die and eight are born. Barring the exchange difficulty, this growth of the population is the most serious danger which the Indian statesman has to face, (hear, hear) and putting aside the self-acting restrictions of thrift and prudence, to succeed me, and who will, no doubt, feel the same desire to abolish the special tax on trade that I have felt. (Renewed cheers.)

Turning now to the extension of the rulway system, I fear that I tread on somewhat delicate ground, inasmuch as I have in one is deeply interested in, all schemes for fostering the development of commercial industries which take their rise from the accumulation of capital in Calcutta, in assisting to attract labour to the tea gardens, the coal mines, the colonies, the factories, and in resisting every malign influence which imposes unnecessary restrictions and creates difficulties under a guise of philanthropy. We had an instance of this last year when Mr. Playfair protested in the Supreme Council against an attempt to impose conditions of ship-builders which would tend to check the employment of Indian lascars at sea, and I felt it a privilege to be able to add my voice in support of his protest. (Applause.) A more serious attempt was made to throttle the new openings for the employment of labour in factories and in coal mines by imposing restrictions un-suitable to the climate and not required by the habits of the people. (Loud cheers.) In resisting these attempts the Chamber of merce has been warmly backed up by the Bengal Government, and material help has been received towards this end from the two experts employed by Government--- Mr. Walsh, the Inspector of Factories, and Mr. Grundy, the Inspector of Mines, whose clear and judicious reports cannot but carry great weight with the authorities in England. Another mode in which this Government has co-operated to the same end is by encouraging the pur-chase of stores manufactured in this country in preference to buying and importing them from England (hear) and the result of this have been shown chiefly in the case of stationery, almost the whole of which ought to be made in India, and in the case of iron and steel required for Public Works, which, if sound materials capable of standing the prescribed tests are imported, can certainly be worked up as effectually here as at home. I trust, too, that the time is not far distant when steel rails and rought iron will be produced in India. (Applause.)

What, then, is the effect which these new openings produce on the steady increase of the population? I do not wish to burden my speech with statistics, but I will indicate in a few words the conclusion to which our inquiries point.

The tea gardens of Assam absorb about 50,000 emigrants a year and during the last five years the gardens of the Dooars and Darjeeling have increased their population at the rate of over 6,000 a year, so that the whole tea industry must draw off some 60,000 a The colonies take year from the annual growth of the population. about 10,000 a year, the factories of Bengal employ, according to our estimates, 85,000 people, and the annual increase in the numher during the last five years has been about 4,000. The coal mines during the same period have absorbed an increase of 10,000 hands a year and their proper development requires an annual addition of at least as great a number. Add to these the spread of employment on the indigo sactories, the railways, the Post and Telegraph Departments, and it is safe to assert that against the estimated annual growth of half a million of people in Bengal we can put a figure of about 100,000 as representing the number of persons (mostly adult males) who are every year drawn off the land and enabled to find a livelihood by the "diversity of occupations" which Calcutta trade and English capital creats. So mightily does the community represented here tonight co-operate with the Government in meeting the greatest economical danger to which the Indian empire is subject. (Hear,

These remarks about the growth of population lead us to the great topic of sanitation and the constant effort to reduce the deathrate in which the Government is engaged. The period recently elapsed has seen the extension of the Calcutta water-supply to a large portion of the suburbs, and the project for bringing a new sppli into Howrah is nearly completed, which will be a great benefit to several factories in which your capital is invested, and in which, as I am informed, Scotchmen are largely employed; but the measures started nearly five years ago to pre-pare a scheme for the riparian municipalities from Barrackpore downwards have not yet taken a concrete form. As to the other branch of sanitation, drainage and sewerage public attention has lately been drawn to its defects in Calcutta, and an address from the Chamber of Commerce has materially strengthened the hands of Government in dealing with a municipality, the guiding body of which is more prone to talk than to action. (Laughter and We must all agree that where the expenditure of very Applause.) large sums is concerned it is right to be cautious and to consult the best authorities, but both the Government and the community are bound to see that caution is not carried too far, and that the fear of incurring expenditure does not outweigh the fear of increased

It is proper for me here to mention a matter in which Calcutta is only indirectly interested, but which has directly affected the prosperity of the Indian industry in which so much English capital is invested, and the safety of the indigo penters, several of whom are present here to-night. I refer to the troubles which arose out of the agitation to stop the killing of rows, and which led to much antagonism and to conflicts between Hindoos and Mahomedans and antagonism and to connects octover rimmos and wanomedans and to loss of lite in many parts of B har. This wave of feeling was a temporary one, and seems now to have passed away, but it has broken out twice during the last three years, and may break out again. It was a grave and alarming symptom while it lasted and the defeat of the aggressors was due primarily to the vigilance and resolution of the local officers and the good conduct of the police, largely assisted by the co-operation of the planters in the knowledge that that fine body of neighbourhood, and by the knowledge that that fine body of volunteers, the Behar Light Horse, could be relied on to restore quiet and to put down any disturbance that might arise. (Cheers.)

This leads me to refer to one detail of purely civil administration which is bound up with the preservation of peace throughout the country and the security of the great amount of English capital invested in Bengal---I mean the Police Department. No depart ment of the Government service has been more bitterly attacked than the police, although all persons acquainted with the subject are agreed that the troubles I have just been speaking of in Behar they behaved uncommonly well, I have never admitted the justice of the attacks made on their efficiency, but at the same time everyone must agree that there is room for improvement --- that there are a certain number of black sheep and inefficient persons in the force. The Bengal Government has applied itself earnestly to the introduction of reforms in the police, and Mr. Henderson has already mentioned the principal improvements which have been effected. These reforms have been costly have we believe the expenditure incurred will be well recouped to the Province by the improvement in the preservation of order and the punishment of

Perhaps the most important event which has taken place in the internal administration of the Province during the last five years has been the enlargement of the Legislative Council and the setting apart of some seats in it for the represent-Council and the secting aparts of semi-ation of certain important interests. The European community of Calcutta were not directly benefited by this change, because they had always sent up two members of the Council, and under the new regulations only one representative's seat was secured to the Chamber of Commerce; but it has been found practicable to confer another seat on a member representing the Trades Association and the advantage of his presence in our discussions has been so clearly felt that I conceive this practice is sure to be continued in future. In other respects, as regards the right of and the financial discussion on the Budget and the extension of legislative authority even to the amendment of laws passed in the Supreme Council, the powers of the Bengal Council have greatly enlarged, and I think all those who have studied the debates must have felt that they were conducted in a clearer light and a broader atmosphere than before. The legislation which has most concerned Calcutta and the European community has been the Fire Brigade Act, which reapportioned the cost of fire protection in a way which gave sensible relief to the jute industry; the Municipal Amendment Act, the main object of which was to remove cipal Amendment Act, the main object of which was some inequalities of assessment and imperfection in account-keeping, and to sive the Municipal Commissioners greater powers in regard to internal control; and the Electric Lighting Bill which is tended to confer the legal powers necessary to enable companies to be started for lighting different areas of this city. It is unfortunate that through a technical difficulty sanction has not yet been given to this Bill, for which I understand Calcutta is anxiously waiting, but we trust that that difficulty will soon be got over. (Hear, hear.) It is a pleasure to acknowledge the help that has been received from the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Association in discussing these measures, It is a pleasure to acknowledge the help that has and in all our proceedings the non-official members have shown both independence of spirit and critical sagacity. The turn which these discussions have often taken has no doubt added to the technical difficulties of legal drafting, but the Bengal Government desires to acknowledge the benefit which the enlarged constitution of the Council has worked as to the careful consideration of the principles on which legislation is based, the wisdom of compromise, and the reasonable difference to public opinion. At the same time it should not be supposed that the enlargement of the Council has led to greater activity in legislation. On the contrary, I am glad to announce that the Statue Book for the last five years, from 1891 to 1895 inclusive, contains 190 pages, against 357 contributed by legislative activity during the preceding five-year period. (Laughter and applause.)

There are many other subjects which might be dealt with did time permit, but I fear to trespass longer on your patience and will proceed at once to the last item on my list--the financial position of the province, and I need not go into much detail on this subject, because a resolution has lately been drawn up by Mr. Risley and published in the Gazzite containing all requisite information, and Mr. Henderson has already referred to these figures with some fullness. It is enough to say that the province, which five years ago had a surplus of nearly five lakhs above the minimum balance required to retain, is estimated to end the present year with a surplus of 21 1/2 lakhs, and that estimate, I am in a position to say, is certain to be exceeded. (Cheers.) And while these figures are gratifying in themselves, it is still more gratifying to notice the processes by which they are realised. On the one hand, the income of the province has gone on steadily increasing, at the average rate of about eight lakhs a year, and that nor through the imposition of any new taxes or the discovery of any new sources of revenue; it has been the natural growth of the receipts under all heads, and mainly under the great departments of Stamps, Excise, and Railways, and is incontestably due to the increasing wealth and prosperity of the country. (Applause.) On the other hand, the expenditure, governed by principles of rigid economy, such principles as were inculcated by the Finance Committee in which my hon. friend Sir J. Westland collaborated with me, hardly increased at all, except under the heads of police and of the compensation allowance due to fall of exchange, till the present year, when, finding that funds were abundant, large outlay has been sanctioned on important Public Works. I venture to think that it is well to publish and emphasise such results as these in the face of the gloomy and passimistic criticism to which our financial position in India province of the Empire in which the assessment on the land is permanently fixed, so that that source of revenue cannot be materially augmented, and yet so wealthy and prosperous is it that what may be called the by-products of finance, the results of indirect taxation, have brought about a yearly growth of 8 lakhs in the Provincial income, as well as about 12 lakhs in the share paid to the imperial Government, and meanwhile the obligatory provincial expenditure has not increased by 4 lakhs a year, if we may assume that other provinces in which the Land Revenue is temporarily assessed constantly growing, feed the central treasury at anything like the same rate, the treasury is possessed of an assured elasticity of revenue which places it in a high position of financial security which nothing can disturb except a catastrophic fall in exchange or the calamity of war. (Cheers.) No nation in the continent of Europe produces budgets nearly as favourable as this five-year series of Bengal budgets has been; not can they show results financially comparable to those of the Government of India. As long as comparation to mose of the Soverment of those As long as this is the case, we may fairly ask the gentlemen who write so eligibly about the bankruptcy of India to devote their attention to discussing the bankruptcy of France or Italy or Germany or Austria.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I have come to the end of a long, and I fear a tedious, discourse, for which I have to ask the for-giveness of the audience. (Cheers.) Your cheers assure me that it has not been tedious, and I trust you will also consider that it has not been unduly egotistic. I have tried, under difficult circumto substitute the Bengal Government for it, and that for a very good reason. Gentlemen, the work done by the Bengal Government is not the work of one man; it is only in a limited degree that one man can claim to have given to it its bent and direction. It is the work of the Lieutenant-Governor, aided by his staff of secretaries, and supported by the whole body of the service in the various departments, and no Lieutenant-Governor has ever been aided by an abler and more devoted staff of secretaries, or more loyally and efficiently supported by the different branches of the service than I have been. (Cheers.) Nor is it the work of these officials alone, but of a (Cheers,) (vor is it the work of these officers and their time, great company of non-officials who voluntarily give their time, their ability, and their experience to the service of the State, and the value and effects of whose co-operation it has been my chief object to set forth and acknowledge to-night,

Five years ago, when you did me the honour to ask me to occupy the position I occupy now, and when I was on the eve of taking up my present office, as I am now on the eve of putting it down, I spoke of the encouragement which an assembly of this kind can give, representing as it does the most active and energetic of the influences which govern our connection with India, and I told you that there was no greater stimulus to a public man to do well than the belief of his countrymen that he will do well. (Cheers.)

To that stimulous I owe much, and I have no doubt that you will extend and continue it to my successor, and to all who shall stand in the high and difficult post which it has been my honour to fill. If the remarks I have submitted to you to night have any value it consists in showing how great is the variety and importance of the duties devolving on the Bengal Government, and how valuable is the support which it receives from the powerful European community in Calcutta and in the interior of the Pro-

And there is another side to our connection with Calcutta Bengal, of which, it I could possibly be forgetful of it, Mr. Henderson's closing remarks, and the presence of this large number of ladies assembled to hear the speeches of to-night would me---I mean the social side. However engrossing official life may be, it is not, I am thankful to say, altogether absorbing; it still leaves lessure for the innumerable gracious acts of kindness and courtesy, the giving and receiving of which constitute the happiness of private life. In this sphere in which my wife have reigned supreme (loud cheers) we have good reason to know and gratefully to remember what your opinion is of the way in which she has played her part. Our recollection of this portion of our life will be one long series of lasting friendships and pleasant acquaintanceships made, of unexpected kindnesses received of sympathy in troubles and difficulties, of tavourable construction put on our intentions and of graticude for proffered help and hospitality far exceeding our deserts. Believe me, ladies and gentlemen, it is no slight thing to be able to say, at the end of so long a connection as ours has been with this place, that there has been nothing for ue to regret, and nothing to cast a shadow over the pleasant recollections we shall always retain of Calcutta Society, (Cheers.)

And now before I six down I have a pleasant duty to perform in proposing the health of the Chairman, the Hon. Mr. Playfair, who has so ably and successfully presided over this meeting tonight, and has contributed a speech to which we have all listened with interest, and which will be long remembered by the Scotch-men of Calcutta. I have known him for several years as a colleague in the Bengal and Supreme Council Chambers, and we have shared in many important discussions and hot debates, and whether we have been on the same or on opposite sides I have learnt to feel great respect for his acuteness, his experience and his courtesy. (Applause.) His position as Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce shows what the commercial world think of him, and I have endeavoured in the earlier part of my speech to explain how highly Bengal Government values the opinion and advice of the Chamber. We have seen to night how well he fills the chair at a meeting of his brother Scots, and in all these capacities I ask you to drink his health. (Cheers.)

THE DOG, THE MAN, AND THE MEAT.

THE DUG, THE MAN, AND THE MEAT.

A FRIEND of mine and I were walking together the other day; a dog dished pist us after something he saw on the pavement. It was a big piece of meat. He pounced on it and swallowed it in two seconds. My companion looked at the dog with envious admiration. "My humble friend," he said, "I'll give you £5,000 for your appetite and your digestion. you are not afraid to eat; I am," But the dog knew what happiness is made of. He declined the offer and trotted away.

It is astronishing how many different people use this expression. "I am," or "I was "afraid to eat. As the writer pens these lines five letters lie on the table before him, every one of them containing it. Yet the persons who wrote the letters are not known to one another. There was, therefore, no agreement among them. Why should there be, even if they were acquainted?

There was, therefore, no agreement among them. Why should there be, even if they were acquammed?

No, there is nothing in it to wonder at. They went through the same experience, and express it in the most natural way, that's all. But what does it mean? Are people suspicious of poisoned food? No, no; that is not so. The food is not poisoned before it is eaten, but afterwards. An example will show what really occurs, and why so but afterwards. An example will show what really occurs, and why so many are affard to e.it.

We quote from one of the letters: "One might, early in 1892," says the writer, "I was seized with dreadful pains in the pit of the stomach, and a choking sensation in the throat. I feared I was going to die. My wife called in a neighbour. They applied hot finniels and turpentine, but I got no rehef. Then a doctor came and gave me medicine. He said he never saw anyone's tongue in such a condution. It was of a yellow colour, and covered with a slimy phlegm, so thick I could have scraped it with a knife. I had a foul, buter taste in the mouth, and nave-scraped it with a kinds. I had a long other late in the mouth, and my eyes were so dull I could scarcely see. I had a heavypan in the side, and felt so dejected and miserable I didn't know what to do with miself. What little food I took gave me so much p in I wors afraid to eat. The doctor put me on starvation diet, and mjected morphine to Getting no real benefit from the first doctor I saw another, who said Getting no real benefit from the first do tor I saw another, who said I had enlargement of the liver. He give in endelines, but I got no better In August I went to Exmouth to see what my native air would do for me, but came back worse than even. I had lost over three stone in weight, and being too weak to move about I used to be on the couch most of the time. I never expected to get well, and didn't care much what became of me.

"One day in October my wife said, "It appears the doctors can do matching for your to I am going to doctor you myst!" She were to the most on one time. In never expected to get well, and didn't care much what became of me.

"One day in October my wife said, "It appears the doctors can do nothing for you, so I am going to doctor you mysels." She went to the Southern Drug Sones, in Camberwell Road, and not a bottle of Mother Segel's Curative Syrup. After taking this medicine for a few days the pain in my stomach left me, my appetite improved, and I gained some strength. Soon afterwards I was back at my work. The people in the office, seeing how well I looked, asked what had cured me, and I answered Mother Seigel's Syrup. I shall be glad to reply to any inquiries about my case. (Signed) Charles Harris, 74. Beresford Street, Camber well, London, December 1st, 1892."

Mt. Harris' statement goes straight to the point. Why was he afraid to eat? Because his food gave him pain without giving him strength. This was dead wrong. It was exactly the reverse of what it should have been. When a man is the proper form he gets vigour and power from his meals, and eats them with enjoyment and relish. If he doesn't there is something the matter with him. What is it?

Now let your thoughts expand a bit, so as to take in a broad principle. One man's meat is another man's poison, they say. That's so, hint it's only half the truth. Any man's meat is any man's folion, under certain conditions. If grain never got any further than the mill hopper we should never have bread, and if bread (or other food) never got further than the stomach is to pid, inflamed, and "ON STRIKE," what happens? Why, your food lies in it rand rots. The fermentations produces prisons which get into the blond and kicks up the worst sort of misches all over the body. This is indigestion and dyspepsia, though the doctors call each and every trick of it by a separate name. Yet they don't cure it which is the main thing after all.

But Mother Segele's Curative Syrap does, as Mr. Harris says, and as thousand of other say.

CAUTION!

It having been notified to the Propietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrippilous dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (viz., 4 annas, 8 annas or 19½d, 12 annas or 11. 1½d. and Rs, 2 or 25, 9d) are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes representto be of higher value than they really

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, Buima and

ATHERTON & CO., 3, NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUITA.

NOTICE—Should any difficulty be experinced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee ates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH.

BY SARADA PRASAD BANERJEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE

Having the largest sale of all similar works,
ENGLISH PREPARATORY
COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES.
This book has been approved by the Central Text Book Committee. INDIA READERS NO. 2

INDIA READERS NO. 1

TNDIA KEADERS NO. 1
Fox 6th & 7th CLASSIS
These books are of remark obly simple style
and quite suited to Indian students
The attention of School authorities in the N.-W. P and Ondh, the Punjab, Madras, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Briting is invited to the above publications of unque

ments.
To be had of

S K. LAHIRI & Co. College Square, Calcutta.

Congress Sketches: A Review OF THE

SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS AT THE

Fourth Indian National Congress
Held at Allahabad.
Reprinted with additions and alterations from Ress & Rayyet

With a portrait of Mr. George Yule, President, Sold by the publisher G. P. Varma, and at the office of the Advocate, at Luc mow for 8 A m.s. a copy, possides passage.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," BY

F. H. SKRINE, 108, (Collector of Customs, Calcutta.)

The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR. DEDICATION (To Sir W. W. Hunter.) HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE. LETTERS to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C., to Atkinson, the late Mt. E.F.T., C.S., to Bineijee, Bibn Jvotish Chunder, from Baneijee, the late Revd. Dt., K. M.
to Bineijee, Babn Suodaprasad,
from Bell, the late Major Evans,
from Bhaddaur, Chief of
to Binaya Krishna, Rija.
to Chriti, Ru Bah dur Ananda.
to Chatteijee, Mr. K. M.
from Clarke, Mr. S. E.;
from, to Colvin, Su Auckland,
to, from Dufferin and Ava, the Marquis of,
from Evans, the Houbble Su Griffith H.P. to Ganguli, Bibn Kisari Mohan,
to Ghose, Babn Nabo Kissen,
to Ghose, Babn Nabo Kissen,
to Graham, Mr. W.

to Ghose, Babu Nabo Kissen.
to Ghosh, Babu Kau Prosanna.
to Graham, Mr. W.
from Griffin, Sir Lepel.
from Guha, Babu Saroda Kant.
to Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward.
from Hunter, Sir W. W.
to Jeukins, Mr. Edward.
to Jung, the late Nawab Sir Salar.
to Knight, Mr. Paul.
from Kaight, the late Mr. Robert.
from Lansdowne, the Marquis of.
to Law, Kumar Kristodas.
to Lyon, Mr. Percy C.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
to Mallik, Mr. H. C.
to Marston, Miss Ann.
from Metha, Mr. R. D.
to Mitra, the late Raja Dr. Rajendralala. to Mookerjee, late Ruja Dakhinaranjan.
from Monkerjee, Mr. J. C.
from M'Neil, Professor H. (San Francisco). to, from Mirshidabad, the Nawab Bahador of.
from Navantan, Mahamahapadhya M. C.

from M'Neil, Professor H. Can Francisco).

to, from Mushidabad, the Nawab Bahaddoor of.

from Nayatataa, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Osborn, the late Colonel Robert D. to. Rao, Mr. G. Venkut Appt. to. Rao, the late Scr. F. Madhaya.

to. Rao, the late Scr. F. Madhaya.

to. Rattigan, Sir William. H. from Rossell, Sir W. H. James. from Rossell, Sir W. H. to. Sastri, the Houble A. Sishiah.

to. Sastri, the Houble A. Sishiah.

to. Sinha, Bahu Bahman unda. from Sircar, Dr. M. thendralal. from Sindley, Lord, of Aldeiley. from, to. Townsend, Mr. Meteduh.

to. Underwood, Caption F. O. to, from Vambery, Professor Arminius. to. Venetatatamanish. M. G. to. Vizianagram, M. hi. uaj. of. to. Wizianagram, M. hi. uaj. of. to. Wood-Mason, the late Professor J. LETTERS'& TELFGRAMS' OF CONDOLENCE, from Abdus. Subhan, Moulvi A. K. M. Ameel. Hossein, Hon'ble. Nawab Syed. Ardagh, Colonel Sir. J. C. Baneijee, Bahu Manunthanath, Banerjee, Rai Bahadar, Shib Chunder. Barth, M. A. Belchambers, Mr. R. Deb, Bahu Manahar.
Dutt, Mr. O. C.
Dutt, B. bu Prossaddoss.
Elgin, Lord.
Ghose, Babu Norend. K.

Ghosh, Babu Kiti Prasanna. Graham, Mr. William. Hill, Dr. Fitz Edward. Haridas Viharidas Desai, the late Dewan. Hardas Viharidas Desai, the late Dewai Iyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami. Limbert, Sir John.
Mahomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitra, Mr. B.C.
Mitter, Bubn Sidheshur.
Mookerjee, Raja Peary Mohan.
Mookerjee, Bubn Surendia Nath.
Mirchidabad, the Nawab Bahadoor of.
Roy, Babu E. C.
Ray, Bubn Stat Chunder.
Sayal, Bubn Suat Chunder.
Sayal, Bubn Suat Chunder.
Sayal, Bubn Dinabundho.
Sayitti Library.
Tippera, the Bua Thakur of.
Vambèry, Professor Amminus. Vambery, Professor Arminius, Vizimagi im, the Maharaja of, POSTSCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of letters.

Orders to be made to the Business Manager, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bee Press, I Uckoon Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remarkable man.—Mr. H. Babington, Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895.

Dr. Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshiness and 'originality and there is a breezy freshness and originality about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading—Sir Alfred W. Corft, KC1E, Director of Public Institution, Bengal. 26th September, 1895.

It is not that amid the pressure of harassing official duties an English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so graceful a tribute to the memory of a native personality as F. H. Skrine has done in his biography of the late Di. Samblu Chunder Mookerjee, the well-known Bengal journalist (Calontia Thacker, Spink and Co); nor are there in my who are ince worthy of being thus honoured than the late E-litor of Reis and Rayyet.

We may at any rate condually agree with Mr. Skrine that the story of Mookerjee's life, with all its lights and shadows, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

India. No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not even the Hindoo Patriot, in its paliniest daes under Kristodas Pal, enjoyed a degree of influence in any way approaching that which wis soon attained by Reis and Rayyet.

nuence in any way approaching that which was soon attained by Res and Rayyet.

A man of large heart and great qualities, his death from pineumonia in the early spring in the last year was a distinct and heavy loss to Indian journalism, and it was an admit ble idea on Mr. Skune's participation of India, (Boothsty) S ptember 30, 1805.

It is viely in it the life of an Indian journal ist becomes worthy of publication, it is more rively still the word, it life comes to be written by an Anglo Indian and a member of the Indian Civil Service. But, it has come to puss that in the land of the Bength Babas, the life of at lesst one in a among Indian journalists has been considered worthy of being written by an Englishmin Fig. Madiat Strulard, (Madias) September 30, 1895.

1895.
The late Editor of Reis and Ravvet was The life Estito of the Art Authority was a profound student and, an accomplished writer, who has left his mark on Indian journalism. In that he has found a Civilian like Mr. Skine to record the story of his life he is more fortunate than the great Kristodis P.d. himself. The Tribune, (Lahore) October 2, 1895.

For much of the biographical matter that issues so freely from the press an analogy is needed. Hid no biography of Dr. Mookerjee, the Editor of Reir and Rayret, appeared, an explanation would have been looked for A min explanation would nave one noise for A man of his remarkable personality, who was easily first among native Indian poundists, and to many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at public officis from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivion without some expedient of a "life." The difficulties common expedient of a "life." The difficulties common of all biographers have in this case been increased by special circumstances, not the least of which is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that among Englishmen there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side understood the English character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assimilation of English modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mocker-jee temained to the last a Brahman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins arching but respect and Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that win arching but respect and approval. In consequence of this, his ideal bingrapher would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained like him in Western learning. If Bengal had produced such another man as Dr. Mookeijee, it was he who should have written be life.

the his life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly laudatory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dull page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Mookerjee are of such many importance that they might have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. To say that he writes idoonate. English is to say what is short of the truth. His diction is easy and correct, clear and straight-forward, without Oriental luxuriance or striving forward, without Oriental luxuriance or striving after effect. Perhaps he is never so char ning as when he is laying down the laws of literary form to young aspirants to fame. The letter on pinge 285, for instance, is a delightful piece of criticisms: it is delicate plane-speaking, and he accomplishes the difficult feat of telling a would-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his ardour.

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer realers to the volume itself. Intrin-must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrin must refer real-lers to the volume itself. Intrinsically at it a pook worth buying and reading.

—The Pioneer, (Allahabad) Oct. 5, 1895.

The career of "An Indian Journalist" as described by F. H. Skrue of the Indian Civil Service is exceedingly interesting.

Monkerjee's letters are marvels of pure diction which is heightened by bis nervous style.

The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those pleasant manner and which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those who are able to appreciate ment unmaried by bas hiess.—The Muhammadan, (Madras) Oct. 5, 1895.

The work leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, impartiality, or lifelike portrayal of character.

Mr. Skrine deals with his interesting subject with the unfailing instinct of the biographer. Every side of Dr. Mookeijee's complex chaileter is treated with sympathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skring's narrative certainly impresses are such the individuality of a remarkable man. Mookeyee's own letters show that he had not only acquired a command of clear and flexible English but that he had also assimilated that sturdy independence of thought and character which is supposed to be a pecuand character which is supposed to be a peculiar possession of natives of Great Britain. His reading and the stores of his general information appear to have been, considering his opportunities, little less than marvellous. One of the first to express his condolence with the family of the deceased writer was the present Vicercy, Lord Elgin. Mookerjee appears to have won the affection not only of the dignitaries with whom he came in contact, but ilso of those in low service.

but also of those in low estate.

The impression left upon the mind upon laying down the book is that of a good and able man whose career has been graphically portrayed. The Englishman, (Calcutta) Oc inher 15, 1895.

The career of an eminent Bengali editor, who ded in 1894, throws a curious light upon the tace elements and hereditary influences which affect the criticisms of Indian journal-which street the criticisms of Indian journalists on British rule.

The "Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Mookerjee," a book just edited by a distinguished civilian in Calcutta, takes us behind the scenes of Iudian journalism.

It is a narrative, written with insight and a Calcutta.

complete mastery of the facts, of how a clever youth gradually grew into one of the ablest leader-writers in Bengal, and still more gradu-ally matured into one of the fairest-minded only instances into one of the fairest-minded editors that western education in India has yet produced. If the training and experience which develop the journalist in England are sometimes varied, they seem in India to have n even wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how a great Bengali journalist is made; space for-bids us to enter upon his actual performances. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much felicity of expression, in Mr. Skrine's admirable monograph. It is characteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skrine belongs, that such a book should have issued from its ranks. Dr. Mookerjee was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—" India has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed by young and vigorous communities, but pre-sent the arid rocks and deserts of an effect sent the arid rocks and deserts of an effete civilization, hardly streed to a semblance of life by a foreign occupation dozing over its easily-gained advantages." This was true of the pre-Mutiny India of 1851. If it is no longer true of the Queen's India of 1855, we owe it in no small measure to Indian journalists like Dr. Mookerjee who have laboured, amd ome misrepresentation, to quicken the semblance of life "into a living reality.—The Times, (London) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7. Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, ickel silvern, keyless, snort winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-"NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Runs more than 28 hours with one winding. Will last a life time. Easily repairable. Others sell at double our rates, One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time, Mr. Jno. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps splendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jerks. Vir. H. Moorre of Royal Artillery from Poonamallee says:—I sold it for Rs. 16.x Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regi. from Dumdum says:—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of Patna Opium De partment says :- The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Re Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24. Real

Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 178-0.
Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, at Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector from Sankutia, says: "A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government stamped, solid silver hunting case, Royal watch with extras and full three years' guarantee, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of 2nd York Light Infantry from Purandhar says:—For the first one I golt Rs. 25; the second one I sold to a Sergeant for Rs. 28. x Pte. H. C. Bishop of L. F. L. Regt. from Kamptee says:—A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentleoffered Rs. 30 for the very same watch. Gentle-men's open faced, keyless real solid gold watch mens open navra, keyless reat solid gold watch. Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed for 3 years. Mind they are guranteed to be of real solid gold. No agents kept, all goods, sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENUINE HOMŒOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S. Homeopathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colontolah Street, Movelty in Ayurvedic Medicine. AYURVEDIC PHARMACY. 36, Lower Contpore Road, Fouzdari Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Acconcheur, practises the Ayarvecke system of medicine, after having obtained a diploma at the final examination of one of the Government medical lustitutions of the country.

SPECIFICS

SPECIFICS
for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds.
Catalogues, containing full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on application. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon,
Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt
(by post) of full accounts of diseases.
Thousands of unsolicited Testunonials from
every quarter.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas or 6 copies for a Rupee.

A Cheap Reserve for the Army By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Late Her Majesty's Service. Apply to Reis & Rayyel Office, Calcutta.

CATARRH.

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and permanently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 2% d stamp by A HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St-TORONTO, Canada.

Scientific American.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY(ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	i paid in ∝ova	mee,
Yearly	•••	•••	Ks.	12
Hair-yearly	•••			7
Quarterly	•••		"	4
Montnly	•••		Кe.	1-8
Single or samp	le Copy		Ans.	0-8
If	not paid in adi	rance.
Yearly	•••	•••	Rs.	31
Half-yearly	•••		"	10-8
Quarterly	•••		,,	6-0
Monthly	•••			2-4
Single or samp	le Copy	•••	Ans.	0-12
No addition	al charge for p	ostage	or po	eon.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphletic (carriage paid) to The "Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: I. Uckoor Dut's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

POLITICS LITERATURE REVIEW AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 204.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE SERPENT OF VERNAG. A KASHMIR LEGEND.

In the reign of Jan Mohumed, The mighty and wise Wuzeer, There dwelt a noble at Atchi-But, A noble and also a Pir.

Of course he had a daughter, Of course she was lovely and young, But the test of my lay is not of course, As you'll say when you've heard it sung.

This nobleman's daughter she fell in love. As noblemen's daughters will do ; The fortunate man had a handsome face, And a handsome fortune too.

The son of a merchant of substance. He certainly savored of trade; But nobles don't always ask questions How son-in-law's money was made.

Of course "blue blood" is a great fact, But it must occasionally fail; But-and now, perhaps, like a monkey-I'd better run after my tale.

Well, the nobleman's daughter was happy, And so was the young unlhonaire; And the terrible nonsense they chattered Was really a caution-I'll swear.

One day the young lady reflected-My lover is rich and all that; But I hope he's a thorough " bahadur," I won't wed a coward that's flat.

The next time her lover came seeking For sweet conversation and tea, The princess was grave and dejected; He wondered what 'ere it could be.

Quoth the lady, " Dear Ahmed, I've heard Of a horrible snake at Vernag, And the animal's very existence Is on your known prowess a 'dag.'

" Now go 'like a goodie' and kill him; Be worshipped by great and by small, While your loving and faithful Azizee Will worship you nice than all !"

Young Ahmed he twitled his mustachios; He didn't quite fancy the game, But he glanced at his peerless Azizee, And soon became "perfectly tame,"

" My fairest!" he answered with fervour, " My bulbul, my pishpash, and butter ! I'll slay that most, ah ! horrible serpent, Or else I'll come back on a shuiter."

"Oh, you darling !" quoth lovely Azizee, " Now, the sooner you do it the better; Pack your things, and be off to Vernag; When you get there, why, send me a letter."

Young Ahmed be twirled his mustachios, Kissed his love, took his sword, and said, " How! " Good-bye, my most peerless of maids, and Just mention my trip to Papa."

Our hero soon got to Vernag, And sought out the haunt of the snake ; How he longed, as the spot he drew near, That his sword he could honestly break !

Now, nigh to the home of the serpent There dwelt a recluse of renown, Of whose wisdom and knowledge young Ahmed Had frequently heard in the town.

The Pir as our lover diew nearer, Stepped out from his hole in the rock, And addressed him in Laguage familiar, "How goes it, my handsome young cock?

"If you are come after the serpent, I'll mention, by way of olvice, That I'd strongly advise you to drop it; You'll find he is 'dear a the price.

"Already eight gallant young fellows This serpent has quict's 'chawed;' They were all of them thou aigh ' bahadurs,' And all very neat with it a sword,

" If you'll take the adver of a party Who knows the old seeps at right well, You'll just let that serpent ilone, And thereby will give non a 'sell.'

"He's watching you und rathe water, He's thinking how nice you will taste In fact, he is ready for battle, And wishes you'd only make haste.

DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Ears, &c., no reaser how severe or long-standing, will be sent post free.—Artificial Endroms and similar appliances entirely superseded, Address THOMS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remis by postal money orders, if possible; as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

"I knew what you came for at once, and, Excuse me, I think you're a fool; But all you young fellows in love are Exempt from each ordinary rule.

"Just go back, and if Mistress Az zee Persists in her conduct inhuman, Why, take the advice of a friend, And look out for another young woman !

Young Ahmed he twirled his mustachios, Drew his sword, and gave vent to a " haw," When the snake, o'er the top of the waters, Revealed his most terrible maw.

" Just take my advice !" cried the Pir. Quoth Ahmed, "I certainly mean to ; But see what a fool I shall look, And what an expense I have been to !'

Quoth the Pir,-" These eight foolish young men Who tackled the snake in the water, Will ne'er have a chance, 1'll be bound, Of espousing a noblem in's daughter :

" You have-Now do as I tell you, Go back, and just out with the truth : If she makes any fuss she's a fool, And you are a sensible-youth."

Young Ahmed he sheathed his tulwar. And returned to fair Islamabad, He told his princess "all about it." And what an escape he had had, Azizee just ponted a little, . And vowed that his failure would fret her, Then whispered, " I think you were right, And the sooner we're married the better !' Indian Society.

WEEKLYANA.

A MERRY Christmas to all our Christian readers ! According to an Anglo-Indian.

Christmas at Home is one unique-While out in India or Mozimbique, Or other ungodly diggings you seek, It is little better than murder !

Whatever the case in other diggings, it is different in India. The severity of climate is a great bar to the true enjoyment of the festive season even " at Home." Here, besides a clement weather obviating the necessity of log fire, you have the spectacle and the satisfaction of other nationalities contributing to and taking part in the merriment You must not blame the country if you are not prepared for more than

Bearer 1 aj ark plum-poteen ; Burra, mind you, pagul . Khitmutghar ko bolo. Maheen Kurke-minch, meat superfine. Oos ki oopur tora wine Dey do. Au ask chagul Hullul kurde, - 9 burra din 1

I'ROM Christmis to Congress. They are now inseparable in India. For the last 10 years, the merry season is associated with the annual demonstration for political privileges for the Indians. Would all classes took part and peace prevailed | The delegates have been appointed and they are preparing to start. Great efforts have been made to have Bengal adequately represented specially as a Bengah will preside. With all its imperfections, we expect a practical session of the National Assembly, for no mere palavering will satisfy the rifles of the North Lushai Military Police, with 3 British officers and I mountain gun has been told off for the purpose from Fort Atjal. Small columns of 100 rifles, with one mountain gun each, will co-operate from Lungleh and Palan, and it is intended that the Assagn, Bengal, and Burma columns will meet at Kairuma's principal village on Christmas Day.

THE advent of the Prince of Peace bodes no good to the Lushais. The Chief Kairuma must be humbled to the dust, for his defiant attitude and refusal to comply with our demands for cooles. A force of 300 withdrawn."

THE new rule in Bengal is thus announced in an Extraordinary issue of the Calcutta Gazette:-

"The 17th December 1895.—The Honourable Sir Alexander Mickenzie, K.C.S.I., of the Indian Civil Service, hiving been appointed by this Excellency the Governor-General of India, with the approbation of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress of India, to be Lieutenant, Governor of the Bengai Division of the Presidency of Fort William, has this day (afternoon) assumed charge of the Office under the usual

"The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengil has been

"The Honourable the Leutenaut-Givernor of being has been pleased to make the following inpositionents:—
Captain John William Currie to be Private Secretary to the Lieutenaut-Governor of Bengil, Ciptain George Conyton Lister to be an Aide-de-Camp on the personal staff of the Lieutenaut-Givernor of Bengal."

An unusually beautiful diamond of 655 carats has been found in the Jagersfontein mine in the Orange Free State.

THE Postal insurance originally sanctioned for the Postal and Telegragh Departments, has been extended to all Government servants in subordinate positions.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has authorised, under section 54 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which, with certain other portions of the Act, has been extended to Orissa by Government Notification, dated 10th September, 1891, that from the 1st January, 1896, the payment of rent by means of postal money-order shall be allowed in the district of Pari.

Ar the Alipur Cominal Sessions, Rughu Nundan Sugh, an apcountry min, charged with having, over a monetary dispute, stabled a man to seath, has been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. The jury pronealy found him not guilty of murder. The man had no intention to call but wanting money to repay a loan for which there was a pressing or rand, in the held of the moment, he used the dagger he had in hand for all fferent purpose, and wounded his dunning creditor to death.

THE following rule which has, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor, been added to Rule 48 of the revised rules framed under section 69 of Act III of 1877 (the Indian Registration Act), is publishe thorogeneral information :-

In the case of European ladies, and gentlemen, and other persons To the case of European ladies and gentlemen and other persons of postions, regarding whose identification there can be no doubt or town for suspicion, a discretion is allowed to the registering officer, and he is empowered to relax the rule in such instances, notwithstrough that the execution may not lie personally known to him, for regard to purda mastim ladies no exemption can be allowed, and they should in all cases be required to affix the toppression of the ritumb mark either before the registering officer or in the presence of the person who identifies them. the person who identifies them.

Identification by finger prints has also been sanctioned by the Madras Government. It is a dirty system at best and we are not sure that it is the safest. The exception allowed by the Bengal Government must ere long be made more general to make the rule acceptable, if at all. By the bye, is it left to Government to introduce any form of identification?

It is gazetted that the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to prescribe that a recommendation for a nomination to one sext in his Council for making Laws and Regulations shall be made to him by the muoncipalities of Cuttack, Kenderpara, Balasore and Puri in the Orissi Division and those of Hazaribagh, Chatra, Rinchi and Puruha in the Chota Nagpur Division. In this connection we have received the following telegram from Balasore:

"At a special meeting of the Balasore Municipality convened to elect a representative for the ensuing election of a member for the Bengal Legislative Council, Bibu Ridha Charan Dis, Vice-Chairman, was elected representative with instructions to record his vote in favour of Bibu Midhusudan Dir, Plender, Cuttack. A proposal to give the municipality's vote to Riji Bukunthanath. Dey in case Babu Madhusudan Das withdraws his candidature, was opposed and ultimately Raja Baikunthanath has already sat as a member under the old nomination system. He seems to be at a discount at the present moment. Baboo Hurrybullub Biss, Government Pleader, Cuttack, as a Government servant, is, we believe, disqualified, or else he would have been a good representative of Orissa, where he has hunself fived long and prospered and where other members of his funity have been well-known. Is there no candidate from the other Division?

MACNAMARA filters have had their day in India. It is now the turn of the Pasteur filters, for which orders have been issued for the British troops.

LOND Dalhousie's letters on the first Burmese war are about to see the tight through the enterprise of Mr. George W. Forrest, who in his hunt after old books in a bookshop on the Quay at Dublin, chanced upon eighty-four of them written to Sir Arthur Phayre, the first Chief Commissioner of Burma. Mr. Forrest has published extracts from these letters in the Athenaeum.

ANOTHER discovery of the missing link! This time not in Europe but in Asia. Dr. Eugene Dubois outDarwins Durwin. As the fortunate finder, he is making much in Great Bittain of the find. Under orders of the Dutch Indian Government he was conducting explorations in Java when 3 or 4 years ago he came upon some fossil vertebrate fauna at Tumil, on the Southern slope of a range of hills, the Kenvengs, These remains found in beds of cemented volcame tuffi, consisting of clay, sand and lappitistone of fluviatile origin, he identifies as those of a large animal in form seemingly intermediate between the anthropid apes and min. They are the upper portion of a skull, a femurand two or three molar teeth. Coming from pliocene strata, they have been named "Pithecanthropus erectus." The bones have been examined by others. Sir W. M. Flower finds it difficult from the few fragments to say what they really are, but is of opinion that they showed more tendencies to the man side than any other remains he had ever seen.

OUR Monghyr correspondent writes under date J imalpore, Dec. 15:

This station was full of bustle for a fortnight from the 2nd to the 14th instant, owing to the volunteer camp of exercise. There were exercises of soits, pundes, mock-fights, &c. Volunteers came from different stations, on the railway line and were housed in tents putched on the maidan in military array. The display, however, had no effect on thieves and barglars who were more abiquitous than ever.

In the native portion of the town, named Noyagong, smallpox rages furiously. It threatens to be epidemic. The local municipality, on the recommendation of the E I. Railway Company's medical officer, has placed guards on affected houses to prevent communication with the outside public. The object evidently is to airest the march of the disease by infection. The idea may be good, but the question is, How are the patients to be treated and cared for? If all communication with the outer world be cut off, how are the inmates of the houses to live? Their perpetual confinement exposes them to more than the usual risks of attack. The intelligent natives or Baboos attached to several offices, as a rule, give intimation to the Doctor and their office-masters of an outbreak of the disease in their quarters and are not permitted to attend office during its continuance. The illiterate Behavis do not shew the least anxiety. They save themselves all trouble by allowing the disease to run its natural course, and apprehend no danger from contagion. The strict municipal regulation is calculated to do more harm than good. For one thing, all the cases are not reported.

I am sorty to write that Babu Dheeraj Karan, M. A., B. L., Government Pleader, Monghyr, is dead. He was ailing for some time from diabetes.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Diafness, Noses in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treat up it, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kindle. Fill pirticulars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newsploor press natices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before he spatic. Altress, Aural Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Special, Weatminister, London, S. W.

1, 4

NOTES & LEADERETTES,

OUR OWN NEWS.

&

TIE VEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS.

-のころのないので

THE troubles of the Turks multiply. The Turkish treasury is empty, and the Ottoman Bank refuses to make any further advances.

A trifle light as an or smoke may upset the suspicious. A sudden and intense panic, ending in a stampede, of Christians and Armenians throughout Constantinople, took place on Thursday, owing to the firing of a revolver in a private quarrel.

As Her Majesty's ship Dryad, the new guardship for the British Embassy, was possing the fort at the entrance to the Dardanelles an alarm was given and the guiners stood to their guns immediately, proving the vigilance over the defences of the Straits.

The Sultan has assued an arade decreeing the merciless punishment of all manderers and pillagers, and ordering his troops to forcibly suppress any disorders.

One thousand Armenians have taken refuge in the Black Sea ports. The Kurds are pillaging without opposition in all directions, and one hundred and sixty villages have been plundered during the last three weeks.

Thousands of Armenians in Armenia have embraced Islamism to escape death.

The extra French, Austrian and Russian guardships have arrived in the Bosphous.

A body of Turkish troops attacked the Cretan reformers, but were repulsed with a loss of twenty-four killed and thirty-six wounded. Reinforcements are going to their assistance. The latest advices state that a general rising throughout the island is feared. The Governor has asked for teinforcements.

The general situation at Constantinople is viewed with less disquiet, though reports from the provinces continue to be unsatisfactory.

BEFORE the new Eistern Question in Europe is settled, a war cloud appears in the serene horizon of the New World. President Cleveland has sent a Message to Congress in which he states that, in view of Great Britain's refusal to accept arbitration in the Venezuela frontier question, he recommends Congress to appoint a Commission to determine the true frontier; and it will be the duty of America to resist by every means in her power any attempt on the put of Great Butain to take territory which that Commission may adjudge to Venezuela. President Cleveland concludes by saying that he keenly realizes the gravity of the possible consequences of this proposal. The President prefixes this warlike utterance by a Inhanted relatition of Lord Salisbury's confection that America is giving a new and strange extension to the Monroe doctrine, which is unknown in international law. Anyhow, it is not applicable to the pending question. The Messige was most heartily applauded by the Members of Congress. The London journals are un remous in rejecting the claims set forth in President Cleveland's message as preposterous, although they recognize that they are a purty electoral move. President Cleveland, they add, has raised a grave international question. The American papers approve of the President's message, but the New York World calls it a grave blunder, and says that it is absurd to contend that Great Britain is not an American Power. It condemns the mischievous extension of the Monroe doctrine to a pality boundary dispute in South America, which would be likely to provoke endless complications in Europe; and advises the exercise of prudence in dealing with the question. The Canadian press applauds Lord Salisbury's action, and urges the Canadian Government to look to the defences of the frontier. The French papers refuse emphatically to recognize President Cleveland's assertion regarding the Monroe doctrine. The Continental press is mostly astounded at the demands

A meeting of the New York Chamber of Commerce has been summoned to protest against President Cleveland's action.

The House of Representatives on the 18th unanimously passed a Bill authorizing the President to appoint the Commission and granting one hundred thousand dollars towards the expenses of the same.

The Senate introduced a Bill granting a credit of one hundred million dollars (twenty millions sterling) for the increase of one million rifles, one thousand field guns, and five thousand fort guns. On the 19th, on a motion brought forward by Senator Morgan, supported by Senator Sherman, it was decided to refer the Venezuelan Commission Bill, which had been passed by the House of Representatives, to the Foreign Committee. Both speakers supported President Cleveland's policy, but deprecated any hasty action in the matter.

SIR Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking at Bristol, said that, although kinship does not preclude war between Britain and America, he believed that neither country wanted war, and he hoped that a peaceful and honourable result of the question at issue between the two Governments would be arrived at.

MR. Carlisle, Secretary to the American Treasury, estimates that the deficit for the current year will amount to seventeen million dollars. He proposes to cancel greenbacks and reduce the small paper currency, in order to make room for silver coins and certificates.

PARLIAMENT will meet on February 11.

THE Duchess of York has given birth to a son.

SIGNOR Crispi, speaking in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, defended the policy of Givernment in Abyssinia, and said that the defeat of the Italians at Ambalagi would change nothing, General Baratieri, he added, retained their confidence, and Government proposed to pacify the occupied provinces and fortify the frontier. After a speech by Signor Crispi, in which he engaged to abstain from further Colonial expansion, the Chamber passed credits amounting to twenty million francs towards the war in Abyassinia by a large majority.

M. Bourgeois, the French Premier, has asked for a credit of seventeen million francs for Madagascar.

The arrival last week of Lord Elgin was private and there was no guard of honour. Only the Commissioner of Police and the Chairman of the Corporation met him at the Ghat, the attendance of other officials, either there or at Government House, being dispensed with. A salute was fired and a detachment of the Body-guard escorted the Viceroy, through the Strand Road and Esplanade Row, into Government House by the north-west entrance,

Since then he has been besieged with private interviews and applications for the same purpose, and been otherwise, busy with ceremonial functions. List Saturday he presided at a fuewell Dinner at Coverument House to Sir Charles and Lidy Elliott. On Monday, the 16th, he was present at Sir Charles Elliott's farewell Garden Party at Belvedere. The same night he stood the ordeal of the Levée. Next day be unveiled the murble statue of Sir Stenart Colvin Bayley near the south of the Treasury Buildings. The Drawing Room of Lady Elgin came off on the 19th,

THE attendance at the Levée was less by about 300 than in the preceding year. Last year the number was 1,269. This time it fell to 1,009 as will be found from our following analysis of the List published in the morning papers. The hour is insuited to Asiatics. The inevitable exposure on a cold December mid-night on the grand stair-case while waiting for the garry, not to speak of the ups and downs and the birricades to prevent the inch, keeps away many from the loval bow. Are better arrangements not possible? Formerly, as now in Bombay, the Levée in Calcutta would be held in the afternoon. That was not convenient to Europeans. But the change is positively disagreeable to the natives. A return to the afternoon would also be acceptable to the general public who might enjoy from a distince the ceremony as a show.

Public Entrés 698 - Asiatics 22	6Europeans472
New Presentations 208 - Asimics 6	3 Europeans 145
Actually Present 1,009 Assutes 30	5Emopeans704
Unavoidably absent 401-Assitics13	9 Europe ins 262
For easy comparison we reproduce the analy
Private Entrée 113-Asiatics 24	Europeans 8a
Public Entiée 951-Asiatics 227	Europeans 724
New Presentations 205-Assatics 32	Europeans 173
Actually Present1,269-Asiatics283	Europeans 086
Unavoidably Absent 369-Asiatics 148	Europeans 221

... 103-Assatics... 16... Europeans... 87

Private Entiée

An extraordinary number of the "Trichmopoly District Gizettee" was issued as early as the 1st of November announcing the visit to. Trichinopoly of the Viceroy. It reproduced a notification published in its number of the 3rd of December 1886 on the occasion of the visit of the then Viceroy, for the information of Native gentlemen attending the Levée. It contains the following instructions:

"(i) The head dress should consist of a tgroan,

(i) The near drees should consist or a taroam,
(ii) The external drees should be a long rope; a waist band or girdle should be worn over or a identification; the lower limbs should be curefully covered; lones showls are madmissible.
(iii) Graduates of any University may wear their academical robes.
(iv) The feet need not be civered. If shoes or boots be worn, they must be of black polished leather."

There are not wanting Indian patriots who will resent the sartorial prescription as an unwirriantible interference. It is not so. Every Court has its regulatories. In India, under the British rule, the actives have begun ancherked to show a lamentable disregard in that behalf. It is time they should be remended of what the dress of a darnari should be. In Calcutt, we wasy much want a sumptimary regulation. It is not enough that objectionable persons should not be allowed. Those privileged to appear must be properly dressed.

MR. P. M. Mehta, M. A., C. I. E., having been recommended a secondtime by the non-official Monders of the Council of the Governor of Bombay, has been accepted as an Additional Member of the-Governor-General's Council. Another entirely new appointment. is that of Rio Silub Bilwint Rio Bouskite, Jigudae of Tonurai, in he Hoshangabad District, on the recommendation of the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces. The name of Mr. Mehta is perfectly familiar at Calcutta where he has already won glory and been fêted and lionized. The other member is not an utter stranger to us. We know him by his fither, the Lite Govindrao, who had visited this city in the seventies. We give him welcome and expect him to be as useful in Council as his immediate predecessor from the same Provinces.

WE annex the names of to use person iges and persons who are foremost in giving their substantial support to Mr. Skrine's book "An Indian Journalist : being the Life, Letters and Correspondence of Dr. Samblin C. Mankenice, Literatives of Res and Rayvet"

The New to Burnloon of Apprehedabad		copies	20
Fac Maharane Sarnomoyee		19	20
Down Ju Pick isn Lu of Dimeraon		,,	20 -
Bon Grant Sing	•••	11	10
Rije Rijen ber Nicayes & v of Burwit			20
Sved Indid In on		,,	13
Dewin Devender Nam Date of Butwa		,,	20
Rif Bahidu Sub Cunader Binerjee		,,	10
Government of Bengal, General Departmen	t*	,,	3
Director of Public Instruction, Bong if		,,	6
Raja Ranajit Singu of Nashipur			10
Maharaja Sir Luchmeshur Singh Banadoo af	Dubba	ıgı,
(sixty-five to be placed at the disposal of	the wido	wof
the deceased Doctor.)		11	75
Mr. R. D Mehta		,,	20
Director of Public Instruction, Nizim's Do	annion4	,,	10
Government of India, Home Department		,,	20

The Governments of Bombov, the Punjab, the N.-W. Provinces and the Administrations of the Central Provinces, Burma, and Assem have ordered copies of the book. A Bengali gentlemin, who does not wish to be named, having purchased and read a copy of the book, was ashamed to find that a generous Englishman had taken upon numself, the duty of preserving the memory of one of Bengal's greatest sons and paid Rs. 100 towards the expenses of the publication.

WE are grieved to learn by the last mail that that true Friend of India, Mr. James Routledge, has been unwell for several weeks. We hope that he will soon be restored to he oth and that India will long continue to receive his watchful, and sympathetic attention.

HER Majesty the Queen has approved of the appointment of Major-General Sir E. H. H. Collen to the Viceroy's Council in place of General Sir H. Brackenbury.

THE knell of the Inspector-Generalship of Registration in Bengal has been sounded. That probably accounts for the recent appointments.

. .

THERE died, in the Hooghly District, on the morning of the failed to strike Sir Charles Elliott as an exceptional 12th of December, at the age of 47, of lucomotor ataxy, Brou-Jacobey Nath Mackerine, the Lord of Bounchee. His grandfather, the late Babu Thaku tie Minkerjie, had made himself a name. Bit the grandson will not be less remembered. A genial soni, full of the milk of human kin toess, with a luge heat, the death of Biboo Janokeynath is a cidamity to his native place. Of gentleminly feelings, and liberal to a fault, his loss will be mourned by all those who ever came in contact with him in any capacity, whether as a pition, a master, a friend, a banefictor or a neighbour. We knew him long but never found him in all temper, although, suffering from an unitating chienic complaint. His puise was open to all, yet his left hand knew not what his right hand did. If he had cared for any titles, he might have long earned them by his charity. Disabled by inness, he was a ready help to all who sought it, and he exhausted his little fortune for the good of many. He expended like a private, whether in entertaining his friends or pattonizing the trades, while not nominated of the claims of the poor and the needy. Honourable in his dealings, he will be longer mourned than many of the froward bandfords, titled and untitled, of these Provinces.

THE General Commutee have recommended Mr. Hughes, on more ced pay and allowance of Rs. 500, as the nex Engineer to the Calcutta Corporation. He will draw Rs 2,200 as pay and Rs. 100 as horse allowance.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, December 21, 1895.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT.

WE come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him. Our resolve is sincerer than Mark Antony's, for it is not possible for us to steal the hearts of the citizens by propounding Cæsar's secret will and announcing the throwing open of pleasure-grounds to the public or other legacies of any kind. Marcus Square, even if it were Casar's, is not a thing of beauty yet; factid with the smell of municipal sweepings lightly covered over with loose earth and rubbish, it is still unplanted. Nor will all sections of the public be able to recreate themselves on it as on a common ground. We have it not in our power to also notify the gift-of even seventy-five depreciated Rupees to every citizen. We shall, therefore, speak right on, without exaggerating anything or glossing over any incident.

There can be no doubt that Sir Charles Elliott was a vigorous ruler. He is a man of strong individuality. Trained first in the North-West and subsequently reaping his laurels in a large Non-Regulation Province, when he came to Bengal, he found himself in altogether a different sphere. We omit, of course, his short experiences as a Member of the Supreme Council, which exerted little influence on the formation of his character. The fact can hardly be gainsaid that with his strong individuality of character he was as little suited to Bengal as Bengal with its well-trained district administrators and its superior organisation was little suited to him. The reign of law is scarcely adapted to the exhibition of vigorous individualism. Vigour of character in such a Province soon developes into vigour beyond the law. That, therefore, which was the strong point of Sir Charles Elliott's character operated as a point of Sir Charles Elliott's character operated as a positive disqualification for the rule of a Province like Bengal. He could see no fault in a Beatson Bell administering a few blows to a Zemindar's agent who had failed to keep ready a glass of milk or a few eggs for which it is ten to one the man would not have been paid. Mr. Phillips also of Mymensing fame, violating the law for hoxious notification was withdrawn amid shouts of humiliating a local Zemindar held in respect by a large tenantry and by the country besides, was, for once, taught the value of the lesson that a large onicial that required a tightening of the reins. A Rid en too, shooting at the doors and windows of a native subject of the crown for tearifying him into submission and subsequently arresting from with his own hands and dragging him for a long distance in order to make him over to the authorities for prosecution and punishment, seemed to the late ruler of Bengal as no way deserving of even a mild censure. The very vigour of Sir Charles Elliott led him to examine the judicial decision in the case of the Shambazar rioters and administer, in so far as it lay with him, a rebuke to the Judge for doing only his duty. His well-known words in another case, to the effect that "somebody should be punished" when he saw the prosecution fail against the men hauled up on suspicion, simply illustrated his impatience of the Law and its sober procedure. A crime had been perpetrated. The Police, unable to spot the real criminals, had made indiscriminate arrests. Judge and jury let the accused off. The Lieutenant-Governor became dissatisfied. His dissatisfaction was not due to the fact of an undetected crime; but it was qwing to somebody not having been punished by the Judges. A conviction, right or wrong it mattered little, was wanted. The very head of the Province betrayed an anxiety that characterises a Head Constable when he fails to send up anybody upon a crime happening.

The share which Sir Charles Elliott had in the Jury business cannot be held to have redounded to his honour. Failing to understand the very object for which the jury exists and is prized by the people, he looked upon it as a machinery for the repression of crime. Without at all acquainting himself with the opinions of men as well entitled to speak on the question as he, without, in fact, knowing that only a few years ago the Government of India had collected a large body of opinion advising extension of the jury trial, he surprised Bengal one fine morning by a notification in the Gazette, withdrawing many offences from the cognitioned of the jury. This sort of government by surprises is suited to only a ruler of despotic tendencies. Government is a more serious business than the creation of surprises by the bursting of bomb bells and feats of legendemain. Supposing Sir Charles Elliott was really moved by a f-w instances of failure on the part of native juries to convict, and that his scheme of readjusting the offences to able by juries arose out of his desire to see injustice checked at its source, what answer can he apologists give to his indifference to regulate the trials of British subjects who, it is notorious, are seldom convicted by juries composed of their own countrymen? The fulures of native juries to convit are few and far between, while European juries (all systematically to do their duty. Sir Charles would have acted justly by endeavouring to mitigate this scandal instead of taking up, in pure ignorance of facts, the question of native juries and the chances triable by them. It is impossible to suppose that an observer so acute as the late Lieutenant-Governor had not marked the scandalous failures of justice in the trials of European offenders. His reluctance, however, to take up the question must be ascribed to motives. that would not bear examination. We have no wish, however, to slay the thrice-slain. The obupon the opinions of others as on the opinions of its autocratic head for the time being.

The attitude of Sir Charles Elliott towards the was extremely hostile. The Official Secrets Act had originally been passed in England. It had stood the test of Radical criticism. Its professed object is to guard information regarding fortifications and plans and particulars regarding the army and its movements from the knowledge of the enemy. To apply the provisions of that Act against a newspaper editor for anticipating in his columns the announcement of the transfer of an official or a new appointment, is the height of absurdity. Lord Lansdowne was scarcely justified in making the observations he did from his place in Council on the occasion of adopting the English Statute for India. Sir Charles Elliott, on more than one occasion, sought to put newspaper editors into trouble by threatening them with prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act for no more heinous offence than the announcement of a transfer or an appointment before the official notification in the Gazette. For sometime he constituted himself a Guardian-General of the decency and morals of the native press of Bengal. If an expression was detected that offended him for its strength, forthwith a communique was sure to be issued calling for an explanation. The rider was seldom omitted that unless the explanation was satisfactory, the name of the paper would be removed from the Belvedere list. Sir Charles was a religious man and his relations with the Christian Missionaries were intimate. His ears and nostrils were very delicate. He detected lurking obscenity in items of medical or scientific news which, after replies and rejoinders, were found, according to his own fulwas to be only "disgusting." Even here it was his vigorous individualism that operated frequently to hoist him on his own petards. He would rule not only men, but their very expressions of anger and sorrow as well.

Su Charles' treatment of dismissed public servants showed little regard for justice. Under no other ruler have so many appeals from public servants removed by subordinate heads of departments and sections been thrown out. If a comparative statement be drawn up of the number of appeals thrown out by successive Lieutenant-Governors, Sir Charles Elliott will gain an unenviable distinction. In this respect, however, it is probably his Chief Secretary that was more to blame than he. Utterly destitute of any administrative genius, without any knowledge of the law, and thoroughly unable to grasp the details of any subject, his Chief Secretary was allowed to do an amount of mischief that is startling. "Declines to interfere" has been his stereotyped answer to appeals against sentences however papers theroughly. Many were the cases in which he administered sharp rebukes to subordinate heads. of departments and district officers for violating the dertaken. The book is not unworthy of Mr. R. C. law in the matter of depriving public servants of Dutt. The preliminary chapters show both thought bread or of injuring private citizens in respect of and research. The treatment also has been syste their character. So John, again, never allowed in mitte. The language is easy and chaste. Sentences, ferior clerks of his office to decide grave issues of however, may be detected here and there that law. Sir Charles Elhott's Secretarist, however, had want compactness and that are rather colloquial little compunctions of conscience in rejecting the This perhaps is due to haste. A quotation occurs at most earnest appeals of innocent men forced to in- p. 63, from Shakespeare, so well known that it should voluntary independence by subordinate tyranny.

government is a serious business depending as much vigour beyond the law would be furnished by his action in the matter of Abalakanta Sen's keys About a hundred books, many of them exceedingly useful, judging by their sale, were suppressed by an executive order. Abalakanta had written some keys in elucidation of a few Bengali primers for little children. In explaining the morals of a few of the stories the writer had indulged in some foolish observations on the character of British rule. The first editions, in which those observations occurred, had long been out of print. Not a copy could be obtained in the market. In the later editions the objectionable passages had been expanged. For all that, full seven years after the date of publication, the Government of Sir Charles Elliott resolved to take action. The Crown lawyers were consulted. They refused to take the responsibility of advising a criminal prosecution. Accordingly, an executive ukase was issued directing that any student found with a copy of the objectionable publications would, after the first warning, be punished with academic death. keys were intended for only little children. But Sir Charles was in no mood for distinguishing as to who can or who cannot be guilty of offences. He had no time to study the Penal Code. Not only was a new offence, viz., key-carrying, created, but a punishment, the heaviest that can be inflicted on a student, was devised for those incapable of committing any offence, under the law. The ostensible reason was the suppression of seditious literature, But the beauty of the situation was that there was no objectionable book in actual circulation that demanded suppression. Except half a dozen copies on the shelves of the Bengal Government Library not a copy could anywhere be found. The educational authorities used the order about only a couple of keys for suppressing all the publications of the poor author, including even mathematical and historical treatises and other perfectly inoffensive books. The latitude given to the Secretariat ukase was brought to the late Lieutenant-Governor's notice, but he made no sign to rectify the mistake.

In his St. Andrew's dinner speech, Sir Charles took great credit to himself for his economy. His economy, however, was so rigid that it has scriously interfered with efficiency. By reducing the salaries in the Secretariat, the way has been paved, we fear, for demoralisation. Men in responsible situations should be placed above temptation. This consideration never entered Sir Charles Elliott's head. Really, if he had a little less individualism and more respect for the opinions of others, he would have made a good provincial heutenant.

LITERATURE OF BENGAL.

EVERY one interested in the literature of Bengal most had with pleasure the appearance of a book which unjust or unreasonable. Sir John Ware Edgar professes to give a connected history of that subject. never disposed of an appeal without examining the The author is a Bengali and belongs to the Indian papers the roughly. Many were the cases in which Civil Service. No better testimonial is required of superior culture or of qualifications for the task unnot have been marked off by inverted commas. Another noted instance of Sir Charles Elliott's The words, again, have been given wrongly. It is not "puking and mewling in its mother's arms" but contestably. Bharata's hopes were not fulfilled. The mewling and puking in the nurse's arms." The professional reciters turned their back upon him. It transposition of mewling and puking, the substi-tution of 'its' for 'the' and of 'mother's' for 'nurse's' are not the trifles some take them to be. To misquote is an ugly and slovenly habit destructive of the very integrity of the literary character. These, however, are minor faults.

Mr. R. C. Dutt corrects the popular error about Bidyapati. The latter was a native of Behar and wrote or sung not in Bengali but in Hindi. The language of Bengali poetry has undergone little modification. Chandidas drew his inspiration from Bidyapati. Both belonged to the fourteenth century and were contemporaries. The difference between their language is very great. It is impossible to suppose that the language of Bidyapati is the Bengali of the fourteenth century. Mr. Dutt is certainly right in taking Chandidas as the true father of Bengali poetry.

While agreeing with much that Mr. Dutt has said on the history of the Bengali language and alphabet and endorsing, in the main, his estimates of particular authors, we cannot but say that as a history of Bengali literature, there are serious omissions in the book. The following sentences dispose of the great work of Ghanaram. "The eighteenth century produced many other poets in Bengal, and Ghanaram's voluminous work, written early in the century, has recently been published. But Ghanaram and other poets like him are little known to the reading public of Bengal. The songs of Ram Prosad and the poetry of Bharat Chandra are the greatest literary products of this century." This is just the kind of error that we expected in the book when we took it up. The great work of Ghanaram published only recently? It has, it is very true, been only printed very recently, and it is, therefore, little known to the reading public of Bengal. But published it had been, and very widely too, long before it was set up in type. As sung by professional singers, no work is more widely known than Dharma-mangala. Mukundaram's work is not recited more largely than Ghanaram's. The men, women, and children of every village in the interior know the story of Dharma-mangala by heart. It is only in the towns and cities and sub divisional head-quarters, where the people have lost much of their national traits of character and amusements as well, that Ghanaram is a comparative stringer. It has not been the lot of Ghan ir in alone to be forgotten by "the cultivated" classes of his countrymen. Mukundar in his been equally forgotten by them. The enterprise of the Burtollah book-sellers has kept Mukundurant alive for the reading classes. Professic al reciters, however, have kept him alive for the pres of the people. Ghanaram, too, has been all, ys known to the people, though he never received till lately the honour of print. The reading classe in towns and cities may have been unfamiliar with a m, But Ghanaram and his great work are more will ly known than Bharat Chandra, the court poet of R ja Krishna Chandra. It is only in the metropolatan districts of Bengal that Annada mangala is read and admired. Notwithstanding the fact of its age, it has not been taken up By any class of professional singers. Bharat intended his work to be sung, for that was the only method of publication known in his days. The repetition of the word pala at the end of his chapters, and the very naming of his work after the manner of his great predecessors, show this in- distinguished Kabiwalas whose contributions to the

was by the purest accident that a body of Calcutta amateurs adopted a portion of his story for a yatra that soon became popular, in the metropolitan districts, in the hands of one of their servants, viz., Gopal, the Uriyah, to whom, lafter one or two performances, they left their "properties" To suppose for one moment that the publication of Bharat Chandra's work has even equalled that of Ghanaram's, would betray a lamentable unacquaintance with the only national method of publication of poetical works. Mr. R. C. Dutt is a metropolitan Bengali, with a high English education, perfected in England. It is no disparagement to him to say that, brought up in English ideas, he has failed to catch the true test by which the publication of a Bengali poem is to be judged. He has, we believe, never heard a recitation, before a temple of Dharma, of Ghanaram's great work, or even of Mukundaram's Chandi on a village lawn or in the house of a substantial peasant, Hence it is that a few lines have been devoted by him to Ghanaram, while a whole chapter has been given to Bharat Chandra A cursory perusal, however, of Ghanaram will show that Bharat derived his inspiration, as regards many portions of his poem, from his great predecessor. It may be seen, again that, like Dryden disfiguring Shakespeare in his attempts to improve him, Bharat, in his attempts to retouch some of the pictures originally drawn by Ghanaram, has marred them materially. Bharat sang for the Court of a magnate. Ghanaram for the people. Many of the descriptions of Ghanaram that Bharat boldly borrowed, in passing through the crucible of the latter's mind, became tainted with the latter's besetting sin of licentiousness. The accepted estimate of Bharat's genius required to be recast after the printing of Ghanaram. The neglect to do it seriously detracts from the value of Mr. Dutt's book.

There is another omission in the volume that is more inexcusable. Rangalal Banerjee and his Padminir Upákhyana have been disposed of in three sentences. Among all those young men who sat at the feet of Iswar Gupta for learning the air of versification and cultivating the Bongali language, no one distinguished himself more than Rangalal Bancriee. The appearance of Padminir Upakhyana marked an era in the history of Bengali poetry. It represented the best specimen of work turned out by the Gupta School. There are passages in that poem which still stand unrivalled for fire and pathos in the whole range of Bengali poetry. The ode to Liberty, and the description of the field of battle with some touches borrowed from Byron's Destruct in of Sennacherib have not been surpassed by anything in Michael Dutt or Hem Chandia. A history of Bengali literature omitting a detailed reference to Rangalal and his Padmini is very like a history of English literature without a detailed reference to Moore or Campbell, or, better still, Scott, if the author believes that Rangalal's fame dwindled before that of Michael Dutt even as Scott's before Byron's. There is not a line in the poem that is dull; while as regards melody of versification, Rangalal stands immeasurably superior to Dinubandhu and Michael, about each of whom author is so eloquent.

Not a line, again, occurs in the book touching the cause of Bengali poetry rank as high as those of any poet whom the author has mentioned. The songs of Ram' Bose and others among his competitors, if collected from old men who still recite or sing them with rapturous delight, would constitute a precious volume of the best poetry in the Bengali language Unfortunately, the authors of those songs did not avail themselves of the help of the printing press, and hence Mr. R. C Dutt thinks that their productions were never published.

The contributions of Nobin Chunder Sen to Bengali poetry have been valued above those of Hem We are not surprised at this. Chandra Bancrice Puff has done its work so effectually with regard to Babu Sen that we cannot blame Mr. R. C. Dutt for endorsing the judgment of the rabble. Hem Chandra is too thoughtful a poet to be appreciated by the uncultured horde of Bengali readers. The difference is very great between Hem Chandra and Nobin. The Brahman writes sense, the Vaidya writes non-sense. Nobin Chandra, we are told, is a veritable Byron. Others say that he is the poet of the Hindu revival. As both the verdicts are equally correct, we have in Sen a very strange Byron,-a Byron, that is, full of religious fervour and prepared to worship all the saints of the Hiudu calendar. Bengal has produced many strange things, but never anything stranger.

The last chapter of the book, entitled " General Intellectual Progress" is a curious farago of prejudices and erudities. It betrays all the faults of a narrow spirit of party. While we are told that Soshi Chandra Dutt's English works come up to twelve goodly volumes, while a host of men have been mentioned, the briefest reference does not occur to the greatest Bengali of the age, viz., Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee. It is impossible to suppose that the writer is unacquainted with the fact of the very large share which Dr. Mookerjee had in building up the fame of the weekly Hindoo Patriot. Hurish Chunder was succeeded by Sambhu Chunder, and after Sambhu Chunder came Kristodas Pal. We were not prepared to see the historian of intellectual movement in Bengal lend his aid to the intrigue that sought and still seeks to keep Dr. Mookerjee's name in the background. In an account of journalism in particular, such omission is even culpable. There is little hope for Bengal when a Bengali of even admitted culture like Mr. R. C. Dutt discovers such reluctance to honour one who towered far above his contemporaries and whom the greatest of Englishmen in India and literary men of other countries loved to honour. By the side of this, the mention of Chandi Charan Banerjee as the biographer of Vidyasagar, without naming the author of that delightful volume from which Chandi Charan has derived nearly all his materials, is a small affair.

NOTICE OF BOOKS.

[Samudrik Cikibá, or the method of ascertaining the present, past, and future of men and women from an examination of the lines and marks on the palm, by Raman Krishna Chatterjee. Published by the author : '19 Mathur Sen's Garden Lane, Calcutta. 1301.] This is a work on Palmistry. Whether palmistry be a real or false science, like astrology, phrenology, and many others, is difficult to determine. Men like Kant, about whose intelligence there can be no question, believed in astrology. There was nothing unsound in the understanding of the author of phrenology.

in astrology as in phrenology. Palmistry too numbers many votaries. India, perhaps, is the home of palmistry as of astrology. There are many works extant in Sanskrit on palmistry. True or false, nobody can question that, like faces, the palms of different men present different marks. If a science can be sought to be constructed from the lines in caligraphy, if a thumb print be a true index to the man, it is the next step to study the lines and marks on the palm to learn not only the character but also the antecedents and the fortune of the man. Without vouching, therefore, for the truth of palmistry or endeavouring to demonstrate it as a superstition worthy only of weak understandings, we may observe that the book before us contains a mass of curious information or, rather, generalisations based upon the formation of the fingers and the lines and marks on the palm. We believe the present work is the first regular contribution, in Bengali, to the study of palmistry. Those desirous of verifying the generalisations may easily do so by examining not only their own palms but also those of triends and relatives. Several diagrams are given with full explanations of the marks on them. The subject has been treated in a systematic way. There are altogether 12 chapters. The entire matter is east in the form of questions and answers. The style is easy. Still one cannot hope to become a master of palmistry without close study and repeated experiments. It is necessary to bear in mind a large number of explanations or axiomatic statements. One mass study the literature of palmistry thoroughly before one can nope to apply its rules for study of character.

THE CIVIL SERVICE DINNER TO SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT.

HIS REPLY TO THE TOAST OF THE EVENING.

I never realised till to-night how inadequate language is to express what I feel as regards the manner in which my collea-gues of the Civil Savice nave assembled to bid me farewell and have received the flattering and eloquent remarks of my frient and former Secretary, Mr. Nolan, Mr. Chamber-lain remarked in a recent speech that young men liked praise in thimblefuls, middle-aged men in tea spoonfuls, and old men in ladle fuls.

My experience is, however, quite the reverse, for as a young man I am sure I could have swallowed any amount of praise without thinking it exceeded my deserts; while now, at my present ame of life, when I look back on the pas, the re-ollections that arise are c iefly those of opportunities missed, of high ideals not attained, of attempts that have proved too hard for my hands to carry out, and of the constant presence of a feeling that if there were more than 24 hours in the day, the work would have been much better done. Such recollections cannot ful to be saddening, but to this inclancioly feeling of re-trospection you have applied the bet, if not the only, remedy. For there is no judgment so severe and sound as that of the service to which one belongs, all the members of which know the details of one's career, before whom the whole of one's life lies open, and for whom the course of work is the same, the difficulties are similar, and they can thus best appreciate work done with complete "connaissance de cause." And therefore it is with mixed feelings of pride and humility that I look on the gathering of brother Civilians, betokening as it does the expression of their hearty good-will, as the highest praise I can desire, and the highest reward I can obtain. Mr. Nolan in his speech has alluded to the fact that I came five years ago as a stranger to this province, and has commented on the disadvantage under which I thus laboured. I have no doubt in my own mind that as an ordinary rule it is best for a province to have as its Lieutenant-Governor a man who is versed in its laws, customs and language, who has grown up ameng its people and knows from his youth the personnel of its governing body. Against my ignorance of these important matters I have only one advantage to adduce. In one Department of work, which has become of extreme importance and has largely developed in my time, the work of settlement, my experience as a settlement officer has been of great value. In other respects I have felt the dishas been of great value. In other respects I have left the dis-advantage of my position to be a serious one. As regards knowledge of the personnel of the service I have been greatly helped by the devotion and ability of my two Chief Secretaries; and as regards the details of district work I have endeavoured to cure it by frequent tours of inspection and by systematic and careful attention to details; and I hope sincerely that I have attained the ends aimed at, for the process has been a most laborious one. But it has Men of even vigorous intellects have been known to be believers | had its advantages too, for it has brought me into the closest contact with the officers of Government, of all ranks, in every district, and has enabled me to gain a knowledge of their life, of their difficulties, and how they have overcome them. It is this necessity of dealing with a greater mass of details which is the chief characteristic of a Civilian's duties, but it is not only in this country nor in this age of the world that the importance of administrative capacity has been felt. Long ago I took for my motto a sentence, in which his views of the chief ducies of Government were expressed, by Marcus Aurelius,-the Emperor-philosopher, ---who ruled over a wider area than Bengal, but probably not over a larger population. He wrote. "There will never be a Republic of Plato" (or as we would say, thinking gather of Sir Thomas More than of Plato, "there will never be an Utopia.") "Let it suffice then to have improved things a little, and if successful in that do not count it a small thing." This is the aim that I set before myself,—to improve things a little; and I trust that those who know me best will allow that I have made a constant and assiduous attempt, by paving attention to the details of administration, to remove friction, to oil the wheels of Government, and so order things that nothing should be done simlessly, nor done twice over unnecessarily. In this connection I would mention one secent improvement, which though small in itself, is, I believe, a valuable and fruitful change; I m an the publication of the Annual Commissioner's Report " in extenso," instead of being boiled down and abstracted in a Government Resolution. These reports are, I and abstracted in a Government resolution. These reports act, think, of great use both to the service and to the public, as showing the thoughts which are brooding in the minds of the senior officers of Government and the lines on which they would carry out administrative improvements. I have made the following list of a few of the principal items touched on in their reports for last year.

The conduct and shortcomings of the Police--the tendency to excessive severity in their punishments, the growth of unfounded charges ugainst them.

The territorial distribution of criminal cases

The defects in the administration of Criminal Justice, the danger of holding up an impossibly high standard of evidence—floud and prolonged cheers)—the worship of the Fetish of the First information at the Thana" (cheers)—the duty of the Magistrate to discover the truth of a case, not merely to weigh the preponderence of evidence. (Loud cheers).

The "Tauzi," procedure for the collection of Revenue.

The Registration of mutations in Government estates.

The objects and value of Sub-divisional Officer's tours.

The unsound character of the Provident Societies growing up in some districts.

The mismanagements of pounds and ferries by District Boards. The improvement of waterways and tow-paths, development of road-life wells and of water-supply.

The liability of certain parts of the country to listress of

The principles of land acquisition compensation.
The management of Ward's Estates.
The effects on Excise Revenue of the local condition of the people.

Defects in the certificate procedure and "knock-out" sales of Relief by emigration to the congested population.

Forest protection and forestation.

And lastly I may mention the important question of the eff.ct of the fall in the price of silver on the prices of food. (Laughter.)
All these are matters as to which there is room for Administrative Improvement, or ground for serious thought. They are types of the questions which occupy the thoughts of the senior men, and their reposshow the line they would take if they had full powers, and occurred the highest posts, for which I am assured they would be found to be fully competent, if only there were enough high posts for them to full! I trust that the juniors in the service will hear these suggestions in mind, and remember that now it is their time to the directions that reforms should take, and to frame the policy they would wish to carry out if they rise to power; for just as every soldier carries the possibility of a field-marshal's baton in he knapsack, so every Civilian should look on himself as a potenin his Finapsack, so every Civilian should look on nimerical as a potential Lieutenant-Governor. The other day one of my friends among the juniors said to me in reference to this occasion, "Give an a watchword." I am hardly justified in giving a watchword, but I real that it is not our of place for me to give advice. I am not be a superficient of the control of th speaking to-day as a Lieutenant-Governor to officers under his orders, but a a senior member of a service which he deeply loves to the junior members of the same service, and perhaps after my long ourse of years in budia I may claim to speak as one of whom it may be said that in him

Old experience doth attain,

To something of prophetic strain.

The advice then that I would give you as that which is most peculiarly needed in the present time and under the present conditions is "Cultivate unlimited patience;" for the great danger that now confronts men of our race in India, and especially the younger among us, is that we are often tempt d to give way to irritability of temper. I would venture again to quote from Marcus Aurelius a sentence of profound wisdom. It is the first sentence in the 2nd chapter of his thoughts. "Begin the day by saying to thyself, 'I shall meet with the busy body, the arrogant, the deceiful, the envious, the unsocial.' All these things happen to them by this ignorance of what is good or evil. But I who have seen the nature of the good that it is beautiful, and the bad that it is ugly, can neither the good that it is beautiful, and the bad that it is ugly, can neither be injured by any of them, nor can I be angry with my kinsman nor hate him." This spirit of philosophic calm and unlimited patience is the spirit which the juniors want when they have to face the annoyances in official life, attacks in the papers, and unreasonable opposition. I would ask you to remember in such cases the inferior education and lower position of such critics, and to look on the hostile spirit in which they act or write as their to look on the nostile spirit in which they act or write as their misfortune due to their ignorance, a failing to be forgiven rather than resented. Even the most bitter newspapers have from time to time criticisms which point out mistakes, and this may lead to improvements, and many of them combine sound views with candour and reasonableness. If, however, you find that to read any of these causes ever save irritation your best course it to leave the most of these causes exe ssive irritation your best course is to leave them unread. Cultivate the grand disdain shown in the advice which Virgil gave to Dante in the famous wards " Non ragioniam di lor ma guarda

Another point which Mr. Nolan touched on involves a principle which I hold to be most important, and which has underlain all my public actions,—"the principle of not washing dirty linen in public." I well remember in old days when and serving together in a district in the Central Provinces how Sir Alfred Lyall and I discussed together, as I trust junior. Civilians discuss now, the lines on which the State should be governed; and one point on which we were both perfectly agreed was that, if we ever rose to high positions, there was one frequent mistake we ever rose to nign positions, there was one frequent mistake we at least would never be guilty of,... I mean the grave fault of publishing censure of the officers of Government. Such a procedure not only lowers the authority of the individual officers but destroys the prestige of the service. There is no place in the world to my knowledge where the Government has publicly selated to the following at home case in doze in the first of the following the followi its officers, as I have seen it done in India. In England the Home Secretary, when he corrects a mistake or modifies a sentence, does not publish the remarks which convey his censure. are matters to be done --- if done at all --- in private. If the French Government disapproves of and removes a prefet, the sentence must become known, but no Government Resolution is blazoned abroad in the papers. Censure no doubt is necessary at times, but it should be private and confidential. Above all things beware of giving over our officers to the wolves! (Loud cheers). And in India we have a special reason for this policy, because such censure to the we have a special reason for this porcy, occasion such censure to rarely, if ever, needed. I do not speak, gentlemen, with a desire to lutter and please so friendly an audience. But the efficiency of the service is so great, and the real so conspicuous, every Magistate and Julge is so trying his level beat to do his day's work conscience only under special difficulties of climate and want of more of the real special difficulties of climate and want of more of the real special difficulties of climate and want work consciencially under special dimenties of crimare and want of companio come in solitary places, that it is quite unnecessary, if a mistake o care, to apply the stimulous of the official lash. In all the cares that I know of, where mistakes have been made, the severest an most adequate punishment has been the conscience of the officer. Great as the efficiency of the service is, there is still room for i provement and advance, and I trust that all sections ontinue to aim at the highest standard attainable. I of it will speak especially to the juniors, who should look to their seniors for encouragement, advice and example. They should remember that: future lies in their hands, and that when changes tale place as tike place they must to meet the development of the country and to read just the relations of Government with the accountry and to read just the relations of Government with the accountry and to read just the relations of Government with the accountry and to read just the relations of Government with the accountry and the relations of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry and the relationships of Government with the accountry of Government with the accountry of Government with the relationships of Government with the relationsh pirations of the people, it will be their duty to so give effect to pirations of the people, it will be their duty to so give effect to them that there may be no disturbance, and the interest of people and Govern nent may be safeguarded and advanced.

I have now only got to add my heartiest thanks for the cordial way in which Lady Elliott's name and the laudatory remarks i

Mr. Nolan about her have been received. It is quite unneces are for me to las stress on what a helpmeet she has been to me in my position in every branch, and on how I should have failed in one importent point of my duties—the social sides without her. I that the language used, and the knowledge that it is can only say that the language used, and the knowledge that it is echoed by fit and throughout the province will be the best tonic to effectually restore her to health again.

In conclusion, I have to ask you all to drink the health of my old friend and successor, Sir A. Mackenzie. I have known him for many years and have followed his long and distinguished career with the certainty that he would in time arrive at the post with the certainty that he would in time arrive at the post he is now about to take up. It seems only a short time ago-that Sir Steuart Baylev vacated4Belsedere for me, and now again I am vacating it for Sir A. Mackenzie. The objects which have been so familiar to me are packed and cleared away, and the house is being prepared for his occupation. The words of Quar Khyamm come hask to meet. Khvamm come back to me---

'Tis but a tent where takes his one day's rest A Sultan to the realm of Death addrest ;

The Sultan rises and the dark Farash Strikes and prepares it for another guest.

The "other guest" does not labour under the same disadvantage as I did. As an old member of the Bengal Service he is acquainted with the service, with its traditions, and, to some extent, with its perthe service, with its traditions, and, to some extent, with its per-sonnel. With his great abilities and after his brilliant career the one thing needed to secure his success in Bengal is your loyal and efficient co-operation after the manner in which you have given it to me. I can promise it on your behalf to him. (Loud cheers.) .

Gentlemen, I call on you to drink the health of Sir A.

BIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE'S REPLY.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who was received with loud applause, said :-- I have to thank Sir Charles Elliott for the terms in he has been good enough to propose my health, and you, gentlemen, for the cordial manner in which you have received the toast. I feel none the less that my presence here to-night calls really for apology, and that the intrusion of my extraneous personality between the Service and their guest of the evening would have been indeed unpardonable had it not been condoned by Sir Charles Elliott's expressed wish, and the consequent and courteous invitation of your Committee.

I am, I need hardly say, delighted to have an opportunity given me of meeting thus early so many members of the Service to which ham proud to belong, and with whom I look forward to pleasant and profitable association during the coming years, the more so as I have been so long absent from Bengal that a new official generation has meanwhile arisen that "knows not Joseph" and has yet to learn what to make of him. yet to learn what to make of him.

On returning once more to my province of origin 1 should like to be allowed at the outset to say this one thing---that while I have been long enough absent to shed perhaps some of my Bengal prejudices, I have not as yet either abjured Bengal principles or forgotten my Bengal friendships. (Cheers.)

Gentlemen, I appreciate to the full the difficulties of my position in the standard as a Alministrator of such traces individually such in succeeding an Administrator of such strong individuality, such bild initiative, and such consummate grasp of detail as Sir Charles Elliott; but the situation is not altogether without precedent. My old master. Sir Ashley Eden, restored the Bengal succession after a dynasty of able upcountry Governors who had introduced, as Sir Charles Elliott has introduced, many important changes into the Bengal system. But Ashley Eden found---(and I was perhaps the man who then knew most of his mind and method)--permaps the main did it is any, that he was able nevertheless to maintain a reasonable continuity of policy and administration, and under him Bengal absorbed and assimilated as reforms what it had been at first disposed to resent as innovations. I am not without hope that history will now again repeat itself. It will not indeed be my fault if it fails to do so. (Cheers.)

And I am encouraged in taking up the burden laid upon meappalling as at times it seems in prospect—by the knowledge that I shall have within reach many friendly advisers, European and Native, official and non-official,—with whom I am in cordial sympathy, and upon whose knowledge of the province up to date l

Already here I find myself surrounded by not a few familiar faces. In the chair is one of my oldest triends in India, and I rejoice to In the chair is one of my offest triends in those, and trejoice to believe that with him and with the other members of the High Court, my relations are likely to be in the future, as they always were in the past, not merely amicable but intimate. I do not recognise, I never will recognise, in this old and highly organised province, any possibility of friction, indoner, or antagonism between the Judicial and executive branches of the Administration. Their respective functions ought to be, and I believe can be, so co-ordinated as to secure the smooth and efficient action of both. We are one service, working under one Government, seeking not our own individual or sectional advantage and glory, but the common weal of the vast population committed to our charge. I look to you, my brother Civilians, to aid me in realising and maintaining this, the traditional ideal of our service --- and to that end God help us all. (Cheers.)

Passing on from the High Court I find in the Revenue Board two other old friends, unrivalled for their knowledge of the prowhice in all its parts, whom I shall hope to associate very closely with myself in the administration of that great congeries of depart-

Most of the Commissioners are old acquaintances, from the genial and judicious Forbes at Patna, to the quaintly caustic Luckman's at Dacca-while in the middle kingdom I find an old school and college mate in Grimley at Ranchi, and a quondam famine assistant in Toynbee at Bhagalpur. The same is true of many of the senior Judges and in an especial degree of the three Civil Secretaries whose services, abilities, and experience I am fortunate in retaining.

Of the younger men the acquaintance is yet to make, but I trust

we shall part eventually with as much mutual esteem and friendly regard as has brought us all together to-night to do honour to Sir-Charles Blliott. Meantime I will only assure them of this, that it has been my steadfast aim during the nine years I have held of provincial Governments to give to every subordinate full and public credit for all good work done. I find this the best way to get work done. The newspapers have at times described me as a hard and exacting task-master. But gentlemen, you will not judge me from newspapers or any other report. Judge me as you find me, and remember, too, that hitherto I have had to deal with some-what backward provinces: manned to a large and even embarrasswhat backward provinces: manned to a large and even embarrassing extent by untrained men or by effects survivals of an exploded non-regulation system; and though I had the assistance both in the Central Provinces and Burma of many officers as able and devoted as are to be found in any part of India, the "tails of the teams" took at times a lot of driving. In Bengel, with its admirably trained service and its sound traditions, I look forward to no more arduous task than that of devising, if possible, new epithets and phrases of commendation and approval.

Gentlemen. I have no nolive to announce to you save that em-

Gentlemen, I have no policy to announce to you save that embodied in my native Doric in the words " Ca'Canny." we shall together do some useful work, and the less dust we raise in the doing of it the better I think it will be for the country and for ourselves. (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

THE DOG, THE MAN, AND THE MEAT.

A FRIEND of mone and I were walking together the other day; a dog A FRIEND of mine and I were waking together the other day; a one dissued pist us after something he saw on the pavement. It was a big piece of meat. He pounced on it and swallowed it in two seconds. My companion looked at the dog with envious admiration. "My humble trend," he said, "I'll give you £5,000 for your apperite and your digestion, you are not afraid to eat; I ma." But the dog knew what happiness is made of. He declined the offer and trotted away. It is astomishing how many different people use this expression. "I It is astonishing how many different people use this expression. "I am" or "I was "afraid to eat. As the writer pens these lines five letters lie on the table before him, every one of them containing it.

amb or "I was affind to eat. As the writer pers these meaning it. Yet the persons who wrote the letters are not known to one another. Fure west, therefore, no agreement among them. Why should there be, even if they were acquainted?

No, there is nothing in it to wooder at. They went through the same experience, and express it in the most natural way, that's ait.

But what does it mean? Are people suspicious of poisoned food? No, no; that is not so. The food is not poisoned before it is eaten, but afterwards. An example will show what really occurs, and why so many are affaid to eat.

We quote from one of the letters: "One night, early in 1892," says the writer, "I was seized with dreadful pains in the pit of the stomach, and a choking sensation in the throat. I feared I was going to die. My wife called in a neighbour. They applied hot flamels and timpentine, but I got no relief. Then a doctor came and gave me medicing. He said he never saw anyone's tongue in such a condition. It was 'go a yellow colour, and covered with a shiny philegin, so thick I end have scraped it with a kinfe. I had a foul, bitter taste in the mouth, and my eyes were so duil I could scarcely see. I had a heavy pain in the side, and felt so dejected and miserable I didn't know what to do with myself. What little food I took gave me so much pain I was affaid to eat. The doctor put me on staivation det, and mjected merphine to ease the pain.

Getting no real benefit from the first doctor I saw another, who said "Getting no real benefit from the first no-tor I saw another, was said that ealar generat of the liver. He gave me medicines, but I got me better In August I went to Exmouth to see what my native air would do for me, but came back worse than even. I had bost over three stom in weight, and being tun weak or move about I used to be on the cour-most of the time. I never expected to get well, and don't care much do for me, but came buck worse thin ever. I had bost over three stone in weight, and being no weak to move about I used to be on the couch most of the time. I never expected to get well, and don't care much what became of me.

"One day in October my wife said," It appears the doctors can demothing for you, so I am going to doctor you myself. She went to the Southern Drug Stores, in Cumberwell Road, and got a houtle of Mothe Southern Drug Stores, in Cumberwell Road, and got a houtle of Mothe Southern Drug Stores, in Cumberwell Road, and got a houtle of Mothe Punt in my stomach left me, my appetite improved, and I gained som strength. Soon afterwards I was back at my work. The people in the office, seeing how well I looked, asked what had cured me, and answered Mother Seigel's Syrup. I shall be glot to reply to an inquiries about my case. (Signed) Charles Harris, 74, Beiesford Stiee Cambei well, London, December Ist, 1892."

Mr. Harris' statement goes straight to the point. Why was a afraid to eat? Because his food gave him pain without giving his strength. This was dead wrong. It was exactly the reverse of what should have been. Where a man is the proper form he gets vigour an power from his me its, and eats them with enj-y-nent and relish. If doesn't there is something the matter with him. What is it?

Now let your thoughts expand a bit, so as to take in a bioad princ ple. One man's meat is another man's poison, they say. That's a but it's only half the truth. Any man's meat is any mars person, and certain conditions. If giain never got any further than the mill hopp of the stomach is torpid, inflamed, and "ON STRIKE," what he pen? Why, your food lies in it and rots. The fermentations product poisons which get into the blood and kicks up the worst sort of me should never have bread, and if bread (or other food) ever get further than the stomach we should never have bread in the food over the body. This is indigestion and dyspepana, though it doctors call each and every trick of it by a separate name. Yet it don

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ARE universally admitted to be worth a Gainea a box, for Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as wind and Pain in the Storman Cont. Hand offer and Pain in the Sto-mach, Sick, Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drow-siness, Cold Chills, siness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite Shortners of Breath, Costiveness, Scrivy, and Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dictims and all Nervous and Trembling Senation, &c. The first dose will give relief in twenty minutes.

Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one hox of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be

knowledged to be

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For females of all ages these Pills are in valuable, as a few doses of them curv off all bumours, and bring about all that is required. No female should be without them to medicine to be found equal to Beechams-plits for removing any obstruction or riego-larity of the system. If taken according to the decentions given with each box, they will soon restore femiles of all ages to sound and robust health. This has been proved by thou-sands who have tried them, and found the benefits which are ensured by their use. For a Weak Stomich, Impaired Digestion, and all Disorders of the Laver, they act like page, a few doses will be found to work unders on the most important organs in the lage machine. no medicine to be found equal to Beecham's niders on the most important organs in the an machine.

Natives of India will find B echam's medicine ever introduced to dief notice; the European resultents also will find them of great value for cooning the blond. For throwing off fevers and preventing inflommations in hot climates, they stand without

These are Facts testified continually by members of all classes of society, ind one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Deminated is, BEECHAW'S PILLS have the Largert Sale of any Part at Medicine in the

Beecham's Magic Cough Pills.

As a remedy for Congus to general, Asthma-conclusi, Affections, Hourseness, Shortness As tremedy for Congus to general, Asthma-Bromchad Affections, Housewers, Shortness of Breath, Tightness and Oppression of the Chest, Wheezing, &c., these Pills stand univided. Let any person give Beecham's Congh Pills a trial, and the most violeent Cough will in a short time be removed

Beecham's Tooth Paste

Will recommend uself being efficacions and economical; it is packed in neat attright collapsible Tube collapsible Tube.

NO FICE.—G. Atherton & Co will forward on receipt of letter, samples at the following lates; size 9/24, at 8 unias per hox; 1-1/24, size 12 annas per hox, 2-, 9d, size 2 tupes per hox; Footh Parte 42 gunas per Tube, these rates do not include the cost of posting which will be added to the annual. will be added to the amount.

Sole Wholesale Agents for India, BURMAH & CEYLON. G. ATHERTON & CO., NEW CHINABAZAR STREET,

· CALCUTTA:

Published on the 16th September, 1895

PRICE : Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE.

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet,"

F. H. SKRINE, I.C.S. (Collector of Customs, Calcutta)

The volume, uniform with Mookeyee's Travels and Voyings in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR DEDICATION (To Sir W. W. Hunter.) HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J.C.

Atkinson, the late Mr. EFT., CS., to Bineijee, Bihn Joorish Chunder from Bineijee, the late Revd. Dr. K. M.

to Bineijee, Bihn Sinod upcasad, from Rell, the late Mijor Evans. from Binespee, the late Kewn, Dr. K. M.

10. Binespee, Bibn Sunod sprasad, from Bell, the bate Mijor Evans,
from Bell, the bate Mijor Evans, from Braddiun, Chief of
to Binayi Kushin, Reji, to Chrin, Ru Bih idin Ananda,
to Chatterjee, Mr. K. M.
from Cluber, Mr. S. R. J.
from, to Colvin, Sir Anckland, to, from Daffun and Av., the Mirquis of,
from Evans, the Honble Sir Groffith H.P. to Gogult, Bibn Kisati Mohan, to Gusse, Bibn Nibo Kisase Mohan,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Bibn Kib Prosanna,
to Gusse, Mr. W.
from Goffin, Sir Lepel,
from Gull, Babn Streda Kint, to Hill, Dr. Fitz Edward,
from Hunter, Sir W. W.
to Jeokins, Mr. Edward,
to Juce, the lite Niwah Sir Salar, to Kungh, the Lite Mr. Robert, from Losslowne, the Mirquis of,
to Live, Konnic Kinstoday, to Leva, Mr. Perev C
to Midone Live Mrs.
Live Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser,
from Misser, M. S. Ann,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,
from Misser,

from No. or that, Mahamahapadhya M. C. from Oo yan, the lare Colonel Robert. D. to. Roo, Mr. G. Venkari, App., to. Roo, the lare Sor. T. Mothova to. Roogan, Sir. Wilham. H. from R. eshery, E. et of, to., from Routtedge, Mr. James, from Rassed, Sir. W. H. to. Roo, Mr. G. Svomata, to. Sarti, the Houble A. Sashiah, to. Sarti, the Houble A. Sashiah, to. Sarti, Babu Buthu mandal, from Sarti, et al., Ph. Manendalah, to S. (1), the Houble A. Sishiah, to S. (2), Dr. Mahendialal,

from S. (3), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (4), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (5), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (6), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (7), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (8), Dr. Mahendialal,
from S. (8), Dr. Mahendialal, to Dr. erwood, Captun T. Or to, Grea Vambiey, Professor Auminus, to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
to Venezataramanich, Mr. G.
KETPERS, TELLERANS) OF CONDUNCE, from Abdus Subhan, Montre A. K. M.
Ameer Hossein, Houbble Niwab Syed.
Ardagh, Colonel Sir J. C.
Bunerjee, Ru Bahadur, Subb Chunder,
Berth, M. A.
Beich mothers, Mr. R.
Deb, Rub Manahar,
Dutt, M. O. C.
Dutt, Bun Prosaddoss,
Egin, Lord,
Ghose, Babu Norend K.

Ghosh, Bahu Kali Prasanna.
Graham, M. Wilham.
Hill, Di. Fuz Edward.
Hirdas Vihandis Desai, the late Dewan.
Linder, M. A. Krishnaswami.
Lindert, Sir John.
Minomed, Moulvi Syed.
Mitra, Mr. B. C.
Mitter, Babu Sidheshur.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Monkerjee, Riju Peary Mohan.
Kontledge, Mr. James.
Riy, Bahu E. C.
Riy, Bahu Strat Chunder,
Sunyul, Bahu Strat Chunder,
Sunyul, Bahu Dinabundho.
Siriti Libany.
Tippera, the Baia Thukur of. Tippera, the Baia Thikur of. Vimbery, Professor Amminis, Vizinage im, the Miharaja of, POSTSCRIPT.

POSISORIEL.
After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be pixed wholly at the disposal of the family of the deceased man of Orders to be made to the Business Minage, "An Indian Journalist," at the Beeress, I. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Press, T. Ucko Street, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of tremark this man -Mr. H. Bubington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October,

Private Secretary,

1895
Dr. Mookerjee was a famous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and originality about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading.—Sir Alfred W. Confr, K.C.I.E., Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, 26th September, 1895.

KCTE, Director of Public Instriction, Bengal, 26th September, 1895. It is not that amid the pressure of harassing official duties an English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so graceful tribute to the memory of a native personality as F. H. Skime has done in his biography of the kite Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, the well-known Bengal journalist (Calcutta: Thacker, Spink and Co.); not are there many who are more worths of being thus honoured than the late E-liter of Reis and Rayyet.

We may at any rate cordually agree with Mr. Skime that the story of Mookerjee's life, with all its lights and shadows, is pregnant with lissons for those who desire to know the real India.

No weekly paner, Mr. Skrine tells us, not

India.

No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not even the Hindoo Patriot, in its palmiest days under Kristodis Pil, edgived a degree of influence in any way approaching that which was soon attained by Reis and Rappet.

A man of large heart and great qualities, his death from pureumona in the early spring in the last year was a distinct and heavy loss to Indian pouriodism, and it was in churchle deem on Mr. Skrine's part to put his lafe and Leiers, if our result of Trines of Indian, (Bombia) Soutember 30, 1895.

It is taken to the life of in Indian pourious the tecomes worthy of publication; it is more rarely still for a south of publication; it is more than Angodelian in the context to be written by in Angodelian in the Lind of the Bength Robus, the life of at leist one min among Indian pourious that in the Lind of the Bength Robus, the life of at leist one min among Indian pourious that in the Lind of the Bength Robus, the life of at leist one min among Indian pourious that in the Lind of the Bength Robus, the life of at leist one min among Indian Midias Standard, (Midras) September 30, 1855. being written by in Eighshuin Fig. Midras Standard, (Madras) September 30,

1835
For late E littor of Reis and Rayves was a profund student and an accomplished writer, who has left his mark on Indian poundism. In that he has found a Civilian like Mr. Skine to record the story of his life he is more fortunate than the great Kristodis Palhouself—The Tribune, (Lahore) October 2, 1801.

1895.
For much, of the higg uplied matter that issues so freely from the press an approxist, needed. Hid is brography of Dr. Mookeger, needed. Hed as bage above O.D. Mookeyer, the Editor of Reis and Revivel, appeared, in explication worth to be been looked for A man of his remarkable personality, who was easily first among nature. Lot in portrailists, and in many respects occurred a higher plane than they did, and nooked at publy office from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to park not oblivion without some touse his insurery by the usual True difficulties common first for this case there in-frequentiates, see the com-paring tolouge this differrecurser near set in seeme that y naches to long the different of the seeme that y naches to long the different is a seeme that y not been were many admirers that y not been the were many admirers to the year of the seeme that y nach the seeme that y nach the seeme that the seeme that the seeme that the seeme that the seeme that the less a Brahman of the Brahman of the Brahman of the Brahman of the seeme the seeme notiting but respect and approprial. In consequent to this, his ideal languages would have been one of his own distinguished the seem one of his own that is not the seeme whether the seeme that it is not that it is not the seeme that it is not that it is not the seeme that it is not that it is not that it is not the seeme that it is not that it is not that it is not that it i Bengal had penduced such bandler mån ag Dr. frinderive, is eas he who thusid, have written like its.

The diagraphy is durinly appreciative within higher enditedly faulddays is given a fine single meditedly faulddays is given in the single higher of the man pladin discount there is not addit page.

In the higher to make the place of the man pladin discount there is not addit page.

In the higher to the single place of the man pladin discount there is not addit page.

In the higher to the higher of the advantage, but the single and of the gay, legists cited have been as d. To hay that he gigles idlomate. Bog the control of the routh. His system is easy and chreened; clone and straighting store, without Gigiestal leauriance or stelling for affect. Parkeys he is never so charming the place is the property of the routh. His system is routh, and other of the routh. His system is any and chreened; clone and straighting and the property of the propert

The work leaves nothing to be desired either

The work leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, impartiality, or lifelike beargrayed of character.

Mr. Skrine deals with his inseresting subject with the unfailing fustinct of the bingrapher, Beery side of Dr. Moukerjee's complex Sharacter is treated with egispathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skrine's a serative gertainly impresses me with the individuality of a generalcable man. Mookerjee's, one instead has been that he had not only acquired a command of clear and hasible English but that he had also nesificiated that sturdy independence of thought pot only acquired a command of crar and against English but that he had also assistilited that stardy independence of thought and character which is supposed to be a peculiar passession of antives of Great Britain. His reading and the stores of his general information appear to have been, considering his opportunities, little less than maryelfons. One of the first to express his condelegate with the funding his opportunities, little less than maryelfons. One of the first to express his condelegate with the funding his opportunities, little less than maryelfons, one of the first to express his condelegate present Viceroy, Lord Elgin. Monkeries appears to have won the affection and only of the dignituries with whom he came in contact, but also of those in low estate.

The impression left upon the mind upon laying down the book is that of a good and able man whose creer has been graphically pottayed.—The Englishman, (Calcutte) October 15,:1805.

The career of an eminent Bengali editor, why died in 1894, throws a curious light upon

The career of an eminent Bengali editor, who died in 1894, thraws a carious light upon the race elements and bereditory influences which affect the criticisms of Indian journal, into an British rule.

The "Bills and Letters of Dr. S. C. Mookerjoe," a back just edited by a distinguished papitan in Catherit, testen us behing the scenes of Ladian joispin flow. Indian Johrnaffen, with the hand a Calcuta, complete massery of the facts, of how actives, you've great into one of the shorest engine writers in Bongal, and anti-more great-able matured into one of the farest minded will be the state of the farest minded by a produced. If the training and experience which develop the jeurnalist is England are benefits wired, they seem in India to have an area wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how great Benzali journalist is made; space for-no aren wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show how a great Bengali journalist is made; space forbids us to enter upon his actual performance. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much folicity of expression, in Mr. Skrine's admirable immongraph. It is characteristic of the notic service to which Mr. Skrine helongs; this such a book should have issued from ute ranks. Dr. Manheripe was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—"India has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed by young and vigorous communities, but present the axid rocks and deserts of an effect cipilization, hardly stirred to a complance of life by a foreign occupation dosing over its easily-gained advantages." This was true of the Queut's India of 1895, pil oweit in no small unasure to India poursplists oweit in no small unasure to India poursplists then pisseppresentation, to enicken the name of life than huistendation. tine Dr. Mingerjee with mave indicated, name since interest the samblance of life "into a living reality.—The Times, (Lindon) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7. Quaranteed three Years.

Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate "pretty, small, open-faced, accident with, texpless, offer winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT-DP waigh, with hand setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods with the setting methods of the setting setting the setting the setting setting the setting methods with the strong with the setting with the setting setting the setting setting the setting setting with the setting setting setting the setting partment says :- The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-0. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Pretty electro cased gold chain Re. 1-8-0. Fashionable electro cased Gold Ring set with scientific diamonds, Rubies, Emraids, It Re. 1-8-0. Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector from Sanikutia, says: "A Garman, failust the diamond ring at Re. 50-2 and ruby at Rs. 30." Key winding, Government, startiged, solid silver hunting case, Mayal, timely with extras and full three years' guarasilves, for Rs. 13. Pte. G. Hawkes of and York, Light Infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Purandbar says: "For the first infantry from Randbar says: "A Corporal offered Rs. 30 for the very same watch, Gentlemu's open faced, keyless real tolid gold weekf. Rs. 30; ladies' Rs. 24; both with extras and guaranteed to be of real salid gold. No agents kept, all goods sent only by us from Bombay per V. P. P.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO.

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

GENTINE HOMCEOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S. Homaobathic Practitioner,

May be consulted by letter or personally v at his residence, 30-2, Colootolah Street, Movelty in Everyodia Modicis ATURN EDIO PHARMAIY. 35. Liver Compare Alban, Fossilir Balphines, Culcutta.

Kavraay Nagastha, Natu Sun, Physician, Surgem, Accuscher, Paracties the Aftivedic system of insticties, after having obtained adjounce at the final examination of ane of the Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS for all ordinary diseases, like Fever, Cough, Asthma, Philisia, Disbetes, &c., including diseases brought on by irregularities of kinds, Catalogues, comaining full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted on applicates es and remedies, are transmitted on applica-tion. Prescriptions, with or without medicines, sent to every part of India and Ceylon, Cape Colony, and the British Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases, Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from

every quarter.

In Pamphlet; Price 4 annas or 6 copies for a Rupee.

A Cheap Reserve for the Army By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY. Late Her Majesty's Service. Apply to Reis' 80 Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness. A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Cufferers are not generally aware that their diseases are contagious, or that they are diseases are contaginus, or that they are dise to the ariginate of living parasites in the listing membrane, of the arise and contactors rights. Microscopic, research, however, the property little that fifth sudden months in the research that the state of the sudden months in the research that the state of the sudden manual successing differences are supplied and research that the sudden successing the succession of the state of the succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the succession of the sudden succession of the succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succession of the sudden succe ment is sent in receipt of HUTTON DIROW, 43 TORONTO, Can Scientific America.

REIS &.
(PRINCE WEEKLY (ENGL.
. 🛊	٠,

Review of Pet 1.1. 13 RATES OF SUBSU If paid in Forunce;

. Yestriv ...> 1530 Quarterly4... Re. 1-8 Monthly ... Single or sample Copy •••

If not paid in sorunce, Rs. 12 " 10-8 " 6-0 tialf-yearly.... ***

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and too lines or 12 inches to the column) are charged by the space triken tip, at the rate of 4 annas a time or 8a. 2-2 an inch such injustion. The linest charges for any advertisation is 8a. 5. except Deligible, Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is 8a. 5.

Business (communications (poor paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and panil panils and (carriage paid) to The Editor of Basic Rayget.

Dryson 1, Uchper Ducks Lam, Walls

DROIT ET AVANT

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VOL. XIV.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1895.

WHOLE NO. 705.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE MEETING OF THE WITANGEMOT, A SONG OF THE HOUR,

ERIC BRIGHTEVES.

Abasar (or Bengali pieces written at leisure) by Mr. Barada Charan - Mitra, M.A., of the Civil Service, contains many short poems of merit. Mr. Mitra is a thorough master of versification. Eminently suited as the Bengali language is to almost every kind of metre, it assumes in Mitra's hands a plasticity that is remarkable. Abasar is by no means unworthy of the author whose metrical translation of the Cloud Messenger is regarded as one of the best performances in the line. It argues well for the future of Bengali literature that men of such culture as Mr. Mitra, feel a disposition for it in the midst of engrossing official duties. The book concludes wish two English sonnets---one to the Queen and the other to the Viceroy, both of which have appeared in these columns, and another piece of poetry, with which we open our present number, on the passing of Mr. Paul's resolution in Parliament for simultaneous examination of the Indian Civil Service in England and India. It deserves wider recognition.

In council met the Wise Men old, " Their brows agleam with wisdom bold, And thus their righteous minds they told, In accents deep and low, Riving the sitence of the Hall, They rang against the oaken wall, They rang, on anvil hammer's fall,-Clear, distinct and slow.

The Spokesman, chosen of the band, Deep in mind and strong of band,-, He stood in posture of command, In flowing robes bedight ; His long white heard, his face serene, His deep-brow-roofed bright grey eyes keen, And close-curve lips, and stately mien, Bespoke his manhood's height.

Upon the silence of the Hall, With hammer-weight his words did fall, Riveting truth to soul of all,-Truth and justice fair : And thus, in accents deep and low, Ontspoken, clear, distinct, and slow, With leap and break of cataract-flow, Fell his eloquence rare

" Hearken, brothers, what I say, Hearken, ere you give it 'nay', O ponder well, and win to-day The golden crown of fame ; Crown giant strength with gentleness, Crown towering mind with will to bless, With large-souled Justice' deathless grace O crown your hearts of flame !

V.

" Our tuneful bards sing, rapt in fire, Striking loud the patriot lyre, How, in chapman-like attire,

Our Viking fathers bold, Across blue ocean's milk-white foam, Like lords of sea, did dauntless roam, Scorning the joys of love and home, • . • In pirate quest of gold ; . VI.

" How, spurning ocean's angry surge, Despoiling many a lovely marge, With trusty sails their good ships large, Careering proudly flew, Past Sun-set Ocean's mountain-swell, And past the land where black men dwell, To where the day-god throws his spell In morning's rosy hue.

" Pirates from north and south they fought, And ruin red full soon they brought, Till foes, in tue, their mercy sought,-

Such vali int sea-dogs they !-Till the Sun-rise L and in groun of pain Of fends that tore her frame in twain, *With bended knees - ind not in vain-

To them for help did pray,

VIII.

" She had her sagas and her saws, She had her gods, she had her laws, Her ancient sons did win applause

. In feats of mind and arm :-Twas proud to lend a helping hand, Full proud to burst her uon hand, Yea, proud, this glorious Sun-rise Land To shield from fear and harm !

IX. 'From love of pow'r, from love of gold, from love of fame, our fathers bold Lent mighty help; and, O behold!

A goodly empire grew; Beneath their peace-dispensing might, Red feud was quelled, black wrong set right ;} A kingdom great, so fair, so bright, No monarch ever knew.

bers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, desticularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary and likely to cause confusion.

"They poured new blood into her frame,-She had been pale, and halting lame,-Till on the Sun-rise Land there came The sun-rise hue of health ; . They fed her with our sagas' lore, And with our bards' rich music-store ;-In gladness, lavish did she pour Into their lap her wealth.

XI.

" Full swift she leapt from hue to hue, Swift sped red blood her blue veins through, At heart she joy and gladness knew,-This beauteous Land of Dawn : And covered by our fathers' might, She brought forth children strong and bright, O brothers, 'twas a goodly sight, To see them 'bout her drawn !

XII

" Our brothers they ;-though outward dark, In them bright glows our fathers' spark, Attentively, O brothers hark ! In their fair cause I plead : Distant wails through midnight gloom,

Across wide ocean's thundrous boom To me have come, like voice of tomb,-

I have your wisdom's need."

XIII.

With this, he paused a breathing-space, A light shot o'er his manly grace : Expectantly upon his face, The gathered Witan hung ,-

He paused until the echoes deep Swooned and sank in silence-sleen. Then forth again high words did leap, From deepest feeling sprung

" Now, listen, Wise Men, to my tale, Made half of prean, half of wail, Glory and lapse in equal scale,

A tale of love and hate, · Struggles of honor and of self, Of high resolve and sordid pelf, Of god of truth and lying elf,-The tale I now relate

χV

"Our sites unto our brothers swore, 'We'll cherish you for ever-more,' And made this known the country o'er, In solemn pledge of love; The Sunnse Land, like morning sky, Blushed joy at face, and glowed at eye, And wafted thanks in grateful sigh To gods that dwell above

XVI

"Anon dark doubts and jealous fear Shadowed our fathers' conscience clear, They thought of m,-to them more dear,-They thought, and thoughtful grew , But justice came and chased away This gathering twilight's threatened sway, Unclouded yet remained the day, --

Then pledge they swore anew

XVII " Our dusky brothers with content

On words of truth and honor leant. The news from home to home was sent In leaping joy's throb ;-They linked their darksome brow with ours, They poured their heart in ruddy showers In rooting deep our fathers' powers, Without a groan or sob;

" Till from the White Head Peak that takes The first red ray, when Day-god wakes, And, raining gold, his splendour shakes Upon the sleeping earth, To where the lapping ocean-wave From dawn to dawn doth ceaseless lave The land of palm and coral cave. Of pearls the place of birth,-

XIX.

" The reeking sword in peace ensheathed,-With joy-bright face in smile enwreathed,-A living empire heaved and breathed, Three-hundred-million-sorted: To north, to south, to east, to west, Flashed with light its beauteous breast,-A scroll of fame, ray fringed, and prest With letters all of gold !"

Like distant thunder's muffled din. Arose a sound the Hall within, In praise of great and high Wodin,-The Speaker's voice was drowned; Full soon again came silence deep, Full soon from him high words did leng, Like waterfall from craggy steep, And through the Hall resound.

XXI.

" Alas lost faith and palsied will !-Our fathers never did fulfil The promise made, -their thoughts were still Turned upon us here ; And 'mid the triumph, glory-gut, Of present strength, they wanton burt Our brother-warriors' tenderest part, In rash disdain of fear,

XXII.

" So Hela's flame possessed their soul, Now mad, infuriate, past control, To vengeance, now their only goal, They rushed through path of blood . Drowned were mem'ries of days gone by, Drowned reverent love, and purpose high, Grimly raged from sky to sky The red unholy flood.

XXIII.

"A moment's fit ;-the plunges wild Of harshly-treated feeling child !-Full soon then foolish hearts begunted Tasted dread remorse , --Swiftly the scourge came-sure enow !-Hung-ghastly sight '-on every hough With mangled form and branded brow, Our rebel brothers' corse!

"Now came the Mother's yearning heart When father's rod had done its part, With loving strokes She snothed the smart, She kissed them in her tears ; She said in golden voice of May,-Let cease your rough-rude Viking way, Feeling hearts need gentler sway. Now love shall rule, not fears,'

XXV.

" Out rang the trumpet golden-tongue, L ke gladdening burst of spring-time song,-' It is Our will, Our sons among No caste for skin shall be : Our children dark, Our children white, Shall of Our smile have equal light, Ye holy gods, before your sight . This sacred oath take We' !"

XXVI.

The Hall was bished in silence deep,
As if encound in tranced sleep,
One almosored the great heart-leap what bear 'neath bursting ribs;—
A profice seemed to fill the Holl,
In /enu awe deep-wrapt were all;
yeth dreadsome echoes 'gainst the wall
Re-oped the speaker's lips;

XXVII

"The tomb has closed o'er many a year,
It came in hope, it died in tear,
Which flore upon its hard and sere

And was ter-withered cheek,
The tear for pane of hope deferred,—
For honor's saced pledges marred,—
For justice' truthful claims unheard,—
For patient suffering meek.

XXVIII.

" Many such years!—They came and work From rose-bued May to winter hoar;— The solemn oaths our fathers swore

A mockery still remain; And still our Mother's sacred yow, Taken with heavenward-raised brow,— O shame, that it is even now Mere empty word and vain!

XXIX.

O shame, that still our brothers weep Jpon our honor's death-like sleep,—
Our promise to the ear we keep,
And break it to the hope!

s this your curse, ye gods, for crime,—
From starry height of truth sublime,
That helpless, hopeless, we should climb

Down falsehood's slimy slope? XXX.

'In wisdom great, O brothers all!

Do you not feel, amid this Hall,
The ghostly tread, the gods' footfall,
In outraged majesty,
If dreaded Thor and fierce Wodin,
If gentle Freya and Norns thin?

This darkness weired, this ghostly din,
O brothers, hear and see "

XXXI.

Ie paused and started; his brow about ake great round pearls the sweat stood out, is if the feelings deep, devout

That rushed from heart to eye, look thought, in that tumultuous race, for there, by drops, to bring disgrace, and, rushing higher up the face,

Burst on his forehead high

XXXII.

And when relaxed the godly spell,
With heat divine their hearts did swell,
They said, with will which none could quell,
In accents deep and low,
"By Mother's oath and Wodin's name,
We'll wipe this blot of blackest shame,
We'll wear the golden crown of fame l"—
The echoes faded slow.

DEAFNESS COMPLETELY CURED! Any person suffering from Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c., may learn of a new, simple treatment, which is proving very successful in completely curing cases of all kinds. Fall pertuculars, including many unsolicited testimonials and newspaper press notices, will be sent post free on application. The system is, without doubt, the most successful ever brought before the public. Address, Airtal Specialist, Albany Buildings, 39, Victoria Street, Westminister, London, S. W.

WEEKLYANA.

It has been no merry Christmus to the Viceroy. Softening from a severe chill be his been obliged to keep to his belt. He was unable in consequence to drive in state to the races on the 24th, when his cup was run, or to go to Burnekonie for Christmus. It is a relief to learn that there is improvement in his condition.

THE Burma and Assam forces occupied, on Christmas Day, without any opposition, the village of the Lushai Chief, Karimna, which was entirely deserted.

THE December number of "Inder," the Congress organ in England, opens with the announcement-" At the time of writing it is understood that a distinguished. Muhammedan will preside over the forthcoming Session of the Indian National Congress, which will be held at Poona duting the closing days of the year." Mr. Gordon Hewart ought to have been better informed. The Banerjee President of the year, is no Mussulman by both nor a convert to Islam. He is proud of his Brahman blood, and has professed no other faith than his ancestors'. If the editor of "India" was not informed betimes of the name of the President-elect, the Congress Committees in India must answer for the misannouncement. Supposing the Hon'ble Surendra -Nath's caste and faith unknown at head quarters, who is the distinguished Mahomedan Mr. Hewart had in his mind's eye when he wrote? If his health had permitted it, a retired Bengali Judge of the Calcutta High Court, but no Mahomedan, would have led the deliberations of the Indian National Assembly of the year.

THE Viceroy's Council for making Laws will begin its Calcutta session from the 2nd of January, 1896.

In the forenoon of the 23td of December, Mr. J. Woodburn, C.S.L, of the Indian Civil Service, took upon himself, under the usual salute, a the execution of the office of Home Member vacated by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, K.C.S.I. On the 21st, Mr. C. J. Lyall, C.S.L., C.L.E., received from Mr. Woodburn the charge of the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces.

On the recommendation of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Playfair, the President of the Chamber, has been nominated by the Governor-General an Additional Member of the Supreme Legislative Canacil.

SIR Charles Paul having returned from leave and rejoined his office, has, as Advocate General, replaced Sir Guffith Evans, as a member of the Lieutenant-Governor's Council for making Laws.

SIR Alfred Croft, MA., KCIE, Director of Public Lastruction, has been re-appointed Vice Chancellor of the University of Cilcuita.

UNDER the new powers taken, the Governor-General in Council has appointed Mr. C. A. Roe, one of the Judges, the Chief Judge of the Punj di Chief Court.

Mr. E. W. Ormond, Second Judge of the Court of Small Causes, goes on leave for two months and thirty days from the 2nd of Juntary, 1895. The Judges below him get a temporary promotion in regular order. Mr. K. M. Chatterjee, the Fund Judge, becomes the Second, Mr. Aoul Hassan, the Fourth, acts as the Fund, Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman, the Additional, officiates as the Funth, while Mr. C. D. Panioty, Registrar and chief monsterial Officer, succeeds Mr. Rahman, as pro tempore Additional Judge.

THE Deputy Commissioner, for the time being, of the Bhamo District is empowered to exercise all the powers of a Political Agent under the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act (NXI of 1879) for the Prefecture of Yungchang and Sub-Prefecture of Peng-Yueh in China. As such, he is further authorized to give over any person, arrested and forwarded in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of the said Act, to be tried by the ordinary Courts of the State in which the offence was committed or is alleged to have been committed by such person.

For Lèse-majeste, the publisher and editor of the German weekly Ethische Kultur has been sentenced by the First Provisional Court to three months' detention in a fortress. The editor of the Vorwärts suffers one month's imprisonment for maintaining that the police provoked brawls in order to have a pretext for interference.

TENNIS balls are not so harmless as may be supposed. One of them has completely, shattered the iris of the eye of Mr. Albert Brassey, M. P.

NOTES & LEADERETTES.

OUR OWN NEWS.

&

THE WEEK'S TELEGRAMS IN BRIEF, WITH OCCASIONAL COMMENTS

THERE is general disquiet in business circles, and the heavy foreign selling has caused a semi-panic in the New York market, where several prominent failures have taken place. The losses are estimated at one thousand million dollars. The collapse in New York has reflected on London and the Continental Bourses. The panic is generally ascribed to President Cleveland's policy in regard to Venezuela and the unanimous adoption by the Senate, without any amendment, of the Bill passed by the House of Representatives for a commission on the Venezuela frontier question.

President Cleveland has signed the Venezuela Commission Bill. The adoption of the Bill by the Senate is ascribed to the desire of the Republicans to cast the whole responsibility in the matter on Mr. Cleveland,

The ending bankers and merchants in several cities are strongly urging Congress to exercise prudence in dealing with the Venezuelan question.

The House of Representatives have sent Mr. Cleveland's financial message to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Heavy sales of American securities continue at New York on behalf of Great Britain and the Continent, entailing a large drain on gold. The Supply of Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives advocates an increase in the tariff and a popular Bond Bill.

The tone of the American press is decidedly calmer, and the feeling towards Great Britain is more friendly. This is notably the case with the New York Tribune, which has entirely changed its tone and now urges the preservation of peace.

The utterances of the clergy from the pulpit throughout the United States on Sanaay strongly deprecated war.

It is believed at Washington that the Venezuelan dispute will eventually end in a peaceful and honourable settlement. President Cleveland's political and financial discredit is increasing, and the markets are improving though still sensitive.

PRESIDENT Cleveland has sent a fresh message to Congress, in which he states that the continued exports of gold demand immediate action to protect the reserve in the Treasury. He urges Congress not to go into recess before enacting legislation to relieve the dangers of the present emergency, and avert the sacrifice of the peoples' interests and the impaument of public credit. The Senate has passed a resolution ordering the Finance Committee to enquire as to the expediency of opening the nunts to free countge of silver. The Ways and Means Committee's bills provide for the imposition of duties which will be equivalent to sixty per cent of the M-Kinley rates on wool, woollens, and lumber; also a general increase of fifteen per cent, on the present duties, and the issue of short term Government Bonds in order to produce a gold reserve. It is believed that the silver party, especially in the Senate, will refuse to pass the bills unless large concessions are mide. The House of Representatives by a large majority have passed the new Tauff Bill, increasing the revenue by forty million dollars annually.

In response to a request from the New York World, the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York have telegraphed that they cannot but believe that the present crisis will be arranged satisfactorily, and that in both countries it will be succeeded by a revival of the old and warm friendship. Mr. Gladstone, in response to an appeal from the same quarter for a word of peace and fellowship, has telegraphed that he dare not interfere, and that only common conse is required.

ITALY is recalling the majority of her squadro from the Levant. The Powers appear to be averse to active interventing in Turkey, for the present. Partisans of the Armenians are much chabined at this.

THE fimes, in commenting on the agitation in England, favour of intervention on behalf of the Armenians, urges that it is incossible for England to act alone in the matter.

THE Turkish troops defeated the Druses on the 19th instant. Christia. Assistant Governors have been appointed at St. Sevas, Bitlis, and Erzeroum.

A MOVEMENT is observable in England in favour of the proposal by the Duke of Argyll to invite Russia to undertake the pacification of Armenia

LORD Salisbury has telegraphed to Nubar Pasha that the Queen has appointed him a Knight Commander of the Star of India, in token of Her Majesty's regard for his services in upholding cordial relations between England and Egypt.

THE Cairo correspondent of the Times states that the harmony between British and Native officers in Egypt was never so complete as at present, and that Mustapha Fehiny Pasha is continuing Nubar Pasha's policy.

THE Turkish troops have captured Zeitun. The fighting which preceded the capture of the town was of an obstinate character. The Armenians lost two thousand five hundred men, while the Turkish loss was two hundred and fifty.

THE National Union of the Transvaal British Society has addressed a manifesto to the people demanding equitable constitutional rights. There is much aguation at Johannesburg owing to rumours of a projected uprising of the foreign element, and many citizens are advising moderation.

ACCORDING to the Manchester Guardian, it is not improbable that the English agitation against Indian cotton duties may result in a 5 per cent, duty on all imported yarns and yarns spun by power machinery in British India, and a reduction of import duty on cloth from 5 to 3½ per cent. The India Office cannot too long resist the Lancashue demands.

SUNDAY is not a dies non in India. The law has ceased to recognize it as such. The prohibition too of 1852 against officials making over or assuming charge on a Sunday has been modified. On the ruling of the Accountant General that Article 254 of the Civil Service Regulations is no bar to such transfer, an order has been in ide that no charge of an office is to be assumed on a Sunday unless such a course is absolutely necessary.

WE publish in another column the finding of the District Migistrate of Hooghly, to whom it was transferred by the High Court, on the action of the District Magistrate of Nadia in the Ranaghat petroleum prosecution. We do not usually find a Magistrate in charge of a district so obedient to the law as Mr. Geake. Whether he takes a right view or not of chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code dealing with Public Nuisances and their speedy prevention and suppression, the Magistrate of Hooghly shows a judicial temper, which, if found in every Magistrate in his own district, would be an effectual answer to the cry, becoming loader and loader, for the separation of judycial and executive functions. Mr. Geake thinks the owner of the petroleum depôt, while taking the usual precautions against conflagration or explosion, often disregarded them. Yet, following the directions of the Code, he abstains from making any order or recommendation, and simply rules that the order of the Nadia Magistrate is not reasonable and proper. The prosecution, therefore, drops, for, under the Code, "no further proceedings shall be taken." But do the troubles of Aukhoy Kumar Ghose end here? Is the magistracy of Nadia precluded from issuing another modified notice such as the Magistrate of Hooghly would uphold?

Or the Behar Chiefships, Dumraon, the first in rank, has been foremost in all movements started by authority for the benefit of the Indian peoples. The chief credit of it has always been the Dewan's, but for whom the fate Miharaji or the present Miharani, would not have been so prominent. For ad his exertions for the Raj Rai Iai Prakash Lai Bahadur has been always allowed a free hand by his master and his mistress and otherwise rewarded. His services have been more than once recognized by Government by accepting him a member of the Bengal Legislative Council and conferment on him of titles of honour and distinction. He has been fortunate enough to belong to the same Emment Order of the Indian Empire to which his late master was admitted though in a lower rank, Both the Hindu and Mahomedan tenantry of Dumraon have prosounced themselves in his favour by calling him respectively Separi-quam and Mohsin-ul-Mulk. The Pandits of Benares, the beloved city of Bishweshwar, have presented him an address with a copy of Manava-dharm castra-which they describe as-" benediction in its embodied form; which is to those devoted to the acquisition of Brahma a temple for practising concentration of mind; to those who have renounced the world the temple for subjugation of the senses; to the regenerated their all; to persons even skilled in politics a deep mystery; to the weak their means of rescue; to those with uplifted rods their rod of chastisement; to treaders on the path of morality their grace; the essence of the three Vedas; the armour of the science of rule; the religious rite of those that are wedded to such rites; the righteousness of the righteous; in short, the means of happiness unto all living creatures in the world." The latest demonstration is reported from Ghazipore. The reises there held a reception in his honour. The Town Hall was decorated, and many were present.

IT is believed that Mr. Westmacott will go to the Board of Revenue when Mr. Lyall sinks into a Superintendent of the Cooch Behar State, and Mr. Oldham succeeds Mr. Westmacott as Commissioner of the Presidency Division. What is the place reserved for the Hon'ble H. J. S. Cotton ?

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, December 28, 1895. SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT AT THE CIVIL SERVICE DINNER.

SIR Charles Elliott's speech, at the farewell dinner which his brother Civilians gave him, was, no doubt, intended as a defence of his five years' administration of Bengal. From a literary point of view, the speech is almost unique. The Indian Civil Service consists of many able men whose facile pens have given to the world many able productions on all manner of subjects. An Indian Civilian, however, on his legs is quite a different person from himself with a pen. The talent for speaking, although the opportunities are many for cultivating it, rarely distinguishes him. Even set speeches are seldom made without the written copy in hand for consulting when memory fails to supply the cue. We do not know how Sir Charles acquitted himself on the occasion. But there can be no doubt that, as reported in the papers, his utterances betray a literary grace and finish that are of a high order.
Garnished with quotations from Marcus Aurelius and Virgil, and even from the Rubbayyat of Omar Khayyam, the after-dinner speech of the late Lieutenant-Governor is unquestionably a clever production not unworthy of his literary reputation. It is impossible, however, to peruse it without a sigh at the thought of the many signal failures committed by its author in the practical work of administration. No one can deny him the credit of even thorough conscientiousness and the desire of doing good, as also a capacity for grasping details. Unfortunately, a ruler of men must have other qualities than these to achieve success. Sir Charles expatiated before his hearers on the necessity of patience. But if he him- to undermine its very key-stone. It was an unholy self lacked anything more than any other, it was this very virtue of patience. He was as impatient an administrator as any we have seen. His great fault was that as soon as he conceived an idea, he could not rest without seeking to apply it in practice with little regard for the dust he would raise. A Non-Regulation Province, with very little written law to regulate its affairs, and with the unchecked will of those in power doing duty for law and precedent, was the fittest sphere for a man like him. An administration regulated by law would be the ruin of talents such as his. Institutions built up by the united wisdom of a large body of men and working without friction for years together, he adventured to retouch and reform with as little deliberation as if he were giving orders to his own steward about how a particular tree in his own garden should be trimmed or a parterre relaid and replanted. A strong reliance on his own understanding and a general idea of his own intellectual superiority were his besetting sins. The strength of constitutional Government hes in the fact of the little capacity its head for the time being has to introduce changes in the name of reform. Individual opinion has little room for play in constitutional rule. The head of a Province like Bengal is bound to fail if he seeks to regulate the administration by his own will. Vigour degenerates into lawlessness, and reliance on one's own judgment developes into personal caprice., The great fault of the late Lieutenant-Governor was his contempt for other people's opinions and his belief in his own infallibility

As a vindication of his own administration, his speech deserves to be examined with care by any one wishing to apportion him praise or blame for his several measures. Unmistakable evidences occur in it of Sir Charles Elliott's contempt for the law. One of the greatest compensations that British rule has offered to the people of India for loss of freedom is the glorious fabric of British law and British law-courts. Barring acts of State, the Sovereign herself of the Empire has to submit her claims, arising out of municipal law, to the same courts of justice that exist for the people. The same procedure regulates her suits as the suits of the subject. An aggrieved subject may put her Majesty into court for a breach, actual or imagined, of his rights, with as much freedom as if he were proceeding against a fellow-subject. Asiatic legislators have, it is true, spoken of the divinity of the law and represented it as of more authority than the king himself. Passages may be quoted from Manu about the power of the law to command the king; but Manu himself, in his most liberal mood, would have stared with wonder at the attempt of a subject to sue the sovereign or at the sovereign's resolve to submit to the arbitrament of his own judges in such a dispute. The strongest pillar of British rule in India is not British justice, but British justice as dealt out according to British law by the British courts, civil and criminal. Sir Charles Elliott might be the justest of men, but it was not his justice that could satisfy the people. Justice, administered according to the law of the realm by Judges and Magistrates conforming to that law, is, perhaps, the most precious boon that British rule has given to India. Any attempt to tamper with that boon cannot fail to be viewed with alarm by the whole country. The late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in seeking to strengthen British rule, sought attempt, and in so far as it succeeded, it should be deplored by all honest men. No measure of good will towards the people, no capacity for mastering the details of administrative measures, even no real reform of abuses, could compensate for such a grave blunder. The apologists of Sir Charles Elliott, while glibly speaking of his virtues, fail to realise this fact. Read the following, uttered by Sir Charles Elliott himself, amid the loud plaudits, if the newspaper reports are correct, of his hearers belonging to the same Service as himself :-

" I would mention one recent improvement which, though small in itself, is, I believe, a valuable and fruitful change; I mean the publication of the Annual Commissioner's Report in extenso instead of being boiled down and abstracted in a Government Reso-These reports are, I think, of great use both to the Service and to the public, as showing the thoughts which are brooding in the minds of the senior Officers of Government and the lines on which they would carry out administrative improvement. I have made the following list of a few of the principal items touched on in their reports for last year: the conduct and shortcomings of the police; the tendency to excessive severity in their punishments, the growth of unfounded charges against them; the territorial distribution of criminal cases; the defects in the administration of criminal justice; the danger of holding up an impossibly high standard of evidence-(loud and prolonged cheers), --- the worship of the fetish of the first Information at the Thana --- (cheers), --- the duty of the Magistrate to discover the truth of a case, not merely to weigh preponderance of evidence -- (loud cheers); -- the 'Tauzi' procedure for the collection of Revenue; the registration of mutations in Government estates; the objects and value of sub-divisional officers' tours; the unsound character of the Provident Societies growing up in some districts; the memanagement of pounds and ferries by District Boards; the improvement of waterways and towpaths, development of roadside wells and of water-supply; the liability of certain parts of the country to distress by famine; the principles of land acquisition compensation; the management of Wards' Estates; the effects on Excise Revenue on the condition of the people; defects in the certificate procedure and 'knockout' sales of land; relief by emigration to state procedure and 'knockout' sales of land; relief by emigration to the congested population; forest protection and afforestation. And lastly, I may mention the important question of the effect of the fall in the price of silver on the prices of food, (Laughter.) All these are matters as to which there is room for administrative improvement, or ground for serious thought. They are types of the questions which occupy the thoughts of the senior men, and their reports show the line they would rake if the head full. the line they would take if they had full powers, and occupied the the line they would take it they had the powers, and occupied the highest posts, for which I am assured they would be found to be fully competent, if only there were enough high posts for them to fill! I trust that the juniors in the Service will bear these suggestions in mind, and remember that now is their time to consider the directions that reforms should take, and to frame the policy they would wish to carry out if they rise to power; for just as every soldier carries the possibility of a field-marshal's baton in the knapsack, so every Civilian should look on himself as a potential Lieutenant-Governor."

In presenting the topics included in the reports of Divisional Commissioners, Sir Charles did not treat his audience to a mere abstract of contents of a particular species of public documents, but wished to impress it upon his hearers that the heads touched offered types of questions that engaged the thoughts of the District administrations and that they pointed out the directions that reform should take, and that, therefore, the younger men in the Service should, by their light, frame the policy they should wish to carry out if they rose to power. "The defects in the administration of Criminal Justice; the danger of holding up an impossibly high standard of evidence; the worship of the fetish of the 'first Information at the Thana'; the duty of the Magistrate to discover the truth of a case, not merely to weigh preponderance of evidence,"-these short heads embody a policy utterly subversive of British law as administered by British Judges and Magistrates trained in that law. It has been the glory of Britain to build up a criminal law, both substantive and adjective, that is the admiration of the whole civilised world. The wisest and greatest Englishmen have laboured in the cause, supplying the seeks to taint justice at its very source. And this materials out of which that grand edifice has been is the great Proconsul whose praises have been constructed. Guilt, whatsoever its moral certainty, is sung by friendly critics! Strongly opposed as we are incapable of being punished unless legally proved. The man accused of an offence must be presumed innocent until his offence is established beyond the possibility of a doubt. Hearsay or general report is rigidly excluded. Either direct evidence or the most correct inferences from proved circumstances must form the basis of a conviction or sentence. The guilty may escape, but innocence should on no account suffer. The greatest jurists have held that the publicity, worry, disgrace, and expenses of a criminal trial exercise, even on the most deprayed, an effect as deterrent as that of a conviction followed by sentence. Even this constitutes the chief vindication of the doctrine that the escape of even ten guilty persons is not so baneful as the conviction of a single innocent man. Sir Charles Elliott, with all his learning, is ignorant of the principles of criminal jurisprudence as also of the utility of those rules of evidence upon which courts of justice act. Sir Rivans Thompson had been a successful District and Session Judge. There was no danger, under his rule, of any interference with officials engaged in administering the law. Sir Ashley Eden and Sir Steuart Bayley were both Bengal Civilians. Though not lawyers themselves, they had been trained in a respect for the law and its recognised methods of application. The late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal had achieved his laurels in districts and provinces administered according to the Non-Regulation system. He had seen his own will do duty for the law. He had never listened to the arguments of Counsel or even of petty Muktears in disposing of such matters, civil or criminal, as came before him. Hence Bengal with her law-governed constitution was utterly distasteful to him. He could not brook the idea that any Magistrate should be prevented from punishing a person sent up by the Police after sufficient enquiry. The thought that rules of evidence should operate to exclude this or that fact or paper from the cognizance of the court was gall and wormwood to him. Ac-cording to him, the Magistrate, when trying a prisoner, should not be bound by any law to proceed in the known groove which the wisdom of even Indian legislators has provided. On the other hand, the Magistrate should be free as the mountain air to do whatever he pleased for discovering the truth of the matter before him. The Indian Evidence Act has reduced the entire Law of Evidence into only a hundred and sixty-seven short sections. Even this is too much for Sir Charles's Magistrates. He wants to caution them against the "danger of holding up an impossibly high standard of evidence.' They are, therefore, for winning his praise, to con-vict persons placed before them even when the evidence is weak! If, instead of general advice which, however ably conched in words, cannot, from its very nature, fail to be somewhat vague, Sir Charles Elliott had written a little book on the exact measure of evidence that would justify a conviction, he would certainly have achieved a lasting fame under terms exceedingly cheap.

Seriously speaking, no advice could be more baneful in its consequences upon both the people and the Government than what the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal dared to openly give to his brethren of the Service. As we have already said, it weakens the very foundations of British rule It to the mischievous policy of Sir Charles Elliott in reducing the value of the highest compensation that British rule has granted to the people of India for their loss of freedom, we would not wish Sir Charles to stand a trial, for even a petty offence—the gen-tlemanly one, for example, of knocking down, when hungry, a disobedient native—before one of his own model Magistrates capable of acting up to his sound advice about the standard of evidence needed for a confiction.

THE PANDITS OF BENGAL AND SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT.

For the grant that Sir Charles Elliott's Government made for the encouragement of Sanskrit learning in Bengal, the great Pandits of this province presented to him, on the eve of his retirement, a couple of addresses in Sanskrit prose and verse, acknowledging their obligations. The Pandits eschew politics altogether, and confine themselves to matters concerning them alone. The addresses, though indulging in a little fulsome adulation, are innocent enough. Yet the Pandits and their leaders are being abused by a certain section of the Calcutta press, in no measured terms, Mahamahopadhya Mahesh Chandra Nyaratna having the largest share. We are not concerned in vindicating or taking exception to what he has done. To those, however, who are pouring their Billingsgate on him, it ought to be obvious that, even on the supposition that he was the prime mover, it does not follow that he deserves nothing but censure. He had tried previous rulers for pecuniary aids for the same purpose. They promised but did nothing. Sir Charles Elliott took up the question earnestly, and, in spite of the inevitable circumlocution of red tape, was able to pass his final orders ere half the term of his office had expired. The neo-Hindu exponents of the Press may not attach any value to the grants-in-aid made by the Government of Sir Charles. Their idea perhaps is that the Pandits should live on air, or on something still less substantial, as, for instance, fine phrases. Looked at from the point of view of practical men, Sir Charles Elliott gave great encouragement to the cultivation of Sanskrit, and, according to the rules of morality taught by the Hindu shastras, it was clearly incumbent on the Pandits to acknowledge the debt of gratitude to their benefactor, Much has been made of the fact that, although Pandit Nyaratna had settled at Benares, yet he came down again to the sphere of his political activity to arrange what has been called the "Puja" of Charles Elliott. Admitting that the Pandit had left Calcutta for good, the fact that he returned to the metropolis, and either originated or joined in the recent demonstration, does not necessarily imply anything discreditable to him.

How the movement originated among the Pandits is not known to us. Mahamahopadhya Nyaratna was perhaps its leading spirit. But long before the late Lieutenant-Governor laid down the reins of office, the opinion had become general among the Pandits of Nadia that they were bound in duty to express their gratitude to him, They intended to ask Sir Charles to visit their town and to be lionised there. But the illness and the untimely death of their leader, Babu Mahendra Nath Bhattacharjea, upset their plans. About the end of November last, the Pandits of the other parts of Bengal been asked to join. They held a meeting to determine their course of action. They decided that it would not be consistent with their position to accept a footing of equality with the Pandits of other places. Simultaneously they felt it absolutely incumbent on them to determine the course of the c incumbent on them to do something for Sir Charles Elliott. Such a demonstration was necessary, not only as a matter of duty but also as one of policy. The stipends granted for the students and the Pandits of Nadia, have not yet been made permanent. They have been sanctioned as a tentative measure. Such being the case, it would have been simple madness on the part of the Nadia Pandits to refrain from a movement for honouring Sir Charles Elliott. We do not mean to say that the authorities would have actually gone so far as to withdraw the grants to punish the contumacious Pandits. At the same time we could not condemn the professors of the toles if they entertained such apprehensions. As a matter of fact, the line of action they took was dictated not so much by considerations of their interests as a class, as by their ideas of duty Gratitude is an irksome feeling to many men in this world. But, according to our holy legislators, there is not a greater sin than ingratitude.

Some of our contemporaries have condemned the action of Dr. Jogendra Nath Bhuttacharya for his part in the demonstration. The Doctor however had little choice in the matter. He had been in a manner forced by his townsmen to accept the office of President of the Nadia College of Pandits vacated by the death of his brother. He tried his best to have his fellow-townsman Rai Bahadoor Dwarka Nath Bhattacharya, M.A., B.L., for the office. But the Rai Bahadoor persistently refused the honour, and the general opinion that it was due to the Doctor was so strong that he had to yield. Though much older in age, the Rai Bahadoor has agreed to be one of the other office-bearers of the institution. He accompanied the deputation that waited on Sir Charles Elliott. It is not true that the great Pandits of Nadia kept themselves aloof from the movement. They joined it one and all, despite all efforts to the contrary.

The deputation consisted of at least one hundred of the leading Pandits, hailing from every part of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. There were present not only most of the Mahamahopadhyas but also most of the untitled giants of Sanskrit learning. After introducing them to Sir Charles Elliott, Mahamahopadhya Mahesh Chandra made a brief speech observing that it was in every sense a representative gathering of Pandits, the like of which had never before greeted any previous ruler. The suc-cess of the deputation was somewhat marred by the failure of Pandit Dukhmochan Jha to read the address with sufficient fluency. He is a veteran scholar, and is the eldest son of the great Sanskritist of the last generation Pandit Bapu Jan Jha. Age has impaired the eyes of Dukhmochan, and the Pandit Sabha of Calcutta made a mistake in selecting him as the reader. However, the disappointment caused by the Mithila Pandit was wellnigh removed by the fervour with which Dr. Jogendranath Bhuttacharya as President of the Nadia College of Pandits, read the addressof the Society. After the reading of the addressheld a meeting at Calcutta and manimously resolved es, Sir Charles Elliott replied, briefly explainupon an address. The Pandits of Nadia had ing the origin of the scheme for encouraging Sanskrit toles. At the request of Sir Charles Elliott, Dr. Bhuttacharya explained the purport in Bengali. The deputation ended with the reciting of some verses composed extempore by Pandit Mahesh Chander Chudamani, the family priest of the Maharaja of Dinajpore.

THE LITERATURE OF BENGAL.

A European collorgue of Mr. R. C. Dutt, of the Indian Civil Service, expressed surprise at the "modernity" of much of the old Bengali poetry quoted in his book "The Literature of Bengal," and, being under the impression that Bengali was one of the latest of civilized languages, told Mr. Dutt so, adding that the prose specimens in legal deeds of 120 years back shew that neither the grammar nor the syntax of the language was then in a settled state. We annex Mr. Dutt's reply. It explains some of the points touched upon in the book. He writes:---

"Bidyapati was not a Bengali poet. He was a native of Behar, a Behari poet, and wrote in Hindi like other Behari poets. It is a common mistake to call him the father of Bengali poetry; he is not that in any sense of the phrase, except that his poetry and Hindi inspired Chandidas, the father of Bengali poetry.

John Beames made a mistake inchis Grammar of Aryan Languages in considering Bidyapati a Bengali poet, and inferring that his language (Hindi) was the language of Bengal in the 14th century. Grierson, with whom I had a talk on the subject, will tell you exactly Bidyapati's place among Behari poets;—he has no place among Bengali poets.

The poetry of Chandidas who flourished almost contemporaneously with Bidyapati shews that the language of Bengal in the 14th century was what it is now,---Bengali, not Hindi.

'Not recognizing Bidyapati to be a Bengali poet I have not devoted a chapter to him. I have noticed his poetry in the chapter on Chandidas because Chandidas is vastly indebted to the Behar poet and borrows his inspiration from him.

Many Bengali songs are current in Bengal and occasionally appear in print which go under the name of Bidyapati. These are only Bengali imitations of Bidyapati's Hindi poetry, for Bidyapati wrote nothing in Bengali. There is no reason to suppose that Bidyapati's Hindi poems which I have quoted in my book are modernized.

Similarly there is no reason to suppose that Chandidas's Bengali songs which I have quoted in my book are modernized. The language of poetry was in Bengal much the same in the 15th and 16th and 17th centuries as it is now, except that it is a little more Sanscritised in our own age. See the passage in p. 57 taken from a MSS. Ramayana of 1693. The passage, I believe, was the same as Krittibas wrote it in the 15th or 16th century, and it is not obsolete in any wav,—there is not a word in it which is obsolete. This proves that the literary Bengali language is some centuries old, and not of modern growth, and that it was much the same in the 15th and 16th centuries as it is now. Read again the several passages quoted from Mukundaram of the 17th century in pages 96 to 113. They are quoted from an edition compiled from old MSS. as I have said in p. 103, and yet they are not obsolete.

What you say about Bengali being of recent formation is true of Bengali prose. We had no Bengali prose literature before this century, and the official documents of previous centuries, of which you speak may well be obsolete to some extent now. Ram Mohan Roy's prose which I have quoted in pages 142 and 143 strikes us as somewhat antiquated, and I have said so at page 139. Even Iswar Gupta's prose quoted in pp. 158 and 159, though scarcely half a century old, is to us what English prose previous to Queen Anne's time is to modern Englishmen. Vidyasagar and Akhoy Kumar have done for Bengali prose what Addison and his contemporaries have done for English prose.

Among the later chapters of my book, Chapter XVII on dramatic writers will probably interest you as you have taken a great deal of interest in modern Bengali Drama. And you will be amused to read in that chapter under what influences a Hindu-College Young Bengal like Madhu Sudan Datta for the first time turned to the vernacular of his country afterwainly trying to win his laurels in English. The life of Madhu Sudan Datta (chapter XVIII) is instructive for this reason. There is no doubt that Young Bengal neglected his mother tongue for 40 years after the establishment of the Hindu College, but I do not regret his partiality for western thought and western languages. New ideas and a new inspiration were sadly required after the effete literature of the time of Bharat Chandra Rai, and modern Bengali writers have drawn that inspiration and will continue to draw it for years to come from the west, through the English language. For this remon, English education is a help to us for the development of Bengali literature."

In connection with the book and our notice of it, we have received the following letter from a diligent student of Bengali:

Sir, --- Mr. R. C. Dutt's recent publication, Literature of Bengat, has been reviewed elaborately in the last issue of your much esteemed journal. The critical observations are, indeed, worthy of the paper. There are a few points in the book, as well as in your remarks, on which, I think, it is necessary to say a few words.

You remark that "the songs of Ram Bose and others among his competitors, if collected from the old men who still recite or sing them with rapturous delight," &c. The songs of these immortal Bengali bards and Kabiwalas have already been collected and published by Kedarnath Bandyopadhya of Dakhineshwar and can be had at the market at Re. 1-4. It is a neatly got-up book with nearly all the well-known songs of the famous Kabiwalas of Bengal, namely, (1) Haru Thakur, (2) Ram Bose, (3) Shatu Roy, (4) Gangadhur Mookerjee, (5) Nalu Nandalala, (6) Bholanath, (7) Antony Saheb, (8) Nilu Patni, (9) Rashu Nrishingha, (10) Kristo Bhattya, &c., &c. Short accounts are given of the lives of these immortal ten and their satellites. These songs were at first collected by the late Ishwar Chandra Gupta, the Editor of Sambad Prabbakar, but were not published by him. In 1890 they were published with an excellent review by an eminent literary man of Bengal, a profound Sanskrit scholar. Mr. Dutt, being an England-returned Bengali and a Civilian to boot, is, I am afraid, ignorant of the existence of this book, which, no doubt, is a telling sign of the revival of Bengali Literature

As regards the unfortunate Ranga Lal Banerjea, the remarks which you have been pleased to make, are worthy of you. Every Bengali, interested in the welfare of his mother-tongue, ought to feel grateful to you. We are really deficient in appreciating true poetic faculty and genius. We often fail to honour merit. Mr. R. C. Dutt is carried away by his devotion to Michael Datta so effectually as to do an injustice to Ranga Lal Banerjee.

In the paragraph on journalism, in the last chapter of the book, Mr. Dutt, the President of the Bengal Academy of Literature, barely mentions the immortal Hurish Chunder Mookerjee, and Kristodas Pal too ... "the self-seeking demagogue" of the Calcutta University Magazine. But a notice of journalism in Bengal, without the names of the late lamented Grish Chandra Ghosh, the founder of both the Hindoo Patriot and the Bengales (the latter is now conducted by a friend of Mr. Dutt) and Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, the most celebrated paragraphist and leaderwriter that the Eastern world, (why not Western also, on the authority of the distinguished Professor Vambéry?) has ever seen and produced, is very like the play of Hamlet with the part of the Prince of Denmark left out. Mr. R. C. Dutt, perhaps, does not know the names of these immortal men. The former, snatched away somewhat prematurely by the hand of death, is unknown to the Philistines. But what of the latter? Is he also unknown to the Philistines of Babudom? We may not, however, fall foul Babudom throughout the length and breadth of the land. Bengal takes no pleasure in honouring her greatest sons. Like Sir Henry Taylor, the author of Philip Van Artevelde, we must rest content with the thought stat "the world knows nothing of its greatest men."

Again, nearly all the extracts of Mr. R. C. Dutt's book, from the works of Bengali worers, are taken, without a word of acknowledgment, from Pan At Ramgati Nayaratna's famous work on the same subject. M Dutt's book is an abridged English translation of Pandir Nyaratna's. The amount of knowledge required for wing such works satisfactorily can hardly be found among mr f men of Bengal. A sound Sanskrit scholar like the late lamenta Pandit may undertake the task, but still there are many obstacles in the way. Mr. Dutt's book may satisfy superficial readers, but it is not for those who know anything of the subject.

The book is dedicated to a relative of Mr. Dutt. Rai Sashi Chandra Dutt. Bahadur, the famous author of The Reminiscences of a Kerani's Life, for whose sake Rai Kristodas Pal Bahadur once emancipated himself from the restrictions of truth and even probability. The chapters of the Literature of Bengal, were first published in the Bengal Magazine now defunct, edited by the late lamented Rev. Lalbehari Dey, in three consecutive years, 1874, 1875 and 1876, and not in 1877 as Mr. Dutt mentions in his preface very forgetfully. They appeared under the nom-de-plume Arcydae. The last chapter is disfigured by numerous instances of the author's narrow prejudices. A good advertisement occurs of the literary products of the Rambagan Dutt family, the author's own. The fact is, that the subject is such that Mr. R. C. Dutt's qualifications fall short of it. Though a Bengali, he is a cockney by birth. He has studied the subject in later life. He has certainly shown the book-making art in producing the volume, but no originality nor research. The investigations, as regards many points, have not been advanced by even one step beyond the line reached by Pandit Ramgati Nayaratna. The criticisms, again, of most of the Bengali authors, besides being superficial, are stale. The criticisms by Ramgati Nayaratna are certainly more interesting and pleasanter reading. It would have enhanced the value of Mr. R. C. Dutt's book if he had translated the condemnatory portions of the Pandit's critiques on some of the modern Bengali poets.

S. C. SANYAL.

THE DECADENT "SIR."

Ir is perhaps inevitable that English should become vulgarised the more we educate the "masses." Great, however, as have been the benefits of cheap schools in the direction of raising the the hearing of cheap schools in the direction of change can standard of intelligence and diminishing the statistics of crime, no one can help viewing with regret the extraordinary change they one can help viewing with regret the extraordinary change they have produced in the phrascology of the people. David Macrae describes the American negro as "chitching at a polysyllable as a drowning man clutches at a straw." These words apply forcibly to the better class of British working men to-day—not, of course, to the brutalised navyy, whose vocabulary is still supposed to be limited to 200 words, chiefly adjectives, but to the intelligent workman who reads the newspapers and attends political meetings. It is difficult, by the way, to gauge the influence which newspapers and platform orators have exercised in moulding the remarkable English of the "New Proletarian." But the fact remains that a man of this gaype uses as many long words as an English speaking man of this ctype uses as many long words as an English speaking man of this stype uses as many long words as an English speaking Native of Bengal, and often with as little regard to their mean, ing or appropriateness. "Turn" becomes "revolve," "see" "perceive," and "mean" "intend," while words like "anticipate," "incomprehensible" (which frequently has a double application) "beneficial," "qualify," and a hundred other sonorous expressions are scattered plentifully throughout their daily speech.

Strange and sad are the metamorphoes which a number of these classical phrases undergo through repeated application to debased uses. The most serious danger threatening them is, however, their total elimination from the vocabulary of the politic. Wild horses will not induce people of refinement to associate themselves with usages which have been trailed in the gutter; and the tendency is of Mr. Dutt, for an unwillingness to de justice to Ghosh and borth as possible. Slang is the extreme antithesis of elaborate diction. In their endeavour to escape from the latter, the "hupper suckles," as Jeames de la Pluche would say, have drawn upon the resources of the former, and from them slang terms have descended, like the gentle rain from Heaven, upon the places beneath. Before the approach of slang many of the older and statelier forms of address have practically disappeared. Of none, perhaps, is the extinction more to be regretted than of the characteristically English "Sir." We do not need to be reminded of the fact that extinction mo English "Sir." it is still used upon formal occasions, and as the medium by which to approach a social or official superior. But it is unnecessary to remind any one that as an embellishment of ordinary conversation ite has ceased to exist. In reply to the reader who is not laudator tempora acts, and who sees nothing fine in the word, it is sufficient to temporu acts, and who sees nothing fine in the word, it is sufficient to refer to Boswell's Johnson, where it is seen in its best and most varied applications. "Mr. Johnson," cries Boswell on being introduced to the great man, "I do indeed come from Scotland, but I cannot help it." "That, Sir," is the retort, "that Sir, I find, is what a very great many of your countrymen cannot help." "Sir," savs Mr. Boswell at their next meeting, "I am afraid that I intrude upon you." "Sir," replies the Doctor, "I am obliged to any man who visits me." "Why yes, Sir," observed the lexicographer on another notable occasion, "Sherry (Sheridan) is dull, naturally dull; but it must have taken him a long time to become what we see him. Such an excess of stupidity, Sir, is not in nature." Here we see him. Such an excess of stupidity, Sir, is not in nature." Here we have the "Sir" depreciatory, the "Sir" courteous, and the "Sir," the "Sir" depreciatory, the "Sir" courteous, and the "Sir," sarcastic. The word has been spoken of as characteristically English, and so much may be confidently claimed for it. It is one of the shortest words spoken. There is a curt dignity about it such as we only associate with the Anglo-Saxon organy about it such as we only associate with the Anglo-Saxon race. It is much more effective than the French and German equivalents of "Monsetur" and "Mein Herr." "Sir!" exclaims Miss Lydia Languish to Captain Absolute, and that warrior falls back, with the remark "Egad! That damned monosyllable has frozen me." It is strikingly English, too, in its utilitarian and trozen me." It is strikingly English, too, in its utilitarian and adaptable qualities. We use it as the habitual designation of a k.c.s.i. or a baronet. It is a term of respect which may be applied either to a deserving beggar, or to a King. "Will your men fight?" asked William III. of the traitor Hamilton at the Boyne. "On my honour, Sir, I think they will," was the reply. "Your honour, Sir!" retorted his Majesty, though we admit that the emphasis on this occasion was on the word "honour."

One of our grievances is that even when used nowadays it is frequently misapplied. If its original meaning was "senior," "elder," "superior," it cannot but sound incongruously when a grey haired veteran in the campaign of life is heard to "Sir" a good-for-nothing whipper-snapper not out of his trens. It was because the late Dr. S. C. Mookerjee recognised the true inwardness of the term that he once declared that his Biahmanic pride revolted from the thought of addressing a Sudra as "Sir." This, by the way, was only one of the many instances which prove the thoroughness with remarkable man had assimilated the English spirit, and the English modes of expression. Thackeray could not have hit upon a better expedient for bringing out the innate vulgarity of the unfortunate Bob Stubbs than by introducing his conversation with the German shoemaker. "Sir, indeed!" cries Bob, in reply to the respectful salutation of the tradesman, "I'd have you know that when you Saturation of the transman, the transman, speak to a lord you have no business to a lorders him as Sir," "Anyone but Bob Stubbs would have known that "Sir" conveys the motion of respect with a far greater force than either "My Lord," or "Your Lordship." Even "Your Excellency" is cless imposing and is cless imposing and comprehensive title than Captain Assolute's monosyllable. Of us intrinsic dignity and worth at least one character in Shakespeare was fully persuaded; for he wes "Jok Faltaff" with his tamiliars "John" with his brothers and sisters, and "Sir John" with all Europe.

--- The Englishman, December 21, 1895.

THE RANAGHAT PETROLEUM PROSECUTION THE FINDING OF THE MAGISTRATE.

Proceedings under Section 131, C. P. C., against Akhoy Kumar Ghose.

On July 30th of this year the District Magistrate of Naha issued an order on Aukhoy Kumar Ghose to remove netroleum from his depôt at Ranaghat on the ground that tuning and storing petroleum opposite the railway station was likely to cause conflagra-tion or explosion. On August 8th the said Aukhoy Kumar Ghose appeared and showed cause, he also asked that the proceedings sho be transferred to another court. Ultimately the case was transferred by the High Court to this court and the question now before me is simply to decide whether the above order is reasonable and proper or not. I do not consider that it hes within the province of this Court to modify the order as the chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code with which we are now concerned only con-templates modifications in those cases where a jury is called. usages which have been traited in the guiver; and the tendency is permissed and include cases where a jury is called, to avert the danger of contamination by giving them as wide a It is thus necessary to deal with the order literally and in its entirety. In my view of the law it lies upon Aukhoy Kumar Ghose to show that the order was not reasonable. The section under which the order purports to have been issued runs as · considers · · "Whopever a District Magistrate that the disposal of any su that the disposal of any substance as lively to occasion conflagration or explosion, should be stopped, he may make a conditional order requiring the person owning, possessing or controlling such substance, to sessing " " or controlling such " substance, " to alter the disposal of such substance;" &c., &c.

In this case the District Magistrate considered the disposal, that is, the tinning and storing of the petroleum to be likely to cause conflagration or explosion and he consequently ordered the absolute removal of the petroleum.

I am not prepared to maintain this as a reasonable and proper order. Tinning and storing without proper precaution might be such a disposal as would be likely to cause conflagration or explosion, but such is not the state of affairs as disclosed in the order. Tinning and storing alone comprise the disposal complained of and it would be straining the law to hold that total removal of the substance amounted to a reasonable alteration in the disposal thereof. Before a Magistrate could legally order the disposal of petro-leum to be altered he must be satisfied that the disposal is such as in the ordinary course of events might cause conflagration or explasion. But the droposal which is required to be altered is merely tinning and storing. Tinning and storing are perfectly legitimate processes and in themselves need give rise to no apprehension of danger. Possibly the Magistrete meant that tining and storing carried on its the manner adopted by Aukhoy Kumar Ghose wege dangerous, but this is not stated in the order nor can it bear that interpretation. The order merely propounds the theory that tinning and storing of petroleum constitute a discoul of the same as its likely, to consume configuration. posal of the same as is likely to cause configuration or ex-plosion, this is a proposition with which I find it impossible to concur. Under certain circumstances these processes are conducted without practical possibility of danger, under other circumstances it is concievable that very imminent danger may attend the operations; but in order to justify action by a Magi-trate under section 133, C. P. C., it is necessary to state very clearly in the order what those circumstances are. Before this court both parties have confined themselves solely to producing evidence as to the manner in which tinning and storing are carried on by Aukhoy Kumar Ghose and as to the danger arising from the special methods employed by him in his depot, as distinguished from those in vogue elsewhere. As stated above I am not dis posed to treat this case from such points of view at all. The order treats of tinning and storing generally -- it does not find fault with Aukhoy Kumar Ghose's manner of doing business as regards any particular feature. But apart from more or less technical detects which in my opinion render the order unreasonable, the case has been fully tried on its merits. Apart from the wording of the order, the case for the prosecution is that Aukhoy Kumar Ghose the order, the case for the prosecution is that Aukhoy Kumar Ghose carried on his business in a manner calculated to bring about a general conflagration and hence he was told to move his depôt into the middle of a field. This depôt was constructed in 1893 with the express sanction of the Municipal Commissioners. The rules under the Petroleum Act give the Commissioners power to grant heenses within Municipal li tits: at least the Magistrate's license under Act XII of 1886 is not required within such limits (vola Calcula Gazzate of May 22nd 1895). The evidence adduced on both sides convinces date just anterior to these proceedings the transport of oil to the depôt, the filling of the tins and soldering were being done in a very carcless manner. According to the expirt evidence adduced by the defence the danger is more apparent than real, but nevertheless I have no doubt that the disposal of potroleum at that time was such as to cause 4 reasonable apprehension of danger.

At the same time it must be admitted that from the cry initiation of the dispute Aukhoy Kumar Ghose has shown himself ready to meet any suggestion made regarding the prevention of possible danger, short of moving his depot elsewhere---and n it is shown that the trade with its necessary accompaniment can be carried on with safety in such a depôt when necessary precautions are taken, think it unreasonable to demand its removal and the duty of executive authority extends only to seeing that proper recautionary measures are taken. The evidence adduced in support of the views taken by the executive authorities of the Nadia District is of a very meagre description; it does not deal with the state of affairs at the time the order was issued and there is nothing to contradict the allegation of Aukhoy Kumai. Ghose that at the time when he was ordered to remove petroleum from his depôt it was already empty. The evidence and general experience show that tinning and storing of petroleum can be carried on DEAFNESS. An essay describing a really genuine Cure for Deafness, Singing in Eus, &c., no matter how severe or long standing, will be sent post free.—Atthicus Eur-drums and similar appliances entirely superseded. Address THOMAS KEMPE, VICTORIA CHAMBERS, 19, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDING, HOLBORN, LONDON.

without manifest danger to the public. Such a disposal of petroleum is not calculated to cause conflagration or explosion. In order to satisfy myself more and thoroughly on these points I have visited the depôt at Ranaghat a also the large depôt in Calcutta and small shops in Circular Road and Jaunbazar. I have also taken measures to ascertain how the vide is carried on in this district at commercial centres like Scrampore, Scoraphili and Tarakeswar.
The precautions taken by Aukhov Kimar Giose at Ranaghat, so far as the evidence goes, appear to be of equal efficacy with those taken elsewhere. Experiments to test the inflammability of oil, similar to that dealt in by him, have also been conducted in my presence. That the precautions, alleged by the witnesses, were often disregarded is I think beyond assonable doubt, and if I had the power I should have minifed be order as to ensure the enforcement of these precautions which are admittedly and it I had the power I should have mi-tified be order as to ensure the enforcement of these precautions which are admittedly necessary, but as it lies with me to find definitely whether he order as it stands literally is reasonable or not. I have no hest ion in deciding against it. Under Section 137, C.P.C., I am satisfies hat the order made by the District Magistrate of Nadia is reasonable and proper and no further proceedings shall be take. under such order.

> E. GFARE. Offg. Magistrate.

Hooghly, December 18, 1895.

THE DOG, THE MAN, AND THE MEAT.

A FRIEND of mine and I were walking together the other day; a dog dished past us after something he saw on the pavement. It was a big piece of meat. He pounced on it and swallowed it in two seconds, My companion looked at the dog with environs admiration. "My humble friend," he said, "Pil give you £5,000 for your appetite and your digestion, you are not afraid to eat; I am." But the dog knew what hoppiness is made of. He declined the offer and totted away.

It is astonishing how many different people use this expression. "I what happiness is made of. He declined the offer and trotted away. It is astonishing how many different people use this expression. "I am" or "I was" afraid to eat. As the writer pens these lines five letters lie on the table before him, every one of them containing it. Yet the persons who wrote the letters are not known to one another. There was, therefore, no agreement among them. Why should there be, even if they were acquainted?

No, there is nothing in it to wonder at. They went through the same experience, and express it in the most natural way, that's all

No, there is nothing in it to wonder at. They went through the same experience, and express it in the most natural way, that's all. But what does it mean? A repeople suspicious of poisoned food? No, no; that is not so. The food is not poisoned before it is eaten, but afterwards. An example will show what really occurs, and why so many are afraid to eat.

We quote from one of the letters: "One night, early in 1892," says the writer, "I was seized with dreadful pains in the pit of the stomach, and a choking sensation in the throat. I feared I was going to die. My wife called in a neighbour. They applied hot finnels and turpenture, but I got no relief. Then a doctor came and gave me medicine. He said he never saw anyone's tongue in such a condition. It was of a yellow colour, and covered with a slimy phlegin, so thick I could have scraped it with a knife. I had a foul, bitter taste in the mouth, and my eyes were so dull I could scarcely see. I had a heavy pain in the sale, and felt so dejected and miserable I didn't know what to do with myself. What little food I took gave me so much pain I was aft and to ielf. What little food I took gave me so much pain I was afraid to The doctor put me on starvation diet, and injected morphine to

ext. The doctor put me on star and the case the pain.

Getting no real benefit from the first doctor I saw another, who said I had end a general of the liver. He gave me medicines, but I got no better In August I went to Exmount to see what my native air would do for me, but come back worse than ever. I had lost over three stone in weight, and being too weak to move about I used to lie on the couch most of the time. I never expected to get well, and didn't care much in weight, and being too weak to move about I used to lie on the couch most of the time. I never expected to get well, and didn't care much what became of me.

"One day in October my wife said, 'It appears the doctors can do nothing for you, so I am going to doctor you myeel?' She went to the Saithern Drag Stores, in Camberwell Road, and got a bottle of Mother Seight Carative Syrup. After taking this medicine for a few days, the pain my stom ich left me, my appetite improved, and I gained some strength. Soon afterwards I was bick at my work. The people in the office, seeing how well. I looked, asked what had cured me, and I maswered Mother Seigel's Syrup. I shall be glad to reply to any impuries about my case. (Signed) Charles Harris, 74, Beresford Street, Camberwell, London, December 1st, 1892."

Mr. Harris' statement goes straight to the point. Why was he afruid to eat? Because his food gave him pain without giving him strength. This wis dead wrong. It was exactly the reverse of what it should have been. When a man is the proper from he gets vigour and power from his meals, and eats them with enjoyment and relish. If he doesn't there is something the matter with him. What is it?

Now let your thoughts expand a bit, so as to take in a broad principle. One man's meat is another man's poison, they say. That's so, but it's only half the truth. Any man's meat is any man's poison, under ertain conditions. If grain never got any further than the mill hopper we should never have bread, and if bread (or other fooo) never got cfurther than the stomach we should never have strength. See? Well when the stomach is torpid, inflamed, and "On STRIKE," what happens? Why, your food lies in it and rots. The fermentations produces poisons which get into the blood and kicks up the worst sort of mischief all over the body. This is indigestion and dyspepsia, though the doctors call each and every trick of it by a separate name. Yet they don't cure it which is the main thing after all.

But Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup does, as Mr

CAUTION!

It having been notified to the Proprietor of Beecham's Pills that certain unscrippilons dealers have recently been perpetrating a fraud in connection with the 4 anna box lately introduced, the public are requested to see that the retail prices, (2022, 4 annas, 8 annas or 9\frac{1}{2}d, 12 annas or 15, 1\frac{1}{2}d, and Rs, 2 or 25 and 4 are clearly printed on the lid of each box. The fraud to which attention is drawn is that in the case of the two smaller sizes the prices have been obliterated and the boxes represented to be of higher value than they really atte.

Sile Wholesale Agents for India, Buima and

G. ATHERTON & CO. 31 NEW CHINA BAZAAR STREET. CALCUTTA.

NOTICE.—Should any difficulty be experi-nced in obtaining supplies the Agents will be happy to forward sample boxes at above Rupee ates plus V. P. P. Charges and Postages.

TEXT BOOKS IN ENGLISH. BY SARADA PRASAD BANERIEE SPECIMEN PAPERS AND ANSWERS

THE ENGLISH ENTRANCE COURSE

Having the largest sale of all similar works,
ENGLISH PREPARATORY
COURSE

FOR 2nd & 3rd CLASSES
This book has been approved by the

INDIA READERS NO. 2 FOR 4th & 5th Ct 8548 INDIA READERS NO. 1 FOR 6th & 7th Classis Local books are of remark tilly simple style

The books are of remark but simple size interprete suited to Huli in students.

For ittention of School authorities in the N-W P and Ondb, the Punjab, Madi is, Bombat, the Central Provinces, Assam, and Burma, is myited to the above publications of unque ments.
To be had of

S K. LAHIRI & Co. College Square, Calcutta.

Congress Sketches: A Review

OF THE SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS AT THE

Fourth Indian National Congress
Held at Allahavad.
Reprinted with additions and afterations from
Reis & Rayyet

With a portrait of Mr. George Yule, President, Sold by the publisher G. P. Varma and at the office of the Advacate, at Luc cnow for 8 Annas a copy, besides passegr.

Published on the 16th September, 1895 PRICE :

Cash Rs. 5. Postages, &c. Ans. 4. Per V. P. P. Rs. 5 Anas 6. Credit Rs. 6.

AN INDIAN JOURNALIST:

Life, Letters and Correspondence

Dr. SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

late Editor of "Reis and Rayyet," F. H SKRINE, 1 c.s.

(Collector of Customs, Calcutta.) The volume, uniform with Mookerjee's Travels and Voyages in Bengal, consists of more than 500 pages and contains

PORTRAIT OF THE DOCTOR. DEDICATION (To Sir W. W. Hunter.)

HIS LIFE STORY.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERIEE.

GORRESPONDENCE OF DR. S. C. MOOKERJEE.
LEITERS

to, from Ardagh, Col. Sir J C.,

to Atkinson, the late Mi E+T., C.S.,

to Baneijee, Babn Jyatish Chunder from Bineijee, Bibl Strodapiasad. from Bell, the late Mi gor Evans.
from Bhaddam, Chief of.

to Binaya Krishna, R.D.

to Chiti, Rail Bhi din Ananda.

to Chatterjee, Mr. K. M.
from Cluke, Mr. S. F.
from, to Colsin, Sir Anckland, to, from Dafferin and Avi, the Marquis of.
from Evans, the Honble Sir Griffith H.P.

to Gaiguli, Babn Kishi Mohan.

to Ghosh, Babn Kish Prosanna.

to Graham, Mr. W.
from Griffin, Sir Lepel.
from Gahn, Babn Sir Salar.

to Hill, Di. Fitz Edward.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hume, Mr. Allan O.
from Hume, Mr. Edward.
from Kinght, Mr. Paul.
from Kinght, Mr. Paul.
from Kinght, Mr. Paul.
from Kinght, Mr. Paul.
from Kinght, Mr. H. C.

to Malbaned, Moulvi Syed.

to Milk, the late Raja Dr. R qendralala.
to Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Lite Rijt Dakhmaranjan
from Mookerjee, Mr. J C.
from Osborn, the Lite Golonel Robert L.D.

from Mosel, Professor H (San Francisco) to, from Mirshidabid, the Nawab Bahre
door of,
from Nayara a, Mishimidapidhyi M C,
from Nayara a, Mishimidapidhyi M C,
from Osborn, the Life Colonel Robert D to Rao, Mr G Venkuta Appa to Rattigan, Sir William H.
from Roselbery, Eurlof,
to, from Routledoe, Mr. James
from Roselbery, Eurlof,
to, from Routledoe, Mr. James from Russell, Sir W H. to Row, Mr. G Syunali
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sastit, the Horbible A Sashiah,
to Sashia, Bobi Br dim minda,
from Sucu, Dr. Michaelley from, to Townsend, Mr. Merecath to Underwood, Caption F. O to, from Vaibley, Professor Arminus, to Venetati unanith, Mr. G. to Vizian ceram, Michioja of to, from Walbare, Sir Donahd Mickenzie
to Wood-Mason, the Late Professor J
1:TTERS/& TELEGRAM-108 CONDOLI NCE, from Abdus Subham, Moulei A K. M.
Ameer Hossem, Horbibe Nawab Syed,
Ardagh, Colonel Sir J C.
Buteljee, Bub Mananathanath
Buteljee, Bub Manahar,
Dutt, Mr. O. C.
Dutt, Bibu Prosaddoss,
Ergin, Lord,
Ghose, Babu Natendua K.

Ghosh, Bubu Kah Prasanna. Graham, Mr. William Hall, Dr. Fitz Edward. Handas Vihandas Desai, the late 1 bwm.

Hairdas Viharidas Desai, the late 1 bw 1 lyer, Mr. A. Krishnaswami. Lambert, Sur John Mahomed, Moulyi Syed. Mitter, Babu Sidheshur. Mooketjee, Rija Peary Mohin. Mooketjee, Rija Peary Mohin. Mooketjee, Babu Sinendia Nath. Murshid ibad, the Nawab Bahadoor of Routledge, Mr. James. Roy, Babu E. C. Roy, Babu E. C. Roy, Babu E. C. Roy, Babu Lattary. Tippera, the Bata Thikur of. Vambery, Professor Armanus, Vizianagi in, the Maharaja of, POSISCRIFT.

POSISCRIPT.

After paying the expenses of the publication the surplus will be placed wholly at the dis-posal of the family of the deceased man of

Orders to be made to the Business Mining, "An Indian Journalist," at the Bre ress, I. Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Press, 1. Ucko Sueet, Calcutta.

OPINION ON THE BOOK.

It is a most interesting record of the life of a remarkable man,--Mr. H. Bahington Smith, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, 5th October, 1895.

Dr. Mookeijee wis a fimous letter-writer, and there is a breezy freshness and origin they about his correspondence which make it very interesting reading.—Sir Alfred W Corft, K.C.1 E., Director of Public Institution, Bengal

RC 15. Director of Funne Institution, Bengal 26th September, 1895.

It is not that amount the pressure of hurassing official duties an English Civilian can find either time or opportunity to pay so girueful a tribute to the memory of a native networship as F.H. Skrine has done in his biography of the Lie Dy. Samblin Chindle. Madescript of as F. H. Skrine has done in his bingraphy of the late Dr. Sambin Chinder Mookerjee, the well-known Bengal journalist (Calciuta, Thacker, Spink and Co.); not are there many who are more worthy of being thus honoured than the late Editor of Reis and Raypet We may at any rate contailly agree with Mr Skrine that the story of Mookerjee's life, with all its hights and shadows, is pregnant with lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

lessons for those who desire to know the real India.

No weekly paper, Mr. Skrine tells us, not even the Hindia Patrict, in its palmiest digits and the state of influence in my way approaching that which was soon attended by Reis and Raiger.

A man of large be at and great qualities, his death from promount in the raily spring in the last year was a distinct and he ray loss to Indian pounding, and it was an indimable dee on Mr. Skrine's part to put his lafe and Letters upon record. The Trince of India, (Rombay) September 30, 1895.

It is rarely that the life of in Indian journal ist becomes worthy of publication; it is more larely still that such a file course to be written by an Anglo-Indian and a member of the Indian Carl Service. But, it his come in this come is that in the land of the Bengal Brian, the life of at least one in an ang Indian journalists has been considered worthy of being written by an Englishin in -1 in Judata's Striklad, (Madras) September 35, 1895.

The late Editio of Reis and Rairret was a

The late E liter of Reis and Rarret was a The late Entro of Kers and Karrer was a profound state at an accomplished water, who has left no mirek on Tudan pourralism. In that he has found a Civilian like Misking to record the story of his life he is more fortunate that the great Kristoch's Parhimself.—The Tribune, (Lahore) October 2, week.

1895.
For much of the biographical matter that For much of the biographical matter that issues so freely from the press an pology a needed. Had no biography of Dr. Mooke per, the Edition of Reis and Rayret, appeared, or oxplication would have been looked for A man of his remark this person thry, who was reasy first among native Indian journalists, and to many respects occupied a higher plane than they did, and looked at pub is affire from a different point of view from theirs, could not be suffered to sink into oblivious without some other, at to perpetuate his memory by the usual problem of a "life,". The difficulties common is all brographiers have in this case been informed by special circumstances, nor the least of wings is that the author belongs to a different race from the subject. It is true that numy Earl anner there were many admirers of the learned Doctor, and that he on his side or the refined Doctor, and that he on his since understood the Eighth character as few foreigners understand it. But in spite of this and his remarkable assumilation of Eighth modes of thought and expression, Dr. Mooker-jee tenamed to the last a Brithman of the Brahmans—a conservation of the best of his inheritance that wins nothing but respect and approvid. In consequence of this, his ideal biographer would have been one of his own disciples, with the same inherited sympathies, and trained like him in Western learning. If Beng d had produced such another man as Dr. Mookerjee, it was he who should have written Monkerjee, it was ne who second has life.

The biography is warmly appreciative without being needlessly land thory; it gives on the whole a complete picture of the man; and in the book there is not a dull page.

A few of the letters addressed to Dr. Monkerjoe are of such mone importance that they in the have been omitted with advantage, but method seed such minor importance that they me this have been omitted with advantage, but not a word of his own letters could have been spared. The say that he writes idomante English is to say, but is short of the struth. His diction is every and correct, clear and straightforward, without Oriental luxurance or striving after effect. Perhop he is never so charming as when he is laying down the laws of literary form to young asgurants to faim. The letter form to young aspirants to fame. The letter on page 285, for instance, is a delightful piece of criticism; it is delicate plain-speaking, and he recomplishes the difficult feat of telling a wolld-be poet that his productions are not in the smallest degree poetry, without one may conclude, either offending the youth or repressing his ardonr.

For much more that is well worth reading we must refer readers to the volume uself. Intuin-must refer readers to the volume itself. Intrinsice dly it is a mork worth buying and reading.

—The Proncer, (Alababad) Oct. 5, 1895.

The career of "An Indian Journaist" as described by F. H. Skrine of the Indian Civil Sergie is exceedingly interesting.

Mookerjed's letters are in rivels of pure diction which is heightnessed by his nervous style.

The life has been told by Mr. Skrine in a very per taut in under ind which should make it popular not only with Bengalis but with all those but are able to appreciate merit unmarried by es entirem and nathestness unspoiled by his mass. - The Muhammadan, (Madras) Oct.

The work leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of completeness, imputiality, or bleake portrayal of character.

thesic portrayal of character.

Mr. Strone deals with his interesting subject with the unfailing instinct of the biographer, Every safe of Dr. Mookerpe's complex character is treated with sympathy tempered by discrimination.

Mr. Skeine's a arritive certainly impresses

We Skinne's arritive certainly impresses one crack the individuality of a remarkable man. Mookerlees's own letters show that he had no noty acquired a remain and of also a not flex blie English but that he had no assuming the state of the sundy independence of thought had the acter work is supposed to be a necuslive possession of natives of Great Button. His tending and the stores of his general information appear to have been, considering the copin against, little less thin marvellous. One of the first to express his condulence with the fundy of the deceased writer was the post of the first to express the conductive way the post of the first to express the conductive of the first to express the conductive way the post of the first to express the conductive with whom he came in contact, but dear of tause to low estate.

the argust ross with whom he came in contact, but then of tame to low estate.

The uninession belt upon the mind upon diving down the back is that of a good and after non-whose cree has been graphically participed. The Englishman, (Calcutta) October 15, 1805.

The causer of an eminent Bengali editor, who stead in 1850 throws a currons, hight more the career of an emission being in emission, who used in 1894, throws a currous light upon the care elements and brieflitary influences those of ct, the criticisms of Indian journal-to one on ct. the criticisms of Indian journals to on United Inde.

The Life and Letters of Dr. S. C. Mookener," a mook just enjed by a distinguished on committee the indianate of the scenes.

of lad in journalism. it is chart tive, witten with insight and a Calcutta.

complete mastery of the facts, of how a clever youth gradually grew into one of the ablest le ider-writers in Bengal, and still more gradually matured into one of the fairest-minded ally matured into one of the fairest-minded editors that western education in India has yet produced. If the training and experience which develop the journalist in England are sometimes varied, they seem in India to have an even wider range.

But the object of this notice is to show h a great Bengan journalist is made; space fora great bengan journaist's under space for bules us to enter up in his actual performances. They will be found set forth at sufficient length, and with much felicity of expression, in Mr. Skrine's admirable monograph. It is characteristic of the noble service to which Mr. Skrine belongs, that such a book should have issued from its ranks. Dr. Mookerjee was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches was no optimist. One of his brilliant speeches contained the following sentence:—" India has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed has neither the soil nor the elasticity enjoyed by young and vig roots communities, but pre-sent the and tocks and deserts of an effete civilization, hardly stirred to a semblance of life by a foreign occupation dozing over its essily-guined advantages. This was true of the pre-Mutiny Iodia of 1851. If it is no longer true of the Queen's India of 1895, we owe it in no small measure to Indian journalists like Dr. Mokerjee who have laboured, amid some misrepresentation, to quicken the some misrepresentation, to quicken the "semblance of life into a living reality.—The Times, (Landon) October 14, 1895.

"IMPROVED UNDAUNTED" WATCH. Rs. 7. Guaranteed three Years.

Strong, accurate, pretty, small, open-faced, ackel silvern, keyless, snort winding, patent, NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT "NEW STYLE IMPROVED UNDAUNT ED" watch, with hand setting mechanism, secondhand, for Doctors, ornamental bold dial, for Rs. 7 V. P. P. with an extra glass, spring, pretty box and full three years' guarantee. Warranted to stand the roughest use. Rups more trun 28 hours with one winding. Will list a life time. Easily renurable. Others sell at double our rates. One est use. Runs more to in 28 hours with one winding. Will list a life time. Easily repurable. Others sell at double our rates. One watch free for the purchase of 8 at a time. Mr. Juo. Dickson of Haputal Railway, from Ceylon says:—It keeps solendid time and never stopped although it sustained hard knocks and jetks. Vir. II. Moore of Rayal Artillery from Pronamillee says:—I sed it for Rs. 16. × Pte. W. Hopkins of Sussex Regit. from Dindium says:—I have sold it for Afthery from Francian met says — some for Rs. 16. × Pte. W Hopkins of Sussex Regt. from Ddmdum says;—I have sold it for Rs. 20. × Mr. T. B. Scott of P than Opum Dome network says;—The watch you sent me some seven years ago is still keeping very good time.

Jewelled Ring Re. 1-8-9. Real Silver Watch Rs. 13. Real Solid Gold Watch Rs. 24.

Shivit, where the state of the

WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY

GENUINE HOMGEOPATHY. A CARD.

Hem Chandra Rai Chaudhuri, L. M. S. Homeobathic Practitioner.

May be consulted by letter or personally daily at his residence, 30-1, Colootolah Street,

Novelty in Ayurvedic Medicine, AYURVEDIO PHARMACY, 36, Lower Chitpore Road, Fourdari

Balaknana, Calcutta.

KAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN, Physician, Surgeon, Acconcheur, pracuses the Ayurvedic system of medicine, after having obtunted a diploma at the final examination of one of Government medical Institutions of the country.

SPECIFICS SPECIFICS

for all ordinary diseases, the Fever, Cough, Asthmit, Phthisis, Diabetes, &c., incouning diseases brought on by irregularities of kinde Catalogues, commaning full accounts of diseases and remedies, are transmitted of asphication, Prescriptions, with or without madicines, sent to every part of India and Cevlon, Cape Colony, and the Bittish Isles, on receipt (by post) of full accounts of diseases.

Thousands of unsolicited Testimonials from every quarter.

every quarter,

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas or 6 copies for a Rupee

A Cheap Reserve for the Army By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY, Late Her Majesty's Service.

Apply to Reis & Rarvel Office, Calcutta

CATARRH,

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby these distressing diseases are rapidly and per manently cured by a few simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A pamphlet explaining this new treat ment is sent on receipt of 21/2d stamp by A HUTTON DIXON, 43 & 45 East Bloor St TORONTO, Canada Scientific American,

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT) WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER ANG

Remem of Politics Literature, and Society RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

If paid in advance. i e iriv H or-yearry Kt. 18 If not paid in advance, .. Rs. 13 Vende ••• Huf-vearly... ...

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT .

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines or 12 inches to the column) as charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annus a line or Rs. 2-2 an inch each insurtion. The lowest charge for any advertises ont

4 annas a line or Rs. 2-2 an man ton. The lowest charge for any advertiser ant is Rt. 2, except Domestic Occurrence, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Business Communications (post paid) 13 be directed to "The Manager," and Liter 19 Communications and books and papaphtets (carriage paid) to "Editor" of Reigh. & Rayyet."

Oppice:

"vinted and published by PASHU PATI GHOSE, at THEMER PRESS. No. 2. Ucker Dutte Lan. M. Ches